In May, 1898, Mr. Murray opened a general mercantile store in Denton. He thrived at this business, and the money began to come in plentifully. He began to invest his surplus in land and this land rapidly increased in value. Occasionally he sold some of the land at prices far above what he paid for it, and it was not long before his financial status was recognized by wholesalers throughout Kansas, Missouri and surrounding states. It was while engaged in the mercantile business that Mr. Murray met the girl of his choice. She was Miss Cynthia Kinsley of Leona, and they were married May 3, 1903.

The wedding was solemnized in the Congregational church at Leona by the Rev. M. L. Roby, and there were present many admiring friends of the couple who wished them continued happiness and prosperity. Mrs. Murray is the daughter of Mrs. Laura Kinsley. There are three children of the union, as follows: Veda Vesta, born at Denton, April 3, 1905; Cecil Kyle, born at Los Angeles, June 23, 1906, and Charles William Dwight, born at Colby, Kansas, July 22, 1912.

In 1908 Mr. Murray discontinued his business at Denton, and removed with his family to Colby, Kansas, where they are located at the present time. Charles Murray owns 2,800 acres of land today, most all of which is located in Thomas County. He is engaged in the mercantile business in Colby and is an extensive trader in real estate.

The Murrays own a nice home in Colby, where they are bringing up their children in the way that they should go through life. Mrs. Murray is an artist in the cullinary line and one who possesses the faculty of entertaining.

ALEX B. SHULSKY

The Son of a Pioneer Settler Who Served in the Prussian Army and Then Came to America to Work at Carriage Making, But Found Farming to His Liking—The Son a Good Farmer Who Believes in Education.

Alex B. Shulsky, one of the well-to-do farmers of Union township near Denton, is a native of Doniphan County and a son of one of the pioneer settlers of this productive county.

Robert Shulsky, the illustrious father, was a native of Prussia who had been educated in his home land and had served three years in the Prussian army before coming to America. He was born in the vicinity of Braunburg, Prussia, May 1, 1826. When a young man he learned the trade of carriage making, so that when he landed in New York June 2, 1852, he at once went to work at his trade. He remained in New York until 1854, when he moved to Nashville, Tennessee, where he worked at carriage making until 1858. The father of Alex B. decided that farming in Kansas offered larger opportunities to a man than carriage making, so he came to Kansas and pre-empted a claim of one hundred and sixty acres of land three miles west of Denton, which is now owned by Phillip Herpisch, Charles Sherer and George Chaney. Having acquired a home he proceeded in 1860 to Columbia, Tennessee, where on February 8 of that year he married Miss Mary Lawhorn, a native of Giles County, Tennessee, who was born April 12, 1838. He brought his bride to Kansas after the wedding and until her death December, 1872, they lived happy on the farm near Severance. The elder Mr. Shulsky was a good farmer and a good citizen who stood high in the community. He was a Republican in politics, took an active interest in home affairs and served on the board of county commissioners. He was a member of the Odd Fellows lodge. He died February 22, 1913, at the age of 86 years, 9 months and 21 days. He had resided in Kansas fifty-five years. years.

The subject of this sketch, was born on the farm in Doniphan county February 28, 1861, and received a common school education in the district schools in Union township and at St. Benedict's College at Atchison and later he attended Mrs. Monroe's Institute at Atchison.

On his father's farm in Union township Alex B. Shulsky grew to like farming and although many opportunities to follow some other occupation presented themselves he stuck to the farm and became one of the best farmers in the county, owning a fine eighty acres in Union township situated two and one-half miles southwest of Denton and four miles and one-half northeast of Purcell, receiving his mail by rural delivery on Route 1 out of Denton.

Alex B. Shulsky was married December 14, 1883, at Netawaka, Jackson County, Kansas, to Miss Elizabeth M. Blair. Two children were born to this union, Roy B., May 4, 1885, in Union township, and May E., July 15, 1889, in Netawaka, Jackson County, Kansas. The son and daughter were both given a good education in the country school of Union township and then sent to business college in Kansas City, Missouri, to finish their education. They are both well equipped with an education and are among our accomplished and highly respected people.

The life of Alex B. Shulsky in Doniphan County has shown him to be a man of character and a valued citizen of the community. He is a lover of Kansas, and particularly of the part of Kansas in which he resides and in which he has made a success of his farming operations. He has been an active participant in the affairs of his community since he was old enough to go to school, and having secured for himself a good education, he has persistently labored for the advancement of the school facilities of his community. He has been consistent in his advocacy of those things which contribute to the betterment of farming conditions, and particularly to the building of good roads that the farmers may have better access to the markets with their products.

Mr. Shulsky's farming operations, while not so extensive as many who farm more acres, have resulted in a handsome income yearly from his acres. He farms intelligently and well, as did his father before him, and generally his yield of various crops reaches a high average per acre. His farm undoubtedly is one of the best in the county and it is kept in a good state of improvement. On every hand one sees evidences of the proud owner's care. The fields are neatly kept and one doesn't see broken down fences and dilapidated buildings. His live stock and his machinery and implements are well housed. Everything about the place speaks volumes for its owner's care and foresight, as well as for his prosperity.

The methods employed by this energetic farmer are those that were worked out by himself and his father and are thoroughly practical and, often put to test, have proved satisfactorily. By careful selection of seed and proper planting and tillage there isn't another eighty acres to be found anywhere that year in and year out will produce better crops than are produced by Mr. Shulsky. The old German idea of taking care of and utilizing everything on the farm that is of value is seen here, as it also is seen on many of the best farms in this community. It can be said that in no part of Kansas is there less of farm waste than here among these prosperous farmers of Doniphan County who, while not boasting of wonderful methods of farming, are nevertheless able to show big returns for the efforts—and of such farmers is our friend, Alex B. Shulsky.

Mr. Shulsky is a Democrat in politics and a member of the Anti-Horse Thief Association. He is widely known among the people and is honored and respected by them.

RIDGE PRAIRIE M. E. CHURCH

The Beautiful Structure in Denton That Can Be Seen for Many Miles Is the Successor to the Old Church of 1871 That Stood One Mile West of the Town—It Is the House of Worship for a Large Number of the People of That Prosperous Community.

The beautiful church building situated in the southeast corner of the little city of Denton, fronting the south, its tall tower and steeple to be seen from nearly all the country for many miles distant in any direction, is known as the Ridge Prairie Methodist Episcopal Church. It is the place of worship for the Methodists, and many others, from the rich country surrounding Denton in Union Township; and, while by no means the oldest and richest church in historic interest in that section, it is none the less popular with the people and is fulfilling its grand purpose as a house of God.

The Denton M. E. Church, Formerly Known as Ridge Prarie Church.

The Ridge Prairie Methodist Episcopal Church was incorporated Sept. 5, 1892, soon after it was moved to Denton, the first incorporation being September 24, 1871, when the original church was erected one mile west of Denton. The incorporators were: John Schwartz, James P. Miller, W. B. Garten, George Henchsliff, Solomon Denton, George Denton, Aaron Long, John Henry Denton, Jacob Denton. All of these incorporators are now living and are members of the church, except John Schwartz and George Henchsliff. S. C. Harpster, who was the banker at Denton and a notary public, certified to the signatures of those incorporators on September 12, 1892, on the incorporation papers.

The deed to the old church one mile west of Denton bore date of May 8, 1871, while the deed to the new church in Denton was made by Moses Denton to the trustees of the church in 1889.

The church as it now stands, pointing the way to the higher life with its tall spire, was erected in the year 1889, two years after the city was started, and the dedication, which was on Sunday, in the fall of 1889, was an event to which the good people of that community have often in the years that have followed, referred with feelings of pride and joy.

There are now some sixty members of this church, and among them are no fewer than thirty-five members of the Denton family, who are among its steadfast and staunchest supporters. At the present time the pulpit is supplied by the Rev. C. C. Clampitt, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Severance, who holds services of worship in Denton every Sunday afternoon. The services usually are well attended and the people of Denton of all denominations join with their Methodist brethren in the enjoyment of the wholesome sermons and the spiritual counsel of the good pastor, Doctor Clampitt.

The church also has its other activities, social and educational, as well as spiritual. Frequently it is the scene of some revival, some entertainment of a wholesome character, or some social festivities. Church weddings are often held there, and from its pulpit eulogies have been pronounced for the dead.

For nearly a quarter of a century, therefore, the Ridge Prairie Methodist Episcopal Church has been a beacon light for the Denton community. Its activities and its teachings have touched the lives of the people as no other institution has or could touch them. It has enshrined itself in the hearts of these people. Looking across the prairies, stretching far away in every direction toward the little city of Denton, the church always is the object first to be seen, a perpetual reminder to those who live in the country, as well as to the travelers along the railroads and highways, of the fact that it is an index to the high character of the people of that community, town and country.

A Special Section for the Dentons

How a Family of Sturdy English Stock, Coming to Doniphan County in Territorial Days, Have Witnessed the Development of the Richest Section of Kansas from Its Wild State Until It Has Become the Garden Spot of the Middle West.

What These People Have Contributed Toward That Development, and to the Upbuilding of the Community in Everything That Stands for Peace, Prosperity and Progress—A Glimpse of Their Beautiful, Well-Kept and Highly Improved Farms.

A close observing newspaper man, driving overland in a Buick automobile (purchased from E. L. Kleppe of Troy), from St. Joseph southwest through Doniphan County recently, was impressed by the sight of so many beautiful farms of rich soil in a high state of improvement and well kept. In all of his extensive travels both east and west of the Missouri river he never before had seen anything like it. About a mile east of the little town of Denton, on meeting a prosperous looking farmer, Eugene Alfers, he caused the chauffuer to stop the car long enough to inquire:

"Who owns this farm?"

"Jacob Denton, the bachelor," was the reply.

"Fine place, I'd like to own it myself," the questioner remarked as the car started on.

A little nearer the town the newspaper man saw some distance to the west another farm which plainly showed that its owner was a progressive business farmer. A boy in the road was halted.

"Who owns this farm?" he asked.

"Thomas W. Denton," the boy replied.

"And whose pretty farm is that one over there?" he asked the boy, as he looked over to the southeast of the town.

"Why," the boy laughed at his ignorance, "don't you know that is Aunt Lizzie Denton's — everybody knows Aunt Lizzie."

The car shot through the little town of Denton, which is built along the Rock Island railroad track, with great celerity. The newspaper man noticed a stately home that looked like a thoroughly modern city residence.

"Solomon Denton, a retired farmer, lives there," Glen Alt at the depot explained.

The observant newspaper man was thrilled by the sight of a fine herd of Polled-Angus cattle on a farm on the north side of the road west of the town. He was a great admirer of thoroughbreds—cattle and men.

"Who owns the blacks and the farm?" he momentarily inquired of the first man they met.

"William G. Denton—for nobody but a Denton could own such fine cattle—"he's the fellow who has been taking the best prizes at Hiawatha, and all the other fairs where he shows them."

The unique newspaper man by this time had arrived at the conclusion that the Dentons were a large family. They were passing a field of corn that looked like it might crib anywhere from sixty to ninety bushels to the acre. He called to a man at the edge of the field:

"Who owns this farm?"

"Ezra T. Denton," the man quickly ejaculated, as he resumed his work pulling up the big sunflowers along the corn rows.

"Well, I am astounded," the newspaper man exclaimed.

About four miles from the town they were wondering if all of the farms in northeastern Kansas were owned by the Dentons, when Art Fenton, who was driving a team of skittish mules, was questioned:

"Who owns this farm?" was asked, for they were looking at a large farm house surrounded by broad fields of corn and alfalfa and stubble from which wheat had been harvested.

"W. W. Denton," was the answer.

"Look here, stranger, we haven't passed a farm in fifteen miles that wasn't owned by a Denton," the newspaper man said sternly. "Aren't there any farmers other than Dentons in these parts?"

"Well," the mule driver drawled, "there might be a few, but they ain't in Union township." And he drove on.

The mule driver was not far from truthful, for Union township, Doniphan County, has been the home of the Denton family of progressive business farmers since the year 1859, when Kansas was struggling for statehood, though the family has increased until in this year 1916, more than 100 persons answer to the name Denton.

The Dentons were English. William and Mary Denton of Langton parish, Lincolnshire, along in the first half of the Nineteenth century, were parents of twelve sons and two daughters. They were of that plain, sturdy, God-fearing class of people of whom it may be said they represented the higher ideals of English intelligence, industry and thrift. They had reared their children to these ideals.

After the death of the parents, the Dentons came to America with high hopes and great expectations. The sons were good judges of land. They found the best of soil in Doniphan County, and there in the year 1859 they settled on the land which is still theirs. And through all the years that have followed, with patient labor and unflagging energy, they have witnessed and aided in the development of their lands from their wild prairie state worth four to five dollars an acre to the present high state of soil efficiency worth from $150 to $250 an acre.

The Dentons properly may be considered as the pioneers in progressive scientific farming in Kansas. They brought here not only a knowledge of farming, but the brain and brawn that was needed for intelligent application of that knowledge to the soil of Kansas. They set about improving their lands and planning for the future. They did not all undertake to raise the same thing. Some would raise corn as their major crop, others wheat, others cattle or hogs. They had a system for everything. And it is this system which has brought prosperity to every one of the Dentons and which has brought about these splendidly improved and equipped farms our newspaper friend saw from the automobile while passing through Union township.

The pace set by the Dentons in farming and farm development in Doniphan County has demonstrated the fact that we of Kansas owe much to these sturdy English people. But this is not all. The Dentons have proven themselves to be among our most loyal citizens. They have at all times stood for the flag and for the highest and best in our social, political, educational and religious life, as they also have been foremost for law and order and decency. They stand for public improvements, good roads, as the condition of their farms attest. The town of Denton, laid out on land owned by Mose and William Denton and named for those pioneers, is an illustration of the kind of public-spirited citizenship that prevails among them.

The Dentons have at all times been accounted good citizens. They take a lively interest in governmental affairs, yet they are not politicians. None of them aspire to public office holding. They have pride in their homes, their community and their state. There is pride in the family. Though they may not all subscribe to the political doctrines of Roosevelt, they are Roosevelt-ian when it comes to the size of their families.

While the men are accounted model farmers, their wives are model home makers and have contributed their share to the success of the family, besides rearing their children and training them for successful careers. The women Dentons are bright and intelligent and their influence has counted much for spiritual, moral, educational and social welfare of the entire community. The Aunt Lizzie Denton, whose pretty farm home was admired by our newspaper friend, is the historian of the Dentons. She is the widow of William Denton, and is endowed with the remarkable faculty of keeping all things in mind. It is said she can relate more reminiscences of Doniphan County and call by name more people than any other Denton. "Ask Aunt Lizzie" is an oft-repeated remark when one wants to know this or that.

The personnel of the Dentons is interesting in this sketch and is here presented for the enlightenment of our readers who desire to know more about this remarkably progressive family.

William Denton and his wife, Mary Denton, father of the following named Dentons, died in England: George Denton, born February 2, 1828; Anna Denton, wife of Geo. Hinchsliff, born March 27, 1829; John Denton, born June 5, 1830; Wm. Denton, born July 17, 1831; Mary Denton, wife of Sam Cheney, born October 2, 1832; Benjamin Denton, born March 25, 1834, died while serving his country in the Civil War; Jonathan Denton, born May 23, 1835; Michael Denton, born September 29, 1837; Joseph Denton, born November 8, 1838; James Denton, born February 6, 1841; Solomon Denton, born August 1, 1842; Moses Denton, born February 10, 1844; Isaac Denton, born August 28, 1845; Jacob Denton, born August 28, 1848.

Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Denton and Walter D. Denton, their son.

SOLOMON DENTON.

An unusually long life of exceptionally hard work, strong tenacity and courage of purpose and good judgment has made Solomon Denton among the wealthiest land owners in Doniphan County. He has the bull dog "stick-to-it-iveness" characteristic of the English people of which he is a representative developed to a most efficient degree, and the solidity of character which has made the English nation great and their people in America among its best citizens. His life story is that of a young man leaving an old country, with its customs well established and climate known and regular, and coming to a raw farm land, knowing little of its capricious weather, soil or crops, coping and co-operating with nature in various places of America until he now owns a goodly share of the earth and its products and worldly goods.

Solomon Denton was born Aug. 1, 1842 at Lincolnshire, in the parish of Langton, England. He was the son of William and Mary Denton. They were good substantial English farmers—"yeomen" perhaps they would have been called at one time; very likely the author of "Lorna Doone," the famous novel of English farm life, had in mind such farmers as the Dentons in describing the characters of the book. The English farmer is as substantial as the pavement-like road which belts his farm. He is not swayed by impulse suddenly, but let him once make up his mind to accomplish some thing or fix his eye on a goal, no powers of earth, nothing save death, can prevent him from succeeding in whatever he undertakes.

Such people were the Dentons. And from such people came the first pioneers of America who conquered the rock-bound coasts of New England, and who are constantly pushing out into new countries. America and her states, and Kansas and her counties, owe much of their growth and progress to those of the British race. The Englishman makes a decision only after much study, but usually his decision upon any proposition is the best anyone could make under the circumstances. It is so in all phases of his life and work, in town or on the farm.

With people of such substantial character, young Denton, working among the hay ricks under England's mild sun and gloomy fogs and mists, grew to young manhood. He attended the parish schools, which, if not as broad in their instruction as the modern public schools of America, were at least thorough. What he read of America in history or geography appealed to him. Quite likely as he walked home between the well-kept hedge fences along the smoothly rolling country of old England, America in his mind became a land of promise. Slowly but surely in his most practical youthful mind grew a vision of his owning almost as much land as any of the lords and ladies of his native country. The idea of possession of estates as vast and as well improved as theirs fired his imagination.

The small English boy learned all he could of the land of his hopes from every source possible. He read of it in books, talked of it to those who had heard of the golden opportunities of the new country, and snatched up every stray word of America that a passing stranger might drop.

Thus the Denton boy grew to manhood. Meanwhile his social instinct asserted itself. Young people in old England, and especially in the older days of Dickens' time, were not as free to meet each other as the American young men and women, but meet and court they did, following instinct as old as the human race.

English girls are noted for their complexions, with cheeks as soft and red as an English rose, made so by early rising and plenty of wholesome exercise in the alternating sun and fog of their mother country. One of these young English lassies was Miss Maria Topliss, from the same parish in which Mr. Denton was born. She was a typical English girl, modest, but sensible, and likely with a longing for a broader life and opportunity for progress than would be afforded in the little parish environments. If both of these young people had their broad vision and marked ambitions, it is not at all surprising that they found much congeniality in each other's company. Doubtless America was the theme of many of their conversations, as they strolled along some of those beautiful winding English country lanes. Their liking grew mutually as the winter of 1868 passed, until both decided that their lives and ambitions could not be completed without each other's co-operation for the alloted span of years. Thus on March 10, 1868, Mr. Denton and Miss Topliss were married in a typical English vine-covered church.

As during the courtship of this couple, America, its promise and opportunities, was the subject of constant talk between them, over the early breakfast of porridge and "kippers." The idea of settling in a new country which gave the best chance for materializing their dreams of affluence, was constantly discussed, and all their savings, farthings, tuppence, shillings, crowns and pounds were laid away for the prospective journey to the New World, and as a nest egg for a future fortune. Very little money was spent for luxuries. Comforts they possessed in abundance, but it is safe to say not many trips were made to London. Likely their main expenditure was for unnecessaries at Christmas time, the season so dear to the native of "Merry England." However, at these yule-tide gatherings at the Christmas dinner, when the smoking roast pig and mutton were passed around, and the hearts were mellow with port and sherry, the favorite topic, "America," was rehearsed.

At length, after the farthings had grown to many shillings and the shillings had swelled to some hundred pounds, the Dentons' plans took definite form. Yet, no easy matter was it to leave a home and birth-place, and the vicinity in which their ancestors probably had lived for generations. The Dentons were bound to their home place by hundreds of deep and lasting ties. They had grown up in the parish, and their loyalty and friendliness had won them the affection of the whole population. All these ties had to be severed.

One day in the year of 1870, the Dentons bid goodbye to their life-long friends and started to begin the prosperous life of which they had so often dreamed and planned. The voyage across the Atlantic was long and rough. The boat which carried them would not compare with the modern palaces of ocean greyhounds. Accommodations were meagre and cramped. The vessel rolled horribly a great deal of the time. It was with great relief and joy when for the first time the Dentons saw looming up across a rolling expanse of water, the first faint vision of America, the land in which they were destined to become so prosperous. The difficulties of preparation for the trip, and the inconveniences and hardships of the voyage itself, were forgotten.

Solomon Denton and his wife did not stay long in the Eastern part of the United States, although there were many strange and interesting things to see. They had heard of what the new state of Kansas offered. Of course they also had heard from Eastern acquaintances of the dangers from Indians, prairie fires and cyclones, but their minds were filled with the hope of owning some of its fertile fields in which nature's stores were waiting to be tapped—so different from the soil of England which had been cultivated for so many centuries.

Thus the Dentons, daily encountering new and unexpected circumstances, came on to Kansas that year of 1870, and settled in Doniphan County. Here Solomon Denton settled on a farm one and one-half miles from the site of a town which now bears his name. Despite the home-sickness for the mellow land of England, he went resolutely to work to subdue the soil of his adopted country. He was among the earliest risers in his vicinity. He put in practice all that he had learned on the farm at his home in Lincolnshire, adapting his methods to the new requirements of the young country. He put in operation the lessons of intensive farming he learned in the old country where not a foot of ground is wasted. His oxen-drawn plow left untouched no corners. He sowed every inch of this cultivated land.

Just as Mr. Denton was gaining a foothold, the grasshoppers came. That was enough to discourage a native born Kansan, let alone a man from a country where crops are invariably sure and plagues like a visitation of such insects are unheard of except as a story in the Old Testament. However, he was undaunted and today the results of his unswerving efforts are materially apparent. His home farm is one of the best improved, with its big house and good barns, in Doniphan County. The cattle are of the best stock and his acres yield a fine average annually. His land near Denton consists of 320 acres and he also owns many lots in the town of Denton. Outside of his home possessions he has acquired a half section of land near Haven Lee Province, Saskatchewan, Canada, and one-half section of land in Howard County, Texas. Every land purchase was made with great thought and judgment and now his holdings yield him a good income. He has retired and now lives in a comfortable home in Denton. Mr. and Mrs. Denton had five sons and daughters. The dates of the family's births are:

Solomon Denton, born Aug. 1, 1842; Marie Denton, Nov. 13, 1843; Lucy Denton, now Mrs. J. C. Fields of Hiawatha, Feb. 14, 1869; Thos. W. Denton, Dec. 14, 1869; Laura Denton, now Mrs. C. H. Albrecht of Little Rock, Ark., June 14, 1871; Jennie Denton, March 10, 1873; Walter D. Denton, Jan. 11, 1874; Ezra T. Denton, Feb. 12, 1876; Ralph Denton, Sept. 24, 1879. Jennie and Ralph died in infancy.

The father, Solomon Denton, although seventy-three years of age, is still interested in the affairs of the town of Denton and has at heart the best interests of Doniphan County.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Denton.

Thomas W. Denton, Son

Thomas W. Denton, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Denton, early Doniphan County settlers, evidently inherits much of his parents' business ability and progressive ideas. He is also endowed with much of their energy and thrift, as he owns 580 acres of Kansas land, although he is not much more than of middle age.

Thomas W. was born in the parish of Langton, Lincolnshire, England, December 14, 1869. When he was six months old his parents brought him to America, locating in Doniphan County in 1870. He grew to manhood on his father's farm and received his education in the country schools. He was a bright student and was fond of wholesome games. His life on the farm was one of long hours of work, and he absorbed many of his father's methods of farming and likely then determined to follow the elder Denton's footsteps.

In the early days the life of a boy on a farm was by no means what it is now. The home did not begin to have the conveniences which the average present day farm boy takes for granted. Young Denton couldn't go to a phone and call Troy to ask what the score was. A daily paper was not as common as it is now, and likely he never imagined that some day he could go hundreds of miles in a horseless carriage. Farm machinery was clumsy. The McCormick reaper used then (when this machine first appeared) was much different than now, and water and hand power did the work now performed by steam and electricity.

The main social gatherings of the early days when this enviable man was a boy, were the church "socials," spelling matches and husking bees. At the husking bees, it is said, the boy who found a red ear of corn, was privileged to kiss the cook. Early hours were insisted upon. Life on the old Kansas farms meant mostly hard work. However, it was such experiences as these that tested the character of the youth of those days and made them the men they are today. Above all things the sons of the Kansas pioneers were encouraged to save and to hope to accumulate land of their own.

Sayings from Benjamin Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanac" were current. However, it is quite likely that the Denton boy was regaled with stories of old England from the lips of his parents. Doubtless he spent many a winter evening listening to tales of the Norman conquest, the half mythical tales of King Arthur's Knights of the Round Table, and the immortal story of King Alfred, who when in disguise, was set to watch cakes by a woman who had employed him, but with his mind on making arrows to punish his enemies, the Danes, let the cakes burn and was soundly scolded by the housewife. It is not improbable that the Dentons kept many of the English holidays and made Christmas the great event of the year at their home. Perhaps also, the boy heard of Guy Fawkes, who attempted to blow up the houses of parliment by storing gunpowder in a cellar over which the lords of England were to meet.

With such training the Denton lad grew up to manhood. He entered Campbell College at Holton, when that institution was struggling in its raw youth under the regime. The school was considered as being one of the thorough institution at the time, but it was nothing to what Campbell College is today. This young Englishman made a fine record at Holton. He was studious and popular with students and teachers. He could have been a teacher, or in fact, almost any course in life was open to him, but he decided to stick to the farm. After two years at Campbell College Mr. Denton returned home and began to follow his chosen occupation with renewed energy.

Selecting a place one-half mile north of the town of Denton, the results obtained from this land show that Mr. Denton's choice was a good one. More than anything else, he put into practice his father's often-repeated admonition and example of intensive farming. He left no ground to spare and he made the most of every inch of the soil. Perhaps this is one reason why he has been unusually prosperous.

Meanwhile Mr. Denton gradually improved the farm and made it one of the models for the farmers in Doniphan County to imitate. With the idea of owning plenty of land, so as to be independent beyond the fondest dreams of his forefathers in land-lord owned land in England, he began to look about the state to secure more holdings. Thomas county seemed to offer good inducements. In this county he acquired 420 acres, which will yield a most profitable income.

Mr. Denton felt the need of a partner in his various undertakings, and on March 21, 1900, he married Miss Christina Kopp of Robinson, Brown county. Miss Kopp was one of the popular young women of the county, and as Mrs. Denton, continues to grow in popularity. She is a model farm wife and her housekeeping is faultless. She is a good neighbor and her cooking is the envy of the neighborhood. Her home life is ideal and no woman is more loyal and true to her friends.

Aside from his crops, Mr. Denton takes a great interest in fine stock, and his cattle are among the best raised in Doniphan County. The animals are well housed. In every respect the farm owned by Thomas Denton shows evidence of the long days of work spent thereon. The machinery also is of the latest pattern, and Mr. Denton is progressive and always on the alert for new improvements. Like so many other Englishmen, he believes that nothing valuable should be wasted. This he applies to land, time and money, making the most of every nook and corner of his farm.

As a citizen of Doniphan County, Mr. Denton is a credit to the community. He stands for the best interest of his neighborhood and his advice is always good. He possesses British virtues of solidity of character, calm deliberation, bull-dog tenacity, thrift and perseverance. In buying of land he shows evidence of having a great deal of his father's judgment.

Mr. Denton will tell you that it pays to keep a farm in the best possible condition and that it always pays to erect good buildings and keep them in order. There are no make-shifts on his place. You don't see things going to rack and ruin, and you don't see costly farm implements and machinery standing out in the fields and exposed to the weather when not in use. The buildings on his place are the best evidence and indicate to the traveler what kind of a farmer the owner is.

His Ridge Prairie Stock Farm Is Famous for Its Prize Winning Aberdeen-Angus Cattle—Mr. Denton Is a Thorough, Wide-Awake Man Whose Success Is Due to His Ability to Mix Common Sense Business Methods With His Farming and Stock Raising Operations—His Character, Family, Characteristics, Etc.

Next to the cereal crops of a county its live stock may be taken as an index to its prosperity. Cattle make up a great deal of the wealth of a community. If a man's cattle are of good breed and well cared for it may be taken for granted that their owner at least is fairly successful.

Judging from these observations William G. Denton, living three-fourths of a mile southwest of the town of Denton, is more successful and prosperous than is usually the case, as he makes a specialty of raising fine live stock. His big Prairie Ridge Farm is a striking example of what intelligence and thrift may accomplish in cultivating the soil and growing a good breed of live stock.

Mr. Denton's specialty is Aberdeen-Angus cattle and he had the satisfaction of seeing his herd capture all of the prizes at the Hiawatha Fair last year. His cattle have won prizes and ribbons at other fairs—and they will continue to win prizes and ribbons, for Mr. Denton is the kind of a man who is not content to rest on his laurels; his ambition is to produce something better.

William George Denton is not a native of Doniphan County, but he is a citizen by adoption, and the right kind of a citizen. He was born in Morrow County, Ohio, on January 24, 1866. His parents were George and Eliza Denton, most substantial people and natives of England. The father, who was born February 12, 1828, and the mother, Elisa Topless, born in 1830, were married in the year 1855. Shortly thereafter they emigrated to the United States and settled in Morrow County, Ohio, near the town of Ashley.

After eighteen years spent in Ohio the family caught the Western fever and moved to Doniphan County, reaching here March 6, 1872. They left the train at Ryan station near Severance and immediately took up a farm in Union Township. George Denton, the father of the subject of this sketch, died April 10, 1902. The wife and mother survives, and though she is eighty-five years of age, she is enjoying life with her children and grandchildren. Before her marriage in England she was employed as a domestic at $10.00 for her first year's service. She often recalls the struggles of her own as well as those of her husband in the old country.

There were eight children born to George and Eliza Denton, William George Denton, of whom we write, being the sixth in order of birth. In addition to William George Denton, the other surviving sons and daughters are: Louise (Mrs. James Miller), of Denton; Ellen (Mrs. Aaron Ling), of Horton; Hattie J. (Mrs. H. C. Miller), of Horton; Sarah (Mrs. M. T. White), of Willis; Lizzie (Mrs. E. F. Hanney), of Horton; Martin and Nannie died several years ago.

William G. Denton was only seven years old when his parents moved to Doniphan County. He received a common school education and had just about as good an opportunity as any of the neighboring boys of his own age. He early learned to know the meaning of hard work but has managed to maintain his liking for it to the present day.

The Kansas country of that period presented quite a different appearance than it does now. The houses were rude and the farms unkept. It is difficult enough to make a choice selection of farm land in a country which is well known, but the Dentons had shown the good judgment, which is inherited to so great an extent by their son, by selecting the farm three-fourths of a mile southwest of Denton, which is now known as the Ridge Prairie Stock Farm.

Young Denton went through the hardships incidental to life on the farms in the 1870's. He has a vivid recollection of the time when the sky was blackened with grasshoppers as by clouds before a rain, and how the insects browned the fields with their bodies and passed on as a nightmare leaving all green things stripped bare. He can tell of the bitter struggle that followed and of the long hours of toil required, the rising when sleep is sweetest.

Those were the days of the "snake" or stake and rider fence—like those for which Abraham Lincoln split rails—the days of covered wagons ever moving westward. Sometimes after an exceptionally hard year the fall would see a procession of wilted and sun browned people moping in front of these same wagons on their way back to the East.

"We are going back to God's country," they would say when asked their destination. But the Dentons stayed and the constant association with hardships strengthened the character of the son.

He knows the back breaking work of "bugging" potatoes, of the eternal hoeing and inevitable chores, with perhaps a holiday once or twice a year—on the Fourth of July and at Christmas time. Sunday meant several hours in a little crowded church, perhaps, and shaking off the sleep that would persist in taking him, or maybe slyly napping. There was no rural route service, no telephone communication between farms. Serious sickness meant a hurried ride horseback to town for the doctor. Weddings and church and school entertainments furnished the main social events. The many conveniences now taken for granted as well as the luxuries were wanting. Ice cream and other frozen dainties—how rare. The stick of candy with its red and white stripes just like the barber pole, was considered a treat to be anticipated for days. Plain food was considered all that any boy should want. Perhaps all this had a place in its time and makes those who have prospered through their own efforts appreciate the smoothness of modern life. Such were the circumstances and the environment under which this Denton boy grew up on the farm.

Early in his career as a farmer, William George Denton took a great interest in live stock. The raising of thoroughbred cattle especially attracted his attention. He resolved to possess some of the best cattle in Doniphan County. He began to devote all his energy in this direction, along with a great deal of interest in thoroughbred hogs.

The Black Aberdeen-Angus cattle were among his favorite cattle breeds. Mr. Denton also began to raise the thoroughbred Hampshire hogs. He used great care in the feeding and pasturing of his cattle and soon won considerable fame as a stock man, his Aberdeen-Angus herd being unsurpassed by any other in the county. His thrived and grew as fat as all good self-respecting hogs do.

Before long he began to reap the reward of his labors. In addition to the products of his fields his live stock brought him in good returns. Nevertheless, he did not relax his care, and now he has some of the finest stock in Doniphan County. His barns and pens are well built and kept in good condition. He has the latest machinery for his farm and is constantly in touch with the most up-to-date methods of live stock handling. His cattle are worth going miles to see and are the pride of that neighborhood.

In 1899 Mr. Denton made a trip to Ohio, but this was not altogether on business. Quite likely he told the Ohio people in his native state of what a fine place Kansas was and how they had made a mistake by not coming here. He went to Ohio for a short visit and for another purpose. On August 30, 1899, he married Miss Maude M. Miller, who was born December 25, 1876, the daughter of David and Mary Miller, formerly of Miami County, Ohio, at the home of the bride's parents in Claridon County, Ohio.

The Dentons returned to Doniphan County, where they have established one of the ideal homes of the community. Six children were born to them. The twins, Harry and Mary, died in infancy. Those living are Gladys Ellen, who was born October 25, 1900; Georgia Dale, born April 7, 1902; Cecil William, born December 21, 1903; and Millicent Elizabeth, born March 11, 1911.

Mrs. Denton is a good housekeeper and a good neighbor. She has the respect and admiration of the entire community and is active in the various social affairs of the neighborhood. The family as a whole is well liked and the children appear to reflect a great deal of credit upon their parents.

The story of William Denton is that of a man who has made the most of his inheritance. The Ridge Prairie Stock Farm is known all over Doniphan County. In addition to caring for the live stock Mr. Denton is constantly overseeing the details of the crops on in 160 acres which he farms. He is a good business man and is progressive and is one of the most valuable people of the community.

Homer J. Henney, who appears in the picture with the family is a nephew of Mr. Denton and was born in Brown County, October 23, 1896, and has the ambition to become a great man some day. He is a graduate of the Horton High School and now in the second year of college at Baker University. He has spent the last eight summers between school terms with his uncle's family and is industrious young man.

James P. Miller

Is a Native of Ohio, But Has Resided in Doniphan County Over Forty Years—A Citizen of Denton, Civil War Veteran and a Booster.

James P. Miller, of Denton, is a thorough Kansan. Much has been said and written here of the illustrious sons and daughters which the old country has turned out, to the glory and honor of the nation, but no words of praise can be amiss regarding Mr. Miller. Although not a native of Kansas he is one of her staunchest citizens, who will go down through the ages and into history as a noble man who did his duty, after seeing it clearly; and who has made for himself and family a much to be desired place in the annals of fame.

Huron County, Ohio, was the scene of James P. Miller's birthplace. It was on October 14, 1841, when he first came into the world and Ohio then was the maelstrom of political activities. Abraham Lincoln was a young man just starting out on his famous career. Douglas had barely let the ink dry on his college diploma and had just hung out his shingle. The vexing questions of slavery which afterward disturbed the nation were budding; and into such a period as this the young Miller made his appearance. His parents were of an old Colonial family and were pioneer residents of that section of Ohio. Into James P. flowed their ancestral blood and it is not to be wondered at that he was one of the first men to come to Doniphan County and make a success of his business ventures, not only in farming, but other lines as well.

Whatever education Mr. Miller obtained he paid for and paid for well. It was in the days of the quill pen when he was a boy, and the school houses were not heated by steam. The teachers were universal in their belief that to spare the rod was to spoil the child and applied their beliefs more rigorously than they do now and perhaps succeeded in the making of better scholars. This however is a mooted question. Whatever the situation, suffice it to be known that young James met it with the quiet fortitude and forbearance that has since characterized his life, and he made the most of the opportunities. There is nothing on record to show that he was an exceptionally brilliant scholar; neither is there any record to show that he was a dullard. He maintained the average of the others who were with him in the little old log cabin house and did his best to master the intricacies of arithmetic and reading.

To look back now, the course of study which young James pursued would seem foolish but in his days it was a necessity. Especial stress was laid upon writing and Mr. Miller undoubtedly has in his possession today books which he filled with his childish scrawls. He well remembers when the teachers used to spend their spare hours at noon and at recess in the sharpening of their goose quill pens. However these pioneer pedagogues blazed the path to the early education of the pupils of that day.

Mr. Miller had ambition. He had the foresight to realize that something must be done to better the situation as it then existed. Lincoln and Douglas were debating and the subject of this sketch, although only a boy of tender years, well recalls the interest they were to the community, which he lived. He was an eager reader of every line of the speeches and followed closely the points which Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Douglas made. In this day and age, where we are taught to revere Lincoln and his able opponent, it is very seldom that we take into consideration that "Honest Abe" was not given the plaudits of the multitude that is accorded his name today. He was defiled by many, but not by James P. Miller who, although he was but a boy, had in his heart a love of all the principles of freedom which the martyred president of the United States stood for and for which he fought.

The early schooling of Mr. Miller was obtained during the winter months and was necessarily brief. As was the custom then, during the summer he worked on a farm. How easy that sounds today and what hard work it meant forty or fifty years ago. Today we have much modern machinery which goes to make up progressive farming, but then it was different, and a great deal of the farm work that seems easy now had to be accomplished by the hardest kind of physical labor and the consumption of much more time, for this was in the day of the old fashioned wheat reap-hook, cradle and flail.

Into such a life as this, the young James was thrust. It was hard and discouraging work. During the summer months, it was necessary for him to arise at 4 o'clock which he did cheerfully and without word of complaint. Under the broiling sun he labored efficiently, gaining the respect of slavery which afterward disturbed He never shirked, and no duty was ever imposed on him, no matter how hard, but that he saw it was completed and in the right manner.

During all this time and while making no remarks to anyone Mr. Miller was doing a good deal of thinking for himself. So when war was declared through the firing on Fort Sumter, Residence of James P. Miller, situated in Denton.

April 12th, in 1861, he made up his mind to enlist in the Union army. At the time, this was impossible. He had himself and others of his family to consider, but on five different occasion it is known that he went to the recruiting sergeant's office and asked information about the term of service, so anxious was he to serve his country. This in itself is a proof of his patriotic inclinations, but it is only a marker to what he later was to do. It serves to show his interest in what he thought was right.

Throughout the years of 1861-'62, and '63 he served his employer faithfully and well. Bull Run had been lost to the Unionists and in other battles the Confederates had triumphed. Mr. Miller, son of a sturdy old pioneer, concluded that he could no longer refraim from enlisting for the Union cause, so accordingly on August 14, 1864, he enlisted in the One Hundred Sixty-fourth Ohio Infantry. He walked to Clarendon in that state where he signed the papers making him a soldier of Uncle Samuel, and he was discharged at Columbus, Ohio, on July 14, 1865.

Mr. Miller's record during his army life was one of honor. It was General Sherman who said that "war is hell," and through that hell went Mr. Miller. The arduous campaigns were to him a field in which to cultivate his traits of honesty, integrity and fearlessness which he later has shown so well; and he gave during his long year of service the best that he had in him. Much of the activities of his regiment was in Missouri, where Price's army had obtained a foothold, but he also participated in some of the battles of the Middle West which caused the final victory and the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court House.

Upon being discharged, Mr. Miller returned to his home in Ohio and again took up the burden of work which fell on his shoulders. He was ambitious and desirious of making a place for himself in the world, but had nothing to start with. He began however by saving his money and early in the year of 1872, having accumulated what was then a tidy sum, decided to emigrate westward. It was then the popular idea to go West. Horace Greeley had just handed down to that generation his famous slogan: "Go West, young man, and grow up with the country." So young Mr. Miller decided to follow the advice of the great editor and accordingly on the eighteenth of July, 1872, he started out, with no particular destination in view but determined that wherever it might be, there would be given him the opportunity he desired.

In the summer of 1872 he came to Doniphan County. The state of Kansas was still new and in a more or less primitive condition. The habits of thrift and industry which had become inherent, the young man brought with him, and he determined to wrest a living from the soil. He looked around to see what opportunities afforded themselves and finally selected Union Township where he purchased eighty acres near what is now Denton. For this property he paid the munificent sum of $1,125.

At that time—in 1872—the call of his native state became too powerful to master, and, by request of his old time friends, in the Buckeye state, Mr. Miller returned to Ohio. He worked faithfully there for a period of about two years, keeping track of his farm in Doniphan County, to which he returned on March 4, 1874. It was in this year that an event occured which had a great bearing on his future and which was to make for him such an enviable reputation. He made the acquaintance of Miss Louisa Denton, daughter of the old and respected Denton family, the history of which is given elsewhere in these pages, and to whom he was immediately attached. In her, Mr. Miller saw something of his ideal of womanhood and their courtship was rapid. On March 23, 1879, they were married at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Denton and the wedding was one of the largest the community has ever witnessed.

Following a brief tour, the young couple came back to their farm. To this union have been born five children, four of whom died in their youth. The children were, Amanda, who was taken when seven years old; Alice, who died at the age of seventeen months; John B., dying at the age of five months and George A., who was nearly two years old when deceased. Miss Anna E. Miller is now at Baker University, Kansas, where she has been a student for the past three years, and where she will graduate in June, 1916. She is a fine young woman, who undoubtedly will make for herself a high place in whatever community she decides to locate, and will make an ideal wife. Through her viens courses the blood of the Millers and Dentons, two families of which she can justly be proud. It is the prediction of the writer of this sketch that she will graduate with high honors, and will shed lustre upon the state of her nativity.

A few years ago after a life of hard toil on the farm which he now owns, Mr. Miller decided to retire and he purchased one of the finest homes in Denton. Although he still takes an interest in the farm he does not devote all of his time to it. He has become a power in the financial world and is now president of the Denton Bank. His farm now comprises two hundred acres, thirty acres of which are in the town of Denton in Union Township.

Mr. Miller is surely a man who has been a credit to the community in which he lives. Nothing that would go to make a better place in which to live has lacked his support. In political life he has never asked for office, never wanted it and never would accept anything in that line which has been offered him innumerable times. Civically, as we have said, he has fathered every project which went to make a better Denton. Mr. Miller has indeed served a faithful and useful term in the interests of his home and is a man of whom Doniphan County is proud.

Mrs. Miller is of a home-loving disposition and has emplanted in the minds of her daughter the true principles of loyalty and heroism. During all of her wedded life she has assisted in making their home a place of emjoyment for every one. Her economic methods in the house have contributed largely to the success of her husband, and the daughter Mary could do no better than to emulate her mother.

William W. Denton

Is Son of Civil War Veteran and One of the Most Prosperous Farmers in Doniphan County.

Denton, Kansas, is truly a representative town. Named in honor of one of that honorable family, it has no more able citizen than William W. Denton, a son of the famous Michael Denton, who was a pioneer and who did much to bring the cultivation of the soil up to its present standard, and who was one of the foremost in placing it in the front ranks of civilization.

William W. Denton was born on March 2, 1869, in Sec County, Wisconsin, where his father had gone after the Civil War, through which he served. He came to Kansas with his parents in the fall of 1872 and settled in Doniphan County, where his father, Michael Denton, first located on a rented farm south of Denton and later purchased the place four miles southwest of Denton which William W. now occupies.

There was very little opportunity for education then. The country school had not blossomed out into the fine system which characterizes it today, but was a crude institution where learning was hard and seldom obtained. The schoolmasters for the most part were not so well equipped for their profession as today, and the young pupils were instructed only in the rudiments, such as reading, writing and a little of arithmetic. It was long before the days of algebra and long before the origin of the term "scientific agriculture." It was into such a period as this that the young William W. was born. At school he was a thorough student, absorbing everything that his teachers suggested. Then after completing his education, he returned to the farm of his father and mother. There was one thing above all others that William W. realized, and that was the fact that modern methods were coming into use and that the only way for a young man, such as he was then, to make a success was to study these methods and become a real and true agriculturist. Consequently he applied himself and studied everything he could lay his hands upon, working all of the time to better the condition of the soil which he occupied.

During this period of toil Mr. Denton met Miss Amelia Swarts of Brown County, Kansas. She was a young woman of exceptional charm and pleasing manner, and in her the young farmer saw all of the qualities that he himself possessed and that he wished her to have. Their courtship was not of long duration. She was the daughter of an old and respected Brown County family and to their union have been born the following children: Chester S., fourteen years old; William A., eleven; Orville F., eight; Walter V., four; Hazel Irene, thirteen.

Mrs. Denton has indeed been a model wife in every way that the word can mean. She has worked industriously and has given to her husband not only all of these years of effort, but a companionship and fidelity as well, that cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. To him she has been a constant source of inspiration. In the moments when he was deeply discouraged and fearful she has been at his side with a sunny word of hope and good cheer and never, under the most trying circumstances, has she failed to assist in whatever manner God deemed her worthy of doing. To her family she has been not only a mother, but a counselor as well, and to her they have gone with all of their petty trials and tribulations for sympathy. She has been a rare and worthy woman.

Of Mr. Denton it can only be said that he has been a faithful husband and a faithful farmer. To say this at this time and in this sketch is but futile, as time has demonstrated what his work has been. He is today one of the foremost farmers of the county and his life has been devoted to the community in which he resides. There has never been a propaganda in the interests of the neighborhood for which he has not stood. Whether it was the church or the political party to which he was affiliated, Mr. Denton has always given of the best that was in him. No one can estimate the service that he has given to the community.

As a farmer he has been cautious and painstaking. In this day and age of radicalism a few of the more conservative people are needed and Mr. Denton is one of these kind. He is progressive and whenever any project is introduced that has been tried and that shows beyond the shadow of doubt that it is a good improvement, and one which will assist him materially in the cultivation of his land, why then he will consider that improvement. In other words Mr. Denton is not flighty. He likes to take his time and to study matters and consider whether they are good or bad. In this we believe he has achieved all of the success which his ambition could desire. He indeed has been a careful as well as a faithful servant.

Outside of his extensive farming interests this young man and esteemed agriculturist finds time to devote to fraternal organizations and his church. His wife is a devout Christian and so is Mr. Denton. He is not one of the kind, however, who only professes Christianity; but he would rather do a kind deed and not advertise that fact. When the circumstances are taken into consideration, this is remarkable in this day and age, as the great majority of people are only too willing to accept all of the credit, and oftentimes for things which they do not do themselves. Consequently, these traits of character which have manifested themselves in Mr. Denton are more than ever given the appreciation they deserve.

For honesty and uprightness there is no man in Doniphan County who has a better record or is more favorably known. His word is as good as his bond. Whatever he says he will do, why that will be done, no matter if it costs him a thousand dollars or takes all of his time for the next ten years. He is the sort of a man whom one would entrust with the transaction of the most important business, involving any amount of money and not require a bond of any character. William W. Denton is an illustrious son of an illustrious father and worthy of the name which he bears. He is a man among men and one of the best citizens that Doniphan County will ever have.

Since writing the above, the subject of this sketch died in a hospital in St. Joseph, Sunday, October 3, 1915, after a few days' illness. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. C. Clampitt, pastor of the Severance M. E. Church, at the home of the deceased. A large concourse of friends followed the remains to its last resting place, the Denton cemetery.

Ezra Denton, Stockman and Farmer

Son of Solomon Denton, Doniphan County Pioneer—Born Near Denton, February 12, 1876—Like Father, Successful in Farming and Acquiring Land—Owns One-Half Section in Doniphan County and One-Half Section in Howard County, Texas—Specializes Black Polled Angus Cattle and White O. I. C. Hogs.

Another example of what inherited British bull-dog tenacity of purpose, thrift, constant hard work and exceptional judgment in buying land, cultivating it and making the most of it, is Ezra T. Denton, who lives one and one-fourth miles southwest of Denton. Although not yet middle aged he is among the wealthiest of Doniphan County land owners. His farm is exceptionally well improved, with some unusual features of convenience on the place.

Ezra T. Denton was born on Feb. 12, 1876. He grew to manhood as Kansas was recovering from the effects of the grasshoppers and subsequent hard times of that period. It was still in the days when a cottage organ was not common in the farm house, and many of the conveniences with which the present Denton home is fitted were not known.

As young Ezra attended the county schools like the other members of the family, he applied himself to his work. On the farm he was never idle and there gained a most practical education at the "grass roots," literally as well as figuratively. His "book-learning" was limited to the country schools, but he gained some valuable lessons from the great book of Nature—and the farm affords the best of instruction from this book. Many a man who has made his mark in life has studied solely from this same text.

Close application to the study of the soil and its crops, consciously or unconsciously, begets a desire for ownership of some of the land. Constant association with a good stock of cattle will eventually fill a person with an ambition to be able to call some of such cattle his own. This was the case with young Denton.

The farmer boy of this sketch began to acquire land at an early age. He also realized early in life the value of making the most of every foot of land he possessed. He observed how the best results were obtained from the efforts of his neighbors and put into practice what seemed best to him. Nothing in this line was too small to escape his notice. No hours were too long or work too hard if he might gain a little knowledge or profit thereby. On his place there was no waste. Every fence corner was utilized.

As the years went by Ezra Denton added improvement after improvement. The hard times came and some retrenchment was necessary. Many people will remember the year of 1893. It was a year of events and Coxey's tramp army went to Washington. Credit was then as hard to get as a pass on the Rock Island today. A man who had a farm that wasn't mortgaged was almost as rare as a man who has his farm mortgaged during this day and rapid progress of the country. However, young Denton was a little more fortunate than many, and by judicious management was in good shape after the panic passed into history. He had been sawing wood, both literally and figuratively, and not worrying much about what the calamity howlers said. He had the true Kansas spirit. This might be localized by saying that he possessed the real Doniphan County courage. This invincible spirit has always placed the county in the lead of Kansas counties and has been the saving factor of men like Mr. Denton.

If all men in Kansas were as full of the same never-give-up idea as Mr. Denton is, Kansas would be even a much greater state than she now is. If every farmer in Kansas practiced the same economy of time, money and cultivation of land as the Doniphan County man the state would be by far the wealthiest state in the Union. Europen people are shocked at the extravagant waste of land in America. They have made a living on tiny patches of ground. And this ground has been hauled up to niches on rocks on the hillsides by basketsful. The American is often astonished at the way in which the foreigner thrives when he comes to this new country, side by side with a native American who somehow or other can not get ahead.

In England intensive farming is not carried to the extent it is in other European countries, but Mr. Denton put into practice the example of his father, who came from people who had never let anything go to waste in his native country of rural England. Yet in that beautiful land there is very little chance for the farmer as compared to the chances of his fellows in America. The British soil is owned largely by the "gentry," the lords who have inherited the land for generations, but when given an opportunity like that afforded in America to own their own farms, the Englishman and his sons make the most of the chance.

Mr. Denton, like other Englishmen, was constantly on the lookout for opportunities to increase his holdings. He believed Texas offered such an inducement. Much money has been made, and more has been lost, by investing in that state which promises so much. A story is told of how a Kansas man traded "sight-unseen" part of a farm in Kansas for several hundred acres of land in Texas. The Kansas land was worth about $150 an acre. A few months later the Texas land buyer asked a friend who had been in the county where the investment was made, how much land was priced in that Texas county.

"Why, land there is priced at as large a figure as you will pay, but is really worth from $2.00 to $50.00 per acre."

Some time afterward, following the investor's return from a trip to look at his Texas trade, he was asked what he thought of his deal.

"Gosh," he exclaimed; "I got some of the $2 land."

However, Mr. Denton bought no land without seeing it. He made a trip to Texas and looked over Howard county in that state. After many days looking at the soil and considering a few facts gleaned from a mass of probabilities and fiction, he decided on the purchase of a half section in the best part of the county. He did not move to Texas and had no intention of doing so. Kansas is good enough for him and he prefers to remain in Doniphan County. Here he has made money and prospered.

On November 14, 1900, Mr. Denton married Miss Anna Daisy Denton, the adopted daughted of Mr. and Mrs. William Denton. They are parents of four children: Alvin M. Denton, who was born June 1, 1901; Willie C. Denton, born Aug. 8, 1903; Clara L. Denton, Oct. 31, 1905, and Hilda L. Denton, Aug. 8, 1908. They are lovable children and inherit their parents' good qualities. They show promise of making the father and mother proud of them. The parents plan to give each of their children the best of an education, and nothing will be spared to start them on the highway of a useful and honorable career in life.

Mrs. Denton is an ideal housekeeper and is well fitted to occupy her fine home. She attends largely to the duties of the house itself. In addition to this she makes a specialty of raising chickens. Any kind of poultry interests her and the arrangement of the poultry houses and yards is most convenient. However, her specialty is thoroughbred Rhode Island Reds (named after the state of Rhode Island, which isn't much bigger than Doniphan County) and White Wyandottes (named after a tribe of Indians who used to wander over the site of the present Kansas City, Kansas).

The raising of young chickens is a science and art as delicate and requiring as much pains—pains in more senses than one—as the watch-making trade. Like watches, there is usually always something wrong with the little chickens. It is one thing to read poetical language about the tiny, downy chicks and their plaintive cheeps, but it is another thing of stern reality to leave a comfortable bed at 3 a. m. and corral a few dozen that somehow or other have become scared and slipped through the warranted "chicken proof" wire like small shot through the fingers. It is quite romantic to read of hunting eggs in the old hay mow, but as a matter of fact hens have a decidedly uncanny instinct for laying their eggs in the most secret and out-of-the-way nooks if not guarded against. A hen will show as much ingenuity in this respect, or rather this disrespect, as a girl will in secreting love letters or communicating with a young man after she is warned "never to speak to him again."

Mrs. Denton is the best of mothers to her children and they make her a mother-confessor for all their faults and fancies. Their home is made as ideal as posible and nothing is too good for them. The parents wish them to have the advantages they themselves missed and in all likelihood they will enjoy a much broader outlook upon life than their parents or English forefathers. They inherit much of the sober judgment and stable qualities, and it is quite probable that Doniphan County will be as proud of them as it is of the father and mother. The children could have no better ideals to follow and, in a practical way, they could have no better models of farm and house work than that which is daily under their eyes.

The Denton home is modern. One of its greatest conveniences is the system by which the house is supplied with water. It is a hydraulic ram which pumps the water from a spring on the farm. Do you know anything better to drink when you are real thirsty than real spring water? It is a different sort of drink than that given by the hard water from the hydrants in the city. Many a man successful in business, as he turns from the insipid liquid which comes from the water cooler, would give almost any amount of money just to lower his head over the rim of moss-covered stones and drink again from the delicious water of the rippling spring. Many a man would prefer the life of the farmer, as it is now lived with the conveniences which modern science has brought to the rural home—and all these conveniences are found in the Denton home.

It is a home to which the children will look back with love and fond recollections as they leave to go out into the world, and such recollections to them will be as treasured as any of their worldly goods. Given a good home, a good education and fair health, what more can a person ask as a start in life?

If the Denton boys have the same tastes as their father they will likely be remarkably successful in livestock raising. Among his chief interest in life is the thoroughbred cattle owned by Ezra Denton. He began to acquire a stock of fine cattle several years ago and is constantly adding to his herd. He oversees their care, as well as looking after other details of farm work. Be it remembered also, that he has the Texas county farm on his mind, and this takes considerable time.

Mr. Denton makes a specialty of Polled Angus cattle. He also has many fine thoroughbred O. I. C. hogs. His constant care of these animals is bringing him a fine reward in the reputation he has earned as one of the best stockmen in the county. His livestock is one of the attractions of lovers of fine cattle.

No small part of success in raising livestock is correct feeding, and Mr. Denton has unusually good judgment in this matter. His barns and sheds he also insisted upon being well constructed, so that the livestock is well housed. The barns and outbuildings of his modern farm would present quite a contrast to the rough sheds and draughty barns of the early settlers. Mr. Denton does not need to worry about his cattle freezing in winter, so comfortably are the animals housed. In this, as in all other things, Ezra Denton has shown the same thoroughness, the constant watchfulness as to details, the same thrift and economy that has made him a money maker in other lines and phases of farm work. He is ever alert and progressive, adopts the most modern methods and machinery and spares no expense for modern improvements. He is one of the leaders in the affairs of the community and is one of the mainstays in the community in which he resides.

"Aunt Lizzie" Denton

Prominent Lady Widely Known Gives History of Early Days—Proprietor of The Evergreen Farm.

Of all the charming old characters in Doniphan County, there is none more lovable than Mrs. Mary ("Aunt Lizzie") Denton. For fifty years and more she has been so well known as to need no introduction in these pages. One of her claims to distinction and the one that she, perhaps, was proudest of, is the fact that for thirty-five years she averaged $200 a year from the sale of butter and eggs. But, perhaps, it is best to let "Aunt Lizzie" tell her experiences in her own words:

"I came to Kansas in 1865, landing in Atchison on May 15. We came West 'to seek our fortune,' as it was generally expressed in those days. My husband and I started from Westfield, Ohio, in a two-horse wagon with what little belongings we had boxed up. We drove to Cincinnati in two days and got our tickets for the boat routed for Kansas. It was during the critical and uncertain period of the civil war and we were compelled to stay in Cincinnati nearly three weeks. We could not tell with the slightest degree of certainty when we would start, although we expected to set out any day. Kansas was considered the great West in those times.

"Before I go any furtner I want to tell the prices of some articles to show how difficult it was to live. Flour was $9 a hundred pounds; bacon, 35c a pound; sugar, 25c a pound; butter, 75c a pound; potatoes, $3.00 a bushel; coffee 60c a pound; tea, $2 a pound; eggs, 65c a dozen; apples, 25c a pound. A wash tub cost $3 and a cook stove $65, but we had been lucky enough to bring our cook stove along with us, and also a few dishes. Other immigrants considered us fortunate. For one month we lived in Atchison and gave $20 for two small rooms that we and George Hinscliff and family, all lived in.

"We soon began to look around for a better location, as everyone else was doing at the time, and Mr. Denton and I spent several days on horseback, going over the different counties in Missouri, north and east of St. Joseph. We were not satisfied with the looks of the country, as the war had been so destructive to property. So we concluded to go back to Kansas and see what might turn up. There was not a foot of railroad in the state of Kansas when we came to Atchison. Everything was freighted across the plains by ox teams or very heavy horses; as high as four yoke of oxen on one wagon. It was very common in those days to see as high as ten or twelve of the 'trains' in one day. The years of 1865-66-67-68, up to and including 1872, were the trying times of our lives.

"Most of the time we had to contend with high prices and grasshoppers; and the latter will be recalled vividly by all of the pioneers. Most of the time we lived in houses that people today would not put their cattle in. In the years that I have just mentioned, land sold here in Doniphan County from $3 to $7 per acre, and, although the price was ridiculously low, it was not easy to get, as everything was so high and money was as scarce as prairie chickens are in Doniphan County today. The lowest interest was 12 per cent. We lived for four years, before coming to the farm I now live on, six miles west of Troy, in the Wolf River settlement. Walnut Grove was our postoffice and we usually got our mail once a week as all of it came by way of stage coaches.

"Neighbors were considered 'close' at two miles, and Troy was the nearest place to church. All country places of worship were in school houses, very poor ones, and very far apart. I was in Kansas seven years before I saw a covered top buggy. There were no buggies then. Everyone rode on horseback. We moved to the farm, where I still reside, in March of 1869. I cannot remember the exact date. There were few roads on the prairies, and many a band of Indians I have seen as they passed our little shack. This shack is still standing, but it is ready to collapse, and I dislike to see it go. To me it is the last link connecting the past and present."

"Aunt Lizzie's" First Residence

This first house on Aunt Lizzie's well-improved farm has not been used for a residence for some time. Several years ago a fine new farm house and other buildings were built, in keeping with the improvement and progess of the county.

Mrs. M. E. Denton is a good business woman and one who is endowed with a penchant for recollecting names and incidents connected with the '60's. The young women of today marvel at the hardships endured by the subject of this sketch. "Aunt Lizzie" is one of those women who have a pleasant word and a congenial smile for everyone whom she comes in contact with, and when her earthly toil is ended, all of her acquaintances can truly say, that the world is better that she lived.

In those turbulent times of pioneer days, the means of transportation were much different from today. Some walked, others traveled on horseback and others went by oxen, and Aunt Lizzie says many a night she has kept from four to ten travelers who were in pursuit of homes.

This beautiful place in the heart of Doniphan County's wonderfully rich agricultural community near Denton, is known as the "Evergreen Farm." The little old house of one room, 16x16 feet in dimensions, is still standing, just as it used to stand when it was occupied as a home by Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Denton. It was in this room that these kind-hearted and thrifty farmer folks gave shelter and lodging and food to many a wayfaring man out on the prairies road. The latch string always hung on the outside of the door and never was a stranger in need but he was properly taken in and warmed and fed. Aunt Lizzie, as Mrs. Denton has long been known, will tell that on many a night as many as ten and twelve persons were housed there over night. The Evergreen Farm is one of the historical places in Doniphan County, for if it could tell of all that has been going on there and of the influence its owners have wielded for the good of humanity, there are none who would not say it was indeed a friendly inn.

Mr. and Mrs. William T. Denton.

Alexander B. Swartz

Well Known and Successful Farmer Is Now Retired and Resides in Denton.

Out in Union Township in the southwest corner of Doniphan, are found some of the best citizens, men who by their perseverence and integrity have won distinction as farmers and good citizens. Such a man is Alexander B. Swartz, whose residence is in Denton. He was born in Doniphan County, June 3, 1866, shortly after the end of the Civil War and has lived a life of usefulness. His parents were John and Margaret Swartz, who had come to dwell in Doniphan County in the year 1860, and who were among the substantial farming people of the Denton neighborhood for many years. The father died February 19, 1906. His mother died June 21, 1875. His stepmother is still living at the age of eighty years.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander B. Swartz, and Lucy May Swartz Gish.

The subject of our sketch spent his boyhood days on the farm doing a farmer boy's work and attending the district school, and upon reaching manhood's estate he became a farmer himself.

December 11, 1889, Alexander B. Swartz married Miss Mary H. Denton, a daughter of Joseph and Lucy Denton, the ceremony being performed in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Denton. They have one daughter, Lucy May, born Sept. 8, 1890, wife of C. H. Gish. One daughter was born to them, Harriet Elizabeth, March 22, 1916.

Mr. Swartz is now a retired farmer, but still owns his fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres of rich land five miles south of Denton, a good half section of land in Kiowa County, Kansas, besides a residence in the town of Denton in which he lives.

Having spent all of the years of his life in this splendid community in which he was born, Mr. Swartz has witnessed the development of the town of Denton and the country round about step by step for almost a half century. He has no doubt in his mind but that Doniphan County is the best county in Kansas and there is no other community in the Middle West to match it, either from the production of its fine soil, the high quality of its citizenship, schools and churches and all the agencies of civilization. Mr. Swartz is proud of his home and his community. He has been a good citizen, steady going and conservative, but always standing for those things that were helpful to the people and their interests.

MARTIN JOYCE

An Energetic Farmer in Wolf River Township.

Martin Joyce, who lives one mile north and one mile west of Bendena, was born in County Gallway, Ireland, on September 28, 1841. He came to America with his parents when only six years old, and landed in Doniphan County in 1874. He was married to Miss Dora Kirwan of Doniphan County on May 19, 1876. To this union were born two boys and two girls: Michael, John, Marguerite and Retty.

Mr. Joyce raises a great deal of stock and farms about 240 acres.

Denton Cemetery

Denton Cemetery had its origin in 1870. The first meeting to plan for the burial ground was held in the Ridge school house, and the Rev. Mr. Dad Brown presided. Mrs. John Denton and others helped to raise the money to carry on the work, the property already having been donated by George Ellis. John, Jonathan and William Denton hauled lumber from Geary to build a fence. It first was known as Ridge Cemetery, but the name was later changed. Wm. Denton was one of the moving spirits behind the move for the cemetery. Mrs. M. E. (Aunt Lizzie) Denton, was one of the originators of the plan for the cemetery, and gave much of her time and effort in assisting to get the money for it.

John Small

John Small was born in County Antrim, Ireland, of Scottish parents on July 11, 1848. He came to America in February, 1865, and went to work for Marena Hagerman, father of George Hagerman of Wayne Township, in Indiana, and worked for him for two years in that state. Then Mr. Hagerman came to Doniphan County, Kansas, bringing young Small with him. The young man remained with his first employer for five years more. He operated a corn sheller for three seasons and then went to farming for himself, renting from William Gillen one year, and after that time he worked his own farm of eighty acres, two and one-half miles south of Denton, for which he paid $700, or less than $10 per acre.

On March 17, 1874, he married Miss Florence McDaniel of Wayne Township. To them were born six children, two of whom died in infancy—John, aged thirteen months, and Sarah, aged three years. William, who is now twenty-five years old, is employed by the U. S. government in the department of animal industry at Washington; Mary, now the wife of James Denton of Union Township; Lena, wife of Lee Andler of Horton, Kan.; Rosa, wife of Wm. F. Kleppe of Robinson, Kansas. The Kleppe's farm 320 acres, and are well-to-do farmers. Their specialty is short horn cattle.

Robert E. Denton

Robert E. Denton, who lives three miles northwest of Denton, was born in Sauk County, Wisconsin, September 23, 1872. His parents were Michael and Martha J. Denton, and they brought him to Doniphan County when an infant, in the same year he was born. He was educated in the public schools and also had one year, during the reign of Professor E. J. Hoenshell, at Campbell University, Holton.

On December 29, 1897, he married Miss Sarah May Heaston of Doniphan County. They have six children, as follows: Robest R., sixteen years old; Don V., twelve; Ivan M., eleven; Freda Viola, eight; Joseph E., seven, and Paul B., four. Mr. Denton owns 160 acres of farm land, and a town residence. It is a matter of pride to Mr. Denton that he was one of the first county school graduates, there having been but six.

W. H. Onstott enlisted near St. Joseph, Mo., and on two different occasions, the first being with Company D, Thirteenth Missouri volunteer infantry, for three years, and the second time for one year with Company G, Forty-third regiment. He was mustered out at Benton Barracks, Mo. Mr. Onstott was born in Garrard County, Kentucky, on March 12, 1840, and came to Doniphan County in the spring of 1881. His property consists of a valuable half section and his residence in Highland. The wife is living; also sons and daughters, as follows: Hettie D., Anna A., Emma B., Alice C., and Fred H., Charles B., William A., Oliver O. and James A.

Dr. J. E. Stepp

Denton's Medical Practitioner, Who, as County Doctor, Friend and Counselor, Has Won His Way to the Hearts of the People of Denton and the Country Round About.

The country doctor of our boyhood days, who drove about the country by day and by night ministering unto the sick and healing them with medicine and cheering words, has a prototype in the person of Denton's old-time physician and surgeon and good samaritan, Dr. J. E. Stepp. He is a skillful practitioner, well schooled in medicine and surgery, who has won his way to the hearts of all of the people of the Denton neighborhood by his devotion to his professional work, his ever readiness to go to duty's call, no matter what the wind and the weather may be, and his cheery soul which, expressed in kindly words and acts, helps to make sick people well and well people glad they are alive.

The marriage of Dr. J. E. Stepp to Miss Ethel Shultz, a member of a prominent family of Effingham, Kansas, took place May 29, 1901, the Rev. Mr. Robey of the United Brethern Church at Denton officiating. Mrs. Stepp has shared the popularity and good will and esteem of the people of the Denton community and she has been both a helpmate to her husband and an active worker in her own way for the alleviation of suffering and for the peace and happiness of the people among whom she moves, and an indefatigable worker in the Baptist Church. Dr. and Mrs. Stepp have one child, Mary Elizabeth, who was born in Denton, August 24, 1902. She is one of the bright little girls of Denton, who is being educated at Effingham where Mrs. Stepp's parents reside.

It is not every community that is blessed by the presence of a physician and surgeon who is so ardently devoted to his practice and so loyal to the people, the rich and the poor alike, as Dr. Stepp has proved himself to be. Denton people will recall with joy and pride the many years of Dr. Stepp's service among them in his great mission which is to bring relief to the sick and suffering and to bring sunshine into the lives of all of the people.

WILLIAM A. STEWART

Operating a Saw Mill and Threshing Outfit and, Being a Natural-Born Machinist, He Has Become One of Doniphan County's Valuable Citizens—His Wife a Model Woman, Who Is Bringing Up Her Children Aright.

When, on November 15, 1908, William A. Stewart came, with his family, to live in the neighborhood near Denton, the people of Doniphan County gained a most valuable citizen. A man of middle age, sober, steady, industrious, a natural-born machinery man, it was not long until his worth was recognized by these good people among whom he came to live. Often he has proven himself indispensable to the community by operating a saw mill and, in season, a threshing outfit, or making himself useful in many ways wherein the services of an expert machinist are required. He is the one man among thousands whom every well regulated neighborhood needs and should appreciate; while Mrs. Stewart, a woman of strength of character with a high purpose in life, has become a powerful factor in the neighborhood by her noble example as wife of a good man and as a mother who is rearing her children in the right way. It is to such characters, often found in communities of Kansas, that we owe our highest tribute of praise, and to write of such people affords us the greatest pleasure.

Mr. Stewart has an advantage over most people—he was born in the state of Kansas, in Chautauqua County on November 28, 1873. His father was one of the early settlers and substantial citizens of southern Kansas, who had reared a family of children to be useful men and women and good citizens of the commonwealth.

From boyhood up, William Alexander Stewart had a liking for machinery. In school he was an apt pupil, but his misd ran more to the study of mechanics than to dead languages. He was handy with tools, and when anything broke about the house or the farm, he set to work and repaired it. It was only natural that the boy should be found around whenever threshing was going on, or in the fields examining a new piece of farm machinery, a reaper or a mowing machine. One of his boyhood delights was a visit to the old, primitive saw mill in the woods beside the creek, where the native timber was sawed into boards and timbers for the farmers. All this was a part of the education of this young man.

On March 12, 1898, Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Emma Jane Strong at Lamar, Missouri, at the residence of Elder M. D. Ramey, pastor of the Baptist Church of that place. She was a native of Missouri, born on a farm near Lamar, June 11, 1877. They went to live near the town of Newport, Missouri, remaining there several years, and it was there four children came to bless their union. Leroy was born April 6, 1900; Pearl May, October 12, 1901; Ada Ogusta, November 15, 1903; Mattie Elnord, November 8, 1905.

Mrs. Stewart's parents were old residents of Missouri and were honored by all who knew them. Her father died when she was a girl of seven years, but her mother is still living at Flora, Missouri, enjoying the blessings that come to those who have lived well their lives and who have reared their children in the right way.

The Stewarts, as stated at the beginning of this article, came to Doniphan County, November 15, 1908, and took up their residence in the Denton neighborhood. Mr. Stewart was soon convinced that the neighborhood needed a saw mill for the convenience of the farmers and the town people as well. He set up a mill and has operated a part of each year since, sawing timber for the people of that locality. During the late summer and autumn of each year, however, Mr. Stewart operates his threshing machine through northeastern Kansas and this work brings him good returns, as he is known among the farmers as an honest and conscientious man and one on whom they can rely.

In all seasons of the year, however, Mr. Stewart's knowledge of mechanics comes into good play. He usually is successful in everything he undertakes. He is a man of rare good judgment in all matters in his particular line, and his advise is often sought by the farmers and is freely given.

The Stewarts conduct the Denton Hotel and have made it popular with the traveling public by their courteous treatment of guests and the plain home-like service given. Mrs. Stewart, who is a thorough business woman and a good manager, has full charge of the hotel while Mr. Stewart is away with his machine, and she generally runs it right.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, during their residence of seven years in Doniphan County, have come to be recognized as among our best citizens, and in whom our people repose great confidence and respect. They are both interested in the welfare of their children now growing up, and their pride in bringing them up in the proper way, that they may become an honor to their parents and the community, is something that appeals to our people as representing the finest qualities of Christian citizenship.

Thus, we may conclude our sketch by saying that the coming of the Stewart family was a good thing for the Denton community, and we believe it was a good thing for the Stewart family.

United Brethren Church

The old Union church, now United Brethren church, was the first church built in the city of Denton. Mrs. Mose Denton donated the rock for the foundation, and the lumber was hauled by the old settlers from Severance. The contractor who performed the hardest labor was Walter Adams, who resided in Brown County at that time. The following named people were the Trustees of the Church at the time of its construction: Wm. Denton, Dock Stewart, Jacob Denton, James Chaney, and Thomas Daniels.

Robert Hicks

Robert Hicks was killed instantly April 26th, 1906. Fell from disc in an epileptic fit, throat cut from ear to ear. He was working for A. B. Shulsky.

John Shalz

John Shalz stabbed and killed by Edward Morris, December 26, 1905. Result of a trivial quarrel. Both parties were said to be intoxicated.

Edward Morris, who killed John Shalz, as a result of the petition filed by his wife and signed by many people sent to the Governor, received his liberty January 2, 1908.

Henry Dorn

Henry Dorn, born Muskingdom County, Ohio, 1840. Enlisted Oct. 18, 1861, Company A, 40th Ohio volunteer infantry. Discharged Oct. 18, 1864, Galesville, Ala. Married Nov. 18th, 1867, to Miss Laura M. Brown, Franklin County, Ohio. Came to Doniphan County, 1868. Children, one daughter, Eva. He owns 115 acres of good land in Union Township. Lives in Denton, where he owns a nice residence.

When it comes to real estate values in Doniphan County you will have to give it to A. L. Perry, the Troy abstracter. He know about all there is to know concerning the value of real estate

Arthur William Fenton

The Present Treasurer of Doniphan County Is One of the Popular Men of Union Township and a Successful Farmer—While a Republican, He Polled a Big Majority in the County, Leading the Ticket—Mrs. Fenton a Former School Teacher.

Union Township, and incidentally Doniphan County, has few men who are more popular and better liked than Arthur William Fenton, at present Treasurer of Doniphan County. He is one of the citizens who, by their very nature, endear themselves to the people by reason of their qualities of heart and mind, their splendid character and their patriotic and public spirited citizenship. In like manner Mrs. Fenton occupies a place in the hearts of those who know her because of her womanliness and those pleasing accomplishments that made her, before her marriage, one of the most popular teachers in this part of Kansas. A sketch of Mr. Fenton and his charming wife will be of pleasing interest.

Arthur William Fenton was born April 15, 1879, in Doniphan County, on the old Baker-Fenton homestead in Union Township four and one-half miles east of the west county line and one and one-half miles north of the south line of the county. His parents were William Baker Fenton and Amanda Anna Fenton, who now reside at 1303 Division street in the city of Atchison. These parents were both natives of Virginia, the father born October 14, 1843, and the mother March 27, 1853. Her parents were Aaron and Sarah Clem, who were born, reared, educated and married in Randolph County, Virginia.

The marriage of William Baker Fenton and Amanda Anna Clem occurred March 10, 1876. They located on the farm in Doniphan County shortly after their marriage and it was there Arthur William Fenton was born on the date previously mentioned. The boy grew up on the farm, attending the district schools during the winter. In school, while he was always rated as a good scholar, studious and attentive to the lessons before him, he nevertheless displayed those qualities which made him a popular boy with all the boys and girls in school. He was popular also on the farm and with his courteous manners he became acquainted with almost everybody in Union Township, so much so that he was well liked by all and found a warm welcome wherever he would go.

Arthur William Fenton.

As a farmer boy Arthur William Fenton was interested in everything about the farm and early became a valuable help to his father. He had many opportunities to go to the city and carve out a career for himself, but he loved farming, he loved the life of a farmer in Doniphan County, and his desire was to be a farmer. He obtained a good high school education after finishing in the district school, by attending the Effingham high school. Thus equipped he entered upon his career as a farmer.

On April 15, 1903, Arthur William Fenton married Miss Myrtle Wynkoop, daughter of John Hoover and Nan Robertson Wynkoop, living near Doniphan Station in Wayne Township, Doniphan County. She was born there January 24, 1880. After completing her studies in the district school she attended the Atchison high school from which she graduated. Later she attended the state normal at Emporia, a couple of years. Obtaining a certificate, she returned to Doniphan County and taught school for six years. Her first school was at District No. 49, known as the McGalliard school in Center Township, one year, then she was principal of the Iowa Point school two years. The other two years of her teaching were at Mount Vernon school in Union Township, and at Spring Grove in Wayne Township. She was a successful teacher and made many friends. Doniphan County lost a good teacher when she quit the service to marry.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Fenton went to live on the two hundred and sixty acre farm in Union Township. A farmer by training and experience there was never any doubt of his success. He farmed well and intelligently and soon became recognized in the community as one of the industrious and thrifty of our agriculturalists. He possessed the spirit of progressiveness which, along with his natural talent and his love for work, enabled him to produce good crops from his acres. Mrs. Fenton, though spending six years in the school room as a teacher, had been reared on a farm, and she proved a valuable coworker with her husband in the great business of farming.

Arthur William Fenton is not what one would call a politician, yet he came to know a great deal about politics, particularly interested in local affairs of government although an ardent partisan, a republican. In the campaign of 1914, when the republicans, of Doniphan County, were seeking a good man for the nomination for the office of county treasurer the choice fell on this sterling young man, of Union Township. Union Township was strongly democratic and it was with something of a feeling of uncertainty that this young man entered the race. He secured the nomination of his party at the primary, carrying Union Township by a majority of 244, and then went out and made a straight forward manly campaign for election. The result was as every observing citizen save Mr. Fenton himself—might have foreseen. He led the republican ticket at the November election, leaving his democratic opponent, a good and popular man, several laps behind in the marathon race with 1,712 votes between them. Besides the strong old democratic Union Township did the unheard-of-thing by giving this young republican leader a majority of 147 and if one should ask him, Arthur would tell you how dearly he prizes the compliment given him by his farmer friends and neighbors in that township.

The inauguration of the subject of this sketch was on October 14, 1915. In the brief time he has been in the office he has demonstrated his fitness for the position of county treasurer, and it is predicted by his friends that he will make a record that surely will commend him to the people for a second term, for his competency and efficiency.

Mr. Fenton is a Mason and a member of the Anti Horse Thief Association. He is a contributor, not only of money but of influence, to the churches and the benevolences. He and his wife are among our best people.

The Denton Baptist Church.

The corner stone of the Highland University was laid June 1, 1909. A great crowd assembled in Highland that day in honor of the event.

DENTON BAPTIST CHURCH

Constructed in 1909, a Beautiful Structure, Supported By Many of the Leading Citizens — Dedicatory Sermon Was Preached By Miss Wilmetta Marks.

For over a quarter century there have been Baptists at Denton, Kansas. The Rev. M. W. Dodge, a very worthy gentleman of the old school, served as pastor at Horton, Kan., but would come to Denton periodically to carry the old, old story, as he could tell it to the people of Denton. Here, under his leadership, the Free Baptist Church of Denton was organized on a beautiful Sabbath, December 13, 1891. This class had no building of their own, so the Union church edifice was used by them every other Sunday for seventeen years. This organization became one of the stable orders of its kind, increasing in numbers from year to year. About eight years ago, agitation began for a new church edifice and culminated in 1909 when the present building was erected at a cost of $3,000. The building committee, composed of Robert E., Isaac and James A. Denton, also solicited the funds for the same.

Mr. James H. Curtis sold the lumber and building material needed in the new structure. Joseph and Clarence Howland did the wood construction. The lot was purchased from Mr. Griffis, where his blacksmith shop stood for years. The land originally belonged to Will and Mose Denton. The building is ample for the present needs of the class. It faces east, where the effulgent rays of the orb of light can illuminate the front each service day.

It is a characteristic of the Denton neighborhood and the Dentons in special, to dislike debt, so they have an organization which knows no debt.

Miss Wilmetta Marks held meetings in Denton before the erection of the new building. These meetings increased in interest and Miss Marks became attached to her charge, and the people were endeared to her.

Amid a large gathering of people, the new house of worship was dedicated to the service of the Master on May 22, 1910, by Miss Marks. This organization is composed of the very best people of Denton, among whom the large Denton family, noted for their pioneer ancestors, constitute the majority in members.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Alt

The Popular Station Employes of the Rock Island at Denton Whose Courteous Treatment of the Public Has Won Them the High Esteem of the Patrons and the Regard of the Railway Officials—Their Son to Be An Engineer.

John J. Alt, of Denton, enjoys the distinction of having been born in Australia, and probably is the only representative of that island continent among our Doniphan County people. He was born at Ballarat December 4, 1858, and there he passed the first ten years of his life. In the fall of 1868 he came to America with his father, Peter Alt. They located at Iowa City, Iowa, in the spring of 1869. There the son was reared to manhood. He attended the public schools and received a fairly good education, putting in the time he was out of school at working on the farm or clerking in a store until he was twenty-one years old.

On January 3, 1889, Mr. Alt came to Denton and entered the employ of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, now known as the Rock Island in the Denton station. He was an industrious young man of quiet disposition and one faithful in the discharge of his duties. He became popular with the people of Denton and was adopted as one of their number, which indeed was an honor to him, as undoubtedly a young man of such fine qualities was an honor to the town and its people.

On January 30, 1889, John J. Alt and Miss Anna Black were married. She was a daughter of John and Mary Black of Denton, and was a popular favorite with the people of the town. At the time of her marriage she was station agent for the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company, a position to which she was appointed in 1887. She still retains that position of responsibility and trust, and in fact enjoys the distinction of being in point of service, the oldest station agent in the employ of the railroad in Kansas. As a token of the regard with which she is held by the officials of the company, she is one of the few agents who hold an annual pass over the entire system known as the Rock Island lines.

Mr. and Mrs. Alt are an ideal couple, who, during their residence in Denton of so many years have endeared themselves to the people of the town and of the magnificent farming country for many miles around the town. They have at all times been attentive to business, and have done something more than merely rendering service to their employers for pay. They have not merely proven themselves faithful to the interests of the railway company in the discharge of their duty in handling the company's business, but they have at all times been courteous and obliging to the patrons of the railroad, always finding it a pleasure to perform any service, great or small, for the people with whom they have dealt and among whom they have lived. This in a measure, accounts for their popularity among the people, and if all railway employes at stations were like Mr. and Mrs. Alt, it would be a blessing to the public which patronizes the railroads as well as better for the railroads themselves.

Mr. and Mrs. Alt are the proud parents of one son, Glenn L., who was born and reared in Denton and is known to all of the Denton people. After finishing at the Denton school he entered the Troy High School, graduating with the class May 18, 190—. Glenn is now in the School of Engineering at the University of Kansas at Lawrence, and expects to graduate with the class of 1916. He is a young man of great promise, a fine student and in the choice of engineering as his profession he is applying himself to his studies that he may not only graduate with honors, but that he may be so thoroughly equipped with the knowledge of engineering science as to make his success as an efficient engineer assured. He is an honor to his parents and, like his father and mother, enjoys the highest esteem of all who have come in contact with him.

Mr. and Mrs. John Black, Mrs. Alt's mother, reside in the beautiful little town, Denton, where they expect to spend their declining years in peace and happiness. It is Mrs. Alt's desire that they remain in Denton, where she and her sister, may give them the necessary care.

C. Knecht

C. Knecht was born January 20, 1844, in Alsace, France. He enlisted in Company D, Second Michigan infantry, in March, 1864. Mr. Knecht was in the Potomac army; was in all the engagements from the Wilderness to Petersburg; but was not wounded. Was discharged in August, 1865, at Detroit, Michigan.

Mr. Knecht was married to Magdalena Wangzig in July, 1866, and came to Kansas in 1881. The following are his children: Mrs. L. A. Hazen, Mr. Luis Knecht, Mrs. O. J. Granthem, Mrs. A. I. Frederick, Mrs. F. Shafer, Mr. Fred Knecht.

Miss Edith A. Heeney

Hunting is a rare sport for women in Kansas. Doniphan County boasts of only one girl who has ever been issued a hunting license. This distinction belongs to Miss Edith Heeney, the second daughter of the celebrated "Car Load" Ed Heeney, the hardware and implement dealer of Severance. Mr. Heeney received his cognomn by reason of his large business qualifications, always shipping in his farming implements in carload lots. True to the instinct that has made her father notable in his particular line, Miss Heeney stands alone as the feminine hunter of Doniphan County.

This disciple of Daniel Boone was born in Severance and was educated in the common and high school of her native city. Later in quest of further knowledge she attended the St. Joseph College, where she received the finishing touches of her education. This attendance upon the routine of school life did not in the least dampen her ardor for a life of outdoors. She was issued her hunter's license by Miss Margaret Schlitzbaum, Oct. 26, 1906, when she was county clerk of Doniphan County. She is skilled with a rifle, shotgun and six-shooter.

While Miss Heeney never contested with Buffalo Bill or other famous marksmen of the frontier or wild West fame, she is considered a marksman of no mean ability. During her early life she greatly enjoyed this sport and was seen tramping the hills and through the valleys in and around Severance. In the last few years, however, she has not been so ardent in pursuit of this pleasant form of diversion.

Full of vivacity and health, she has taken a deep interest in all forms of amusements and games. She is one of the few members of the younger generation who has contributd to the history of Doniphan County.

Clarence R. Isaacs

Clarence R. Isaacs was born in Holton, Kan., Aug. 25, 1884. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. Chas. C. Isaacs, pioneers of Jackson County. Educated in the public schools of Holton and had two years at Washburn College at Topeka, Kan.

On October 16, 1907, he was married to Miss Aletha Talbert of Holton, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Talbert.

They have two children, Frances, aged six years, and Raymond C., aged three years. He taught school one year before he entered college and one year after.

On March 25, 1906, he came to Denton and entered the employ of P. L. Gibson for whom he worked six months. He then worked for J. J. Buser, who succeeded Gibson.

In the spring of 1907 he went into business for himself in the general merchandise business; in the spring of 1912 he sold one-half interest to C. H. Gish; in November, 1914, he sold his entire interest in the store to Gish and at the present time he is postmaster of Denton.

P. K. DEVEREUX

Cashier of Purcell State Bank Is Popular Young Man and Coming Financier.

P. K. Devereux, cashier of the Purcell State Bank at Purcell, is one of Doniphan County's best known men and a banker with a promising future. He is a native of Doniphan County, having been born on a farm in Wolf River Township, November 26, 1879. He received his early education in the public schools and then entered Christian Brothers' College at St. Joseph, Missouri, from which he graduated four years later with high honors. On January 18, 1912, he was united in marriage to Miss Mame Whelan and to this union two children have been born, John Edward, on February 23, 1913, and Bernadette, December 3, 1914.

Mr. Devereux has been cashier of the state bank, since 1907, except on January 16, 1915, he engaged in the grain business at Denton with Joe Pauley, but returned to his old position March 8, 1915, and is one of the most efficient men in the state in that position. He is cheerful, obliging and best of all, careful. Although what is commonly termed a young man, he is conservative and consequently has been entrusted with the handling of a major portion of the institution's business. Also he is a deep student of financial affairs, and spends much of his spare time reading and studying the newest and best methods of banking. We predict for Mr. Devereux a more glowing and successful position in the business world than he has already attained.

Wayne Township

WAYNE TOWNSHIP

One of the Most Southern of the Eight Townships in Doniphan County, Wayne Has Seen Life in the Early Days When Commerce and Excitement Were the Leading Attractions in Kansas Territory.

The Vagaries of the Missouri River in Backing Away From Doniphan Town Temporarily Retarded the Development of the Township, But the Incident Is Forgotten in the Great Era of Prosperity Which Set in Throughout the Township in After Years.

The township of Wayne was in hard luck in the early days over the unsettled condition of the territory, and the practical elimination of two of the most promising towns along the Missouri River, when their trade became stagnant.

The recovery from early disappointments, however, has been definite and Wayne is now in position to claim equality with the most prosperous part of Doniphan County. The grape-growing industry is good and the agricultural outlook is better than ever before in the history of the township.

Wayne was one, if not the first of the five early townships of Doniphan County. During the infantile days of the town of Doniphan and Geary City, it looked for a time that those two towns would corral all the commercial business of the Kansas territory. This was especially the case with Doniphan, which had practically all the Missouri River trade diverted there at one time.

The Formans were among the earliest settlers of Wayne Township. In fact, J. W. Forman was made treasurer of the Doniphan Townsite Company when it was organized in St. Joseph, November 11, 1854, and J. F. Forman was named one of the trustees and surveyor of the new town. Both the Formans had been leading spirits in Doniphan affairs and in the social and business life of other communities throughout the county.

Among the other early settlers of Wayne Township were John Whittaker, Barney O'Driscoll, B. S. Whorton, John Tracy, Doctor Hudnell, William K. Shaw, George Waller, David Lee, John and Daniel Landis, John A. Van Arsdale, Joshua Saunders, H. M. Beauchamp, John Harding, D. M. Johnston, the Spencers, and the Lancasters. There was also a strong colony of Norwegians in the eastern part of the township who are said to have been instrumental in locating the town of East Norway in 1869.

The land all through Wayne Township is admirably adapted to the cultivation of grain and root crops, while a good portion of it might profitably be utilized for raising fruit. For several years there were extensive vineyards adjacent to the town of Doniphan, and the Wine industry promised to be a better commercial asset for the township than agriculture. In recent years, however, the residents have become convinced that agriculture is the most certain source of revenue and mostly every citizen is following that line.

The two towns of Wayne Township are Doniphan and Brenner. The latter is fortunately situated in having railroad facilities, the Burlington route having a station there. The town of Doniphan did have a railroad built in there once, years ago, but the tracks were taken up since then and the right of way abandoned.

This township received its name from "Mad Anthony Wayne," of Revolutionary fame, but was suggested by A. H. Dunning, one of the first county commissioners, who came from Wayne Township, Missouri.

It was one of the five original townships into which the county was divided at the first meeting of the county commissioners, Sept. 1, 1855, and its boundaries were fixed as follows: "Bounded on the north by Washington, to the southwest quarter of said township; thence north two (2) miles to the town line dividing Towns 3 and 4; thence west on said line to Brown County; on the west by Brown County, on the south by Atchison County, and on the east by Washington Township and the Missouri River.

J. A. Van Arsdale and William Shaw were appointed justices of the peace, and Joshua Sarmaers constable.

The first election in this township was held on the first Monday in October, 1855, at John A. Forman's hotel, in the town of Doniphan, there being but one voting precinct allowed in each township.

On the 21st day of October, 1856, the east boundaries of this township were changed so as to admit Marion Township.

On the 21st day of June, 1859, a change was made and the present boundary was fixed as follows: Commencing at the northeast corner of Section 18, Town 4, Range 20; thence east to the northwest corner of Section 14, Town 4, Range 20; thence north two miles; thence east to the northeast corner of Section 3, Town 4, Range 21; thence south to the northwest corner of Section 23; thence east one mile; thence south to the Missouri River; thence with the said river to the Atchison County line; thence with line to southwest corner of Section 31, Town 4, Range 20, thence north to the place of beginning.

The surface of Wayne Township, in the main, is rough and "bluffy," especially in the southeastern part. The surface along Independence Creek is exceedingly rough and rocky. Wayne Township shows more rock formations than any other township in the county. As a person travels west through the township, he notices that the contour of the country becomes less abrupt, and on reaching the western part of the township the surface is found more rolling.

The first school house built in the town of Doniphan.

The township is watered by Independence, Rock, Brush and smaller tributaries. Brush Creek drains the eastern. Rock Creek the central and Independence the western, leaving the township on Section 33, Town 4, Range 20 flows in an easterly direction until it touches the township again at Section 6, Town 5, Range 21, forming the boundary of the township until it empties into the Missouri River a short distance below Doniphan.

One of the first settlers in the township was J. F. Forman, who located in 1852, where Doniphan now stands. In the fall of 1854 he was joined by his brother, J. W. Forman.

One of the old land marks of Doniphan on Main street.

Among those who came and took up claims in 1855-56 were William Shaw, George Waller, Doctor Hudnell, David Lee, Dick Vest, John Landers, Col. A. G. Ege, S. Lloyd, W. K. Leddington, John Harding and others. Dr. R. H. Hereford located on Rock Creek in 1854. B. S. Wharton first located in the township in 1854, built a log cabin and left some men to make rails until he returned, April, 1855.

The first marriage was that of Dr. R. H. Hereford to Miss Amanda J., daughter of John Tracy, who was then living on Rock Creek, near where Brenner Station is now situated. The ceremony was performed in 1854, by the Rev. J. Devorce, of Rushville, Mo. Doctor Hereford settled in the township from Maryville, Mo. To him is given credit as the first physician in the township, and possibly the first in the county. In 1862 or 1863 he removed to Easton, Mo., where he remained until the day of his death, May 7, 1881.

Probably the first birth in the township was a daughter of Dick Vest, born in the summer of 1855.

In the winter of 1854-55 occurred, undoubtedly, the first death in the township. The circumstances attending this demise are heartrending in the extreme. B. S. Wharton, on arriving in the township in 1854, took up a claim and set a number of men at work splitting rails. John Stanliffs, his wife and her sister, a young lady eighteen years of age, occupied one of the cabins that were built. One day in the winter of 1854-55, as this young lady was attending to domestic duties in the cabin, she inadvertently approached too near the fireplace and in an instant was enveloped in a mass of flames. Instead of running out to the creek, that was not more than thirty steps distant, she ran around the house until she dropped exhausted. Everything was done to alleviate her sufferings within the means of those people, remote from civilization, as it were, but of no avail, her death occurring the next day.

In the summer of 1857 a subscription school was taught on a branch of Rock Creek, about two miles south of Brenner. The teacher, a young man by the name of Hartley, managed to secure $20 a month for his services, and taught four months.

A sawmill was built in the fall of 1856 by James Forman and B. S. Wharton, at Doniphan. Mr. Wharton retained his interest but six weeks, when he sold out to a man by the name of King, who afterward married a niece of Gen. James Lane. Tradition does not state how long the mill was operated.

The products of Wayne Township are principally corn, wheat and fruit. The township claims more acres of vineyards than any other in the county.

Lewis and Clark

Doniphan County was visited by the Lewis & Clark party who started the expedition from St. Louis to Oregon, March 4, 1804, and went into camp on the Atchison and Doniphan County line on the 4th of July of that year, and in the evening held the first celebration of Independence Day ever held on Kansas soil. History says that guns were fired and speeches were made by several of the members of the party. The large creek which forms a part of the southern boundary of Doniphan County, was named Independence Creek on that day. The party consisted for forty-one people.

Doniphan

Doniphan is located on Sections 4 and 5, Township 5, Range 21, in what is now Wayne Township. Townsite was first surveyed in the fall of 1854, by J. F. Forman, and consisted of about 200 acres.

M. D. Lafe Williams

Once a Farm Hand in Doniphan County, He Now Owns 320 Acres of Fine Land in Wayne Township, Where He Raises Grain, Alfalfa and Live Stock, and Lives in Peace and Plenty in a Modern Home Supplied With Heat From a Furnace and Water and Lighting Conveniences.

That the prosperous and well-to-do man in the city hasn't anything on the Kansas farmer who makes the best of his opportunities to surround himself with conveniences, is illustrated in the case of Mr. M. D. Lafe Williams, who lives in a beautiful modern country home on a fine farm of three hundred and twenty acres in Wayne Township of Doniphan County. Mr. Williams also has the best of it in more ways than one. He has the satisfaction of knowing that his wealth did not come to him by stock gambling, grain speculation, or by any hook or crook of sharp dealing—not that all city men get their wealth that way, but too many of them do—for this prosperous Kansas farmer got his by dint of hard work, frugality and good management. Therefore he is in a position of conscience to thoroughly enjoy his well earned success and his independent, happy life; and, while the city man is growling at the weather, Mr. Williams, like James Whitcomb Riley's farmer, can "just lean back and laugh at every rainy day."

Mr. Williams is a product of the Middle West. He was born in Moniteau County, Missouri, October 27, 1857, grew up in that county and received his education in its public schools. He came to Doniphan County, Kansas, September 10, 1883, and for four years was employed as a farm hand. He worked on the farm for Nim Duncan, who now lives in Highland, for twenty dollars a month. After the first month Mr. Duncan showed his appreciation of this farm hand's services by raising his wages to $22.50 a month, which was his wages for the next three years. Later he worked for other farmers by the month until he had seen four years of this kind of service.

In the meantime, Mr. Williams bought one hundred and sixty acres of land three-quarters of a mile east of the Bellvue school house in Wolf River Township. When he had broken a part of his land and erected a fair kind of human habitation, Mr. Williams went back to his native home in Missouri and married an old sweetheart, Miss Kate Murphy, the date of the wedding being March 29, 1888. She was born in Canada, June 27, 1860.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams spent two years on the farm in Wolf River Township, both of them working hard and practicing rigid economy, that they might get a right start. Their labor was not without good results. The 160-acre farm finally was sold for a good price. Then Mr. Williams went into Wayne Township and bought the 320-acre farm which he now owns, and on which he lives. With a strong mind and constitution and an undaunted courage, Mr. Williams buckled down to hard work, and put this magnificent farm under a high state of cultivation, having the purpose in view of finally adding the improvements that would make it the best farm in Wayne Township. Mrs. Williams also worked hard and with her good management of the woman's part of a big farm, she contributed no small portion to the success of their farming enterprise.

The knowledge of farming and stock-raising, as well as the management of the business of a farm, which had come by experience to Mr. Williams before he acquired a farm of his own, enabled him to make fine headway after he once was started. Cattle and hogs were introduced on his farm early, Mr. Williams having decided to do general farming and live stock raising, believing that it would bring him surer and more substantial returns than would come from specializing in one particular line of farming. He selected good live stock at the start. His fields were laid out and cultivated in conformity to a plan he had worked out in his mind. Before many months passed by the people driving along the roads were remarking about the improvement in the appearance of the Williams farm. He kept on as the years went by until the farm was in such a condition of up-to-datedness as to challenge the admiration of every passerby. Mr. Williams had converted it into one of the most valuable farms in the county and one of the best revenue earning farms in the country. His far-sightedness and his good judgment, along with his industry and whole-hearted pluck, had won for him at every turn.

The final touch to the farm to make it a perfect picture was the building of the modern home and the substantial farm buildings. These were placed in the valley a short distance from the creek that runs through the farm, that they might be protected from cold in winter. It also is an ideal place for the raising and feeding of live stock. The house, as before mentioned, is modern in its appointments, while the surrounding buildings and improvements conform to it, the whole forming a pretty picture, a model country estate, such as brings to its owner, or owners, if you please, a state of affluence and of comforts so well earned.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams have two children, Anna, born January 4, 1897, and Horace L., born September 16, 1901. The parents are rearing these children on the farm. Anna is attending the Troy High School and won a prize for writing the best story of Troy, May 14, 1915, the compositions having been graded by Merle Thorp, dean of the School of Journalism at Lawrence.

They are among our best citizens, always to be depended upon as supporting the things that make for good citizenship and high ideals of living.

COLLIS B. ROUNDY

A Native of Maine, But a Resident of Doniphan County for Sixty-One Years—He Is One of the Successful Men of Doniphan County—The Leading Merchant in the Town of Doniphan—His Early-Day Recollections of Lincoln, Col. Jim Lane and Other Notables—His Mother Postmistress for Thirty-Seven Years.

Many of the states of the Union have contributed to the citizenship of Doniphan County, but it remained for the state of Maine to give us Collis B. Roundy, a man of sterling worth, patriotic to the heart, a successful merchant and farmer, and a former public school teacher who, during his twenty years in the school room, did as much as any man, if not more, for the upbuilding of our fine citizenship which, more than anything else, is the bulwark of our strength.

Collis B. Roundy was born in Bangor, Maine, February 9, 1849, a son of Jeremiah L. and Mary A. Roundy. He was six years old when, in 1855, his parents came to Kansas and located at Geary City in Doniphan County. Since then he has continuously resided here and in these sixty-one years has noted every milestone of progress of the grand commonwealth of Kansas.

In the early days while a school boy in the district school at Geary City, the subject of this sketch was a witness to many of the stirring scenes along the border that caused the eyes of the world to be centered on Kansas. All of these things he remembers, for they were of such moment as to form impressions on his youthful mind that never can be effaced. He recalls quite vividly the scenes of the territorial period in the winter of 1859, when Abraham Lincoln came to Kansas to counsel with the leading men over the organization in the territory of the Republican party and made addresses at Doniphan Dec. 1, 1859, the day before John Brown, the free state man, was hanged in Virginia, and other points along the route from St. Joseph to Leavenworth. Mr. Roundy also remembers Jim Lane, afterward the "Grim Chieftain," when he had his office in Doniphan. He also recalls James Redpath, the educator, historian and editor, and in thinking over the events of his boyhood he remembers the faces of many of the leaders of that period.

Here, amid such surroundings, Collis B. Roundy was reared. He attended the district school during the winter months, and helped on the farm in the spring, summer and autumn. He grew up to be a young man of fine promise. He attended the State Normal School, then at Leavenworth, and there fitted himself for school teaching. After two terms in the Normal he began teaching and followed that profession during the school season for twenty years, spending his summers and a part of the spring and autumn on the farm.

Collis B. Roundy married Miss Anna K. Whalen of Buchanan County, Missouri, April 19, 1874. They resided on the farm at Geary City nearly twenty-six years, until her death on January 31, 1905. To them were born seven children:

Daisy Eudora, born Sept. 10, 1878, now the wife of Frederick William Banker, 710 Lincoln street, St. Joseph, Missouri; Josephine Genevieve, born Nov. 30, 1880, now the wife of William Sherman Henderson of St. Joseph, Missouri, of 1820 South Eleventh; Mary Elsena, born Sept. 6, 1882, th ewife of Dennis O'Brien of Grand View, Missouri; Elmer Valentine, born May 17, 1885, living on the farm at Geary City; Dr. Collis L., born Nov. 29, 1887, a practicing physician, St. Joseph, Mo., was married Dec. 15, 1915, to Miss Lucinda Sheridan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Sheridan, at the Francis Street Methodist Church in St. Joseph, Mo.; Hattie E. born March 27, 1890, wife of Logan Tracy of Kansas City, Missouri; Mioma Zelma, born February 27, 1898, living at home in Doniphan. The subject of this sketch has six grandchildren.

On June 17, 1908, Mr. Roundy married Mary E. Woods of Davies County, Missouri. They have no children. Mrs. Roundy is a thorough business woman and is the owner in her own name of the substantial residence and store building in Doniphan.

Mr. Roundy farms 200 acres of land near Geary, to which has been added more than 400 acres of accreted land which has been allowed him as his riparian rights. This promises some day to be of great value. He has been eminently successful in his farming operations and ranks among the best farmers in the county. He has also proven successful in conducting his store in Geary City and has a substantial patronage.

The mother of this pioneer, Mrs. Mary A. Roundy, was postmistress at Geary City thirty-seven years, and the records show that was the longest period ever served by any postmaster in Doniphan County. She was a woman of fine character and her efficient manner of handling the postoffice business of Uncle Sam at Geary City gave her a standing among the authorities at Washington that resulted in keeping her in the postoffice thirty-seven years.

Collis B. Roundy is now nearing his sixty-seventh birthday, having passed sixty-one years in Kansas, and is still active and enjoying life and the fruits of his years of labor. He has witnessed the development of the rough, sparsely settled territory of Kansas to the present magnificent state of Kansas, leader of the states of the Union in productiveness, prosperity and progressive citizenship, and in which development he has had a great part. He is recognized as a leader among men in those movements which tend to the larger affairs of the community—education, public improvements, social uplift and all that goes to make a happy and prosperous people.

Came From Buckeye State

Henry E. Crawford Was Reared In Ohio, But He Turned Toward the West to Make His Fortune While Still a Mere Boy.

Coming to Doniphan when a youth, Henry E. Crawford has prospered beyond the brightest dreams of his boyhood days. His life has been eventful in that from the time he first started out to make his way in the world he overcame every manner of difficulty which came across his path.

Mr. Crawford came from a family of pioneers which settled in the Buckeye State many generations ago, and his sturdy ancestors are somewhat responsible for the sterling qualities developed by their progenitor in the battle of life.

It was in Jefferson County, Ohio, that Mr. Crawford first saw the light of day, on January 18, 1864, and he has been looking at the bright side of life ever since. His school days were about evenly divided between attendance at the rural seat of learning and the parental farm, where he became inured to climatic rigors while doing the work of an able-bodied person.

Early in the year 1879 Mr. Crawford came to Doniphan County to make his fortune and how well he has succeeded can be seen by a glance at his substantial farm house in Wayne Township, three and one-half miles south of Bendena. The buildings are modern and up to date and are equipped with all the conveniences desired for a comfortable country home.

The farm owned by Mr. Crawford consists of 307 acres, in a pleasing state of cultivation. The owner carries on stock raising and general farming on an extensive scale and his annual profits from this source are being increased with each succeeding year. Modern farming implements are in use and many labor-saving devices have been installed. The stock raised by Mr. Crawford is of the highest grade and commands top prices on the markets of the country.

In 1899 Mr. Crawford made a trip to his old home in Ohio, and while there was united in marriage to Miss Emma Bergert, of Stark County, on September 13, 1899. The couple has two bright children, Lucy, aged fourteen, and Howard E., aged nine years.

Mrs. Crawford is an ideal wife for a farmer and takes as much interest in the conduct of the enterprise as does her husband. She devotes considerable attention to the raising of poultry and specializes in the finest grade of Rhode Island Reds.

REV. DAVID WADDELL

Pioneer Baptist Minister Who Was Pastor at Doniphan, Was Well Known Over the County.

The Rev. David Waddell, a pioneer Baptist minister, who will be recalled by many in Doniphan County, was born in Wilsonville, Ky., in 1832, and went to Weston, Mo., in 1850. From there he went to DeKalb in 1853, and crossed the Missouri River into Kansas in 1857. Here he bought a quarter section of land near Mount Pleasant in Atchison Co., at $1.25 per acre. In 1860 a meeting of the Northeast Kansas Baptist Association was held at Mount Pleasant, and while attending these sessions the Rev. Mr. Waddell was converted. While toiling in the fields by day he studied the Bible at night, that he might prepare himself to preach the Gospel.

Also he attended a school at Mount Pleasant to improve his grammar, but when the civil war broke out, the school was abandoned. The Rev. Mr. Waddell began preaching by holding services in school houses, under trees, at private homes and in the field; and baptized something like five hundred converts. These baptisms took place not only in the Missouri River, but in nearly every stream tributary to it in Atchison, Doniphan, Leavenworth and Brown counties. He was located at Doniphan for several years; and among the churches he organized and built are those at Wathena, Doniphan, Lancaster, Jordan Creek, Pomeroy and Ray's Creek. He preached wherever he thought the field needed him, but in the later years he had done only supply work.

Mrs. Waddell died a number of years ago. To her union with the Rev. Mr. Waddell, fourteen children were born, eight of whom are living. They are, Albert, Seattle, Wash.; Edward, Butte, Mont.; David and William, Atchison, Kan.; Robert, Augusta, Ga.; Mrs. Richard, Ballard and Mrs. Paul Kley, Doniphan, Kan.; Mrs. Martin Fostner, Oregon. The Reverend Mr. Waddell died May 22, 1914, and his funeral services were held in the church he erected on Jordan Creek.

Edward P. Greer

Edward P. Greer is a native of Doniphan County and the editor of one of the livest, cleanest and most progressive newspapers in the state of Kansas. It is the Winfield Courier, and while Mr. Greer does not aspire to emulate Sol Miller, the late editor of The Chief, still he is forging rapidly to the front and is recognized throughout Kansas as a vigorous editorial paragrapher,

Mr. Greer was born at Geary City, Sept. 14, 1857. His father was Samuel W. Greer, who will be recalled by every one of the present older generation. The elder Greer was associated with Franklin G. Adams, who afterward was secretary of the Kansas State Historical Society until his death. While in Geary City, Mr. Greer's father took an active part in politics and was later elected territorial superintendent of public instruction. He moved to Leavenworth and lived there until 1871, when he went to Cowley County, where he died in 1885.

Edward P. Greer received all of his early education in the public schools of Doniphan County. Collis B. Roundy of Doniphan, and Ike Rigsby of Concordia, are his only school mates living whom we know of. He has always been an admirer of the journalistic profession and when the opportunity came, took hold of his present publication. It is said it was in a rather run-down condition, but Mr. Greer soon injected some of his vigor into it and the result is that today it probably is the largest and best publication of its kind in the southern part of the state of Kansas.

A Fortune From $300

George F. Peuker Made Good Use of His Time and Is Now Independent Through Farming Operations in Doniphan County.

Coming to Doniphan County with a capital of $300 and a good supply of nerve in the early '80's, George F. Peuker has made such good use of his time that he is now considered among the most substantial farmers in the county.

It was a day with a "razor edge," the last of February, 1882, that Mr. Peuker first saw the light of day at the family home in Atchison County, and for the following twenty-two years he kept pace with the growth of that fairly prosperous section of the Sunflower State.

Being endowed with a brain full of muscle, Mr. Peuker early realized that the opportunities of his native county were not sufficiently attractive to induce him to live and die in Atchison. He had saved a bank roll of some $300 plunks and considered that sum to be sufficient to start any optimistic husky on the high road to success.

So in 1904 Mr. Peuker pulled up stakes and moved to Doniphan County with all of his $300 and an abundant quantity of grit. He lost no time in preliminary maneuvering, but quickly rented a farm from Joe Symns which he cultivated with remarkable success for about five years. In 1909 he bought the farm he now resides on and since that time good luck has been coming his way thick and fast.

The present Peuker farm consists of 253 acres of prime agricultural land where the crops do not have to be coaxed to flourish. It is admirably located and has all the advantages to be desired by the most exacting land owner.

While Mr. Peuker follows a general line of farming to considerable extent he specializes in Duroc Jersey hogs and Hereford cattle. This branch of the farm work has proven especially congenial to Mr. Peuker, as he is regarded an authority on the proper care and handling of the stock.

One of the interesting and, incidentally, profitable features of the Peuker farm, is the array of single-comb brown Leghorn cockerels, in which the owner takes a great pride. These fowls are of the purest breed and are consistent layers all the year round. Their eggs are for sale always, and a card to Mr. Peuker any time will bring a prompt response regarding terms and shipping arrangements.

When Mr. Peuker came to a final realization that he was sufficiently endowed with worldly prospects, he cast about him for a life partner, and on December 30, 1908, was married to Miss Palestine Winzer, of Doniphan County, and like the ending of the story book, they have lived happily ever after.

Old Palermo Railroad

Wathena to Doniphan Via Palermo to Geary City—Electric Line Through Doniphan County Will Be Backed Financially By Baillie Waggener — Would Develop Fine Territory Through That Portion of Doniphan County and Revive Ancient Towns Along the Route.

The proposed interurban line would follow the right-of-way of the old Palermo & St. Joe Railroad, which was operated for several years in the younger days of Kansas. It might have been in operation yet had it not become a losing proposition, owing to a disagreement among the owners, which eventually resulted in the old Palermo & St. Joe road being closed down altogether.

Baillie Wagener is one of the most enthusiastic men who favor the building of the proposed line. He is firmly of the belief that it would not only be a great boon to the part of Doniphan County through which the electric road would traverse, but that it would give a great impetus to business in both Atchison and St. Joseph.

The construction of the old Palermo & St. Joe Railroad was authorized by the territorial legislature, Feb. 19, 1857, which passed an enabling act so as to permit the building of the road, which was built in 1870. The country through which it ran looked good enough to the promoters those days, and it has greatly enhanced in value since that time. The road had been operated for several years, but it practically was killed by the quarrels of the owners and chief promoters, who took up the track in 1876.

The following is a list of those who affixed their names to a petition to the state legislature in 1857, all of which were signed by a "goose quill pen":

To the Hon. Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas:

The undersigned citizens of Doniphan County in the territory of Kansas, respectfully beg leave to represent, that, whereas the City of Palermo has taken and subscribed for a larger amount of stock in the St. Joseph and Topeka Railroad Company, than any other point, St. Joseph and Topeka only, excepted;

And whereas, the legislature of the state of Kansas, by an act, passed Feb. 19, 1857, virtually made Palermo the western terminus of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad.

And whereas the legislature of the state of Missouri has, at its present session of 1859, passed an act granting a charter for a railroad from St. Joseph to the city of Palermo, thereby in effect making the city of Palermo the western terminus of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad, a fixed fact.

And whereas, by making the city of Palermo the point of beginning on the Missouri River, about eight miles in length of road, about one hundred and seventy-six thousand dollars in the cost of same may be saved by the St. Joseph & Topeka Railroad Company.

And whereas, the city of Palermo is on a direct line between St. Joseph and Topeka.

Therefore we pray that your honorable body may in accordance with our wishes, and for the general good, pass such an act as may be presented for your consideration by the honorable member of your body in whom we confide, and to whom we shall transmit this our petition.

A Native of Doniphan County, and a Successful Business Man—Father and Mother Born in Blue Grass State.

The postmaster at Doniphan and owner of a general merchandise store is a native of Doniphan County. He was born January 4, 1876. His father was John Cooper, who was born in Maysville, Kentucky, in 1828, and who died in this county February 27, 1912. His mother, Rachael Cooper, was born in Kentucky in 1832, and died in this county February 7, 1908.

William M. Cooper grew up in the old town where he was born and received his education in the schools there. He began the mercantile business June 1, 1908, and has made a success of it. He enjoys a good trade and is popular among the people of Doniphan and surrounding country.

Mr. Cooper was appointed postmaster of the town of Doniphan June 12, 1914, and has since served the patrons satisfactorily. ## Klaus Brothers, Rt. 1, Bendena, Doniphan Co., Kansas

The start of the Klaus Brothers in the Hereford cattle industry about twenty years ago was made on the strength of an advertisement in one of the farm papers of the time, that had caught the eye of the second brother, John.

The three Klaus brothers, Fred, John and Joe, were born in Chenoa, McLean County, Illinois, and came to Doniphan County about thirty years ago, when all were children. The boys were industrious and natural born farmers. Early in life they manifested a liking for live stock and all were in favor of having none but the highest grade of cattle.

While still young men they worked diligently on the farm, but never abandoned their hope and desire to some time own a great herd of blooded cattle. The fulfillment of their hopes seemed to be far distant, until one evening John saw an advertisement of a Hereford bull for sale in a farm paper, and he persuaded his brother Fred to buy the animal.

Later the Klauses purchased a Hereford heifer and from this pair the nucleus of the present great herd of Klaus Brothers' Herefords was propagated. While the start was on a comparatively small scale, the business thrived to a surpassing degree and now the Klaus herd is famous for its superiority all over the country.

The Klaus farm consists of three quarter sections of as prime land as can be found in Doniphan County. The improvements are modern and scientific, and their great herd of Herefords is a source of magnificent revenue to the brothers. The land is admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is devoted and the prosperity of the boys is mainly due to their industry and sound judgment in the management of the farm.

Came After the War

Edwin Jones Arrived in Doniphan County One Year After Hostilities Between the North and South Had Been Suspended.

Of the many substantial farmers in Doniphan County, there are few who can point to a more successful career in his chosen avocation than can Edwin Jones, who resided ten miles northwest of Troy, on Rural Route No. 5, for almost a half century.

Notwithstanding the fact that Edwin was but a little boy, five years old, when brought to the then Western country by his parents, he still retains a vivid recollection of the exciting incidents of the trip from Ohio.

Mr. Jones was born in West Jefferson, Ohio, July 23, 1861, and in 1866 was brought to Doniphan County in company with other members of the family. Although young in years, the lad was remarkably observant, and his youthful mind formed an accurate conception of the events of the time.

Residence Edwin Jones, taken Feb. 28, 1915, day he moved to Leavenworth Co.

Forty-nine years' residence in Doniphan County developed no perceptible change in Mr. Jones' nature, and his is the same evenly-balanced mind today that was characteristic of him in the days of his youth. Tackling the world in a fight for a competence, Mr. Jones showed the same spirit of determination that he has exercised with unostentatious modesty all through his years of residence in Doniphan County. Business or adversity does not disturb his equanimity and he goes right along pursuing the even tenor of his way.

Mr. Jones, until February 1, 1915, owned 380 acres of as fine land as there is in the confines of Doniphan County. On the date mentioned, he sold the home 160 and bought 800 acres of bottom land, near Stranger, Kansas, in Leavenworth County, four miles northeast of Tonganoxie.

He also owns a farm of 252 acres, adjacent to Quenemo, Franklin County, Kansas. The Doniphan County land was valued at $165 per acre, and on it is located the Jones residence, which is one of the most substantial farmhouses in Wayne Township. This farm is one of the best improved in Wayne Township, and an ideal home.

A few years ago when the question of establishing rural free deliveries was being agitated throughout the country, Mr. Jones was one of the first exponents of the service in the state, and he had the satisfaction of eventually seeing it a reality, to the everlasting credit of Uncle Sam, and the immense delight of every member of farming communities in the United States. His first move to secure rural free delivery was to interest Congressman Case Broderick of Holton in the Troy route.

Edwin Jones was married at St. Joseph, Mo., March 17, 1892, to Miss Agnes Steele of Mertin, Wisconsin. Mrs. Jones was born August 9, 1865, in Lisbon Township, Waukesha County, Wisconsin. Eight children have been born to the union as follows: Steele, born January 15, 1893; Walter Walker, born July 21, 1895; Ione Hazel, born October 20, 1897; Dora Margaret, born January 17, 1900; Edna May, born Sept. 7, 1903; Nellie Mabel, born November 24, 1911. Two children died in infancy.

The family is a happy one, and the father and mother are just as much companions as they are parents, to their children, and always make their home attractive to them.

The Jones family moved from Doniphan County on March 1, 1915, to make their residence in Leavenworth new land. Scores of people in this county regretted to see these estimable people forsake Doniphan, but Don- County, where Mr. Jones bought the iphan's loss will be Leavenworth's gain.

BURGLARS KILL DONIPHAN MAN

Entire County Aroused Over the Killing of Young John Brown by Two Desperadoes in the Town of Doniphan on the Night of October 20, 1899—Murderers Chased by Officers and Citizens and Escape After Giving Battle When Cornered—Atchison Policeman Also Killed.

The quiet placidity of the town of Doniphan was thrown into a state of the wildest excitement on the night of October 20, 1899, when two robbers murdered John Brown, son of the postmaster, while in the act of plundering the store of Charles Kuchs.

The crime was one of the boldest in the criminal annals of the county, and stirred the people to the highest pitch of anger and determination. Despite the fact that posses of officers and citizens gave chase to the murderers, the latter made good their escape after putting up a fierce battle. They have never been caught.

Early on that memorable night, as Mr. Kuchs was in his store, two strange men entered and, without any preliminary maneuvering, covered the proprietor with a pair of Savage rifles and told him to throw up his hands. Mr. Kuchs was prompt enough to obey the command, and as the robbers were about to loot the place they were detected by a negro named Calvin Kelly, who was passing by at the time.

The negro saw what was up at once, and he raced over to the postoffice, where he breathlessly notified Anton Brown, the postmaster, who was engaged in sorting the mail. His son, John, took a revolver and went to the assistance of Mr. Kuchs despite his father's admonition to the contrary.

The young man did not hesitate, and hustled into Mr. Kuchs' store, where he found the proprietor with his hands still elevated. John Brown demanded to know what the robbers meant, and one of them shot him dead before he passed in through the doorway. The report of the rifle shot aroused the townsmen, who rushed to their doors.

After killing John Brown, the murderers grabbed up all the money they could find, and started to leave the store, when John Schaaf shot one of them with Adam Schnell's revolver, as he reached the doorway. The bullet struck the robber in the face and tore away part of his lip, which was later found on the sidewalk.

The man was evidently badly wounded, for his comrade picked him up and carried him across the street to the shadow of Adam Brenner's old wine house. There was a post in front of the place, and the uninjured robber thought it was a policeman, for he yelled, "If that's a cop, he can't hurt us," and started to shoot at the post. The next day some of the Doniphan town-people found five bullets in the post.

The robber then kept up a continuous fusilade toward anybody or anything that looked like it might be pursuing the pair. He had partly bandaged his partner's head by this time, and the latter was believed to have been able to reload the rifles as they were emptied.

Finally, when Mr. Kuchs went to the window of his store, to see who was doing all the shooting, he received a shot in the arm, and dropped to the floor. After firing that shot, the uninjured robber took his comrade into the willows down along the river bank. When the direction which the desperadoes had taken was ascertained, Bert Thayer, now principal of the school at Muscotah; William James; Frank Brenner, a railway mail clerk of Doniphan, and Charles Keifer, jumped into a rig and drove furiously into Troy to notify the authorities.

Sheriff R. H. Larzelere and Deputy Sheriff Henry W. Ramsey first telephoned to Atchison and St. Joseph, notifying the police to be on the lookout for two criminals, and then went along with the Doniphan men in search of the murderers. After fruitlessly searching for the two men the best part of the night, the officers were joined next morning by a posse of from two hundred to five hundred citizens, and they formed a line to search through the willows.

On approaching a log, the leaders of the searching party were commanded to halt and almost simultaneously Officer Robert Dickerson of Atchison was shot and killed, and Charles James was shot in the left arm. Eli Cromwell, who saw the direction whence the bullets were coming, started to blaze away at the log, and chipped several splinters off it with his bullets.

The posse then retreated, and the burglars made their escape. Among the Troy men who had joined the posse were Bert Byers, the barber, under the First National Bank; John and Robert Steele, of Los Angeles; Ernest Swiggett, of Cleveland; Charles Shoemache of east Troy, and Ira Noyes. The robbers are supposed to have made their getaway in a rig, as two men answering their description stopped at Tom Dawe's the night preceding the crime. In the morning they asked Mr. Dawe for horse feed and provisions for themselves to cook. On going away they asked for the bill, and when Mr. Dawe said he didn't know how much it was, they gave him four nickels and said, "That's all you are going to get."

First Wine Made

It might interest your readers as a matter of local history, to record that the Brenners were not the original wine makers of Doniphan. When Capt. Etienne Vengard de Bourgmont, commander of the French colony of Louisiana, visited the Kansa or Konza Indian village where Doniphan now stands, in the summer of 1724, these Indians brought him great quantities of grapes, of which his men made a good wine.

On July 15, 1724, Bourgmont recorded in his journal, at the Kansas village: "Fourteen of our Indians have dropped down in our camp with fever. Our hunter arrived at 4 o'clock loaded with deer. M. de Bourgmont has prepared medicine for the sick Indians. The Canzes (Kansas) brought us a quantity of grapes, which we made into wine, of which we drank all day, finding it very good. They came also to our camp, inviting us to feast with them."

These grapes were undoubtedly the common wild summer grapes that still grow in abundance along the Missouri river bluffs. Lewis and Clark in July, 1804, while passing the border of what is now Doniphan County, recorded that "on the shores were great quantities of summer and fall grapes (vitis aestivalis and v. cordifolia), berries and wild roses (rosa setigers)."

If Lewis and Clark converted any of these grapes into wine, they do not mention it. They seem to have been well supplied with whisky, and probably saw no necessity for other stimulants. On July 4, 1804, amid these natural arbors of native grapes, they discovered Independence Creek and so named it in honor of the day, which they celebrated by an evening gun and an additional gill of whisky to the men.

The wine made by Bourgmont and his men in what is now Doniphan County, nearly two centuries ago, was, in all probability, the first ever made. At the time of its consumption, it was probably in the stage of fermentation that Germans call "Feder Wesser" (feather white, sparkle), or the Swiss "Suser" (sparkle). We can well imagine how these adventuresome Frenchmen smacked their lips when, after a long abstinence, they got hold of such a refreshing beverage in this Doniphan wilderness. Little did these explorers dream, however, that the locality where they made their camp and imbibed the wine of the wild grapes would some day be covered with cultivated vineyards and would become famous as a wine-making seat. Just 141 years after Bourgmont's visit, Adam Brenner, prompted by flattering reports and inducements held out by the Kansas Horticultural Society, commenced planting on the very site of the old Kansa Indian village, the Doniphan vineyards, and established a wine industry that became famous throughout this section of the country. # The Late A. B. Symns

This Pioneer Business Man Began His Career in Doniphan County as a Pork Packer in 1868—Later He Started in the Grocery Business at Doniphan—Founded the Big Wholesale House at Atchison, Now Known as the Symns Grocer Company.

The late A. B. Symns, founder and for many years the head of the large wholesale grocery house at Atchison which bears his name, was for many years a resident of Doniphan County and may properly be regarded as a pioneer business man to whom the present generation owes a tribute of respect for having laid a sure foundation for the commercial activities of the northeastern part of Kansas.

Mr. Symns was a native of Virginia who came out from that old colonial state with his young bride in the year 1858, to found a new home in Kansas. There were many such young couples of the territorial period of Kansas who came out West and began here to carve out careers for themselves, and they generally succeeded in making grand careers, for men and women of the courage to brave the dangers and hardships of pioneer life in Kansas in the 1850's were of the sort who are capable of doing great things.

Mr. Symns settled at the town of Doniphan upon his arrival from Virginia in 1858. He soon began business as a merchant and was one of the most successful of the early day merchants of the Missouri valley. He started as a pork packer at Doniphan about the year 1868, and continued in that line in connection with his mercantile business until 1872, when he moved to Atchison. Mr. Symns had made money in business in Doniphan, but he found Atchison a promising Missouri river port and, for a time, a rival of St. Joseph, Kansas City, Leavenworth and Omaha for commercial supremacy.

It was in the spring of 1872 that Mr. Symns closed out his business in Doniphan. In July of the same year he set up a large grocery house in Atchison, which developed in the next year to a wholesale grocery house. This business grew rapidly from the start, Mr. Symns soon finding his house supplying a large trade through Kansas and Nebraska, as well as in western Missouri. It wasn't long until the business had grown to such proportions as to require a larger investment of capital. This led to the formation of a partnership between Mr. Symns and Turner Frazier of St. Joseph, under the style of the Symns-Turner Company. This partnership continued for two years and expired by limitation. The business still continued to grow. The firm of A. B. Symns & Company was organized and continued to do business until in the year 1896, the business was incorporated under the name of The Symns Grocer Company, and it has continued as such to this date, the present officers being J. E. Moore, president; J. W. Allen, vice-president; T. N. Gray, treasurer; C. A. Lockwood, secretary.

Mr. Symns is spoken of by those who were associated with him for many years as a man of remarkable business capacity and of fine judgment. As the head of the wholesale house at Atchison for so many years he trained his employes to his methods to such an extent that since his death, which occurred in 1905, the business operations of the house have gone on as they did when under his personal direction. He was a man of wonderful energy and it was to this energy his success was largely due, for when he undertook to do a thing he did not let up until that thing was done. Mr. Symns' methods were based on sound business principles and policies, and every man in his employ was drilled into those methods and policies.

The present great wholesale grocery house at Atchison is a monument to the untiring energy and business sagacity of this pioneer Missouri valley merchant. The house enjoys an extensive trade throughout the Middle West and the name of Symns is recognized and a standard for square dealing and honest business; as its founder and manager in chief for nearly one-half century was known by the "trade" and by all who knew him as a man of high character and integrity.

As a citizen of Doniphan County during his first steps upward in his [illegible] business career, Mr. Symns was honored by all who knew him. He was a public spirited citizen, a wide-awake business man and his influence at all times was used for the upbuilding of the community in business affairs, as well as in all of its civic aspects. He was never active in politics, but he was keenly interested in efficiency in the administration of public affairs and his influence was counted for the best man for the office. The only public office he ever held was that of county commissioner in Doniphan County. He made a good record and it can be said that while he was on the board the people of the county received a dollar's worth of service for every dollar paid out. The county's affairs were managed with regard to business principles and there was not one of the voters in his district who did not regret the loss to Doniphan by Mr. Symns' removal to Atchison.

Mr. Symns' career in Atchison was but a continuation of his career in Doniphan. What he did for Doniphan in a small way at the beginning was done for Atchison in a much larger degree during his long residence in that city, with greater opportunities for doing things and larger means at hand for their accomplishment. Great honor is due to the memory of Mr. Symns, not only by these two counties, but by the entire state of Kansas for having set up a high standard of business which is his everlasting monument.

CHARLES E. WHITTAKER

A Wayne Township Farmer and the Son of Pioneers of the Territorial Period, Who Finds Peace and Contentment on the Old Farm on Which He Was Born—Whittakers Active in the Social and Religious Affairs.

Charles E. Whittaker, who resides on his 280-acre farm in Wayne township, six miles south of Troy, is one of the farmers of Doniphan County who are content to pursue the peaceful avocation of farming, leaving the city life with its jar and noise and its gay activities to those who like that kind of a thing.

Mr. Whittaker is a native of Doniphan County and was born on the old parental farm in Wayne township where he now resides, November 9, 1867. His parents were John H. and Mary Whittaker, who came from their native state of Pennsylvania in 1854 and settled in Doniphan County. They were among the staunch people who came to make their homes in this new land when Kansas was made a territory and the lands were platted. It also follows that they loved their home in Kansas so well that they never cared to wander from it. The father was a man of sound judgment, of intelligence and was industrious. He was patriotic and the kind of a man that was needed in those early years to help Kansas on the high road to its enviable position among the states of the Union. The father died April 16, 1883, while the mother lived until December 17, 1899. Both were honored and respected by all of the people of the community in which they reside as among Doniphan County's best and noblest citizens and pioneers.

Residence of Charles E. Whittaker, Wayne Township.

The subject of this sketch, has endeavored faithfully to follow in the footsteps of his father as a citizen of usefulness and as a farmer, and we may assert without reservation that nobly he has succeeded in his life task. As a boy on the farm he developed early in life those habits of industry and frugality that count most in the making of a successfull man, whether engaged in farming or any other honorable calling. He attended the schools of Doniphan County and acquired an education that has, with his home supplemental reading of good literature, made him a well informed man.

On April 24, 1895, Charles E. Whittaker married Miss Ida E. Miller, a daughter of John S. and Sarah Miller, who came from Maryland to Doniphan County in 1858. Ida E., now Mrs. Whittaker was born in the Spring Grove neighborhood April 30, 1875, was educated in the county and taught school at Bellevue a number of years before her marriage. She is a woman of many accomplishments, not the least of which is that of being a good wife and mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Whittaker are parents of four children, all of whom are living. Samuel E., the eldest, was born January 24, 1899; Charles E., Jr., was born February 22, 1901; Dorothy Dixie, on April 19, 1904; Hazel Mary, born January 7, 1913. The children, except the youngest one, Hazel Mary, are attending school and are filling their minds with knowledge that will equip them for manhood and womanhood in later life. They are talented to an exceptional degree and are an honor to their parents and to the community round about the old Whittaker farm that has been a center of culture and social influence through all the years since Kansas emerged from a territory to statehood.

Mr. and Mrs. Whittaker are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and are actively interested in its work in the community. They are also active in educational work and for culture, being at all times upholders of the high ideals of civilization which have made Kansas foremost among the states of the Union in the high moral character of its government and citizenship.

The Whittakers have a magnificent home on their 280-acre farm, modern in all its appointments, and such a home as makes for the comfort and happiness of those whom it shelters. The farm has been improved year in and year out and maintained in a fine state of efficiency. Mr. Whittaker a good farmer and a safe and practical manager. He engaged in general farming and stock growing, finding more profit and safer returns from diversified crops than to go strong on any one particular crop. He has good substantial stock on his farm, as he believes in quality as one of the requisites to successful stock growing. He has a small orchard on the farm and raises plenty of fruit of the first quality, for which there is always a good demand for the surplus over and above his own requirements for the family.

Mr. Whittaker's interest in education has resulted in his election time and again as a member of the district school board, and he has served for twenty years as treasurer of the board. He is influential in the business and political affairs of the community, always lending a hand toward the selection of the best men obtainable for the public offices. He is a member of the Anti-Horse Thief Association and is at all times to be found in any movement for the common welfare of the neighborhood. Charles E. Whittaker is a fine citizen and an honor to Doniphan County and to Kansas.

St. John's Catholic Church, Doniphan, Kansas

Built in 1867 to Replace Frame Church Burned in 1863—Addition Attempted by Father Mengwasser and Brought to Completion by Present Pastor, Father John Stader.

Doniphan, as unpretentious as it is today, in a commercial, social or religious point of view, will always figure in the history of the church in Kansas, for this reason, if no other, that it was the place where the Benedictine missionaries made their first home. The establishment was made by Father Augustine Wirth, O. S. B., who had been sent in April, 1857, for that purpose, in answer to an appeal by Bishop Miege, S. J., of Leavenworth, to Abbot Boniface Wimmer, O. S. B., of St. Vincent's Abbey, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, who was founder and head of the Benedictines of the Cassinese Congregation in the United States. It is true that Father Lempke, O. S. B., had been in Kansas and had visited Doniphan in 1856. It seems very probable indeed that he was responsible for the erection of the little frame church, between the fall of 1856 and the following spring. At any rate, Father Augustine Wirth evidently found a church edifice there on his arrival; for among the first entries in his daybook are outlays for pews and other church furnishings. This first church was a frame structure, and from recent excavations about what seems to have been its founda ions, it appears that it was a building of 30x40 feet, with a 10 to 11-foot lean-to at the back, for the priest's accommodation. Before the completion of the church, services were held in the house of some resident of the community, among others, in that of Barney O'Driscoll, a prominent character of early Doniphan history.

Father Wirth was not many months in Doniphan before he observed that the tide of emigration was shifting to the rival town of Atchison. After studying the situation carefully, and being to some extent influenced by offers of material assistance, he finally decided to remove his residence to Atchison, which he did in 1858, locating on the ground now occupied by the older buildings of St. Benedict's College. This left Doniphan a mission, attended from the new center, a position which it has held to the present day. The pastors who successively attended the church up to the time when the frame church burned to the ground in 1863, were the Fathers Augustine Wirth, Edmund Langenfelder, Philip Vogg, Casimir Seitz, Emanuel Hartig and Thomas Bartel. After the church was burned, services were again held in private houses of members of the community, until the year 1867, when a new church was built about one-half mile northwest of the previous site. The new site, about an acre of ground, was donated by Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Brenner, for the purpose of erecting a church thereon. The new church, 30x 45 feet, a brick structure, was built by the Rev. Timothy Luber, O. S. B., in the year 1867. The location of the new church could not have been better chosen. It is built on the brow of a swell overlooking the city of Doniphan and its surroundings. In 1891 the Rev. Herman Mengwasser, O. S. B., undertook to build a new addition, 24x36 feet, to the church, which was to serve as sanctuary and sacristy. This addition was completed by Father John Stader, O. S. B., in 1892, when the church was also adorned with stained glass windows.

In 1909, under the pastorate of the present rector the church was frescoed and adorned with large paintings at a cost of nearly $600.

The pastors who successively attended the new church from the time of its erection were:

1867 to 1883—Rev. Fathers Timothy Luber, Placidus McKeever, Pirmine Koumly, Theodore Majerus, Peter Kassens, Boniface Verheyen.

All members of the Benedictine Abbey at Atchison, Kansas. In the year 1907 the Rev. Father Alphonse Filiam, O. S. B., was appointed pastor. He holds this position at the present day.

Murder of Von Leever

Killing of Old Hermit Near Isolated Cabin in 1889 Was a Tragedy Never Solved.

Back in the early 1870's there came to Doniphan County a middle aged man of the name of Ferdinand Von Leevre. He was a peculiar, reticent man and made no attempts to make friends. For a few weeks he worked wherever opportunity offered and then purchased a few acres of somewhat hilly land in Wayne township, half way between Troy and Doniphan. At the foot of one of the little hills of which his property was composed, the man built a log cabin of two rooms, bought a few head of cattle and hogs and made himself a home.

To all advances of friendship he turned a deaf ear. He not only attended to his own small place, but worked for neighbors whenever they wanted him. He never spent any money except to keep his tobacco pouch filled, and it was about the only bad habit he ever had. Nothing was known about Von Leevre. He never talked about himself in any way. Once he made what for him was an extended conversation. He said he had an antipathy towards banks, and would never entrust his money to them. That Von Leevre had money is certain, and that he kept it in his cabin is an equal certainty. How much this was no one knows, but there is no doubt but that it was in excess of $10,000, as the recluse could easily have saved that amount.

On Saturday, Jan. 19, 1889, a heavy snow fell, accompanied by a cold, north wind. The country was covered with a white blanket from one to three feet deep in places where it had drifted. All day Sunday it continued and early Monday morning began to melt under the warm rays of the sun. Jack Kirby was a neighbor of the hermit's, and running out of wood on Monday morning, sent one of his sons over to Von Leevre's place to borrow some. The young man as he approached the little cabin, noticed the cattle and hogs come running to the fence as if hungry and thirsty, but thought nothing of it at the time. He hallowed, but there was no answer. Thinking that the recluse was in some of the fields, he gathered up some wood and started home. There he reported to his father that he could not find Von Leevre.

On Tuesday morning, Jan. 22, 1889, Kirby and some of his other neighbors became suspicious and going to the cabin opened the door, which was not locked. The small, rough hewn table was set for two and there were the dried remnants of a meal. The hermit's tobacco pouch and his old briar pipe, filed but never lighted, sat alongside of the pouch. The cabin had been ransacked from end to end. The drawers of an old bureau had been pulled out and the contents spilled on the floor. An old cupboard had been practically torn from the wall. Parts of the floor had been pried up and the bunk on which the hermit had slept had been cut and slashed into shreds. An old dog, a pet and only companion of the recluse, lay in front of the fireplace, from which several bricks had been pried loose.

A search of the premises followed, and at the base of a little hill not fifty yards from the rear of the cabin, the body of Von Leevre was found, the face frozen to the ground and partly covered with snow. The skull was broken in four different places, all of the teeth were knocked out, both arms were broken and the body was bruised from head to foot. Corn stalks had been thrown over the man after his murder and then burned; the body being scorched to a brown and practically all of the clothing obliterated, although it could be seen that the pockets had been turned inside out before the match or torch was applied. Nearby was found the handle or snaith of a scythe with which the murder was committed. The iron ring at the end—the snaith had been cut off about four feet long—was covered with blood stains and hair. There were footprints, not only of the old hermit, but another man in overshoes leading to the top of the hill and then only the footprints of the overshoes back to the cabin. The livestock had not been fed for at least three days and were near famished through lack of food and water. This was uncommon, as the recluse had always been prompt in his feeding.

In the cabin, the cororner, Dr. R. S. Dinsmore, who was summoned, found papers showing that Von Leevre was fifty-one years old and a native of Holland, who had been naturalized. There was not a scrap of writing to show that he had a relative in the world, and it was known that he had only one friend, a shoemaker of Topeka. He was notified and came here, but said he knew nothing of Von Leevre other than that he was well off financially and never kept his money in the banks. Not a penny was found in the cabin and the shoemaker friend of the recluse told the authorities that he had met Von Leevre in Topeka before he came to Doniphan County.

Nothing was ever obtained in the way of a solution of the murder, and many theories were advanced. Some said it was a tramp, but tramps are hardly able to afford overshoes. The most likely theory was that the killing was premeditated, and occurred on Saturday night. The murderer called at the cabin bent upon killing the old man for his money. After partaking of supper he made his demands. The old man had just started to smoke, as evidenced by the filled but unlighted pipe, and becoming afraid, ran out of the door to the top of the little hill, pursued by the murderer, who grasped the sawed off end of the scythe as he left the cabin. It is thought the actual killing took place at the top of the hill. Then the body was rolled down to where it was found, covered with corn stalks and burned, as it was in a hollow where the neighbors could not have seen the flames. After this the murderer covered it with snow, not thinking there would be a thaw so soon. His escape was easy and with him he undoubtedly took the lifetime savings of the hermit. Since the murder, this amount has been estimated at close to $15,000. At any rate, the killing will go down in history as one of the most brutal and mysterious in the annals of Kansas.

Carter Harvey resides on the place where the atrocious crime was committed.

Sheriff Enoch G. Crabb Died

Enoch G. Crabb, who died in Troy, Sunday, Dec. 1, 1866, while filling the office of sheriff, appointed Joseph Hayton his under sheriff, to fill the remainder of his unexpired term, which ended on the 12th of January, 1868. The deceased had the utmost confidence in Mr. Hayton. Jos. Hayton was a man possessing all the peculiar qualities to make a competent and popular county official. He was a man of uncommon energy and industry, thorough in business, honest and responsible. He was well known throughout the country as a successful farmer and was a favorite among the people generally as a champion of the soil in Doniphan County. Isaac Powers, Jr., was under-sheriff until the appointment of Mr. Hayton on Friday, Nov. 30th.

Enoch G. Crabb, who died in Troy, Sunday, Dec. 1, 1866, one week after the death of his daughter, was born in Park County, Indiana, in 1837, and his father died when the son was only two years old and the mother when Enoch was but seven, leaving the subject of this notice at that tender age an orphan. On April 6, 1856, in company with his cousin, Isaac Tallman, he came to Doniphan County, where he resided up to the time of his death. He was a young man endowed with the ability to make friends and was what is termed "a good mixer." He was a Mason and was deputy under every sheriff in Doniphan County up to the fall of 1863, at which time he was elected sheriff and again elected in 1865, defeating an old soldier for the office. As an officer he was faithful, earnest, efficient and untiring in the performance of his duty. Honest to the last cent, prompt and punctual in all that pertained to the office of county sheriff. He opposed every movement that savored of stealing, jayhawking or other violations of law and for several years, both as under-sheriff and subsequently as sheriff, he was a tower of strength against the reckless spirit of lawlessness, that threatened to overrun the country during the border ruffian times. He possessed those rare social qualities that endeared him to all classes of society and gained him the confidence of those who, for political reasons, could not assist him with their votes. The subject of this sketch was a Free State man, an anti-slavery man and a staunch Republican and upon three different occasions during the war he enlisted in the army, and was, by the mustering officer and examining surgeon, rejected on account of disability.

Abe Baker, a well known farmer of Doniphan County, died in a hospital at Topeka, on Friday, May 8, 1914, after an operation for intestinal trouble. He had been a resident of Doniphan County thirty-five years, coming from Plainville, Illinois. He was considered a good neighbor and a fine citizen. He retired from the farm two years before his death and moved to Atchison. The body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Morsy. He was sixty-seven years of age and left a wife and two grown children, Edward Baker and Mrs. Otis Loyd.

Feb. 22, 1867, a soldiers' festival was held at Atchison. A large sum of money was raised for the benefit of the wives and children of deceased soldiers.

Danite Murder in Doniphan

Society Formed to Oppose Obnoxious Pro-Slavery Laws Disbands After Members Quarrel and One Is Killed In 1855—Secrets Given Away by Member Who Could Not Stand the Treacherous Work of Order.

The town of Doniphan was thrown into a state of wild excitement on the morning of November 28, 1855, when one man was killed and two others wounded so dangerously that it was thought they could not recover.

During the summer of that year a society called the Danites was organized by a number of individuals for the ostensible purpose of opposing what they considered obnoxious laws. The members were violent Free State men and their tenets were just as violent.

Their motto was to assassinate secretly all Pro-Slavery men without even giving them an opportunity to leave the town. Several attempts at human life had been unsuccessfully made, sometimes in cases where the intended victims were known to be against slavery.

Finally when the real objects of the association became known to Patrick Laughlin, the first tinsmith to settle in the town, he became disgusted and openly declared he would divulge all its secrets. He had joined the "order" only a short time previously, and was not fully informed as to its objects.

True to his word, Laughlin openly proclaimed the workings of the society and the other Danites vowed vengeance. Samuel Collins, who operated a saw mill on the river, declared that Laughlin should confess that his revelations were lies, or die. On the evening of November 27, Collins met Laughlin, but he was unarmed, and after repeating his threats said that he would come around in the morning and that one of them would have breakfast with the devil.

When Laughlin arose the next morning he did not see anything of Collins and concluded the latter had forgotten the bloodthirsty threat of the preceding evening. He left his boarding house and started to cross the street to his shop.

In the middle of the thoroughfare, Laughlin was met by Collins, who tried to shoot him, but the weapon missed fire. Collins then drew a knife and stabbed Laughlin so severely that he sank to his knees. Before Collins could inflict further injury, a friend of Laughlin's, named Lynch, jumped from the sidewalk and shot Collins through the breast.

Although mortally wounded, Collins clubbed his gun and struck Lynch a fearful blow on the head, knocking him senseless. Collins was carried away by friends and died in a few minutes. Lynch's skull was fractured and Laughlin was dangerously wounded. They lingered between life and death for a few weeks, but eventually recovered. The Danites went out of business after the tragedy.

Successful Doniphan County Boy

Frank J. Bohr, Who Was Born on His Father's Farm a Short Distance Southeast of Troy, Is an Enterprising and Ambitious Home Product Who Has Accumulated a Good Sized Fortune as a Real Estate and Investment Operator in Riverside, California.

No history of the successful men born in Doniphan County would be complete that did not contain the name of Frank J. Bohr in large black letters.

Mr. Bohr is one of the sure-enough live wires that Doniphan County has produced, and his birthplace has good reason to feel proud of him. He is a true representative of the good old stock which settled in Doniphan County in the early days.

Although still a comparatively young man, Frank J. Bohr, has made an indelible impression on the minds of the business men of the present time. His bright, alert mind has impelled him to the forefront in such a manner as to leave no doubt regarding his success in life.

In the face of the keenest competition Mr. Bohr has, in a strange country, demonstrated that no obstacles are too great to be overcome by the man with an indomitable will and a healthy mind.

From his earliest days, Frank J. Bohr developed a remarkable aptitude for mastering anything he undertook. His early school days were spent at Brush Creek, a country school eight miles southeast of Troy, amid the environments of home, and his educational advantages were greater than those of the average farmer boy. After completing the curriculum of the country school, his father sent him three years to St. Benedict's College at Atchison, from which he graduated in 1903 with honors, receiving the gold medal given in a class of fifteen.

While still a mere boy, Frank's strongest inclinations seemed to be pointed directly toward real estate Although born on a farm and surrounded from his earliest infancy with agricultural influences he was endowed with the faculty to see farther ahead than the fences of the farm.

Frank Bohr had a deep-rooted inspiration for real estate, even while he was yet in his teens. He developed a keen insight into land values to an extent that almost seemed wonderful for one so young. He did not wait for opportunities to be forced upon him, but manfully went out and found the opportunities himself.

Since first branching out in life on his own responsibility Mr. Bohr has been a consistent money-maker with the result that he is today substantially situated from the financial standpoint. Everything he undertook seemed to turn to money and, although some of his deals were not of the million-dollar variety, they turned out exceedingly profitable, nevertheless.

Mr. Bohr is now a resident of Riverside, California, where he settled a number of years ago. At the beginning of his business career he realized the great possibilities in Pacific coast lands and sought out California as his field for future operations. Since making his home in Riverside Mr. Bohr has been actively engaged in the real estate, loans and investment business and from the very first his success has been most pronounced. He has customers all over the Golden State, and as far east as the Atlantic coast. The business is on a substantial basis and is conducted in a manner calculated to command the utmost confidence and obtain the best possible results.

It is now almost forty-two years ago since Frank J. Bohr was born on his father's farm, six miles southeast of Troy. He first saw the light of day on January 9, 1873, and he has been very much alive and looking at the light of prosperity ever since. His father, Nicholas Bohr, was one of the pioneer settlers of that part of Doniphan County, and he is today one of the representative wealthy farmers in that part of Kansas.

Frank Bohr was not yet thirty years old when he decided to get married. His selection for a wife fell upon Miss Loretta Whittaker, who had been his playmate when both were children. The Bohr and Whittaker families are among the best known of the Doniphan County pioneers. They had been on the most intimate neighborly terms of friendship since the early days of settlement and the union of the young folks was immensely pleasing to both families.

The ceremony was performed at the Roman Catholic Cathedral in St. Joseph, on June 15, 1903, and the young couple soon after went to their future home in California. The parents of Mrs. Frank Bohr, Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Whittaker, have a fine home at Highland, and are among the most highly respected people in the community.

There have been three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Bohr: Virginia Louise, born April 21, 1904; Helen Marjorie, born May 29, 1907; Charlotte Gertrude, born August 12, 1914.

These little girls are exceptionally bright and intelligent, and reflect the sterling qualities which they naturally inherited from their parents and their parents' families.

Mr. Bohr has an elegant home at 1430 South Lime street, Riverside.

The town of Doniphan received a sudden inspiration for commercial progress in 1869, when the old Atchison & Nebraska (now the Burlington & Missouri River) railroad was built through there.

After about fourteen years of indifferent trade, the railroad officials concluded there was little to be gained by operating the road into the town, so the route was changed to its present location.

Doniphan was a promising town for a number of years during its early career. In the '50's it built up rapidly, the first house being generally supposed to have been erected by a pioneer mechanic named Brentano.

This building was located just north of the public school building, which was erected during the years 1873-1874. James F. Forman, the contractor of the school building, charged the town $8,000 for putting up the structure.

The oldest resident of Doniphan at the present time is believed to be Adam Schnell, who for a number of years conducted a blacksmith and wagon shop in partnership with the late Joseph Eschletzbaum.

There are very few of the early settlers or their houses to be found in the town of Doniphan now. Mostly all the old-timers went away or died years ago, and their active presence in the affairs of the town at the present is scarcely a memory to the present generation.

LOUIS W. HAHN

Native of Doniphan County Is High Official of Burlington Railroad.

One of the many Doniphan County boys who have left their native soil and gone forth into the world to make a place for themselves in the fields of big business is Louis W. Hahn, now traveling freight and passenger agent of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, with offices at Salt Lake City, Utah. This position is one of the most responsible to be had and to make good in the place one must have an enormous fund of energy and ability, all of which the present incumbent possesses.

Louis W. Hahn was born at Doniphan, June 10, 1858, and received all of his early education in the public schools of this county. Before he was scarcely out of his teens he left his home and began as a railroad man to learn the business. He entered the employ of the Burlington and began in the lowest capacity. On Feb. 20, 1881, he was married to Miss Mattie B. Brenner, also a native of Doniphan County, who was born at Doniphan. To this union were born five children. They are Charles B., born at Troy Junction, Feb. 26, 1882; Nellie Leah, Superior, Nebraska, Jan. 5, 1884; John McConniff, Superior, Nebraska, April 21, 1886; Frances M., Atchison, Kansas, May 4, 1893, and Mary Kathryn, Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 16, 1901.

One of Mr. Hahn's first positions was at Troy Junction, where he was the genial and popular station agent. He was next transferred to Superior, Nebraska, and then to Atchison, Kansas, from which point he was promoted to his present place and transferred again, this time to Salt Lake City. Mr. Hahn's success in the railroad business can be attributed to a close application and a tenacity of purpose. He is one of the best posted men in the West on railroad rates and has appeared before the Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to that complicated matter.

On Dec. 25, 1913, Mr. Hahn suffered an irreparable loss through the death of his loving wife and helpmeet, who was widely known throughout the county. Mr. Hahn is what yet might be called a young man and is certain to make a place for himself even higher in the railroad world of which he is already an important part.

Mrs. Hahn's mother, who is one of the pioneer settlers of Doniphan County, and a woman of strong personality and inteligence, is still living and she makes her home in Atchison.

Albert G. Thayer

Albert G. Thayer taught the first school in the new Oakland school house, 10 miles southwest of Troy. His first term was during 1899 and 1900, and his second followed. Mr. Thayer was one of the most successful teachers Doniphan County ever had and he made for himself a host of friends while performing his duties. He is now superintendent of the Muscotah schools in Atchison County.

Brenner, Kan.

Andrew Lloyd fell under the railroad train near the depot at Brenner on Anril 5, 1872, and was killed almost instantly. The late Jeff McNamee established the first blacksmith shop in that town.

Famous Kansas Sculptor

Joseph Hill, a Former Doniphan County Boy, Now Living at Beloit, Is a Noted Farmer Sculptor—Enlisted at Troy in Company A, Thirteenth Kansas Volunteers and Served With Distinction Through the Civil War.

The fame of Joe Hill, the farmer sculptor of Beloit, Kansas, is now nation-wide. His brilliant work is the more remarkable because of the fact that he never had the advantage of instruction in the art.

While many of the old-timers know Joe Hill personally, and the younger element know him by his reputation as a sculptor, they sometimes miss a chance to indulge in a little local pride over the fact that he is a former Doniphan County boy.

Mr. Hill has the distinction of being the most unique sculptor. A great part of his life was devoted to farming and he is now enjoying the fruits of his labor and spending his leisure years in the pursuit of his life-long ambition.

The tools employed by Mr. Hill are of the simplest kind, in fact, so simple that it is a marvel to everybody how he can execute such perfect specimens of art with them.

Since he retired from active farm life eleven years ago, Mr. Hill, who is seventy-one years old, has evidently forgotten the struggles and hardships of his earlier years in the enjoyment of his workshop and in contemplation of the magnificent specimens of art he has executed and of the work to be performed in the future.

He is not troubled with any family cares, having reared a fine house full of children, all born on the farm, as was their father, and started them out in life with all the advantages of perfect mental and physical equipment. They are a family to be proud of, and every child reflects the superior ideals of his parents.

On approaching his house, the visitor is at once attracted by the massive lion, standing sentinel in the front yard, that he carved out of a solid piece of Bedford stone.

The noted sculptor maintains his workshop in the rear of the residence where may be seen a collection of his own artistic handiwork, which is nothing short of a revelation. Among the figures may be found the life-size busts of our martyred presidents.

Mr. Hill has executed several busts of President Lincoln. There are also a number of group figures originated by the sculptor and brilliantly executed.

Many connoisseurs in art who have seen Mr. Hill's work have pronounced it wonderful. He never took a lesson from anyone, and does not even pretend to make a dollar from his work. His consuming ambition is to pursue art for art's sake. The material he works with is Bedford stone and white stone found in Mitchell County and north central Kansas.

When Secretary of State William J. Bryan was at the Chautauqua in Beloit three years ago, he had a pleasing surprise when invited to inspect a life-size bust of himself that had been chiseled out of Mitchell County stone by Mr. Hill. Mr. Bryan appeared to be pleased with the bust and offered only easily remedied criticisms of Mr. Hill's excellent work. The fact that Mr. Hill had executed the bust from memory and pictures only, seemed the more remarkable to Mr. Bryan, and he warmly congratulated the artist on the excellence of the likeness.

Mr. Hill came to Doniphan County, Kansas, with his father and family during the stirring days of the anti-slavery agitation. On April 5, 1855, they crossed the Missouri River at what was then known as Frakes Landing, but afterward renamed Geary City. Mr. Hill remembers the incident to the present day, as it is firmly impressed on his mind, and it would not be surprising if he were to picture it on a piece of stone in the near future. The crossing was effected on what was known as a horse ferryboat, a typical example of the freak river craft of the times, and propelled by the old-fashioned four-horse tread-power.

The family settled in Wayne Township. They were soon well known and highly respected, both in Geary City and in Troy. When President Lincoln issued his call for volunteers, Joe Hill was one of the first to respond. He was enrolled as a member of Company A, Thirteenth Kansas volunteers, at Troy, August 2, 1862. The fact that there were two Joe Hills from Doniphan County enlisted in the same company, created no little confusion which in after years caused the War Department some time to straighten out. None of the Joes had a middle initial. Mr. Hill, the subject of this sketch, was, for the sake of avoiding embarrassing situations, designated as Joe No. 1; Joe Hill, of Burr Oak Township, was known as No. 2. That arrangement saved a lot of trouble and obviated the possibility of certain complications. Joe Hill No. 2 died about two years ago at his home near Holton, Kansas.

The Doniphan School Building erected in 1872, District Number 13.

Teachers: Miss Murial Bryan and Miss Grace Taylor. Members of board of education: Frank L. Brenner, director; William Cooper, treasurer, and A. J. Braun.

Mr. Hill was married to Miss Narcissa Pickett, who was born in St. Joseph, Mo. Mrs. Hill was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Pickett, the well-known family, which settled in Doniphan County in 1856. The wedding was on October 5, 1875, at the Pickett home, south of Troy, and the officiating clergyman was Reverend Leek of Doniphan.

Mrs. Hill's parents were pioneers of Doniphan County, both having passed away long since. Mrs. Pickett died at Troy at the age of sixty-four years, and her husband died some years before at the age of fifty-eight.

Mr. Hill's mother and father have also been dead some years. His mother died at Beloit at the age of seventy-five, and Mr. Hill, Sr., died in Doniphan County in 1863 in his sixty-third year. Richard Hill, father of the subject of this sketch, came to Kansas, April 5, 1855, crossing the Missouri River at what is now known as "Old Gary City," in the southeast corner of Doniphan County. Two yoke of oxen hitched to a "linch pin" wagon, were their means of transportation.

Six children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hill, four girls and two boys. All are married now, and doing fine in the world. The girls are: Mary, who married Dr. C. R. Spain, and lives at Arkansas City, Kansas; Ruth, who married Albert F. Green, who is engaged in the hardware and plumbing business at Cawker City, Kansas; Loule, who married Guy Nixon, a prosperous farmer of Jewell County, Kansas; Florence, who married Walter Linville, a traveling salesman now residing in Missouri; J. Edmund, married Vivian Lolly of Concordia, is a printer and all-around newspaper man, and Ernest B., married Miss Bertha Bunch of Beloit, is a dentist, practicing his profession at Minneapolis, Kansas.

The United States bureau of pensions ran up against a tough proposition some years ago, owing to the similarity of the names of the two Joe Hills of the Thirteenth Kansas infantry. Somehow or other the Joes got badly mixed up on the pension rolls, but the tangle was finally unraveled when it was ascertained that Joe Hill, the sculptor, had been enrolled as No. 1, and had been discharged from the service as Corporal Joe Hill. The mix-up was a natural one, as the mustering-out officers evidently did not consider it necessary to tag a number onto the only Corporal Joe Hill in Company A. It took the unwinding of miles of governmental red tape to clear up the situation, and now Mr. Hill is drawing his pension as Corporal Joe Hill. The tangle was the result of the attorney's mistake when he secured Mr. Hill's pension.

Since this form was made up, Mr. Hill died April 28, and was buried Friday, the 30th, 1915.

The Jordan Creek Baptist Church, situated in Wayne Township.

JORDAN CREEK BAPTIST CHURCH

Rev. Mr. David Waddell First Minister, Died May 22, 1914.

The first church to be organized in the district now controlled by Jordan Creek Baptist church was known as the Independence Creek Baptist church on account of it being located on what was then known as Independence creek. The church was organized in the early sixties by Rev. Mr. David Waddell, father of Mrs. R. F. Ballard, now of Atchison, Kansas, to whom we are indebted for much of the data in this article.

The small church evidently did not meet all the requirements of the parish, as in 1880 the late Joseph A. Syms proposed that if Rev. Mr. Waddel would reorganize the church he would donate the land to build on and also $300.00 in money; furthermore that he would stay with him through the work and assist him to the utmost. Accordingly a church was built on a bluff above Jordan creek, and the name Jordan Creek Baptist church was bestowed upon the edifice.

Jordan Creek Baptist church has been a prosperous church almost from its beginning; its members are from the most industrious class of citizens in Doniphan County. The manner in which they have so unanimously hung together through all the adversities of ordinary church experiences has won for them the undying respect of the countryside. Rev. Mr. Waddell, the first preached, died May 22, 1914.

The present pastor is Rev. Mr. J. F. Krueger, and under his care the church is progressing and showing a very flourishing condition.

There was a sumptuous basket dinner at Jordan Creek Baptist Church in Wayne township, Sunday, July 11, 1915. Rev. Mr. D. J. Saunders, who filled the pulpit for so many years, preached an interesting and instructive sermon on that day.

Bull Kills Farmer

On Monday morning, July 29, 1872, Joseph Price, who lived two miles from Doniphan, in Wayne township, was gored to death by a young blooded bull. He went into a lot where the animal was, when it attacked him, inflicting such serious injury upon his person that he died in a few moments. Mr. Price was well known and one of the best farmers in that section, owning more than 600 acres of land in one body. A large portion of its was in cultivation. He left a wife and three children to mourn his sudden demise.

Syms Smoke House Burned

On Friday evening, June 2, 1871, the smokehouse of A. B. Syms, in Doniphan, was destroyed by fire, together with the contents, consisting of about 30,000 pounds of bacon. Loss estimated at $3,000, insured for $2,000. No other buildings were burned at this time, which was due to the heroic efforts of many of the citizens of Doniphan, who immediately gathered at the scene of the conflagration.

First Senator From Kansas

James H. Lane Published the Crusader of Freedom in the Town of Doniphan During the Stirring Days of 1858—A Quarrel With His Partner, James Redpath, Author of Redpath's Kansas History, Resulted in Fierce Recriminations—Lane Committed Rash Act July 1st and Died as a Result July 11, 1866.

The town of Doniphan was a lively place in the years preceding the admission of Kansas to the Union. It was the hotbed and essence of all the fierce political agitation with strong and determined partisans on both sides of the slavery question.

In fact, all the eastern border of Kansas was practically aflame in the years before the Free State men got control, and for some time afterward. The newspapers didn't pour oil on the troubled waters by any manner of means, because the paper that wasn't for a cause was against it good and hard.

James H. Lane, later the first man to be elected to the United States senate from Kansas, was a commanding figure those days, and he took an active part in all the agitation that was going on to make Kansas an abolition state. He had been attacked furiously by the pro-slavery newspapers, and concluded that about the only way he could hold his own was to control a paper that would voice his sentiments.

James Redpath and Mr. Lane started the Crusader of Freedom in the town of Doniphan, Dec. 16, 1858, and it was a strong paper for a while. His partner in the enterprise, James Redpath, was in later years recognized as a great historian in matters relating to the early days of Kansas territory, and after she had been admitted to statehood.

The Crusader of Freedom was a live paper, and the fierce manner in which it attacked the pro-slavery element was appalling. The invective of which the editor was master had no parallel, and he handled the Missouri bushwhackers and pro-slavery element in just as vicious a manner as their own newspapers had been denouncing the free state propagandists.

Things went along merrily until Mr. Lane and his partner Redpath had an open rupture and the future senator withdrew his interest in the Crusader of Freedom. The quarrel had been so bitter that each side burned the bridges after him, and there was neither give nor take quarter. While Mr. Redpath did not go back on the cause of free statehood, he kept abusing Lane like a horsethief.

The latter devoted his efforts to fighting the battle for the people who advocated the abolition of slavery, and he became a great national figure. When the first session of the Kansas state legislature met to elect two United States senators, the name of James H. Lane was always at the front, and he had little trouble in securing the honor of being the first man to be elected from Kansas to represent the state in the highest lawmaking body of the land.

James H. Lane, first United States senator from the state of Kansas, died at Fort Leavenworth, July 11, 1866. He was elected United States senator in 1861, and in Congress took sides with President Johnson in the open rupture which occurred between him and the Republicans on the freedman's bureau civil rights bill. He returned to Kansas early in June, and was met coldly by the politicians and his friends who had been his loyal supporters, and it was not until then that he realized he was no longer an autocrat of political forces in Kansas and that affected his mind, and he started to return to Washington and stopped at St. Louis. On the 29th of June he returned to Leavenworth to visit his brother-in-law, Captain McCall, who resided on the government farm near Leavenworth. There his health improved, and on the first day of July he went driving with Captain McCall and Captain Adams, and dismounted at a farm house gate to open same, and after closing the gate said, "Goodby, gentlemen," and placed a pistol in his mouth, firing the shot which after a few days proved fatal. They took him to Captain McCall's house, and there he lingered until the 11th day of July. During this time he rallied once to recognize his friends and to brood over his rash act.

TOWN OF BRENNER

Platted in 1872 When the Old Atchison & Nebraska Railroad Was Built Through Doniphan County—Proximity of Brenner to the Town of Doniphan Checked Its Growth—Brenner Newspaper Died.

Brenner, five miles southwest of Troy, was laid out in 1872. It was platted by the old Atchison & Nebraska railroad, now the Burlington, when the road went through Doniphan County. Like many other new Kansas towns of the time hopes for it were high. The fact that it was located on the railroad was regarded much to its advantage.

The depot was about the first building to be erected and a postoffice was established, with James McDaniel as postmaster. Later a weekly paper was published, The Western Emigrant, but it soon became defunct. Still its people hoped for growth. As in the case of so many new towns, there was talk of factories, of wholesale houses, large educational institutions. When the famines of the town gathered at the fireside after supper in the winter evenings or visited on the porches on summer evenings, some one would always drop a rumor that persons having the appearance of Eastern capitalists had been seen in the town that day. Or, while the crowd at the postoffice waited for the mail some one would quietly hint at prospects for oil and gas, and the farmers would dream of an income from oil leases and shares, or perhaps some one would think he had discovered prospects for coal. So the air castles were built.

However, no factories or wholesale houses came. Neither gas nor oil was found. The neighboring town of Doniphan, and an older town, was quite a rival to the young settlement. Thus Brenner did not come up to the hopes of those who first located there.

However, the people of the vicinity are thriving. Brenner is one of the best communities in Doniphan County. They believe in education there, which is the best characteristics of a typical Kansas community. Their interest in education is evidenced by the fine school house. It is a two-story structure with the lower room used for school purposes and the upper for public meetings. The other buildings in the town are substantial and the dwellings are neat and make comfortable homes.

Among the late improvements to the town is the elevator, built by Jack Hudson in 1914. Mr. Hudson is the merchant of the town and buys all of the grain contributed to Brenner. He is prosperous and is ever on the alert for business, being endowed with considerable business ability.

This disposition is inherited by his daughter, Miss Evaline Hudson, who is postmistress of Brenner. The fact that the bright young woman is in charge of the postoffice insures that the mail will be taken care of efficiently. There is no danger of letters going astray or packages being delayed.

Brenner is distinguished by having one of the most enthusiastic Anti-Horse Thief Associations in the state. The members of this order are ever vigilant and are quick to apprehend any persons violating the law.

Perhaps for its size no better class of people can be found than in Brenner, and likely no more fertile fields are to be found than the well improved farms which make the community one of best in Kansas.

The farmers are up-to-date, energetic and believe in keeping early hours when starting to work. The ground is well cultivated and the average per acre for crops is exceptionally high.

Eugene Hinkley, who was postmaster at one time, is general passenger agent for the A., T. & S. F. R. R. Co. at Minneapolis, Minn. Jeff McNemee, who died a few years ago, was one of the oldest settlers in the town.

Doniphan County in 1802

A map, made by Perrin du Lac, a French geographer, who made a voyage up the Missouri River in 1802—one hundred and thirteen years ago—shows only two geographical names in what is now Doniphan County, the "River du Loup," and the "2d ancien village des Kanses." The River du Loup was what is now Wolf River, and the Indian village mentioned was the second ancient village of the Kansas Indians, located where Doniphan now stands. Independence Creek is marked on the map, but no name is given. Lewis and Clark came up the river two years after Du Lac, and gave it the name which it now bears.

Steamboat Sunk

On Aug. 27, 1871, the steamboat Viola Belle, on her trip down to Atchison, sunk at Smith's bar, above Doniphan. She had on board 3,000 sacks of grain and other freight, which went down with her. Among other freight she was carrying Capt. Saltzman's rifles, which were being sent to the state armory, at Jefferson City, Mo. The Fontenelle was sunk a few days previous to this. The Viola Belle was owned by Erhart and Petring and C. F. Lowman of St. Louis and was valued at $16,500.00.

The dedication of the Methodist Episcopal church in Doniphan, took place on the 30th day of December, 1866. The dedicatory sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. W. K. Marshall and the Rev. Mr. D. P. Mitchell at 11 o'clock a. m.

MISS CORDA PRIEBE

Young Doniphan School Teacher of Unusual Ability, Born Near Wathena.

Doubtless many a successful man owes much of his ambition and success in life to the inspiration received from one of his teachers. It is quite likely that many future successful Doniphan County boys will regard Miss Corda Priebe, who will teach the Rock school next term, as showing them the best ideals in life.

Miss Priebe was born on a farm seven miles northwest of Wathena, Feb. 27, 1893, and was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Priebe. She was educated in the county schools and also attended one term at the Kansas State Normal, Emporia. There she earned a second grade certificate, and has taught three terms. Two terms Miss Priebe taught in the Doniphan primary, district 13, and then a term at the Oak Grove school, district 33. It is safe to say that her term at Rock school will be another successful school year for her.

Miss Priebe is unusually intelligent and enthusiastic, so that her pupils cannot but help take interest in their studies. She has ways that win their regard and confidence as well as that of their parents.

Geary City

The defunct town of Geary City was located on the Missouri River on Section 26, Town 4, Range 21, in Wayne Township. Was laid off in the spring of 1857 by a town company, organized in Leavenworth, the original townsite consisting of 260 acres.

Founded Town of Doniphan

James F. Forman, Who Came to Kansas Territory in the Early Forties, Originated the Plan to Found the Town of Doniphan, and Headed a Land Company Which Was Organized for the Purpose of Platting and Building the Townsite—Charged $2.50 a Block For Surveying the Town and Took Payment in Town Lots.

The town of Doniphan was founded in 1854 by James F. Forman, who came to the territory of Kansas from his home in Kentucky about the year 1843. The Forman brothers, James F. and John W., were among the first people to own land in what is now Doniphan County. John W. Forman had come to the old mission shortly after his marriage in Memphis, about 1841, and his brother came to the territory a little later.

John W. Forman kept a store at the mission until 1852, and also acted as Indian agent for some years. James F. Forman at once took up land after his arrival and began farming. The two brothers were in the territory during the terrible cholera epidemic in 1849, when graves lined both sdes of the road leading to the mission.

James F. Forman owned the land on the present site of Doniphan, and he early figured out that it would make just as good a site for a town as St. Joseph or Atchison. The Doniphan Townsite Company was organized on November 7, 1854, the first meeting being held in St. Joseph, when a full set of officers was elected.

John W. Forman was made treasurer of the townsite company and his brother, James F., was named as one of the trustees. The company selected James F. Forman to survey the town and for this work he was to receive $2.50 for each block, payment to be made in town lots. There was no hesitation in naming the town after Col. A. W. Doniphan, who was then at the zenith of his popularity as a Mexican war hero, and who had been given the credit of having fought and won the last battle of the war, several days after peace had been declared.

Previous to the laying out of the town there had been a sort of trading post at that point conducted by Joseph Utt in a log cabin. This cabin stood for years on the same spot and was eventually washed into the Missouri River. The townsite company from the very start had demanded stiff prices for town lots, so confident were they that the new town would eventually be a better business center than either St. Joseph or Atchison.

The fact that the prices of lots had been maintained at such a high figure may have had a detrimental effect on the future prosperity of the town of Doniphan, for several enterprises that had calculated on locating there were scared away and went elsewhere. Among them may be mentioned the present Roman Catholic College of St. Benedict, at Atchison, which, with a little display of good judgment on the part of the townsite company, would never have been built there.

Early in the history of the town of Doniphan there was built a little Catholic church under the direction of Father Augustine, who had then in mind a plan to found and build a college. When the townsite company was approached on the question of a site for the college they held the land so high that Father Augustine could not meet their terms, and he went to Atchison, where the people were only too glad to offer inducements for the founding of St. Benedict's college there.

The first house in the new town was built by James F. Forman out of material secured from the wreck of the steamboat Pontiac, which had sunk in the Missouri, near the site of Doniphan, a few years before. The house was a neat looking affair and was standing idle on the old site seven or eight years ago.

In the spring of 1855 Austin Forman followed his brothers to Kansas territory, bringing along his wife and ten-year-old sister, who later became the wife of Adam Brenner. This couple made their home in Doniphan, but Mrs. Austin Forman moved to Atchison many years ago, where she made her home.

John W. Forman was elected one of the early mayors of Doniphan and was also a member of the Kansas constitutional convention in the fall of 1859, and also a member of the legislature for many years. The first dry goods store to be opened in Doniphan was conducted by the Forman Brothers, and Adam Brenner, who arrived in 1857, opened the second one with a partner named Bussy, whose home was originally in St. Louis. The manner in which Brenner was impelled to come to Doniphan was a rather curious one for so small a town. Leaving his home in Iowa he located in Memphis, Mo., and it was while teaching the members of a brass band in that town that he became acquainted with the Formans. The Forman brothers were hustling promoters and they conceived the idea that it would be a great stroke of business to have a brass band in Doniphan in order to properly whoop things up. So they persuaded Brenner to move there, and he organized and instructed the first band in Doniphan.

The Doniphan Station elevator, located on the Rulo and Atchison branch of the Burlington.

Brenner was always a keen business man and he had not been in the new town very long when he built an elevator, which was later destroyed by fire. He became an extensive grain buyer, and for several years bought in large quantities at Iowa Point, shipping to St. Louis and to the government at Fort Leavenworth. He quit the grain business in 1876 and began the raising of grapes, and the Brenner vineyards have ever since been instrumental in keeping business moving in the town. The wine-making industry was a strong feature in Doniphan's commercial life, but most of the vineyards have been plowed up in recent years and planted to grain.

Adam Brenner died in 1890. His brother Jacob, who had settled in Doniphan in 1860, followed farming until 1877, when he, too, concluded there was a sure fortune in growing grapes and making wine. He died in 1891. He was the father of Nicholas and George Brenner, and of Mrs. Margaret Brandner. George Brenner died about 1900.

The Formans early tired of life in Doniphan. The town, instead of coming up to their anticipated greatness, was a sore disappointment. It looked like a sure winner at one stage in its career, but like many other early river towns, it failed totally to come up to the expectations of the founders and promoters. John W. Forman moved to Texas, about 1865, where he died some years later. James F. Forman died in Everest in 1892, and Austin Forman died in Doniphan in 1864.

While Doniphan continued to boom and prosper, it was conceded to be the liveliest town along the river. It was a great place for the rough element from both Atchison and across the river in Missouri, to congregate and shoot up things. It has often been claimed by the old residents that the first gun fired in the conflict that resulted in the Civil War was shot off in Doniphan. There was at the time a secret society composed of Free State men, and one of the "brothers" who did not like the way things were conducted left and went to St. Joseph, where he published some of the secret doings of the society. Later he returned and his former confederates started a quarrel, which resulted in considerable pistol shooting and the death of one man.

Doniphan had two railroads at one time, the old Bob-Tail, to Wathena, the passengers ferrying from there to St. Joseph, and the A. & N. There was a good elevator in the town in the early days, a flouring mill, where John Perkins acted as miller; two packing houses, one of them operated by A. B. Symns; two newspapers, and three churches, Catholic, Presbyterian and Methodist. The Presbyterian church later became the town hall; the Methodist was abandoned years ago, and the Catholic church still holds regular services.

During the thriving days of Doniphan it was not unusual for four or five steamboats to make a landing each day. The river warehouses, which stood on the site later occupied by the home of Herman Koch, did a rushing business at all hours. There were boat loads of furniture, tools and farming implements being constantly unloaded, so that the landings were for a few years the scene of great activity.

Even in the early days in 1856, Doniphan used to have considerable social aspirations and a bunch of over a hundred South Carolinians who came there the first winter to vote on the slavery question added not a little to the social gaieties of the town. On the night of January 8, 1856, Barney O'Driscoll gave a grand ball to celebrate the opening of the Doniphan House, and many of the old timers always contended the affair was the most gorgeous ever attempted in the territory up to that time or for many years since.

Mrs. Adam Brenner, who was a young girl at the time, always spoke of the brilliant festivites on the night of the ball. People came from Atchison and St. Joseph in the swellest kind of ball togs and grand millinery. Mrs. Austin Forman, who assisted in dispensing refreshments, said frequently afterward that the good things represented everything that could be bought for love or money. The night turned bitterly cold and when the festivities were almost over, many of the visiting guests, of both sexes, were obliged to camp in the hotel until the inclemency of the weather abated. That winter was known as one of the coldest in the history of Doniphan. Eugene Hantz, one of the South Carolina contingent, had his feet frozen so badly one night that death resulted in a few days. There was no cemetery in Doniphan at the time, and the people were in a quandary what to do with the body. Finally it was decided to lay out a cemetery, and Hantz was the first to be buried in it. A monument was subsequently erected over the grave by his friends, and it still stands.

Doniphan County Land Office in 1857

The United States government opened a land office in Doniphan County, Kansas, at Doniphan, October 15, 1857. It was a decidedly popular move in the eyes of the natives, as it afforded a chance to buy up a share of God's footstool at merely the price of filing. Of course, the land at that time did not amount to so very much, but it is the same land that today produces fruit and berries known the world over.

All the people in the territory contiguous to Doniphan County flocked to the "opening," as it was commonly called. The lots were eagerly sought and quickly disposed of, so the land office was of little value in a short while. In 1858 it was discontinued. However, a great benefit was derived from the establishment of this branch of Uncle Sam's service, as it was the direct means of attracting to this country some clever attorneys, real estate men, a printing office and other enterprises necessary for evolution.

Relics of Doniphan Bandits

George Remsburg, of Atchison County, has a number of interesting relics of the bandit raid on Doniphan, October 20, 1899. Mr. Remsburg was a member of an Atchison posse that helped search for the bandits after they had entered Charley Kuchs' store at Doniphan, shot and killed John Braun, and barricaded themselves on Doniphan Island, where they afterward shot and killed Police Officer Bob Dickerson of Atchison and wounded Charles James of Doniphan. The most gruesome relic of the affair which Mr. Remsburg has in his possession is a small piece of Officer Dickerson's skull which he picked up on the spot where the brave officer fell, after he had been shot through the head by one of the bandits' Winchester rifles. He also has the shell from which the shot was fired that killed Dickerson. Among other things is a piece of one of the improvised willow ramrods, with which the bandits cleaned their rifles while defending themselves in their log barricade; a cut and polished slab of wood from one of the logs that composed this barricade, and a portion of an ear of corn, on which the fugitives subsisted while thus concealed. Mr. Remsburg has preserved several newspapers of that date, giving the original accounts of this robbery, one of the boldest, and the battle put up by the robbers and officers, one of the most desperate that ever occurred in this section of the country. Mr. Remsburg, at this time, was city editor of the Atchison Champion, and a member of the Kansas National Guard, which assisted in the search for the robbers.

In 1869, Oct. 17th, Doniphan Chapter No. 13, R. A. M. was organized.

William H. Bryan

"Beanville" Correspondent for Chief Writes Items Which Are Widely Copied—Best Country Correspondent in Kansas—Best Use of Limited Opportunities Aided Natural Ability —Came to Doniphan County in 1857—Was Wayne Township Trustee for Eight Years.

Pick up almost any Kansas weekly newspaper and it's fountain pens to to pencil stubs that the issue will contain some news of interest to every Doniphan County resident. Likely the reader will have seen these interesting items before, in the "Beanville" Notes of the Chief, written by William H. Bryan, whose correspondence has appeared regularly in this paper for many years. His items are more widely copied than those of any other country correspondent, and he has the distinction of being the best country correspondent in Kansas.

It has been said by many, that the subject of this sketch missed his calling. He has a natural ability for writing, with the nose for news—eyes and ears for the interesting, and with a kindly sense of humor that makes his pithy news, notes and comments, as spicy and palatable as dill pickles. It is a safe guess that if our Beanville correspondent had been educated and begun to write early in life, he would now be a paragrapher on the Chicago Tribune, or some metropolitan paper.

However, The Tribune's loss is our gain—and is to the advantage of Doniphan County that he chose the farm, as he has been one of the country's workers for the best things of life, since he grew to manhood. In his own words, he has "lived to see Doniphan County grow from a vast expanse of prairie to the top notch of prosperity."

He was born in Oskaloosa, Iowa, Nov. 9, 1856, with wind-driven snow piling around the house of his birth. His mother was a school teacher. (Ah, great mothers those school teachers.)

A little less than a year from the time the baby came the parents held a consultation—they had heard the "Call of Kansas." Perhaps the school teacher mother felt that Kansas was destined to be the state that now is, and she desired her son to take part in its up-building in after years.

So the spring of 1857 found the little family with their faces toward the setting sun. They were moved by an instinct as primitive and sure that prompted the Westward migrations of our European forefathers. If the theory be true that no experience, however young, is never forgotten by our sub-consciousness, likely Mr. Bryan could tell of being lulled to sleep by camp fires, of being wakened by the smell of bacon and of days of swaying and lurching in his mother's arms as the linch pin wagon of the family jolted on its Westward way.

The party crossed the Kansas line amid dim forbodings of Indians and outlaws. Occasionally a band of roving savages silhouetted themselves against the sky and then the mother would draw her baby a little tighter to her breast and the party would come to a halt. However, following trails and river beds, the home seekers went on without serious molestation.

On a beautiful morning, June 4, 1857, the father looked at some land three and one-half miles east of the present site of Troy (where the Goul boys live today), and noticing it was good, preempted the claim. Then came the rude house, quite different from the present fine farm houses of our country, and everything was more for utility than beauty—the Kansas prairie was virgin soil. Perhaps little William's first recollection would be the lowing of the oxen with which the father had to break the ground. So the first spring in Kansas passed by as beautiful and alluring and as deceitful as the smile of a friend who proves false in politics. A long drouthy summer followed. The crop failed. That fall was streaked with the discolored canvas of "covered" wagons carrying discouraged people back East. Some of these wagons bore picturesque legends such as: "Going back to wife's folks." "In Kansas we trusted and now we are busted." But the Bryans were of sterner stuff. They stayed with the faith in God and trust in the state of their adoption. The next year the ground reluctantly gave them enough corn and potatoes and a few other vegetables for their own use, at least, and they felt that their faith was justified. In the meantime, the boy grew in body and mind, and neither body or mind was neglected. Among his childish recollections is that of hoeing the tough soil under the blazing Kansas sun, with eyes full of wonder at the miracle of growing things, and tongue pointed with questions as to what made it thunder and whence came the rain, and perhaps why should little boys have to hoe when it was so much more fun to go fishing? He says he was naturally lazy, but remember—he says so.

Thus the years went by. In the winter, the mother with the fondest hopes for her boy's future, would insist upon her son's attending the country school. The grown man says now that he would prefer a thrashing—cheerfully submit to it—rather than go to school. However, perhaps the rough slab seats were too high for a little fellow and the floor seemed an awful long ways down; and it was so much more interesting to make snow balls and snow forts, than to study. Yet he attended more or less regularly and the knowledge there gained was supplemented by the lessons from his mother, who gave play to both the mother and teacher instincts. And he who can learn the lessons of life and lessons of books through the tenderness of mother-love is twice blessed. The memory of those quiet hours at his mother's side had much to do with moulding the character of the man, and doubtless her sweet influence has gone with him through every important step of his life.

The winter of the year 1872 found the Bryan family on the wild plains of southwest Kansas, which to that time had been unfurrowed by the plow save here and there where some cattle rancher was experimenting in agriculture. Conditions at that time were bad, and like many thousands of other families throughout the land, they felt the pinch of the financial stringency of that memorable period of our history. There was little that could be gotten out of the untried soil with such implements as the pioneers of that day had, but the plains were overrun with thousands of buffaloes, and the Bryans witnessed the killing of hundreds of these animals for their hides which were taken to the nearest railroad station and shipped to the East at a fair price.

The desire to live among civilized people and to pursue the peaceful occupation of farming according to tried methods and under conditions that were more favorable, caused the Bryans to abandon the wild life of southwest Kansas. In 1880, William H. Bryan moved to the farm in Wayne township, Doniphan County (Sec. 33, Township 4, Range 21), where he now resides. It is one of the best farms in Kansas, and if there is such a thing as a contented man it is William H. Bryan. To the writer of this article he said recently:

"I live in the best community on earth and I never expect to leave this locality."

What finer testimonial for one's home community could be given, for here is a man who for thirty-five years has continuously resided on a Doniphan County farm, who has stuck to farming year in and year out and has prospered, who has mingled with his neighbors in the country and the people in the towns, and yet has no kick coming. Surely there is something deep down in the rich soil of Doniphan County that appeals to the best there is in mankind.

The Christian Church in Doniphan.

This church has been built about thirty years, but we were unable to secure any data relative to its construction or organization. Rev. William N. Armstrong has been supplying lately.

Mr. Bryan, however, is not alone in this love of the "Old Home Place." He has a wife and two grown sons who are of the same mind. Mrs. Bryan was Miss Ella Stiarwalt before they were married, Feb. 22, 1881, at the residence of Samuel Anderson in Marion township, by John J. Anderson, then justice of the peace. She was born in Palermo, Marion township, March 20, 1863. Throughout the years of their married life she has been a model farmer's wife and mother, a woman loved by her neighbors for her sympathy and kindness and goodness, and one who has ever been a constant help and inspiration to her family.

Mr. and Mrs. Bryan have two sons, Frank, born on the farm, Dec. 18, 1883, and was married to Miss Allie Ramsey, Dec. 26, 1907. She was born Jan. 15, 1886. The other son, Lawrence, was also born on the Bryan farm on March 14, 1885. He is single and is one of the most accomplished musicians in the county. The sons are leading useful and honorable lives and are an honor to their parents.

The father of these boys of whom we have written is one of the greatest characters of our country. He is an indefatigable worker, an upright man, and has been identified with the interests of Wayne township for thirty-five years. He served as trustee of the township with credit to himself and the taxpayers for eight years. He has also been useful to the community as an active member and worker in the Spring Grove Anti-Horse Thief Association.

DONIPHAN COUNTY IN 1856

An Interesting Map Now in the Hands of a Prominent Kansas Historian.

(Contributed by George J. Remsburg.)

I recently came into possession of an early-day township map of eastern Kansas, made by E. B. Whitman and A. D. Searl, of Lawrence, in 1856. This map is very interesting for geographical comparison and shows how the territory in question has been settled up and developed in the past fifty-seven years. It looks more like the map of a desert than what is now the most densely populated portion of a great commonwealth. From east to west, between the Missouri and Big Blue Rivers, and from north to south, between the northern boundary of the territory and the Kansas River, or in the region now comprising northeastern Kansas, the geographical designations are "few and far between."

In Doniphan County the following towns are marked: Doniphan, Lewiston, Palermo, Wathena, Whitehead, Lawrence No. 2, Smithton, Highland and Iowa Point. In the same county are shown Wolf, Noland's, Peter's, Walnut and Independence creeks. The Iowa Indian reservation is also designated. These constitute the geographical nomenclature of Doniphan County in 1857, as shown by this ancient map.

On April 22, 1882, Mrs. M. H. Smith, wife of A. D. Smith, died in Doniphan, of consumption. She was born in Monroe County, Va., March 27, 1840, was married to A. D. Smith in Mercer County, Va., in 1862, and moved to Kansas in 1868 and lived in the neighborhood of Doniphan the remainder of her life. She left a husband and five children to mourn their loss.

Mrs. Laura Floyd, wife of Charles Floyd, and daughter of W. H. Hudnall, one of the old, noted and respected families and first settlers in Doniphan County, died in Doniphan on Jan. 29, 1882, in the youth of married life, leaving a husband and a little son.

---

A young girl named Missouri Dooley, was shot by a guard in Doniphan, June 7, 1860, who mistook her for a man, she being attired in men's clothes. This was about the time that A. B. Symn's store was robbed by Cleveland's gang of outlaws.

---

Obediah Craig, county treasurer of Troy, who now resides in St. Joseph, Missouri, retired from that office on July 2, 1872, and was succeeded by Mr. Robert Tracy, the celebrated newspaper pioneer, who is also a resident of St. Joseph.

---

The body of a drowned man was found floating in the river at Doniphan, July 25, 1866. It was supposed to be the body of young Huntley, who was drowned at St. Joseph a short time before.

---

In April, 1867, Adam Brenner built an elevator costing $16,000, with a capacity of 40,000 bushels, which was destroyed, together with its contents, by fire in 1872.

---

July 30, 1866, Martha Jane Doherty, daughter of Rachel Doherty, died at Doniphan, aged four years and five months.

---

The land office was removed from Doniphan to Kickapoo, at which place it was re-opened about December 1, 1857.

---

The elevator, which was owned by Cyrus Leland, Jr., in Brenner, was burned in the month of May, 1878.

---

On Aug. 5, 1872, Joseph Price, a cousin of Judge Nathan Price of Troy, was killed at Doniphan.

Doniphan and Highland postoffices, first in the county, were established March 3, 1855.

Spring Grove C. P. A.

Organized in 1905, It Has Frustrated the Plans and Checked Depredations of Horse and Cattle Thieves.

(By William H. Bryan.)

Back in the year of 1900, western Kansas was overrun by horse and cattle thieves. There was no respite from their plunderings, and as each success emboldened them, they began to move the scene of their activities to the east. The farmers in Doniphan County had fears of a spread of this form of robbery by those who believed that the "world owed them a living," and began to consider some means of stopping the depredations, which in many cases had entailed serious losses to the communities visited.

It was during this period that organizations for protective purposes began to spring up all over the state, and the movement culminated in the formation of the Spring Grove Central Protective Association, probably the largest and most efficient of all the similar societies in Doniphan County. The call for a meeting was sent out some time during July of 1905, and on an afternoon in August of the same year, a dozen or more of the representative farmers of the neighborhood, met in the Spring Grove school house No. 54. There were ten men present: L. T. Martin, E. G. Winzer, William Grable, C. A. Martin, Edward Jarrett, E. A. Spencer, O. M. Anderson, T. W. Langan, Hugh Ramsey and myself. The result of this meeting was the Central Protective Association No. 102.

There had been some few petty thefts of stock in the neighborhood, but we were more afraid of the epidemic, which at the time seemed to have spread over the western portion of the state; so we decided to get out and hustle and increase our membership. The organization was advertised, too, you may believe, for we thought by letting all thieves know that it would not do to center their operations in our section, it might have the proper effect; and it did, as was later shown. The residents of Spring Grove district have always advocated community interest. We believed that by banding the farmers together it would be more effective than all the help the officers of the law could give.

How well we have succeeded is now a matter of history. The organization has proved its worth dozens of times in ridding the neighborhood of undesirables and there have been practically no thefts of any consequence. The much heralded spread of thievery in the western part of the state did not reach this far; due, no doubt, in a large measure, to the formation not only of this association, but others of a similar nature in other townships in the county. The organization now is in a flourishing condition and the membership is increasing. The farmers are prompt and willing to attend all meetings and, while the growth has been somewhat slow, it has been regular. We have never been "top heavy," but every one is ready to get out and do his share at the call of the president or captain. The list of officers at present are as follows: President, Edward Winzer; vice-president, Albert Braun; secretary, S. B. Spencer, and treasurer, E. A. Spencer.

Following are the list of members: Edward Winzer, William Grable, C. A. Martin, L. T. Martin, Edward Jarrett, W. H. Bryan, E. A. Spencer, Hugh Ramsey, George Thompson, A. Neumar, Albert J. Braun, O. # Geary City

Once Lively Community Is Only a Memory Now—Located in 1857 By a Company of Pennsylvanians, Who Had Settled in Leavenworth, and Named in Honor of Governor Geary of the Territory of Kansas.

During the latter part of the fifties a number of towns were laid out in Doniphan County along the Missouri River, because of the advantage of the steamboats which plied between St. Louis and Omaha. On March 23, 1856, seven men from the city of Leavenworth surveyed and organized the town of Geary City, which was located in Wayne Township, who were chiefly Pennsylvanians; and named the town in honor of Chas. T. Geary, who was then the territorial governor. There was a bright future for the town, and it was destined, it seemed, to be the metropolis of Doniphan County, but fate was against it. People flocked to the townsite and several lots were sold and real estate men did a thriving business.

There was no time lost in booming up the town, and for a time it looked like a coming metropolis. The first requisite for a boosting campaign—a newspaper—was started with the birth of the town. It was named the Era, and was a lively sheet for those days. It was owned and edited jointly by Joseph Thompson, Earl Marble and Edwin H. Grant. The three editors had a very impartial system of catering to all manner of political thought, and wrote editorials according to the affiliations of each partner. Thompson was a Free State Democrat, and his name appeared as such at the head of the paper. Grant was a Republican and he wrote opinions along that line under his signature, and Marble was a Native American, or "Know Nothing," as such were known at the time, and he turned out editorials in support of his political ideas.

A number of stores quickly sprang up, and Geary City became a rival of Doniphan and other towns for its share of the business. The Chief is under obligations to John E. Pickard, of Winfield, Kansas, for the data concerning the residents of Geary City during its first flush of prosperity. Mr. Pickard was born in Prince Edward Island, British America, November 22, 1842, and located in Geary City in May, 1857. He married Miss Eliza A. Hatcher, December 23, 1867, and the couple have two children living, Mrs. Frank V. Potts of Little Rock, Ark., and Mrs. Paul W. White, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Mr. Pickard was able to recall the following old residents of the place, at the request of the Chief: Potter & Cooper, merchants; Robert J. Porter was afterward elected treasurer of Doniphan County, sheriff and member of the convention that framed the state constitution. He lived and died in Geary City, although some of the old timers insist he died in Wathena.

Thompson, Marble and Grant, the three newspaper editors, afterward scattered. Jacob Richards later moved to Wathena; Richard Moore, Arthur Simmons, Casper Kieffer, Samuel W. Greer, the first superintendent of public instruction, and Jonathan Rigby, were among the earliest residents of Geary City.

J. L. Roundy, father of Collis B. Roundy, was proprietor of a furniture store in 1857, and Cadwallader & McCullough operated a sawmill. James McCahon was the first lawyer at Geary, and he was afterward district judge at Leavenworth, and was considered one of the ablest lawyers in the state.

Ed Greer, son of Samuel W. Greer, was born in Geary City, and later in life became the editor of the Winfield Courier. Franklin & Frick, two of Doniphan County's leading business men for many years, started in business in Geary City.

The first doctor to locate in Geary was Dr. Franklin Grube, a gentleman of great learning, who had traveled extensively in Europe and in Egypt. Robert Flickinger, afterward county treasurer, and his brother Samuel, both captains in Kansas regiments during the war, were old timers in Geary. The boyhood days of T. W. Heatley, later well known throughout the state, were spent in Geary City. George D Johnson was the first blacksmith.

Landlord Skinner conducted a hotel, and M. L. Clutter operated a large store. Other residents were A. W. Patterson, the first carpenter; Thomas H. Franklin, Dr. J. D. Smith, Theodore Kentzler, C. D. Botkin, Nathan Price, Mrs. Nathan Price, who was Miss Sarah E. Pickard, at present residing at Long Beach, California; Mrs. James Pickard, who was Miss Sarah Patterson, now residing at Omaha, Neb.; Mrs. William Patterson, who was Miss Mary Spearman, now residing in Council Bluffs, Iowa; Nicholas Holtz and Edward Hamel, who were drowned on their way to Leavenworth to join the army in 1862.

Jonathan A. Rigby established a flour mill which did a good business for over a year, hauling his flour to market with six yoke of oxen to St. Joseph, Leavenworth and Atchison, and his mill became locally famous and spread the fame of Geary City even more than the fact that the little city was named after Governor Geary, the territorial governor. Isaac Rigby, son of Jonathan A. Rigby, who enjoys an enviable practice as a lawyer at Concordia, Kansas, and the Fifth Congressional District, was born in Geary City on May 13, 1861.

James McCahon, who was the first lawyer at Geary, was afterward elected to the office of district judge, serving with distinction in Leavenworth County; after he retired as judge he became prominent as an attorney in the state.

L. P. King, later state senator from Cowley County, was a young lad in Geary and Michael Forest was one of the old timers. His children reside on a farm near Troy at the present time. The Hatcher family was well represented in Geary in those days. Hiram Hatcher is living at Bonnott's Mills, Mo.; Miss Susan Hatcher became the wife of John Bower, and she also resides at Winfield, Kan.; Miss Jennie Hatcher married Warren Wood, and she also lives in Winfield; Miss Mary Hatcher became Mrs. Harvey Smith, and she is living at Arkansas City, Kan. Henry Hatcher was also a member of the family.

About the only other old timers that can be recalled now are Lanis Warriner, Thomas Spearman and John Spearman, of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Alfred H. Clutter, George Rigby, Mike Morrissey and Patrick Kearns.

After the first two years of its existence, Geary City gradually lost its grip, and its prosperity began to wane. Along about 1874, however, when the railroad, known as the Bob-Tail Road, from Wathena to Doniphan, was built, the town seemed to take on a new lease of life. But the road was soon abandoned and the track taken up. That forever put an end to Geary City's long-cherished aspiration to become a great commercial center.

Fire destroyed the dwelling of Mrs. Mary A. Roundy at Geary City, Wednesday morning, May 1, 1872; all household furniture and wearing apparel being consumed by the flames. Her loss was estimated at $3,000, insured for $1,800. Mrs. Mary A. Roundy was the mother of Collis B. Roundy, one of the merchants at Doniphan, and also of Sidney Roundy, who resides at Old Geary City.

Central Protective Association

Doniphan County Branch of the Grand Lodge Has Three Hundred and One Members Whose Aim Is to Make Thieving a Hazardous Occupation—Primary Object of the Organization Was to Protect the Citizens Against Horse Thieves and Other Marauders on the Live Stock and Property of the Residents.

One Hundred and Seventy-Seven Local Lodges Now Affiliated With the National Grand Lodge of the Association—Organization Has Accomplished Much Good and Is a Deterrent Factor in Extirpating Theft—Depredations of Midnight Raiders Has Become Almost a Memory Through the Activity of the Central Protective Association.

(By William Wilke.)

The Doniphan County branch of the Central Protective Association has been instrumental in making horse stealing or other forms of theft a hazardous undertaking during the past thirty-three years.

It is to the residents in Brenner and vicinity that the credit for the far-reaching influence and success of the Central Protective Association of Doniphan County duly belongs.

Along in the early '80's there was considerable stealing done in the Brenner neighborhood and the residents felt that their protection demanded the formation of some kind of an organization to lessen the alarming number of thefts.

The regularly constituted officers were unable to break up the depredations and it was for the purpose of assisting them and capturing the thieves that the citizens organized the Brenner Lodge of the Central Protective Association.

Although the Lodge is known as No. 1, of Brenner, the organizers did not claim for it the honor of having been the first body of the kind to be formed, but it is believed to have been the first one to come into being in Doniphan County.

The date of the organization of Brenner Lodge is somewhat uncertain, but a number of the original members figured that the lodge came into existence about the year 1882 or 1883. Some of the charter members included Silas Bowerman, George Sinclair, George V. Hagaman and the late Abe Baker. The membership of the new lodge was small at first, but it has steadily grown each year until, on Oct. 1, 1914, there were 103 members enrolled in the roster of the organization.

After the organization of the Brenner Lodge the Central Protective Assocation grew by leaps and bounds, and its influence became a powerful factor for good not only throughout Doniphan County, but in other counties of Kansas and in the adjacent states of Nebraska and Missouri. At first all the lodges acted independently of each other, but finally the various local bodies realized that better results would undoubtedly be obtained by merging into one central organization known as the Grand Lodge. This was accordingly done, each subordinate lodge sending one delegate to the annual meetings of the Grand Lodge, which are held in October each year. In making up the roll of the Grand Lodge membership the numerical strength of the individual local bodies was not taken into consideration, each Lodge being entitled to one delegate regardless of the number of members it contained.

The expenses of each delegate to the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge are defrayed by the home organization, and the only dues payable into the supreme body are $1.50 a year. All the officers serve without pay with the exception of the grand secretary, who receives $50 per annum in order to keep the different subordinate lodges informed of events and to make their work more effective and harmonious.

At each meeting of the Grand Lodge the number of thefts and convictions for the year, together with the value of the property stolen, and recovered, are reported, so that each lodge may learn ciation are rewarded in the capture of thieves and recovery of property. It has been forcibly demonstrated that thieving has been very materially lessened since the organization of the Central Protective Association, and both the general body and its constituent parts are eminently proud of the fact, and take their full share of credit for having a deterrent effect on the continued operations of thieves among their live stock and other valuable property.

At present there are 177 subordinate lodges affiliated with the Grand Lodge of the Central Protective Association, scattered over the states of Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri. The election of officers is held at the Grand Lodge meeting in October each year. The present officials are: J. W. Layton, Weston, Mo., President; W. T. Lytle, Wellsville, Kan., Vice-President; W. H. Smith, Atchison, Kan., Secretary; and Andy Loughrey, of North Kansas City, Mo., Treasurer.

About five years ago there was a proposition taken up by the different lodges in Doniphan County looking toward the closer affiliation of the lodges there into one county central body. After being discussed by the various organizations in the county it was decided to hold a meeting of representatives from each lodge at Troy during the month of February, 1913. Delegates were present from the lodges of Brenner, Wathena, Spring Grove and Troy. J. W. Howard, of Brenner, was elected temporary president, and C. C. Renick was named as temporary secretary. All the indications pointed to the harmonious formation of a Doniphan County censubsequently repudiated the action of its delegates and refused to amalgamate on the ground that they felt strong enough to stand alone. The delegates from the Troy, Brenner and Spring Grove lodges met again at Troy on June 7, 1913, and organized the Doniphan County Protective Association. J. W. Howard, of Brenner, was elected President; Otto Weinberg, Troy, Vice-President; William Wilke, Brenner, Secretary, and E. G. Winzer, Spring Grove, Treasurer. The executive committee is composed of the president of each lodge and the president and secretary of the county lodge. These officials are given full power to act on any and all matters that may come before them between the regular meetings of the county lodge. These gatherings rotate between the three lodges (on the third Saturday of April and October each year), and are made up of eight delegates from each lodge.

At the last meeting of the Doniphan County Protective Association, the secretary announced that the combined membership totaled 301. As the expenses incurred in holding meetings are scarcely anything, the members of the county body are assessed 10 cents each per year. The Doniphan County Protective Association has the following standing rewards for the arrest and conviction of any person or persons charged with the following offenses against the person or property of any member of the Association:

$100 for any horse, mule or automobile thief or thieves.

$25 for any person or persons committing any other depredations constituting a public offense.

The rewards are met by per capita assessments on each of the 301 members. So far one reward of $100 has been paid by county association for the capture and conviction of a horsethief. The members feel that it was money well spent and the small assessment levied to meet that sum was more than offset by the good that was accomplished. The Doniphan County Protective Association is composed of a determined body of good citizens, and since they became active as a united body, all kinds of theft has been noticeably on the decline throughout the county.

The Central Protective Association was first organized in Clay County, Missouri, across the river from Kansas City, in 1874. It was in reality an outgrowth of the Anti-Horse Thief Association, the first lodge of which there is any record in existence, having been organized at the Highland schoolhouse, Jefferson township, Clark County, Missouri, about the year 1854. Major David McKee, lived in the vicinity at the time and had been suffering serious loss in live stock through the depredations of an organized gang of horse thieves which operated in Iowa, Illinois and Missouri. The Anti-Horse Thief Association dragged along until after the war, when new life was infused into it through the activity of thieves who were plying their trade more openly than before. In fact, the thieves were so bold during the first two years of the war that a few individual lodges were organized throughout Clark and adjoining counties, and four of them met in Aetna, Mo., on Oct. 23, 1863, when a grand lodge organization was perfected with Major McKee as first president, and Jacob S. Bennington, the first secretary. From that modest beginning the Anti-Horse Thief Association has grown to a present membership 50,000, with lodges in eight states.

The aims and objects of the Central Protective Association are identical in both spirit and letter with the Anti-Horse Thief Association, and both organizations work in complete harmony, beside lending valuable cooperation should the occasion arise. One of the oldest living members of the organizers of the Central Protective Association is Andy Loughrey, of North Kansas City, Mo., who is also present treasurer of the grand lodge, and has served as president a great many years.

The first lodge of the Central Protective Association of Atchison County, Kansas, was organized more than thirty years ago. W. H. Smith, of Atchison, for twenty-eight years secretary of the grand lodge, is one of the oldest members of the association in Kansas, having been identified with it since the beginning. There are over fifteen hundred members in Atchison County, and they are gradually increasing. Every place a lodge of the Central Protective Association is in existence, the farmers and the business men have been benefited in a great many ways. The association has been a terror to criminals and consequently there has been a noticeable reduction in the number of thefts. Criminal prosecutions are fewer, thus saving the county officials considerable in time and expense to the people. The next annual meeting of the Central Protective Association Grand Lodge will be held at Atchison, Kan., Oct. 12, 1915.

The following is the list of the members of the Central Protective Association of Brenner:

John Newton Armstrong

He Is One of the Oldest Native Born Citizens of This Section of Kansas, Has Reared a Large Family of Children and Is the Owner of a Fine Farm Known as the Old Katner Place Near Oak Grove School.

John Newton Armstrong has the honor of being one of the few children who were born in Doniphan County the year Kansas was admitted to the Union as a state, and he is one of the few survivors of that period of Kansas before the Civil War.

Mr. Armstrong was born on a farm near Severance, November 22, 1861. His father was William Armstrong, who was born in Kentucky March 11, 1831, and his mother was Martha Ellen Ridgeway, born February 3, 1836, in Callaway County, Missouri. The parents came to Doniphan County in the spring of 1861, and settled on a farm near Severance. They were hard working, sturdy pioners who helped in those early times to give Kansas a good start toward the making of one of the best states in the Union. Mrs. Armstrong died August 5, 1901. Her husband, and the father of the subject of this sketch, is still living at the age of eighty-four years, with his son Will Armstrong, in Atchison County.

John Newton Armstrong was reared in Doniphan County and educated in the public schools near Doniphan and Severance during the period of early development of Kansas after the Civil War. In 1873, when he was a half-grown boy, he moved to Andrew, Callaway County, Missouri, where he lived for ten years, returning to Kansas in 1883, a full-grown young man.

He married Miss Permelia S. Crews, December 24, 1884, in Callaway County, Missouri, the Rev. Mr. John Henry Berry, pastor of the Missionary Baptist Church, officiating. They resided in Doniphan County until 1888, when they moved to Jasper County, Missouri. There they remained fifteen years, engaging in farming and rearing a large family of children.

For many years this Kansan had been alternating between Kansas and Missouri, but his coming to Kansas from Jasper County, Missouri, November 4, 1901, was to be his last move. He has found no soil in all of his travels to equal that of Doniphan County, and it was with a desire to settle down for the rest of his life on a Kansas farm that led him to purchase the old Katner farm, across the road from the Oak Gorve school house. It was a good farm then, though the price he paid for the eighty acres was only $3,000. It is a good farm today and is worth $12,000 of any man's money.

The farm is one-half mile north of Doniphan station on the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, and has all the facilities needed for the marketing of its products. It has been improved by Mr. Armstrong in the fourteen years he has owned it and is in a fine state of cultivation. Mr. Armstrong, with his sons at home, is farming it with good results. It has always, since it was first brought under the plow, been a good producer of crops, and under the ownership of Mr. Armstrong it has yielded more than a sufficient income to support the family.

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are the parents of three sons and eight daughters, all living except one daughter who died in infancy. Four of the children were born in Doniphan County and seven in Jasper County, Missouri. The children are: Sarah Ann, born November 5, 1885, in Doniphan County; Sarah was married to Charles Spencer November 26, 1908, and is the mother of two children, Charles Armstrong Spencer, born January 6, 1911, and James Russell Spencer, born September 13, 1914. William Newton, born June 16, 1897, in Doniphan County. He married Miss Nellie Dickerson March 20, 1913, and they have one child, Donald, born January 10, 1914. Martha Ellen, who is employed at the Orphan's Home in Atchison, born March 24, 1889, in Jasper County, Missouri. Eliza Eveline, who is also employed at the Orphan's Home in Atchison, born May 15, 1891, in Jasper County, Missouri. Elizabeth, born May 24, 1893, in Jasper County, Missouri. Emily Cormel, born March 27, 1895, in Jasper County, Missouri, and died June 14, 1896. Permelia Samuel, born March 8, 1897, in Jasper County, Missouri. John Nicholas, born March 14, 1899, in Jasper County, Missouri. Lorene Althea, born February 23, 1901, in Jasper County, Missouri. Estella Pearl, born December 20, 1902, the first child born to them after their return to Doniphan County on the home place. James Robert, born August 19, 1906, on the home place in Doniphan County.

The Armstrong family is one of the largest families in Doniphan County. All of the children have been, or are being reared on the farm to be industrious men and good housekeepers. They are receiving a good education, much better, indeed, than their parents were able to receive in their younger days in Kansas and Missouri. They are an honor to the parents, are favorably known in the community in which they reside, and are the pride of their parents. They have a prominent part in the social and school affairs of the neighborhood and are attendants at the Sunday school.

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are plain country folks and are honored by their neighbors and acquaintances for their honesty and frugality. They have made many sacrifices for their children and rejoice in the fact that all give promise of making honorable men and women who will be a credit to the community in which they live and a blessing to their parents. They believe in education and good schools and churches, as well as in the rearing of their children in the way they should be reared.

Mr. Armstrong devotes his energies to the farm and now that he is getting along in years he is receiving the splendid help of his sons in the farm work. He has advanced ideas of farming and believes that any eighty acres in rich Doniphan County land, properly managed and cultivated, will bring returns sufficient for the support of a large family. He has succeeded, in fact, far beyond his expectations. Besides he has earned for himself the name of being a good farmer and a good provider for his family, and that is something for a man to be proud of.

Mr. Armstrong is one of Doniphan County's staunch citizens and as such the people delight to honor him.

John N. Armstrong and family, who reside on the Katner Farm, in Wayne Township, across from 33 school house..

FIRST REAPER AND BINDER

Newspaper Advertisement Brought the First Machine to Cut and Bind Wheat to Kansas—Andy Low, Who Had Been Receiver of the Land Office in Doniphan, Bought the Apparatus on the Suggestion of His Atchison Neighbor, Mr. J. A. Rohr.

(By George J. Remsberg.)

The distinction of having been instrumental in bringing the first reaper and binder to Doniphan County and this part of the Western country, has years ago been conceded to J. A. Rohr, one of the early settlers who came here in the late 50's.

The incident took place in 1863 and was primarily due to newspaper advertising. It seems that a Chicago concern had about that time been placing before the people the advantages of using machinery in cutting and binding wheat, all in the same operation. The contrivance was a new invention and had only recently been put upon the market, but the farmers of the country could not comprehend how any piece of machinery could do at the same time what required the labor of two sets of farm hands to accomplish.

Mr. Low was then a resident of Atchison, as the land office had been removed from Doniphan to that town. He had over a hundred acres in wheat which had ripened early and there were no harvest hands in sight to cut it down. He was discussing the situation with Mr. Rohr, one evening, and the latter suggested a remedy in this wise:

"I have been reading in the newspaper that there is a machine on the market which will cut and bind all your wheat faster than a jack rabbit can run. It can do the work of fifty men all at once, and do it better. Why don't you get one of them? They don't cost much and might save a lot."

Receiver Low jumped to the telegraph office and ordered one of the new-fangled machines, or contraptions as he called it at the time. He had been impressed with Neighbor Rohr's description of the thing and instructions were given to have it shipped by express.

When the machine arrived in Atchison it was laid down at a total cost of $425. When the people of the town and the farmers from the surrounding country heard that the reaper was on the way they flocked to the landing to see what the infernal thing looked like. Many of them had never heard of such an apparatus and they thought the whole affair was a hoax.

Mr. Low had his reaper and binder taken to his wheat field and the mystified farmers followed, shaking their heads in doubt. They figured out that there were too many wheels and cranks and levers and other parts to the machine for it to be of any use. But their surprise came all of a sudden.

An agent of the manufacturers came along and he was also an expert mechanic. No sooner had he set up the machine and turned it loose on the field of golden grain than its adaptability for the work became apparent. So nicely and economically did the reaper and binder do the work that the assembled farmers were almost struck dumb.

That was a great day in the town of Doniphan. Mr. Low's farm was located right near, and thither the crowd repaired to allay their excited feelings. This was the first reaper and binder ever brought to Kansas and proved to be the salvation of the farmers of that day. The rush of orders which the agent carried away with him was wonderful, but to this day there is not a Kansas farmer who does not bless the day that the first reaper and binder came to the state.

Of course there have been wonderful improvements in farm machinery since that time, as the first machine was manipulated with horse power, and it is the fashion now for most every farmer to have his traction engine propel the latest improved harvester over his immense wheat fields.

Marion Township

MARION TOWNSHIP

Created in 1856 From Territory Taken From Washington and Wayne Townships—Had Many Prominent Doniphan County Men Among the Old Settlers.

During the early years of settlement in what is now Doniphan County there was a prevailing sentiment to lay out townsites on every good spot along the river that looked like it might eventually grow up into a town.

Townsites were pretty thickly mapped out in both Wayne and Washington Townships in 1856 and then the proposition was advanced to clip a portion of territory from both of these bailiwicks and convert it into Marion Township.

The townsite promoters were thick and as busy as bees, and there was little opposition to the creation of Marion Township. The town of Palermo had already been planned and with the creation of the new township there was a fresh town boom started.

Among the first settlers in the territory which became Marion residents were Joseph Randolph, F. M. Mahan, John M. Curtis, D. White, the Andersons, William H. Deckert, Robert Myers, John Hays, John Stiarwalt, Robert Kimber, Charles B. Wakeman and E. King, father of L. P. King, who later became state senator from Cowley County.

The township was settled in a fairly rapid manner, but many of the people later moved away to seek what they considered more advantageous locations. The land later proved to be as fertile as any in the county and in after years some of the original settlers moved back when luck failed them elsewhere.

The Palermo townsite proposition was soon under full blast with John Stiarwalt acting as secretary of the town company. For two years Marion Township was a veritable Mecca for new settlers, but when the decline of Palermo set in in 1858 a lot of them pulled up stakes and quit for fresh fields and pastures new.

The land in Marion Township did not appear as productive to the early settlers as it does to the residents of the present day, few of whom would exchange their holdings for any in the state. The inhabitants of the township are now prosperous and satisfied, and all of the original settlers who remained on the land never regretted their decision to stay till the finish.

This township received its name from Gen. Francis Marion of Revolutionary fame. It was organized on the 21st day of October, 1856, and its boundaries fixed as follows: Commencing at the southwest corner of Washington Township, as then established, thence south on range line, between Ranges 21 and 22, to the Missouri River; thence up the said river to the south line of Washington Township; thence west along said line to place of beginning.

E. King was the first constable and F. M. Mahan the first justice of the peace appointed.

The first election in the township was held on the third Monday in June, 1857, at the Palermo Hotel, in the city of Palermo.

On the 21st day of June, 1859, a change was made and the present boundaries fixed as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of Section 36, Town 3, Range 21; thence east three miles, thence south to the Missouri River, thence south with said river to the southwest corner of Section 24, Town 4, Range 21; thence north one mile; thence west one mile; thence north to place of beginning.

Marion Township is the smallest township in the county, and contains about sixteen square miles (fractional), or 10,240 acres (fractional).

The surface of the township is exceedingly rough, after leaving the Missouri River "bottom." This bottom land along the river is very rich and is from one-half to one mile in width.

The township is well watered by the following streams: Walnut Creek, heads in the center of the township, south River at Palermo; Cadue's Creek heads from numerous springs, flows south, and empties into the Missouri River, on George Sander's place; Buffalo Creek heads in the northwestern part of the township, flows southwest and empties into the Missouri River; Brush Creek heads in the northwestern part of the township, flows south and empties into the Missouri River in Wayne Township.

The early history of this township is very meager. Peter Cadue was probably the first white man that located in the township, or in this part of the county. He came as an Indian interpreter to the Kickapoo tribe some time in 1848-49, and settled a few miles north of Geary City. In a treaty with the Indians, among other considerations, Cadue was given a tract of land not exceeding 640 acres, to be located at any point on the "reserve." He located his grant as follows: The northwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the south half of the northwest quarter and the south half of Section 19, Town 4, Range 22, and the north half of the northeast and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 30, Town 4, Range 22; also the east half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 30, Town 4, Range 22. Mr. Cadue, after trying to establish a town on his land which he called Petersburg, left for Brown County, where he met his death by falling from his horse, a few years later.

The following are those who settled and took up claims in 1854-55: Joseph Randolph, D. White, L. Fay, S. Anderson, William Fagg, Robert Myers, John Hays, D. Smith, William Chaplin, N. Holmes, W. Mowery and others.

Neither records nor tradition show anything in regard to the first marriage in the township.

About the first birth in the town-

William Chapman, in the fall of 1855. Mr. Chapman was then living on the southeast quarter of Section 17, Town 4, Range 22, but said quarter has since been claimed and gathered in as its own by the Missouri River.

One of the first deaths in the township was that of a Mr. Gains, who died some time in 1854, in a little log house located on W. Deckard's place. His remains were taken to Missouri for interment.

In the spring of 1857, an inquest was held over the body of a German, name unknown, by Robert Krinber, then a justice of the peace. The body was found on Mr. Leaver's place. Not being able to find any serious indications as to how the man came to his death, the jury rendered the verdict, "Death from exposure, superinduced by disease of the throat."

The first school taught was at the residence of S. Anderson, in the spring of 1855, by Frank Kean. The school was continued but a short time, only about six weeks.

A subscription school was taught by Miss Sarah White, in 1856, in a little log schoolhouse, 16 by 18 feet, built by the neighborhood.

Religious services were held shortly afterward at the same place by Rev. B. F. Bowman, of the Methodist denomination.

The principal products of the township are wheat, corn, oats and other small grains. It is said that the soil is too rich to raise fruit to any great extent. The average yield of wheat on the Missouri River bottoms is from twenty to twenty-five bushels per acre. High as thirty-six and one-half bushels per acre have been raised.

Evangelical Lutheran Church

Founded in 1884, It Has Had Interesting and Varied Career of Usefulness.

Back in 1884 two enterprising farmers of Marion township, who had the interest of the community at heart, and who also had the faith and esteem of their neighbors, started a move for the erection of a Lutheran church. They had little to work with and the farmers of the countryside had been holding their meetings every Sunday in the school house. They wanted a preacher, however, and so early in the year mentioned started out to get one. That was the beginning of what is now the prosperous and flourishing Evangelical Lutheran church of Marion township.

Located about eight miles southeast of Troy and five miles southwest of Wathena, it has one of the best, if not the best, locations in Doniphan County, and the well kept buildings and spacious grounds are sufficient evidence to show that the members have an inherent pride in their church property. The beginning of what is now a large congregation was small and unpretentious. For years, the men and women of the neighborhood had gathered either at the home of one of the members or at the school house.

It was in the early part of the year mentioned that the two men, August Kichnhoff and John Scholz, determined to do something. They went to Atchison, as a committee, to ascertain if the Rev. Mr. Zschoche would come and preach for them. The Rev. Mr. Zschoche, who was one of the pioneers of his denomination, readily gave his promise. For the next two years he came regularly once a month, instructing the young men and women on Saturday and preaching the following Sunday. When he left Atchison, however, the congregation was again without a pastor for a short time; but they finally secured the services of the Rev. Mr. Grosse, who was located in St. Joseph, Mo., as his predecessor.

The services were extraordinarily well attended and the congregation kept increasing in size so that the Rev. Mr. Grosse encouraged the members to build a church. The ground on which it and the parsonage now stand was sold to the trustees by Fred Snike, and the plans and specifications were made by A. J. Profe of Corning, Missouri. The congregation then selected a building committee, comprised of W. F. Kiehnhoff, Ludwig Nitz, August Ruhuke, Albert Benitz and Frank Loroff. The contract was awarded to George H. Schaefer of Atchison, Kansas. The building committee purchased all the materials that went into the structure (many of them donating parts of it), and in the year 1894 the edifice was completed and dedicated. The cost was approximately $2,400.

After the first Sunday's services a campaign was started to take up a small debt that had been incurred; and in a very short time this was paid off. In the early spring of 1895, there was enough on hand to erect a small but handsome parsonage, which was done. It was then decided to call a regular pastor. The congregation had assumed large proportions and the community was prosperous enough to have a preacher of their own. Consequently, in the summer of 1895, the Rev. Mr. M. Senne was selected. The Rev. Mr. Senne at the time was but twenty-two years of age. He was just out of divinity school and brought with him to the field all of his fresh and unbounded enthusiasm.

The Rev. Mr. Senne was born Jan. 8, 1873, and received his education at Concordia Seminary in St. Louis. He was one of the youngest graduates in the history of that institution. For nearly four years the Rev. Mr. Senne labored among his flock, and during his occupation of the pulpit the church passed through the greatest period of prosperity in its history. Services were held twice each Sunday, and a school was established in November of his first year. It had an initial attendance of thirty-nine children. Just previous to his leaving, the Rev. Mr. Senne was married to Miss Minnie Schaefer of Atchison. He went from there to Kansas City, Kansas, and then went to Argentine. At the present time he is the pastor of a fine church in Lincolnville, Kansas.

The Rev. Mr. Senne's successor was the Rev. Mr. H. D. Wagner. He was installed on Feb. 11, 1900, and left after giving more than four years of active, intelligent service, not only to his church, but to the community. He kept up the interest in the parochial school founded by his predecessor and also instituted many new phases of church work. Under his pastorate there was a considerable sum of money raised for the church treasury. The Rev. and Mrs. M. Senne, formerly of the Marion Township Lutheran Church.

Rev. Mr. Wagner not only was a conscientious Godly worker, but he made for himself a place in the hearts of his congregation—a place that can never be left vacant. At present he is in White City, Kansas.

In 1905, the Rev. Mr. Albert Roglitz was called to the pulpit, coming from Great Bend, Kansas; but, because of ill health, he was forced to resign in 1906. After farming for two years he felt strong enough to accept a call to the congregation at Jensen, Nebraska, and it was with profound regret that his former friends and acquaintances heard of his death on Jan. 15, 1914. His widow is now living in Beatrice, Nebraska, and to her all who knew the Rev. Mr. Roglitz extend their heartfelt sympathy.

The next minister was the Rev. Mr. J. H. Schaefer, who served from 1906 until 1910. At the end of that period he accepted a call to Missouri, and from there went to Shelton, Nebraska, where he at present is stationed in a fine and thriving church. He preached his farewell sermon on the same day that he installed his successor, the Rev. Mr. Theodore Hoemann, from Hiawatha, Kansas. The latter was another of the many able men to occupy the historic old pulpit. He also gave of his best labors, but the country was rapidly being populated; many of his congregation moved and he worked under the greatest of difficulties. As a minister he was beloved and esteemed by all who had the pleasure and the privilege of hearing him. On April 5, 1915, he delivered his last sermon and went to Falls City, Nebraska, where he has taken charge of a larger church.

At the present time, the congregation is without a regular pastor. However, the Rev. Mr. O. Rothe from St. Joseph, who was called, but did not accept, conducts services there on the afternoon of every other Sunday. The parochial school is still maintained and the common branches of knowledge are taught. In the year 1909 a fine and substantial school building was erected, at the cost of $1,200, and was dedicated that fall, the members of the congregation celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the church at the same time. As stated, the property presents a very fine appearance and is free from all incumbrances. The congregation has a most promising future as there are more young people in the immediate vicinity than ever before. In 1911 a Young Peoples' Society was started and it has flourished ever since. An annual picnic is one of its features and they always are enjoyable affairs. Also a number of entertainments are given each year. It may be stated finally, that in the last few years, most successful work has been done in the parochial school classes. The future of the Evangelical Lutheran church is brighter today than at any time in its history.

The present minister, the Rev. Mr. Louis Theodore Ernest, was installed as minister Sunday, May 30, 1915, and is popular with his parishers and the the entire community.

THE REV. LOUIS THEODORE ERNEST

The New Pastor of the German Evangelicial Church of Marion Township Is a Young Theologian Who Is Doing a Noble Work in That Community for Spiritual Moral, Social and Industrial Uplift of the People.

To such splendid men and servants of the Master as the Rev. Mr. Louis Theodore Ernest, pastor of the German Evangelical church of Marion township, the people of Doniphan County owe a debt that cannot be paid in this world's goods and chattles. It is not any exaggeration or misstatement of facts to say that Doniphan County owes much of its present great wealth and unmeasured prosperity, as well as its remarkable development from a primitive state to its now condition of wonderful productiveness, to the high plane of civilization to which its citizenship has been raised through the patient labor of those servants of the Lord who have come this way preaching the Word and holding up the cross of Christ. In this work-aday world where men too often are measured by their gains rather than by their true worth, people are too apt to overlook the value to their community's activities of the ministers of the Gospel, those brave torch bearers who are engaged in God's work in the world of men along the track of human progress, the improvement of man physically, materially, mentally, morally, spiritually. Well might we ask, who can measure the influence of such men in any community? Or, who can say that a people may become highly civilized and prosperous and shut these messengers of God out of their lives?

The Rev. Mr. Louis Theodore Ernest came from a family of ministers of the Gospel, and men of German descent, well educated and possessing right ideas of living. This young minister of whom we write, was born Dec. 26, 1884, on a farm near Gittings, Texas. His father was the Rev. Mr. Louis Ernest, who had seen much service in the ministry and whose home now is at Blue Hill, Nebraska. The mother whose influence counted much in the shaping of the career of the young Louis Theodore Ernest, died Jan. 3, 1903, at Gittings. The father in 1905 married a second time, choosing Miss Mary Kasper of Serbin, Tex., as his wife.

The brothers and sisters of Louis Theodore Ernest, are: Oscar Henry, born Feb. 26, 1882; Walter Johnson, born June 3, 1886; David, born Dec. 15, 1891; Paul, born July 24, 1895; Alma, born Aug. 30, 1881, and now the wife of the Rev. Mr. Emil Deffner; Freda Louise, born Feb. 14, 1889, now the wife of the Rev. Mr. Fred Vangert of Crawford, Nebraska; Miss Ella, born April 10, 1898, and educated at Wnifield, Kansas, and in Concordia Seminary. These sons and daughters of the Rev. Mr. Louis Ernest, are all well-to-do and are living lives of usefulness and honor, and all are putting into daily practice those religious teachings of their parents whom they delight to honor.

The Rev. Mr. Theodore Ernest early in life decided to follow in the footsteps of his father by entering the ministry. He received a good education, such as fitted him admirably for his life work and, thus equipped and fairly started on his career as a minister, he took unto himself a wife. She was Miss Odelia Louise Aufdekamp, who was born March 10, 1888, at Kennesaw, Nebraska, and educated in the parochial school at that place. The wedding took place at her home June 11, 1913, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Arthur Walk. Mrs. Ernest is a woman of intelligence and charming personality, and she is proving to be a valuable co-worker with her husband in his ministerial work, contributing much of her talent and influence toward his success.

The ministerial career of the Rev. Mr. Louis Theodore Ernest began with his first sermon, which was delivered at Imperial, Nebraska, in October, 1909. The young minister was then in his twenty-fifth year and with his schooling and home training under his father he was well equipped to present a logical and pleasing discourse. He was so well liked by his congregation that he was obliged to remain in the church at Imperial three years, resigning the pastorate of that church in October, 1912. His next call was to the pastorate of the church at McCook, Nebraska, where he remained until May, 1915, preaching to an intelligent and appreciative congregation.

The move which brought this minister to Doniphan County was made in the month of May of the present year. He landed at Wathena with his young wife on May 28, 1915, shipping his household goods to that station, and went directly to the German Evangelical church of Marion township, where two days later—it was Memorial Sunday—he began his pastorate by preaching one of his ablest discourses.

Although he is only thirty-one years of age, The Rev. Mr. Louis Theodore Ernest already has achieved a good measure of success in his chosen field. So successful indeed has he been, and so popular with his parishioners, that we can safely predict a long and brilliant career for him in the ministry. He has been pastor of the church in Marion township less than one-half a year, yet he has won the reverence and the true friendship of the people of that part of Doniphan County both in and out of the church; while Mrs. Ernest has ingratiated herself into the hearts of the women and the young people as a noble example of Christian womanhood and co-worker with her husband in the Lord's vineyard.

John Rennick, Who Operates a Blacksmith Shop Thirteen Miles Southeast of Troy, Has an Accumulaton of Old Iron Collected During the Last Twenty-Five Years—An Expert Mechanic, and Can Build Almost Anything in the Machinery Line.

The greatest collection of old iron to be found in Doniphan County is owned by John Rennick, who operates a blacksmith shop and repair establishment thirteen miles southeast of Troy.

Mr. Rennick estimates that he has at least thirty carloads of junk on his premises which represents the accumuluation of iron scarps during twenty-five years' active business.

The junk comprises every manner of scrap iron conceivable, and it is safe to state that some of these days it will be sold for a large sum of money. It is valuable for recasting and remoulding, and just now there are numerous foundries in different parts of the country on the market for such a collection as Mr. Rennick owns.

The great ability of Mr. Rennick as an expert mechanic is marvelous to his friends. He can make almost anything out of iron or steel and is known to have personally made a bicycle and a gasoline launch in his own shop without any outside assistance whatever.

Mr. Rennick is an exceedingly industrious man, and his life has not been spent in vain. He has accumulated enough of prosperity to care for and educate his large family. His home is a happy one and the surroundings bear every outward sign of thrift and economy.

Charles C. Renick

One of the Best All-Around Farmers in the County, and Also One of the Busiest and Most Useful Citizens—Agent for Fire, Lightning and Wind Insurance—Clerk of Marion Township and Secretary of the Central Protective Association.

In almost every well regulated community in Kansas is to be found a man who devotes a good part of his time and talent for the general good of his community, often without any other remuneration than the hearty thanks of an appreciative people. Such a man is indispensable to a farming community like that which is in Marion township, Doniphan County; and such a man is Charles C. Renick, whose home is six and three-fourths miles south of Wathena. Mr. Renick is considered one of the best all-round farmers in these parts. He is clerk of the township in which he resides, is secretary of the Central Protective Association No. 18, is a member of the Baptist church of long standing, and also writes insurance for several companies insuring property against loss or damage from fire, lightning and wind. Strictly speaking, Mr. Renick is a very, very busy man in a very busy and prosperous community.

Charles C. Renick, it should be understood, is a native of Doniphan County, while his parents, John and Lena Renick, were natives of Germany. The parents came to America at an early day and settled in Doniphan County on the farm six and three-fourths miles south of Wathena, where Charles C. was born April 12, 1868. The father brought with him from Germany many good practical ideas which he did not hesitate to put into use on the farm which he entered in Doniphan County. This knowledge, coupled with that which he had gained through experience and study of the Kansas soil, made the elder Mr. Renick one of the most successful men engaged in the business of farming. His field crops were always as good or better than any others in the neighborhood. His livestock was always neat and healthy, and his orchard was to be found in good condition and bearing good crops of the best of fruits. The father died December 30, 1885, leaving the farm in charge of his son, Charles, and also leaving the boy a rich legacy in the splendid training he had received on the home farm. The mother is still living on the farm.

Charles C. Renick, growing up in Doniphan County, was educated in the rural schools. He was a steady, studious young man who had no particular desire for adventure in the cities. He loved the farm and he stuck to it as the best of all occupations and the one which he knew would bring the largest returns in wealth and health and happiness from the outlay of effort. It is not surprising, therefore, that he remained on the farm and came to be recognized as good a farmer as was his father. It is surprising, however, that he did not take unto himself a wife, for he is still a single man and could have been the pride and joy of a good wife.

Mr. Renick has a system of farming which he thinks is essential to success. He farms 217 acres and is what is generally known as a diversified farmer and stock raiser. He keeps his farm in the best of condition and his products find ready sale wherever they are offered because of their quality. He raises enough livestock to suit his yield of food stuffs for livestock and invariably comes out ahead of the game at the end of each year, his margin of profit being larger than that of most men who farm or raise livestock in a haphazard way without regard to system. He is a representative of the highest class of farmers for which this part of Kansas is famous.

Mr. Renick will never permit himself to be idle. He always finds plenty to do in a community like this one. He takes an interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community. This has made him one of our most popular men. Interest in the proper management of the affairs of the township won for him election as clerk of the township board, and he is giving good and efficient service on the board.

Always solicitous for the welfare and protection of others, Mr. Renick was chosen as the secretary of the Central Protective Association No. 18, in which position he has rendered valuable service in helping to protect the farmers from losses by theft. Also a member of the Baptist church for a period of twenty years, he has been useful in that organiaztion for the religious and spiritual welfare and the general moral uplift.

The wide acquaintance and popularity of Mr. Renick caused him to be useful to his community in a business way. He took the agency for the Doniphan County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, a home concern, and also became the agent for the Farmers' Alliance Insurance Company of McPherson, Kansas. In these positions he has written many thousands of dollars of insurance, for farmers, insuring their property and crops against loss or damage by fire, lightning and wind, the farmers believing in having their insurance in reliable companies authorized under the Kansas laws and written by an agent in whom they have confidence.

Mr. Renick is entitled to much credit for his success as a farmer and business man, as well as a thoroughly dependable and accommodating citizen. He enjoys the confidence and esteem of all of the people, which is the best recommendation a man can have.

Marion Township Baptist Church

Marion Township Baptist Church, five miles southwest of Wathena in Marion Township of Doniphan County, and one-half mile east of H. N. Winn's farm, was built in 1868, but the organization of the church dates back to the year 1860, and its history has been inseparably interwoven with that of the community and of the state of Kansas.

The charter members of this old church when it was organized in 1860, were: Mr. and Mrs. P. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Sharp, Mr. and Mrs. William Ganes, Miss Anna Keeton, Mrs. Marian Livermore, John Renick, Lena Renick. Of these ten original charter members of the church, Mrs. Lena Renick is the

The pioneer preacher, the Rev. David Wadell, who was a celebrated Baptist minister of his day, and the father of Mrs. Richard Ballard of Wayne Township, was the first pastor of this old Baptist church. He served as pastor from the time of the organization in 1860 until some time in the year 1878. During his pastorate he was instrumental in the erection of the house of worship for the congregation in 1868. The building cost about $900 at the time of its erection. Many of the members donated work on the building and the dimension timbers were all native lumber. It was a substantially built little church and it has served the needs of the congregation in that prosperous farming community for many years.

The Rev. David Wadell, the first pastor, who served eighteen years as pastor, consecutively, was a man of strong character and personality, a sound theologian and a good preacher. During the year 1878, the Reverend Mr. Kalfe came to serve as minister for one year. Then in 1879 the Rev. David Wadell returned and served until April 1, 1884. Thus it may be said that Mr. Wadell was pastor of the church for twenty-four years, excepting for a brief season of rest.

After the close of Mr. Wadell's second pastorate, the ministers who served this congregation were:

The Rev. A. W. Laningham, May 1, 1884, to May 1, 1885.

The Rev. George Cloud, 1886.

The Rev. C. J. Swank, 1887 and 1888.

The congregation was without a pastor in 1889.

The Rev. J. C. Clark, May 1, 1890, to May 1, 1892.

The congregation was without a pastor during 1893.

The Rev. W. H. Leyburn, April 7, 1894, to April 3, 1895.

The Rev. G. Stegman, April 9, 1895, to April 1, 1896.

The congregation was without a pastor in 1897.

Marion Township Baptist Church, about five miles southwest of Wathena.

The Rev. S. T. Magill, March 6, 1898, to April 1, 1903.

The Rev. D. F. Cuthbertson, April 1, 1903, to March 10, 1905.

The Rev. S. T. Magill, second pastorate, March 10, 1905, to March 20, 1906.

The Rev. William C. Cook, 1906 to 1909.

The Rev. G. W. Taylor, 1909 to 1912.

The Rev. A. A. Harvey, 1912 to 1913.

The Rev. W. O. Peterson, 1913 to 1915.

The Rev. J. N. Boling, 1915, the present pastor.

The present membership of this church is sixty-seven and the enrollment in the Sunday school, composed of all denominations living contiguous to the church, is about sixty. The officials of the church at the present time are: The Rev. J. N. Bowling, pastor; Charles C. Renick, clerk; Ella Cordonier, treasurer; John Renick and J. R. Thompson, deacons; Viola Cordonier, pianist. The officers of the Sunday school are: Alex Gilbert, superintendent; Ivan Cordonier, assistant superintendent; Cecil Gutzman, treasurer; Josie Thompson, pianist; Ruth Thompson, secretary.

The little old church, standing out there in Wayne Township, has been a blessing to the lives of the people of that peaceful farming community for more than one-half century, organized as it was before Kansas became a state. It will still continue to fulfill its mission as a house of worship for the people of that community and as a place for holding Sunday school for the children to learn the lessons from the life of the Savior. It has ministered unto the spiritual needs of the people, in times of sorrow and affliction and in times of joy and thanksgiving; it has brought the light of salvation to darkened sin-sick souls, and it has brought joy and peace and sweet repose for many.

The following is a list of members of Marion Township Baptist Church: Lena Renick, C. C. Renick, John Renick, Henry Renick, Ella Cordonier, Joe Cordonier, J. R. Thompson, Mrs. J. R. The old town of Palermo enjoys the distinction of having made the first shipment of flour out of Kansas territory. The shipment was made in September, 1858, on the steamer "Minnehaha," and consisted of 100 sacks. It was manufactured at the mill of Mahan & Kimber at Palermo, from wheat raised in Kansas territory. It was consigned to Mahan & Kimber's agent, Culver Hiatt, at St. Joseph. Regular consignments were made by this firm to Hiatt thereafter.

The Son of One of the Leaders of the French Colony that Settled in Doniphan County in the Territorial Period, and a Native of Kansas, He Is Showing His Appreciation of the Advantages of American Citizenship By His Example of Public Spirit and Leadership.

France is the birthplace of many of our early day citizens whose descendants are now numbered among our best and most public-spirited people. In fact the little French Colony that settled in Doniphan County in the summer of 1855, is responsible for a large number of industrious and prosperous farmers, fruit growers and business men who constitute a large element of our substantial citizenship of today. These e arly settlers, and among them Xovia Cordonier, were attracted here by the similarity of the soil, the scenic beauty and the topography of the country to their native land. They had heard of the wonders of this country from the stories that had been carried back to France by our first American merchants, the traders among the Indians, dating back even to the time long before the United States acquired the Louisiana Territory by purchase from Napoleon, of France. Thus one can understand how easily a native of France, or his Kansas born descendants so readily adapt themselves to our country and become contented, happy and prosperous.

Joseph Christopher Cordonier is a son of Xovia Cordonier, one of Doniphan County's French settlers, Xovia Cordonier was born March 19, 1831, and came to America at an early age, later arriving in Kansas with the colony of Frenchmen, in 1855. With the colony he took up a farm in Marion Township where he lived until his death November 14, 1887. Mary Ann Cordonier, mother of Joseph Christopher, was born in Ohio, June 20, 1830.

Thus it is recorded that Joseph Christopher Cordonier, who is the subject of this article, was born on the Xovia Cordonier farm in Marion Township November 29, 1872. He was reared on the farm to a life of industry and frugality after the manner of the peasantry of France. His schooling was in the country district school in which so many of our fine citizens learned the lessons that have proved to be the foundation of their success in life.

On February 22, 1900, Joseph Christopher Cordonier married Miss Ellen F. Hewins, the Rev. S. T. MaGill, a Baptist minister, performing the ceremony at her home in Marion Township. Her father was John Augustus Hewins, who was born September 15, 1828, in Augusta, Maine, and died June 22, 1914. Her mother was Susan Agnes Hewins, born at Penn Yan, N. Y., on July 12, 1839, and who died April 23, 1906. Miss Hewins, now Mrs. Cordonier, was educated in the country school in Marion Township and in the State Normal School at Emporia, Kansas. She was one of the popular school teachers in Doniphan County for four years previous to her marriage to Mr. Cordonier.

Mr. and Mrs. Cordonier have one daughter, Letha Mae, who was born on the farm April 1, 1907, and one son, Joseph C., Jr., who was born March 7, 1913. They are members of the Marion Township Baptist Church, which is located near their home, and are active in all of its work. Mr. Cordonier is a member of the Anti Horse Thief Association and is also a member of the F. L. and T. He takes a lively interest in these organizations and is numbered among their most active and influential members, always standing for the principle of right and justice and exerting himself to put into daily practice their splendid teachings.

Throughout his life Joseph Christopher Cordonier has been a good farmer and one whose industry and perseverence has brought to him a goodly measure of prosperity. He farms, after the manner of the people of the little French settlement, intelligently, patiently and industriously, and he reaps the reward of his honest labor. He, like others of his kind, is not inclined to boast of his achievements, but it is generally observed that he gets about as big crops as any and has about as much of this world's good as he conveniently can make use of.

Mr. Cordonier, like his father before him, is a wide-awake progressive citizen, one who has shown himself to be a man of value to the community on many an occasion. He has been a persistent contender for the interests of his people and of his neighborhood. He has been an active force for education and is now trustee of Marion Township, having been elected to that office November 3, 1914. He is making a fine record, and his familiarity with conditions and all of the details of the township affairs makes him a most valuable man for the office.

Public improvements, along with farm improvements, have claimed the attention of this public spirited citizens. Obe Craig, of St. Joseph, says: His father was one of the prime movers in securing the Palmetto railroad through Palermo, Geary City and Doniphan in 1871 and 1872. Mr. Cordonier is in favor of good roads and has done a great deal of work in that line and expects to keep up the fight. He believes in neat and well improved farms and has lent encouragement to all movements having for their object the improvement of the farm and the betterment of conditions. He is an aggressive contender for all that has to do with the betterment of rural conditions and the making of happy and prosperous farmers and their families.

PALERMO A VANISHED TOWN

Started Under Most Promising Conditions in 1856, It Flourished for a Few Years and at One Time Looked Like It Was Going to Be a Sure Winner—Breaking Out of the War Caused a Decline Which Eventually Resulted in Abandonment.

Construction of the "Bob-Tail" Railroad Brought Forth a Ray of Hope for the Citizens, But With the Taking Up of the Rails the Death Knell Was Finally Sounded For Palermo.

The once bustling little town of Palermo had the promise of becoming an important river city in the early stages of its career, but the troubled times preceding the outbreak of the Civil War caused adverse commercial conditions which precipitated the decline and final death of the town.

The town was started in 1856 by a company of which William Palmer was president and John Stiarwalt, secretary. It had the brightest prospects for growth and even supremacy from the first days of its life. New buildings grew up like mushrooms, and the place took on an air of activity that had the other river towns scared almost to death.

At the very outset of Palermo's unfortunate career business began to hum for sure. Rush Martin opened a store and he combined the management of the enterprise with that of being town lawyer. Dr. G. B. Beaumont settled down there to practice his profession and there was a drug store opened by a man named Stetzler, and Charles Miller.

Two mills were erected in the very earliest days, a grist mill and a sawmill. Mahan & Kimber built a steam grist mill which was considered an elegant affair for those days, and Granville P. Livermore set up a sawmill. Those were the days when Palermo was conceded to be the most booming town along the river and the people of the other river towns were naturally jealous and very bitter toward their little baby sister.

Barney York was a member of the Palermo Townsite Company, and he nearly got the "goat" of the people in the neighboring landings. He used to be much about White Cloud especially, and was never tired of predicting that Palermo was destined to be the big town on the Missouri river. Two wealthy young men from the East, or at least two young men whose fathers were wealthy, named Emery and Perham, came along and started a newspaper called the Leader. They seemed to have no end of resources at first, but finally, when trade conditions became stagnant and the people started to leave, they were caught in the undertow and swept away.

Some of the real wise ones undertook to establish a banking business. One of them was supposed to be a short card shark on the river steamboats, who had been outlawed for crooked work, and a span of others were understood to be his pals in any kind of a game.

This trio of financiers undertook to circulate bills that bore the name of Leavenworth as the headquarters of the bank, and the good people of Palermo become suspicious and refused to trade. The bills, or at least very few of them, ever were put in circulation. Twenty-five years ago a citizen of Palermo showed a stack of the bills to a few close friends. He never told how he came into possession of them. They were all ones and twos and looked like wild-cat currency, if there was ever such a thing.

Dr. Joseph Hastings, who later moved to Wathena, located in Palermo before the curtain was rung down. Hardy & Swenson established a store which ran well for a while. Hardy later ran a farm several miles west of Troy, and Swenson had been farming in Atchison County.

The legal department of the town had passed from the hands of Rush Martin by this time, and Charles O. Madoulet branched out as a lawyer, advertsing that he would attend to road cases in Justice court.

Shortly before the breaking out of the war Palermo started to go down hill rapidly. There was a spasmodic effort to revive business, when the "Bob-Tail" railroad was built in there, but the effort was nothing more than a flash in the pan. The rails were taken up thirty-five years ago and Palermo resumed the death spasms that had been only temporarily interrupted by the coming of the railroad. It expired long ago. There is neither town nor postoffice on the site of old Palermo now, and it is doubtful if there are any people but real old timers in the county who could point out the site. Palermo was a bouncing baby for some time after being born, but it either received improper nourishment or somebody put the evil eye on it commercially.

University Didn't Materialize

Few people in Doniphan County realize that the now defunct town of Palermo came near being a university seat. By a special act of the Kansas legislature Feb. 18, 1858, a charter was given to establish Wayland University at Palermo, which is in Marion township. The village at that time was one of the most prosperous in the county and its citizens were aggressive workers for the proposed university, believing that it would materially increase the population. For some reason, however, the school was never located and the town of Palermo passed out of existence.

Donald Phillips

One of the promising boys in Marion Township today is Donald Phillips, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Phillips. This persevering and energetic boy graduated from the country school in 1915, and we bespeak for him a brilliant future.

He was born January 20, 1900, on the farm and instead of idling his time away, as a great many boys have, he applied himself and will reap a reward for his dilligence in the future. We know not what occupation Donald may engage in after completing his education, but he is one of those boys whom we think would make a good doctor, lawyer or merchant. He has a penchant for recollecting names, and can give unhesitatingly the names of all of the teachers to whom he has gone to school.

They are as follows: Miss Ada Evans, Miss May E. Cordonier, Miss Alice Hays, Miss Lou F. Hays, Rev. H. Schaefer, Rev. Theodore Homan, Miss Josie E. Thompson and Miss Mary Ford.

Elizabeth Gertrude Kiehnoff

Miss Elizabeth Gertrude Kiehnhoff was born in Doniphan County and is a daughter of Mrs. W. F. Kiehnhoff of Marion Township. She resides on Route 5, six and one-half miles southwest of Wathena.

Taught one year at Brush Creek, No. 34, and is teaching this year at Cordonier, No. 35. Has a normal training certificate and graduated from the Wathena high school, 1914. Is of German parentage and speaks the language as fluently as English.

John Renick

John Renick, born in Saxony, Aug. 12, 1833, died December 30, 1885. Came to America 1852. Came on a sail ship and was sixty-four days on the water. Worked in Indiana about three years after he landed in this country, and then came to St. Joseph in 1855. Was a shoemaker by trade. In 1858 bought eighty acres of land in Marion Township for $200 and later bought 112 acres more. Came to Kansas in 1855. Married Angie L. Moore February, 1860. She was born in Sleyswick Holstein, Germany, May 24, 1840. Came to America in 1858. Lived on the farm she now owns in Marion Township for fifty-five years.

Douglas Miller

met with a fatal accident at Wathena while crossing the railroad track on December 26, 1910. He was the son of James M. Miller, a pioneer of Doniphan County.

There was a big Masonic love feast on Monday, St. John's Day, December 26, 1879, at Iowa Point. A large crowd of people were in attendance and it eclipsed all previous events of the kind in Doniphan County.

Hugh J. Randolph

On Tuesday, Oct. 9, 1866, Hugh J. Randolph shot and killed Smith B. Head in Marion township near Old Palermo. Hugh Randolph served in the 1st Kansas volunteers and subsequently in the 2nd Pennsylvania artillery attached to the Missouri marine brigade. The altercation was caused over a dispute in a business transaction. The said Randolph was killed in a well a few years afterward.

On the night of July 11th, 1866, burglars broke open the store of Chas. Miller, of Palermo, by forcing of the shutter in the rear of the main building, stealing some money, boots, candles and many other articles, together with the mail key.

Near Old Geary City on March 28, 1867, by the Rev. Mr. Gary Hickman, the officiating clergyman, Alfred A. Clutter and Miss Retta V. Smith, of Doniphan County, were united in marriage.

Washington Township

NOTED FOR ITS EXTENSIVE FRUIT INDUSTRY

One of the Five Original Townships of Doniphan County Is a Center of the Fruit-Growing Industry Which Is Fast Making Kansas Famous—Has Three Lively Towns and Two Trunk Lines of Railroad Running Through From Eastern to Western Boundary—Main Towns, Elwood and Wathena.

As originally laid out, Washington Township would have been a fine piece of country, but early in its existence it was forced to contribute sufficient territory to make up a large part of both Centre and Marion Townships.

Washington was one of the five original townships of Doniphan County but its territory was later considered too extensive and it was curtailed very materially in order to help form the nucleus of two other townships.

However, that fact has had little effect on the progress of prosperity of Washington Township and its people. The township has sufficient good land to satisfy the needs of the residents and the products from within its boundaries are always staple on the markets of the country.

Some of the greatest figures in the history of Doniphan County were included among the earliest settlers of Washington Township. Some of those were John H. and Cary B. Whitehead, Alfred Larzelere, Benjamin Harding, Milton E. Bryant, Rev. B. F. Bowman, Ephraim D. McClelland, Henry Wilson, John Fee, John D. Hier, J. T. Braidy, Henry Thompson, Constant Poirier, Edward Searcy, August Mourigules and the Meugniots.

The early settlers of Washington ever had the most abounding faith in its future. They seemed to be instinctively impressed with the great possibilities for development along all the lines of horticultural and farming endeavor. Time has shown that their judgment was infallible.

The farming settlements of the township won't take second place for any other section of the county and the fruit-growers are obsessed with the knowledge that other places might do as good, but not any better in their particular branch of industry. They point with pride to the number of carloads of fruit that are shipped daily during the harvesting season, and they don't forget to likewise mention the high quality of the fruit which takes front rank with any grown in these United States.

The towns of Washington Township are Elwood, Wathena and Blair. Elwood has somewhat of an advantage in business activity all the year round on account of the railroad shops of the Grand Island Railroad being located there, affording employment to a large number of men. Wathena comes next as the center of the fruit shipping industry, which also keeps things humming, while the season is on. Blair must not be forgotten, because that town also is surrounded by a fine fruit section and does its quota in furnishing a supply for the markets abroad.

Incidentally it might not be out of place to mention the fact that Washington Township is traversed by the Pike's Peak, ocean to ocean highway, and that the three towns in its territory are included in the official path of tourists passing back and forth over this great national highway.

Washington Township is practically bisected by two great trunk lines of railroad. Both the Rock Island and the Grand Island, which is a subsidiary branch of the Union Pacific, leave from Elwood and go through both Wathena and Blair on the route through Troy.

This township was organized Sept. 1, 1855, and no true American need be told for whom it was named; it stands self-explained in the light of today, and the misty future will not tend to make its origin less lucid. It was named in honor of the man who was first in war, first in peace and who should be first in the hearts of the the United States; having been elected in 1789.

It is one of the five original townships, into which the county was divided, at the first session of the county commissioners, and its boundaries at the time were fixed as follows:

"Bounded on the north by Burr Oak Township; on the east by the Missouri River; on the south by the second line, dividing townships 3 and 4, and on the west by the second range line running north and south through Atchison." Albert Head and F. Mahan were appointed justices of the peace, and H. J. Johnson constable. These were the first officers of the township.

The first election in this township was held on the first Monday in October, 1855, "at the house of M. F. Moss, near Milton Bryant's." On the 16th day of September, 1856, a change was made in the township, and its boundary was fixed as follows: Commencing at the northeast corner of Section 12, Town 2, Range 21, thence south on town line between 21 and 22 to the southeast corner of Section 12, Town 4, Range 21; thence west six miles to the southwest corner of Section 7, Town 4, Range 21; thence north two miles thence west one and a half miles, thence north to the Missouri River, thence east with said river to place of beginning.

The above house was built by Benjamin Harding and is one of the first which was built in Doniphan County in 1857. The Harding heirs still own the property, which is located in the northwest part of Wathena. The residence is occupied by Charles Harding, who was born in Wathena, July 4, 1853 and by his sisters, Misses Mary and Emma.

On October 20, 1856, the county board caused one-half mile to be taken from the eastern part of Iowa and Wolf River Townships, and attached to Washington Township. On the 21st day of October, 1856, the boundaries of Washington Township were changed and fixed as follows: "Commencing at the southwest corner of Burr Oak Township, as then established; then south on range line between Ranges 21 and 22 to within one mile of the town line between Towns 3 and 4; thence east to Peter's Creek; thence down Peter's Creek to the Missouri River; thence north with said river to the south line of Burr Oak Township; thence west to place of beginning."

On the 21st day of June, 1859, a change was made and the present boundaries were fixed as follows: "Commencing at the northwest corner of Section 12, Town 3, Range 21; thence east to the Missouri River; thence with said river to the southwest corner of Section 33, Town 3, Range 22; thence north one mile; thence west to the southwest corner thence north to place of beginning."

The surface of the township is quite broken, the best portion being found on Peter's Creek. As the entire eastern and a large part of the southern boundary is the Missouri River, nothing more can be expected than rough and bluffy land after leaving the "first bottom." The Missouri River bottoms, however, are very productive.

The township is watered principally by Peter's Creek and its tributaries. Peter's Creek enters the township from the west, on Section 24, and flows east by south for about three miles, when it makes an abrupt turn to the south, and flowing through Wathena, assumes a southwesterly direction, and empties into the Missouri River at the southwest corner of the township.

The first actual settler that located in the township was James R. Whitehead, who, in January, 1852, settled on the bank of the Missouri River, near Bellemont. By permission from W. P. Richardson, then agent for the Kickapoo Indians, he established a trading post.

"In the spring of 1851 Wathena, a Kickapoo Indian, built a bark wigwam near the bank of Peter's Creek, a few rods from the present site of the old Snively & Hedge's mill at Wathena, and lived in it until the spring of 1855."

"In April, 1852, Benjamin Harding settled near what is now Wathena, and established a trading post. He also built a cabin and broke twenty acres of ground and planted corn."

In 1853 Henry Thompson, who kept a ferry at St. Joseph, built a house on the west side of the river and moved his family into it.

"In January, 1854, Daniel Vanderslice, then agent for the Kickapoos, let a contract to Ebenezer Blackiston and H. Smallwood to cut the timber from the road between Wathena and the St. Joe ferry, one hundred feet in width. They, with L. Ralph and Robert McSparrows, remained and became permanent settlers.

"In the spring of 1854 many persons came from Missouri and made claims by laying four poles in the form of a square and inscribing their names."

About the first marriage in the township was that of Samuel Piles and a Miss Hazelwood, in the spring of 1856. The ceremony was performed at Bellemont, by J. T. Braidy, justice of the peace.

It is said that the first white child born in Washington Township was a daughter of J. R. Whitehead, in the fall of 1854. Of this child we find also the first death, which occurred a few months after.

Undoubtedly the next birth was Charles H. Harding, born July 4, 1853.

An inquest was held in 1856 by J. T. Braidy, justice of the peace, over a dead body found in the Missouri River near Bellemont. Verdict of the jury, "death by drowning."

Several subscription schools were taught in the township as early as 1856. Among those who taught about that time were Misses Creal and Alward, and Messrs. Patching and Clough. School District No. 1, at Wathena, was organized in the spring of 1858, by Benjamin Harding and others, under the administration of Honorable Bayless, first county superintendent. School sessions were held in a frame building, 20 by 30, erected in 1856, and used up to the time of the first legal organization (1858), as a subscription school.

Washington Township, among other things, is noted for its adaptability to raising fruit of all kinds, but particularly grapes. One of the early pioneers in fruit culture was Constant Poirier, who located near Wathena, in 1854, and immediately commenced raising fruit.

A. B. Hunter

Among the many natives of Troy, who have gone forth into the world to hew out success, none have made any better progress than A. B. Hunter, now advertising manager for The Mail and Breeze, in southern Kansas and Oklahoma, one of the Capper publications. Mr. Hunter was born in Wathena, and when he was a small child, his parents moved to Jackson County, Kansas, settling near Holton. Mr. Hunter received his early education in the public schools and later at Campbell University. Afterward he taught school in Holton, and in Montana also. In 1902 he became interested in newspaper work and went to Kansas City, Mo., where he became connected with The Journal. Two years later, on July 4, he left for Bonesteele, South Dakota, and after a brief experience went back to Kansas City again for a period of more than two years. He then engaged with the Capper publications, and through his industry, fidelity and honesty, has reached his present successful position. Outside of the general manager of the Capper publications, Marcow Morrow, Mr. Hunter is the best man in the employ of the present governor. The subject of this sketch is endowed with literary ability, and would make a creditable paragrapher for any metropolitan newspaper.

A Memorable Trip

In July, 1855, a free state delegate convention was called to meet at Big Springs, in September, for the purpose of organizing the free state party, and for other purposes, and a mass meeting held at the house of A. Larzelere, elected John Fee, C. W. Stewart, Arnet Groom, Newton Carter, Ed. Bryan, B. Harding and Benjamin H. Brock as delegates to represent Doniphan County. The next day (Sunday), the delegates started on horseback, with saddle-bags full of bread and bacon, to find Big Springs. Never having heard of the place before, they had only a vague idea of the location; but they found it on the third day, half way between Lawrence and Topeka—presumably the result of a compromise—and there were several houses, such as were fashionable in those days. Among other celebrities there were Jim Lane, Judge Smith, Judge Johnson, Judge Wakefield, M. J. Parrott, and Governor Reeder; but the speech which attracted the most attention was made by Charley W. Stewart.

After two days' session, making history, and arranging preliminaries for the Topeka constitutional convention, the convention adjourned, and all started homeward. Knowing where home was, better time was made. On the road, three men dying with cholera were passed. On the second day, Carter's horse failed, when he dismounted, and drove him as best he could. The weather was extremely hot, and he became overheated. Fee became wearied, and fell back with Carter. All reached home that night (Saturday). Before morning, Carter and Fee were taken with cholera, and at 2 p. m., Sunday, both were dead.—Benjamin Harding.

The Wathena Schools

It Was the First District School Organized in Doniphan County, Also the County's First High School, and Has Graduated Many of Our Boys and Girls Who Have Become Noble Men and Women and Honored Citizens—Its Teachers and School Officials.

Wathena enjoys the enviable distinction of having the first district school organized in Doniphan County and also the first high school organized in Doniphan County—and in Kansas, where educational institutions are regarded as of more value to a community than any other, unless it be the churches, that is a distinction to be proud of. Wathena also enjoys the distinction of having two school boards, one a high school board, the other a district school board in control of the common school.

Away back in the territorial days of Kansas there was a little old log school house in Wathena in which the children of the pioneers received such education as their parents, these pioneers, could afford. This was displaced in time by a better school house, then another, before the present large and handsome school building of ten rooms was erected, in 1879, out of the proceeds of $15,000 of bonds voted by the people of the specific purpose of providing the finest school facilities to be found in any country town in the state. The building stands in the northeast part of the town, an ideal location, attracting the admiration of all who see it.

The community in which Wathena is located is one of the most prosperous in the state of Kansas, having the richest and most fertile lands in this part of the world, and plenty of wealth. The people, naturally, are progressive, believing as they do that to be happy and prosperous, true citizens and loyal Kansans, a goodly portion of their surplus wealth should go into schools and education.

It is no cause for wonder, therefore, that the good people of such a community should be first to demand high school privileges for their children and their children's children. The high school was first organized in 1897, and since it was organized it has graduated ..... finished pupils, many of whom are filling important positions today.

The high school now has an enrollment of sixty-three students, while in the eighth grade there are 17, in the seventh grade 21, in the sixth grade 18, in the fifth grade 21, in the fourth grade 18, in the third grade 25, in the second grade 12, and in the first grade 11, making a total of 243 enrolled. There are ten teachers, four in the high school, and six in the grades.

The schools are under the supervision of Prof. Charles I. Vinsonhaler, one of the ablest educators in this part of Kansas, who served eight years as county superintendent and is now serving his fourth year as superintendent of the Wathena schools. He is thoroughly progressive in his methods and is a leader among the educators in the state in introducing many things of practical value to the pupils into the course of study, or the method of teaching.

Prof. A. R. Jones is principal. His home is at Pittsburg. He is well fitted for his position by education in pedagogy and is proving both able and efficient in his work. Beside his duties as principal, Professor Jones has classes in manual training, algebra, physics and agriculture. The other members of the high school faculty have been selected by the board with reference to their efficiency for teaching in their various lines. Miss Mary Price Smith, of Baldwin, is a graduate of the Baker University, and is regarded as a proficient teacher of history and English, of ability. Miss Anne Laurie Cornick, of Anthony, Harper County, Kansas, graduated from Emporia and Manhattan, and teaches domestic science. Miss Alice Louise Gfeller, whose home is at Burns, and who graduated from the State Normal, teaches German and music.

The teachers in the graded schools are most all well known young women who have been trained for their work in their respective grades. Miss Nellie D. Hayes of the eighth grade is a daughter of Mrs. Anna Hayes; Miss Gertrude Dubach, seventh grade, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Dubach; Miss Maud F. Bauer, sixth grade, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mike Bauer; Miss Bethel Chalk, fifth grade, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Chalk; Miss Fredrica Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Miller, has the first, second, third and fourth grades. Miss Allie Duncan is the colored teacher. These grade teachers constitute a corps of educators it would be difficult to find their equal in any community, however well organized.

Wathena's two school boards are composed of citizens who have an abiding interest in education and who can be depended upon at all times to see that the children of the town receive the best instruction it is possible to give. Mike Bauer, who was reared in Doniphan County and who has always taken an interest in the schools, is treasurer of the high school board, and a very efficient treasurer he is. G. A. Dubach, who is one of the most successful farmers and also a prosperous business man of Washington Township, is a director. He has resided in the county since he was two years of age, and at all times has been regarded as a staunch citizen. The clerk of this board is Robert H. Lazelere, who lacked only three months of being born in Doniphan County, and who has lived here sixty years. He taught school in the county for several years, and is a man well qualified for the position.

Wathena school building, built in 1909 by John H. Wagenknecht, Wathena.

The public school board, in charge of the grade school, has for a director Homer C. Bowman, one of the leading citizens of the township. He is a son of B. F. Bowman, who was one of the pioneer Methodist preachers of Doniphan County, and was born here and reared in a family of teachers. He manifests a great interest in the details of school management. Ernest Ruger, a druggist who has lived in Doniphan County for fifteen years, has reared teachers in his family and manifests an interest in education, is treasurer of the board. The clerk is George L. Stuart, who is one of the successful business men of Wathena, who was reared and educated in this school and is one of the live wires on the board.

Wathena citizens certainly are proud of their magnificent and well-equipped school building. It is one of the best advertisements that any community can have. It is better than that, even, for it is a builder of citizenship and character along with its work for education and culture.

The building was erected by J. H. Wagenknecht of Wathena, a contractor who takes pride in his work as a builder, and who has erected several large school buildings in cities in Kansas, Iowa and Missouri.

Harriott Killed

A brakeman on the freight train number 25 slipped and fell from his train September 5, 1899, at the curve east of Wathena and was instantly killed.

Missouri River Floater

On Sunday, August 27, 1899, a floater was taken from the Missouri River about a mile south of Wathena, which indicated that the body had been in the water several days. An inquest was held by Dr. R. S. Dinsmore, and the corpse was buried at Bellemont Cemetery.

Wathena

Wathena is a station on the St. Joe & Western R. R., located on Section 28, Town 3, Range 22, in Washington Township. Was laid off in the spring of 1856, original townsite consisted of 160 acres.

Elwood enjoys the distinction of having the largest hotel in the state of Kansas, known as the Great Western Hotel. Messrs. Franklin & Webster have issued invitations for a grand ball on next Thursday evening, October 14, 1858.—Chief.

Adrian Melrose Livermore of Wathena is authority for the statement that the Hardings and the Spalding family and himself have lived all of their lives in the residences which they occupy today. Adrian does not measure up in years with the other families, but was born and reared on the spot where he now resides.

Miss Bertha A. Dubach was instantly killed May 28, by a south bound Great Western in St. Joseph.

Good roads are a magnificent investment and yield the richest returns.

Farmer Turns Merchant

After spending several years profitably farming, Ernest J. Scholz four years ago sold his place eight miles southwest of Wathena and decided to try city life. Soon after disposing of his holdings at public sale, Mr. Scholz moved to Wathena, where he became connected with the hardware establishment of W. F. Schultz.

Mr. Scholz was born in Germany in 1862 and with his father came to Doniphan County at the age of nine months, crossing the river at St. Joseph on July 1, 1863. He was married to Miss Louise Winzer at her home north of Doniphan on May 14, 1885.

The Scholz's had one daughter, Miss Winnie, born March 14, 1886, who became the wife of William Wollnick. Mrs. Scholz belongs to the old Winzer family who have been prominent and highly respected for so many years in Doniphan County.

A Rebel Flag

On May 1, 1861, when the people of Elwood arose at daybreak, they observed a flag floating from the topmost branches of a big sycamore tree on Douglas street—the secession flag, with the inscription: "The one who takes this flag down will suffer death, for this is the flag that God intended to wave over Washington City." This raised the vanity of several of the citizens of Elwood, who proceeded at once to take the flag down and burn same. Within a few minutes the broad, bright folds of the star-spangled banner were given to the breeze from the flagstaff on the Great Western Hotel, and a shout went up from the crowd, which exemplified the fact that the hearts of the men of Elwood were right. The party who climbed the tree and brought down the flag was Rev. O. B. Gardner.

Mock Legislature

A mock legislature was organized in Wathena about Jan. 22, 1867, which met once a week at the school house; H. D. Hunt being elected as governor; A. Lazelere as speaker; and Ed. Downard, clerk. They had some very spirited debates on different bills which were introduced.

Our First Macadamized Highway

The Historic Old Road Between Elwood and Wathena Should Be Restored as an Important Link in the Rock Island Ocean-to-Ocean Highway.

One of the first pieces of improved highways in Kansas was the three mile stretch of macadamized road between Wathena and Elwood, completed June 4, 1866. This road was built by a private company at an expense of several thousand dollars and a toll of 25 cents for each vehicle passing over it was charged. The road made money for the company at first, and in fact was a paying investment to the stockholders until one day it slid into the Missouri river—or at least about two miles of it disappeared. Since then what little is left of the historic old highway has been at times practically impassable, especially during the present year on account of the heavy rains.

The great Rock Island Ocean-to-Ocean Highway now traverses Doniphan County as the latest and highest ideal of public road building. What a grand undertaking it would be at this time to rebuild the old road that now is only a memory and make it a splendidly macadamized or paved highway from Wathena to the Missouri river bridge at Elwood. Such an improvement would provide a fine piece of roadway as a start for the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway west from the Missouri river. Besides, it would give the farmers of Doniphan County a better road over which to haul their products to market, as with a good solid roadbed double the ordinary load could easily be hauled, thus making it a money-saving proposition for our own people.

An inspection of the old roadbed shows that a good part of the original base of stone can be utilized in making the proposed improvement, and that a part of the distance can be resurfaced at a comparatively low cost. However, we are in favor of the improvement of this piece of road, believing that Doniphan County could not make a better road investment, and we urge the good people to get in line with the movement that already has been started.

Elwood Free Press

In looking over the files of the Elwood Free Press of years gone by, the editor ran across some quaint news items. Doubtless they did not seem quaint in those days, but in these times of rush and hurry, we can stop to smile at these:

"A quarterely meeting of the M. E. Church will commence today at the land office, in this city, and continue through tomorrow." — Elwood Free Press, April 27, 1861.

It has been many years since land was opened for settlement in Kansas, and doubtless there are many in Doniphan County today who did not know there had ever been a land office in Elwood. Here's another one:

"The Pike's Peak express came in yesterday evening with $9,000 in gold. The express now leaves Elwood three times a week and is carrying full loads of passengers."—Elwood Free Press, April 28, 1860.

The stage coach was the only means of overland travel in this country in those times, and we can imagine how awfully shaky that driver was, carrying so much money aboard, when it was a very common occurrence to be stopped by guerillas and robbed of money and jewels.

Tornado Killed Woman

A tornado passed over a narrow strip of country between Troy and Wathena, April 31, 1872, completely destroying the new frame house of John Doms, living four and one-half miles east of Troy, just across in Washington township, on the farm where Robert Smith now resides, and the house nearby, belonging to a Mr. Ephraim McClellan. All the children in the Doms family were slightly injured, and Mrs. Doms herself receiving injuries from which she died on tthe morning of May 3. The McClellan family escaped injury, as they were not at home during the storm. The tornado also struck the house of Mr. Holland, about six or seven miles from Troy, badly damaging it. The family was in the house at the time, but escaped any injuries.

WATHENA'S LEADING DRUG STORE

The Old Reliable—Prescriptions Carefully Compounded—Sanitary Soda Fountain Service—Everything Found in an Up-to-Date Drug Store—Once a Customer Always a Customer.

A reliable, up-to-date drug store is a necessary requisite to the progress of any town, and Wathena is fortunately situated in having Jacob Miller's establishment right in their midst.

The Miller pharmacy is conceded to be the equal of any in the county, where prescriptions are carefully filled with the purest drugs to be found anywhere.

Mr. Miller is a native of Germany, having been born in the fatherland, March 6, 1863. He received his education in the old country, and emigrated to the United States in 1879, settling in Wathena.

The first insight into the drug business gained by Jacob Miller was in the drug store of August Miller, where he spent considerable time. Later he was employed as a pharmacist in Dr. W. W. Carter's drug store.

Starting in business for himself in August, 1892, Mr. Miller has prospered beyond his most sanguine expectations. He always keeps a full stock of medicines and other drug sundries, and never fails to give his patrons just what they want.

Mr. Miller was married to Miss Emma Fiegenbaum on Sept. 15, 1886, and they have an intelligent and interesting family of five children. Their Wilma P., Kathryn H. and Kenneth C. Miss Louise is a professor in the Illinois Woman's College, at Jacksonville, Ill., and Miss Wilma is now pursuing her second year's course in the same institution. Miss Fredericka is a second year student at the Kansas State University.

Mr. Miller is a great lover of Silver Wyandotte chickens, which he began raising seven years after starting in business for himself.

Wathena Baptist Church

History of The First Baptist Church Constructed in Wathena—Narrated by the Pastor, Reverend W. O. Peterson.

The First Baptist Church of Wathena, one of the oldest churches in the state, was organized on June 13, 1858. The following were the charter members: Henderson Smallwood, Ann Smallwood, Samuel Allward, Mary Allward, Wm. H. Smallwood, Sarah J. Brady, Nancy McSparren, George E. Clayton. At the first meeting, the Rev. E. Allward and wife were received by letter. At the next business meeting, June 26, 1858, Reverend Allward was unanimously elected pastor. Wm. Gains was elected treasurer and Wm. H. Smallwood clerk.

On July 4, of the same year, an association of Baptist churches was formed (now known as the Northeast), and met the following September in Atchison, Kansas. The Wathena pastor was the first clerk of the association and preached the first introductory sermon. In those days it was customary for the pastor to preach on the Saturday of the regular monthly business meeting. In the minutes of April 9, 1859, we read that "the pastor made a few remarks relative to the building of a suitable house for public worship." Consequently a building committee of five was appointed.

In July of that second year, Samuel Allward, the first deacon, was elected. The first pastorate ended in April, 1862. For a short time, Rev. David Waddell, an old pioneer preacher, served the Wathena church and later alternated his services with it and the Palermo church, now called Marion Township.

Ground was broken for the erection of the first meeting house on September 21, 1869, and the completed church was open for services on Thursday evening, October 9, 1873. The pastor, E. Allward, preached very appropriately and touchingly from Psalms, 27:13: "It was a joyous occasion." The Northeast Association met at the new church the next day. In reading over the minutes for the early days of the church, when religion was rigorous and the members severe in their judgment of the slightest levity or wrong-doing, we find that many members were excluded by the church for disorderly conduct, failing to attend meetings or to contribute to the support of the church.

On June 28, 1885, the Reverend Allward, after twenty years of service, tendered his resignation, but at earnest solicitation of his flock, continued to serve some time longer. At the business meeting, July 25, 1885, Mrs. Jessie E. Carter was elected church clerk, and she holds the office to this day. In 1890, a movement was started to raise funds for the erection of a baptistry. In 1889, J. G. Clark of St. Joseph was called to the pastorate, and ordained a minister of the gospel at the church on May 31, 1890, and he served until April 1, 1896.

At a protracted meeting held by Pastor Clark in January, 1891, twenty-three were received into membership, twenty-one by baptism. In 1891 three deacons were elected, Brothers Vories, Linder and Parkhurst, the last named resigning a month later. In September of 1891 the pastor and deacons went to Troy to sit in council with brethren there for the purpose of discussing the advisability of organizing a church there. This month the envelop system of paying the pastor was adopted. The first Young People's Society was organized in October, 1891.

In the minutes of June 27, 1903, we read, "After several months of working and waiting our church was rebuilt and dedicated on June 14, 1903, the dedicatory service being conducted by Rev. M. P. Hunt of St. Joseph." New trustees were elected, as follows: Dr. W. W. Carter, T. H. Vories and John Gamble.

In 1910, Rev. E. P. Garrett was unanimously chosen as pastor to serve the church for half time for an indefinite period for a salary of $350.00 per year. The church voted itself electric lights at this meeting. In a letter to the Association meeting at Horton in September, 1911, the clerk writes of two revivals held during the year, one at Wathena and the other at Gladden schoolhouse, resulting in fifty-seven additions to the church. In 1912, the Rev. A. A. Harvey, of Savannah, Mo., was called to this church, which united with the Marion Township congregation. Because of ill health, he resigned after less than a year's service, and the Rev. John Carpenter filled out the unexpired quarter of the year. On December 14, 1913, Rev. W. O. Peterson of Kansas City, Kan., was unanimously called as pastor; the Marion Township Church uniting in the call, each to have half time preaching service and the pastor to live at Wathena.

The past year has been marked by great progress in all lines of church activities. Since January 21, 1914, sixty-one members have united with the church, forty-one by baptism. The present membership is nearly two hundred. The Sunday school attendance has increased 51 per cent. The Young People's Union was re-organized in March and developed from a weak union of twenty members into a strong society of half a hundred members, and they are doing practical Christian work.

We also have a good Junior Union of thirty-five members. Throughout the entire year the mid-week prayer meetings have been uncommonly well attended, even through the summer, when the weather is so discouraging. Considerable improvements have been made on the church property.

The Wathena Baptist Church, one of the old churches of the town.

The pastor made a strong effort to get the church to full time service, but part of the members feel financially unable as yet; however, with the stimulus from past achievements, may all earnestly and unitedly strive for further victories for Christ and His Kingdom.

—By the Rev. W. O. Peterson.

Editorial: Reverend Peterson, the former able pastor of the Wathena First Baptist Church, has been very modest in the above article in regard to his influence in the upbuilding of the church and its work. However, we deem it only just to state that he is a forcible speaker, a hard worker in the service of his Master for the betterment of the flock he tends, and conscientious in all things, great and small. The church was very fortunate in being possessed of a capable leader.

Reverend Carpenter succeeded Mr. Peterson, and he has thus far given promise of emulating his predecessor. He is a splendid exponent of the Gospel, and cannot help but win friends in and out of the church through his broad and genial personality. Since coming to Wathena, Reverend Carpenter held a very successful meeting in Elwood, where a number of souls were added to the Kingdom.

Pioneer Conductor

William D. Bryan died at his home in Wathena, Jan. 31, 1914. He was one of the old settlers of Doniphan County and was identified with the early history. He was a conductor on the St Joseph & Grand Island railway for thirty-six years. Mr. Bryan was born at Versailles, in Morgan County, Missouri, Aug. 16, 1837. His father, the late Milton E. Bryan, moved his family to St. Joseph in 1848, and to Wathena, by permission, shortly before Kansas territory was opened to settlement in 1854, when he bought the squatter rights of J. H. Cox to the mill site, cabin and southeast quarter, section 28, for $750.00. He traded this to the town company for the northeast quarter, which became their home.

William Bryan inherited ambitions of adventure from his father, and in 1857, engaged with Russell, Wadell & Company to attend a wagon train of merchandise to Salt Lake City; in 1858 he accompanied a boat up the Missouri river to the mountains with freight. On its return the next year he landed on the bank in Burr Oak and walked home from there as the quicker way than to come on around with it to St. Joseph. When the Civil War broke out, although his family connections were all of the Southern class, many of them remained patriotic to the Union and he joined the 4th Missouri cavalry, was made first lieutenant, and his systematic methods of management soon pointed him out for assignment to the commissary department, where his services were valuable. Gen. Hall was his brother-in-law and he had many friends high in authority to favor his promotion, but his highest ambition was to devote himself to the place he held and was too modest to seek any selfish advantage. He always refused to apply for a pension until a short time before he died, when some old soldiers argued him into doing it as a token of honor to which he was entitled.

Mr. Bryan was the first regular conductor appointed on what is now the St. Joseph & Grand Island railway, dating from 1868, before the bridge was built, and was in charge of the first train to cross the bridge. He was crushed in the disastrous wreck at Troy in 1877, from which he was many months recovering sufficiently to resume his place and which left him much disabled the rest of his life. When he finally had to retire, the Grand Island Company kept him on pay roll for nine years, until the U. P. interests came in control.

He was honorable, high-minded, modest and unassuming. He felt an aversion to notoriety and shrank from newspaper mention, fearing some one might think he liked to be "puffed," and one of his last requests was to "tell Billy Stewart not to write a great long piece about him."

John Carpenter

John Carpenter, pastor of the Elwood Baptist Church, came to Kansas December 9, 1912, from Florida, where he was editor, subscription searcher and head foreman of his own paper. He also preached down South. March 24, 1913, he was married to Miss Nettie Ellen Mitchell, at the Ryan Hotel, St. Joseph, Mo., Rev. A. A. Harvey, the pastor of the Wathena Baptist Church, performing the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter live in Wathena. They have one child, a daughter, Grace Good, born February 19, 1914, at Wathena, Kan. Carpenter preaches at Elwood twice a month and the other two Sundays he preaches at the Gladden school house (Dist. No. 63), where there are about fifty Baptists belonging to the Wathena Church who are desirous of organizing.

Reverend Carpenter is thirty-four years old, a member of Typographical Union No. 40, St. Joseph; a Knight of Pythias; an ex-editor, ex-tramp printer, and is at present employed by the Wathena Republican as a compositor. He has traveled over all sections of the country, in all styles of travel, has worked his way through school and still studies between jobs. Carpenter has also held down desks on some of the large dailies, and has been through some reportorial work which has proven an advantage to him in his work in the ministry. He expects in a short time to drop his stick and line gauge, and devote all his time to the ministry.

Wathena Fruit-Growers' Association

Much Credit Is Due George W. Kinkead and William R. Martin for Its Success—Organized to Help Growers and Shippers of Wathena to Get Best Markets for Produce—Fine Berry and Orchard Section—Began in 1905 and Has Grown to Important Proportions—Able Management Throughout Its History.

Fruit-growing is the principal industry in and around Wathena, and the Wathena Fruit-Growers' Association was organized to take care of the fruit grown and to protect the members of the organization, and to foster the industry. That it has succeeded in its mission is shown by the fact that in one day as high as sixteen cars of berries have been handled. The business for one year has reached $127,064.20. The organization is composed of about two hundred members, who have profited each year through the efficient management and the practice of economy by the officials in charge.

The first meeting was held in the old Craig hall upstairs over the restaurant then owned by James Anderson, on Feb. 26, 1905, and was the first organization of its kind in Doniphan County. W. R. Martin, now the postmaster of Wathena, was chosen chairman of the meeting, with Prof. George W. Kinkead secretary. The election of officers resulted in the selection of L. N. Linder as president; Frank Rice, vice-president; Mike Boeh, treasurer, and Mr. Kinkead, secretary and general manager. By resolution adopted at this initial meeting all of these officers were made the directors of the association.

The objects of the organization as set forth in the constitution and by-laws are to ship and market native fruit grown by the members of this association, and to buy native fruit for the purpose of shipping or disposing of the same, and to own and maintain such office building, real estate and packing sheds that will best promote the welfare and interest of the association. The berries and fruit of each member is marketed at the proper time and to the best advantage, because the general manager makes a study of the market and keeps in close touch with the changing conditions of the weather, the progress of the seasons of each particular product. Thus every advantage is taken that will be to the profit and benefit of the respective members.

Wathena is the headquarters of the association, where it owns a large building on a principal corner valued at $30,000, which is fully paid up. The rent for the building amounts to $1,000 each year. Packing sheds have been built in the berry patches of the individual members, to facilitate the handling of the berries, and to prepare them in the best possible way for the market. The Rock Island and Grand Island railways have constructed a large shed as a part of the union station for the accommodation of the growers and shippers. This building has been a wonderful help in the work of the association and has been much appreciated.

All the growers have to do is to haul the berries and fruit to the depot and the manager does the rest. He is paid a salary of $1,000 a year. From the beginning Prof. George W. Kinkead was the manager until 1907, when he was elected to the office of county treasurer. He resigned and W. R. Martin was chosen to fill the vacancy, which position he held until this year, when he was elected postmaster. Harold Decker was then chosen manager and holds that position at the present time.

Prof. George W. Kinkead was chosen as the first manager because of his sterling business qualities, and his wide acquaintance in Wathena, as he served as superintendent of the Wathena school for about ten years. He gave his attention to the Fruit-Growers' Association when his schools closed and devoted his summer to this work. The importance and value of the association grew during his management. When Professor Kinkead left, the association was not long in choosing W. R. Martin, who is a well known and substantial business man of Wathena. This progressive fruit booster was born on territory contiguous to Wathena, almost in a brier patch, and has made the fruit business a study from childhood and is familiar with every phase of the work. His first experience in the business was with Jacob T. Mider, familiarly known to the people of Doniphan County as Walter Mider. Mr. Martin owns a fruit farm, and notwithstanding the fact that he is unofficially connected with the association he will always be found boosting for its welfare. He has filled the position with credit to himself and credit to the organization which he represented. When Mr. Martin was appointed postmaster he found his new duties such that he could no longer give his time to the fruit growers, so Harold Decker, a bright young man, was selected. He is a capable man for the place and shows good business qualifications, and has the respect and confidence of all the growers

Miss Ida Bradley, one of the most popular school teachers of Doniphan County, usually spends her vacations as assistant bookkeeper of the association. She is the highest salaried country school teacher in Doniphan County, receiving $110 a month for her valuable services in the Lehman district, north of Wathena. Elizabeth Manville Campbell, a worthy woman who ably does her work for the association, is chief bookkeeper; she is well qualified to fill the position and takes a great deal of pride in her business.

Wathena is the center of a fine berry and fruit district, where berries of all kinds, apples, pears, peaches, plums, grapes, cherries and a few apricots are grown. Most of these produce great crops, and are the source of large revenues for the growers. The earliest berries were shipped April 27, 1909, when the shipment was sent to the Western markets.

Hill land around Wathena grows better fruit than does the level land. Rotation of crops is followed by the successful growers, strawberries being ready for the market in May, followed by raspberries, blackberries, early peaches and grapes. In this manner the farmers have produce ready to sell at various times during the summer, which makes it possible to facilitate the handling of the different crops. Five acres is sufficient to make good money for the careful and painstaking grower, who is willing to devote his time and energy to the work.

The corporation is credited with a valuation of $25,000, the capital stock being divided into 5,000 shares at $5.00 each. There are seven directors who are elected annually on the first Saturday of each year. Each stockholder has as many votes as he holds stock. The directors really give attention to the details of the organization during the fruit season, as they meet once a week while the shipping is being carried on, and become thoroughly acquainted with the progress of the business.

Inspection of fruit is given close attention, each case bearing the stamp of the grower and the association. The board of directors specify when each kind of fruit must be delivered. A fine of ten cents per case is assessed for each violation of this regulation. Strict conformity to the business side is given and the books are audited each year and oftener if the board of directors think such action is necessary. No money is paid out except by action of the board and on checks signed by the proper officers. In this way the finances of the association are amply protected.

The membership fee is $10.00, but this is cheerfully paid by those who derive the benefit therefrom. The members are urged to market all their fruit through the association, and the membership is further protected by a regulation which says that no outsider's fruit should be marketed by a member without the permission of the management.

In order to prevent the fruit from becoming bruised while being hauled from the patches or the orchards it is a rule to compel the growers to haul all produce, except apples, in spring wagons. Every precaution is taken to have the fruit and berries reach the market and the consumer in first class shape. This is one of the chief benefits that the growers find in being organized, and being able to protect their own interests through co-operation.

W. R. Martin.

This idea of co-operation is carried out in detail in the pro-rating of the expenses. One section of the constitution provides that a platform price on all fruit will be receipted to members on delivery of their produce. Each variety bears its expense on a proportionate basis, and all profit or loss on handling fruit is prorated to the members according to the fruit marketed. In other words the grower who ships twice as much fruit at a given time and under the same circumstances will bear twice as much of the expense of handling and share in similar proportion to the profit and loss. Where there is a profit or loss on fruit purchased from non-members, such profit or loss loss is prorated to each member according to the stock held in the corporation.

The Wathena Fruit-Growers' Association has been a great boon to the fruit industry in Doniphan County, and the members have been greatly benefited thereby. When the organization was first exploited, there were many things to contend with, but George W. Kinkead was equal to the occasion, and made the venture a prosperous one. He was ably followed by Mr. Martin and finally by Harold Decker, who have kept up the good work, thus netting thousands of dollars to the growers and shippers which would otherwise have been lost.

The Popular Elevator and Grain Man of Wathena Is a Product of Doniphan County—After Making a Success as a Farmer, He Built an Elevator and Entered the Grain and Stock Business at Blair, Going Later to Wathena, Where He Now Resides in a $10,000 Home.

Frank C. Foley, who occupies the best house in Wathena and is engaged in the grain and live stock business there, is a native of Doniphan County who has remained in his home county and has contributed as much as any man to the upbuilding of its business interests and to the prosperity of its people. Mr. Foley was born July 20, 1873, on his father's farm five miles northwest of Wathena. He spent his boyhood days on the farm, attended school, and when he grew to manhood he went into the business of farming which he followed with success until ten years ago when he started in the grain and live stock business. The life story of Mr. Foley is one that should appeal to the young men of a community as illustrating the idea that to win great success a young man does not necessarily have to go away from home.

Mr. Foley was married to Miss Kate A. Cavanaugh, February 16, 1898, in the Doniphan Catholic Church. Mrs. Foley was a popular school teacher before her marriage and was educated in Doniphan County, as was her husband. Her education, together with her qualities of mind and heart and her ability to grapple with problems, made her the right kind of a wife for a thorough-going business man, and the kind of a mother to rear her children aright.

Mr. and Mrs. Foley had six bright and interesting children. Leo F. was born December 11, 1898, died April 6, 1913; Kathleen A., born October 20, 1900; Frances I., born April 20, 1903; Mildred M., born October 10, 1905; Lucile, born July 26, 1908; John Hugh, born March 4, 1911, died February 19, 1912. The daughters are all attending school and it is the ambition of their fond parents to give them every advantage of an education that they may become among our best cultured women.

Mr. Foley's farming operations in Doniphan County were conducted along broad lines. He took a lively interest in farming as a boy and when he grew to manhood's estate and went into business for himself it was with a determination to win. It took hard work and perserverence and intelligent management, but he made good progress from the start and achieved the success his efforts deserved. He was generally regarded as a good farmer who knew a great deal about the kind of farming methods that when put to actual use produced good crops, and one who did things in the right way.

Mr. Foley became an expert judge of grain and live stock through his experience on the farm, and he had been all along unusually successful in marketing his products. He had won popularity among the farmers within a radius of ten or fifteen miles and they had on more than one occasion shown their confidence in his ability and their esteem for him as a man.

All this finally led Mr. Foley to give up farming and devote his energies and his talents to the business of handling grain and live stock produced on the fine farms in that locality. It was a good move, for it made him not only prosperous but of great usefulness to the farmers through the handling of their products, a valuable man for the whole community.

It was ten years ago that Mr. Foley left the farm. He went to Blair, which offered a good opening for a man of his ability to engage in business. His first move was to erect an elevator of sufficient capacity to handle a large quantity of grain. It was a new enterprise for Blair and the farmers showed their appreciation of his efforts by bringing their grain to him. In connection with his grain business he also handled live stock, which added to the volume of his business operations.

After he had been in business in Blair three years Mr. Foley went to Wathena and there he erected another elevator and went into business on an extensive scale. He has been in Wathena six years and is now managing the extensive business of the Farmer's Co-operative Association, for which he is admirably fitted. The position is one of honor, as one can readily understand, and reflects not merely credit upon his business ability but is a testimonial to his character and business integrity. Virtually he is the community manager, and a very prosperous community it is.

On going to Wathena Mr. and Mrs. Foley had visions of a lovely home in which to live and rear their daughters, and it is one of the remarkably good things that that vision has materialized just as they pictured it out. Selecting a site on the high bluffs in the west part of the town, from which they could have a fine view of the beautiful country for many miles around, they purchased a large country home with the modern conveniences of the best city homes, and at a cost of $10,000. It is a well-deserved reward for the years of business activity and good management which made them prosperous. Also it is a tribute to the splendid character and worth of two useful and well ordered lives.

PONY EXPRESS RIDER DEAD

John Fry First Relay Rider When Old System Was Established in 1860.

John Fry Was the First Pony Express Rider Who Covered the Distance of 1,950 Miles from St. Joseph to California and Return in Ten Days—He Was Murdered By Quantrell's Guerillas at Baxter Springs, October 6, 1863—There Were About Eighty Kansans Killed in His Company—He Was Related to Lank and Jack Evans at Wathena—He was a Brave Boy and Liked Adventure.

In 1850 the western terminus of the railway system of the country was at St. Joseph, the station being at Eighth and Olive, not far from the present location of the Union Station. The establishment of the Pony Express between St. Joseph and San Francisco was the outgrowth of a wager of $200,000.00 made by William H. Russell and his partner, A. B. Miller, that the distance of 1,950 miles could be covered in ten days. The firm was backed by the then secretary of war, John B. Floyd. All the details were arranged and the firm secured three hundred of the fleetest horses to be procured and one hundred and twenty-five good riders. These men were chosen for their light weight, as some parts of the route had to be covered at twenty-five miles an hour. Horses were stationed from ten to twenty miles apart and each rider had to make sixty miles, two minutes being allowed to change horses and shifting the mails. Eighty of the one hundred and twenty-five men were chosen as the riders. If the relay stations were not at proper intervals, a tent was put up sufficient to accommodate one man and two horses. On the morning of April 3d, 1860, all was in readiness and a young lad named John Fry, mounted a fleet looking mare and rode to the Russell & Major & Wells Fargo office in St. Joseph, then located on the west side of Third street, four doors south of Felix. The postoffice, we believe, was then on the east side of Second street, between Felix and Jule, and William Fowler was the postmaster.

Fry received his load of mail, put into saddle bags, rode rapidly to the ferry boat, which was called the Ebeneezer and in charge of Captain E. Blackstone, lying at the foot of Second street, cheered by throngs of people, many following to the boat and across the river to Elwood; thus departed Johnny Fry, the first pony express rider from the eastern terminus of the long mail route.

The first rider to reach St. Joseph from the West was also Johnny Fry. He was at Seneca, sixty miles away, waiting for a courier to arrive with his mail, and when he did arrive he was an hour late, which time Fry had to make up on his ride to St. Joseph. He had six thoroughbred horses to make the ride with, one being stationed every ten miles. Fry had just three hours and thirty minutes in which to win the $200,000.00 wager. This was the finish of the longest race for the largest stakes ever run on the continent.

When the time for Fry's arrival was nearly up in St. Joseph, at least 5,000 people, it is said, stood upon the river bank with eyes turned toward the woods from which horse and rider should emerge into the open country, in the rear where Elwood, Kansas, is now located, one mile from the finish. Time was hardly up, but seven minutes remained. The last mile was made in one minute and fifty seconds. Landing on the ferry boat with five minutes and a few seconds to spare, thus winning the large stake, and in a few minutes more Johnny Fry delivered the first California mail at the Wells Fargo office, which was by them delivered to the St. Joseph postmaster.

At the other end of the line the same arrangements had been made to start a course from Sacramento, so at noon on April 3rd, 1860, Billy Baker mounted with his load of mail and dashed away toward the Sierras, covering his first twenty miles in forty-nine minutes. The spectators who had gathered at the boat landing to witness the arrival of the mail boy, greeted him with vociferous applause and pandemonium reigned on the east side of the Big Muddy for several minutes. The crowd felt that a feat had been accomplished which was worthy of commendation, and it was several minutes before chaos was restored to order.

DR. W. W. CARTER

A Physician of Prominence—Doniphan County's State Legislative Representative.

Few people not familiar with the duties of a legislator realize the importance of the position. A representative in the legislature must necessarily be a man of sound judgment and energetic mental caliber in order to efficiently represent his constituency. The representative is not sent to the legislative halls to foster the interests of any particular party or political faction, but to promote legislation calculated to be for the welfare of all the people.

When the voters of Doniphan County elected Dr. William W. Carter to represent them in the state legislature at the election, November, 1914, they placed their confidence in a man eminently capable of performing the duties of that office. Doctor Carter is a physician with an established reputation and has made hundreds of friends and gained unlimited public confidence in the extensive practice of his profession.

Doctor Carter is a native Missourian, having been born in St. Joseph on July 12, 1850. After attending the public schools the doctor entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and was graduated with high honors from that famous institution in 1873. He began the practice of his profession in Wathena on April 9th, of that same year and has resided there ever since. In 1876 Doctor Carter was married by Rev. E. Alward to Miss Jessie Brady in Wathena. One son, Roy B. Carter, was born of the union on March 13, 1881. Doctor Carter has a handsome residence in Wathena, and the many entertainments given by his hospitable wife are a feature of the social life of the town. He also owns a profitable farm a short distance from his home, which is managed by his son, Roy, who is an enterprising and industrious young man. Doctor Carter is considered a leader in his profession and is also prominent in Masonic circles.

Since this article was set in type, Mrs. Carter died April 27, 1915.

Wathena Methodist Church

Its Organization Dates Back to the Territorial Days of Kansas and the Times of Border Strife—Was Built By Alfred Larzelere —Early Incidents of the Lives of the Men Sent There to Preach—A Pastor Who Hauled Down the Confederate Flag From a Tree When Told It Meant Death to Him—History of Organization.

Organized in the Territorial days at a time when Kansas was the scene of what seemed an "irrepressible conflict," with brethren arrayed against brethren, ministers holding divergent views and their flocks hopelessly split into factions, it can not be said that the future of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Wathena looked bright. But now, looking back over the long stretch of years to the date of its organization, which was June 12, 1858, one finds that, while there was a period of thrills in its history, this church has had a remarkable career and has done as much, if not more than any other in this country in the advancement of God's Kingdom on earth.

The Rev. T. McK. Munhall was the organizer of the Wathena Methodist Episcopal Church in that month of June, 1858. He was one of the pioneers of Methodism in the territory west of the Mississippi River. The first pastor was the Rev. D. H. May, who, at his own request, was transferred to Missouri, at the time of the Border Trouble, after serving five months. The next pastor, and the second within its first year, was the Rev. Mr. Blake, who remained one year, ministering to the faithful little flock.

The Rev. O. B. Gardner was appointed as pastor of this church in 1860. There was great excitement at the time, preceding the Civil War, and Mr. Gardner met with a cool reception. There was dissension in the church. Notwithstanding this coolness toward him the pastor stayed on for two years, leaving in 1862. He served both Wathena and Elwood during that time, living one year in Wathena and one year in Elwood. Brother Gardner, as he was called, was a man of courage, as the following incident of his pastorate plainly will show:

Upon arising from his bed on the morning of May 1st, 1861, Mr. Gardner looked out of his window and saw a Confederate flag floating from the topmost branches of a tall sycamore tree. On the body of the tree near the earth was a notice to the effect that it would be death to the one who tore down the flag, and stating that it was the flag that God intended should float over the capitol in Washington. It was quite early in the morning, before breakfast time, when men began to gather around that tree, coming from all parts of that timbered town. The concensus of opinion among the men seems to have been that the flag should be pulled down and torn to pieces, but every one appeared to be waiting for somebody else to climb the tree. While they were standing there the pastor of the church appeared among them, with grim determination written in every line of his face.

"Boys," Mr. Gardner said, "I am ready to die, and no secession flag can float while I live."

He spoke to the men, giving orders concerning his burial and the message to be sent to his people should he meet his fate. Then he calmly laid off his coat and shinned up that sycamore tree. In the crowd were five secessionists who started a protest, but that was as far as they were able to get. Mr. Gardner pulled down the flag, descended to the ground and tore it into ribbons. The crowd, incensed at the conduct of the five secessionists, and in sympathy with the pastor, seized them, taking the obstreperous fellows to the Missouri River, which was only 200 yards distant, shoved them on a ferry boat and told the pro-slaveryites never to show up on the Kansas side of the river. The Rev. Mr. Gardner was commended for his valor, and his nerve. It was not the first time a man of God had climbed a sycamore tree. Doubtless the preacher recalled the story of the little man, Zaccheus, who climbed a sycamore tree to see Jesus pass by and was rewarded.

The story above related is told by Mr. Robert H. Larzelere, one of the highly respected citizens of Doniphan County who has resided sixty years southwest of Wathena on the old Pottawatomie road. His father was speaker of the first Free State legislature in 1859.

During the year 1862 and 1863 the Rev. Benjamin Franklin Bowman, father of Collins H. Bowman, who is one of the leaders of the church today, served the church as its pastor. In 1864 and 1865 the Rev. James Lawrence was the pastor. He is now on the superanuated list residing in Lawrence, Kansas. In 1866 the Rev. J. Paulson was pastor and during his pastorate they erected the brick church building, which was 40x60 feet in dimensions.

Work on that structure began September 8, 1866, and the church was dedicated February 18, 1867. The building was made of brick burned by Andy Morris in a kiln not two hundred yards from the site, and erected by Alfred Larzelere. The dimension lumber is of native wood sawed from our virgin timber. During the erection of the church the ladies of Wathena held a grand festival in the uncompleted building on the evening of December 26, 1866, for the benefit of the church, which was attended by many persons from Elwood, Bellemont, Palermo, Geary City, Doniphan, Blair, Columbus and Troy. Robert Tracy who resides at 636 Powell street, St. Joseph, was present at the feast. The net proceeds of the festival were $121.60, which was applied on the church. It was spoken of for many years afterward as the greatest function ever held in Wathena.

After the pastorate of the Rev. J. Paulson the pulpit of the church was filled with some of the great men of Methodism in Kansas, some remaining one year, others two years, and others for a longer period.

The pastorate of each began April 1 of the year mentioned after the name, continuing until his successor began, as follows:

G. W. Houts, 1869; James T. Hanna, 1871; D. B. Campbell, 1876; L. B. Morton, 1880; F. M. Pickles, 1881; J. Biddison, 1882; B. F. Bowman, 1885; J. W. Warner, 1887; L. I. McDougal, 1888; L. H. Baker, 1888; S. P. Jacobs, 1889; J. B. Gibson, 1890; S. C. Lamb, 1891; James H. Green, 1892; T. B. Adell, 1895; D. M. Houghtelling, 1897; F. C. Allen, 1897; William C. Hansen, 1898; James T. Doty, 1900; J. E. Johnston, 1900; E. L. Butler, 1902; J. B. Vernon, 1904; William L. Morris, 1906; W. J. Byers, 1909; J. E. Bishop, 1912; E. L. Geyer, 1915.

The Rev. L. I. McDougal (1888) resigned his pastorate to attend school and his term was finished by the Rev. L. H. Baker. F. C. Allen completed D. M. Houghtelling's term. J. E. Johnston finished James J. Doty's term.

The present pastor of the Wathena Methodist Episcopal Church is the Rev. E. L. Geyer. The present church membership is 180. The Sunday school did not become permanent until 1886, when it was organized with forty members, since which it has grown to 140. The present officers of the Sunday school are:

Superintendent, George L. Stuart.
Assistant Superintendent, Edna S. Whitney.
Secretary, Fred Clobridge.
Treasurer, Mary Harding.
Librarian, Nellie Hayes.
Organist, Joyce Fugar.
Supt. Home Dept., Della Spaulding.
Supt. Cradle Roll, Mrs. Ernest Fugar.
Supt. Missions, Retta Stuart.
Teachers: T. B. Chalk, Mrs. Emma Miller, Rev. E. L. Geyer, Edna Whitney, Mrs. Mike Bauer, Marguerite Larzelere, C. H. Bowman, Mary Smith, Belle Clark, Fredreka Miller, Louise Richards, Mrs. Lewis.

Trustees of the church: Mike Bauer, Jacob Miller, Collins H. Bowman, Ernest Fugar, George T. Groh.

The Rev. Mr. Geyer says this is the best Sunday school he ever knew in a town of 800 people. The teachers all take an interest in the work and Superintendent George L. Stuart is a live wire. He is about thirty years old and is manager of the co-operative store in Wathena. Collins H. Bowman, son of the Rev. Benjamin Franklin Bowman, one of the former pastors, is one of the leaders in the church. Brother Bowman, with Mike Bauer, George L. Stuart, Jacob Miller and other members have started a movement for a new church to cost $10,000.

GEORGE MANVILLE

Prominent Wathena Merchant Was Seventeen Years Postmaster, Also a Live Wire Chautauquan.

One of the leading spirits of Wathena is George Manville, the well-known and popular dealer in groceries and implements. Mr. Manville was born at Holmes Wynsburg, Ohio, October 7, 1850, and came west with his parents in 1855. The family first located in Missouri, but after ten years' residence in that state they decided to move further west into Kansas. They arrived in Doniphan County May 10, 1865, and located at Wathena.

After receiving his training in the home and school, George Manville went to farming near Wathena in Washington Township, which he followed for several years. He gave up farming in 1881 and entered in the mercantile business in Wathena. He has always carried a large stock of groceries and implements and has enjoyed an exceptionally good trade with the people of Wathena and surrounding country.

On April 15, 1897, when William McKinley was President, Mr. Manville was appointed postmaster of Wathena. In that position he served the people with such fidelity that he was continued in office under Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft, retiring June 16, 1914, in the second year of the present administration.

During his long residence in Wathena, Mr. Manville has been one of the town's leading spirits and best citizens. He is one of the pillars of the Wathena Chautauqua.

Mr. Manville married Carrie Ellen Winn, Marh 7, 1871. Seven children were born to them, all in Washington Township. They are Mary Elizabeth, Ellen, Carrie Belle, Anna, William H., Helen, Hattie and Frank Leo. All of these are now grown and are doing well. They are an honor to their parents, who are themselves honored by the people.

Young Lady Killed

On Sunday afternoon, March 12, 1871, a terrible accident occurred at Elwood, resulting in the sudden death of Miss Margaret Carter. Mr. Barney Carter, with his two daughters, had been out in the country visiting friends. When, on returning, in crossing a gulley, the driver was thrown out and the horse, becoming frightened, started on the run. The horse had gone but a few yards when the younger daughter jumped out of the vehicle and escaped unhurt. The elder daughter, Miss Margaret Carter, retained her place until the horse had run some distance, when the buggy was overturned and she was thrown out, her head striking against a tree with such force as to fracture the skull and produce instant death. When the father and sister reached the scene they found the unfortunate girl lying in a pool of blood, with a ghastly wound in the forehead and another in the lower part of the face. The accident cast a gloom over the entire community and it seemed that most everyone in the neighborhood gathered at the residence to view the remains of the unfortunate girl, who was held in high esteem by everyone in the vicinity.

Fruit Growers State Bank

Established 1901—A Strong and Ably Conducted Financial Institution That Has Always Been a Big Factor in Growth and Development of Wathena and Section.

In a statistical review of Wathena and this part of Doniphan County, due prominence must be accorded the Fruit Growers State Bank, when mentioning the causes that have been potential in bringing both town and county to their present high state of development.

Standing today as one of the strongest financial institutions in Doniphan County, but few banks in this part of Kansas have a more marked degree of success or can point with pardonable pride to a more creditable showing in the relations sustained between it and the community in which it has done business since 1901. Those who are posted, recognize the fact that the advancement of cities and the development of the country at large depends to no small extent upon the solidity, enterprise and liberality of its banking institutions. They are the bone, sinew and life-blood of every forward movement. Such is the history of this bank.

The bank's statements, issued every few months, reflect a management both safe and conservative; while, on the other hand, its reputation for liberality in extending accommodations to patrons is widely known. Its funds are always available, within reasonable amounts, on good security, and at most attractive rates. Its growth through prosperity and panic tells a wonderfully convincing story of efficiency, service, square dealing and careful management.

George F. English

Fruit Growers State Bank. George F. English standing in the foreground.

Mr. F. H. Drosselmeier, president, is so well and favorably known that any word of commendation is superfluous. Suffice it to say that he is a prominent farmer and stockman, likewise financier, and at present is serving the people of this region as county commissioner.

Mr. Jacob Miller, vice-president, is an influential business man of Wathena, being identified with the drug and other commercial enterprises of the town. He is a successful alfalfa farmer and poultry raiser.

George F. English, the cashier, has been in charge less than three years, but in that brief period, has won for himself a warm spot in the hearts of those he serves. He is active in social and civil affairs of Wathena; also secretary of the Wathena Chautauqua, and president of the city council, beside being prominent in banking circles in this part of the state.

These three men, together with Mrs. George F. English and Rev. C. J. English, comprise the directors of the Fruit Growers State Bank.

The bank pays 3 per cent interest on time deposits. It carries all available safeguards to secure its depositors, including burglar-proof vaults, burglary insurance and the funds are further protected by the Kansas State Bank and the Kansas bank depositors' guaranty fund. No bank in this section is better qualified to ask you for a part of your banking business.

BENNETT HANGING

Once County Assessor Turned Horse Thief and Was Hanged by Indignant Citizens.

One of the most remarkable exemplifications of the downward path that a man can tread, when once his mind becomes imbued with the criminal intent, is shown in the case of George D. Bennett, hanged by a mob of indignant citizens at Wathena on Aug. 14, 1864, as a common, "ornery" horse thief. His ignominious end was not a shock to the community, but occasioned only wonder and amazement that the man who once occupied the place as county assessor of Doniphan County could fall so low.

Some few years before the Civil War, George D. Bennett came to Kansas and settled here. He brought his wife with him and in the late 50's purchased a place near Elwood. He was genial, companionable and through his ability as a farmer, and his seeming interest in matters pertaining to civic, political and religious activities, gained the respect and esteem of the entire community. He was a young man and people predicted for him a bright future. His growing popularity led to his incumbency in the office of county assessor, which he filled seemingly to the satisfaction of everyone concerned. Shortly after retiring from this position of trust, however, he fell into bad company and began his downward journey.

Farmers in the neighborhood where he lived near Elwood, began to miss their horses and livestock. Bennett was not suspected for a long time, and even when the trail did lead directly to his door and it was apparent that he was the head of a band of horse thieves, his acquaintances and neighbors were loath to believe it. The time came, however, when the depredations took such a serious aspect that justice overcame sympathy and Bennett was compelled to flee the country.

There followed a period of five years of thievish design on his part. He had organized a gang and they worked not only Doniphan County, but the neighboring counties as well. Efforts which had been made to capture them had proved fruitless, and from the proceeds of his ill-gotten gains Bennett managed to send enough for his wife to maintain her home. Whether or not she was aware of his nefarious business is not on record, but it is believed she knew of his operations, tried to turn him from the way of destruction and, failing, had no other alternative than to remain quiescent under his actions.

In the early summer of 1864 the formerly respected county assessor's activities became too bold and vigilance was resumed by the authorities and farmers. On the night of Saturday, Aug. 13, 1864, word reached the sheriff that Bennett was to pay a visit to his wife at his home in Elwood, and would not arrive until midnight. A posse was hastily formed and just before the clock struck twelve it secreted itself in the fields and behind trees near the Bennett home. Shortly after midnight the leader of the thieves appeared and entered his home. The sheriff did not wish to lose his prey, and waited until about one o'clock, when he and his men burst open the door and before Bennett could draw a weapon he was covered and disarmed.

He made no resistance when he saw that he had reached the end of his road, and was promptly taken to Wathena, arriving there early Sunday morning. The residents of the vicinity were all in favor of a prompt hanging, but it appears that one of the men had recently lost a valuable stallion and upon promise that he would tell where it could be found, Bennett was informed that he would be given a fair trial. The thief gave his word that he would tell and accordingly his shackles were taken from his wrists. While the mob was waiting for him to give the desired information he made a dash for liberty and was shot five times before he had gone twenty yards.

"I'll be damned if I tell," were his words as he was brought back badly wounded but still conscious.

A noose was quickly formed, and amid the jeers and hostile demonstration of the mob, he was "strung up." Thus ended the career of a Doniphan County man who gave promise of being one of the most respected citizens. Whiskey, gambling and bad companions were the cause of his downfall.

OBLIGING STATION AGENT

Will Ross Kendall, Genial Official for the Rock Island and Grand Island Railroads at the Union Depot in Wathena Is an Expert on Handling Railroad Business—Is Well Liked by Traveling Public and the People Generally—Mrs. Kendall Is an Active Church Worker.

Will Ross Kendall, station agent for the Rock Island and Grand Island railroads at the union depot in Wathena, is one of the most accommodating railroad officials in Doniphan County.

His genial disposition is never ruffled and his obliging personality is an important factor in always keeping the traveling public in good humor. Ever since he assumed his present position in Wathena Mr. Kendal has continued to make friends for himself and keep the customers of roads highly satisfied at the same time. He is fortunately blessed with a cheerful disposition, in fact it is so sunny that it will dispel the most gloomy grouch.

Mr. Kendall was married May 9, 1900, to Miss Myrtle Lou Filley, near Cameron, Missouri. They have one daughter, Alma Christine, who was born Oct. 12, 1901, and is an exceedingly bright child devoted to her parents and much beloved by her companions and playmates. Mrs. Kendall takes an active part in Methodist church work, being a member of the different aid societies and one of the leading women in the town.

COLLINS H. AND HOMER C. BOWMAN

Two Well-Known Citizens of Wathena Are Sons of a Pioneer Methodist Minister and Founder of Early Day Churches in Kansas.

Collins H. Bowman and Homer C. Bowman, residents of Wathena, are among the honored citizens of Doniphan County. They are sons of the Rev. Mr. Benjamin F. Bowman, who came to this county in 1856, and spent many years in the ministerial field for the Methodist Episcopal Church, during which he helped in the founding of several churches. The two sons have each reared a family in Doniphan County and the Bowmans are recognized as among our best people.

Store Burglarized

About 4 o'clock Saturday morning, Jan. 5, 1867, the store of Craig & Bro. in Wathena was entered by burglars. After effecting an entrance, one of the party (supposed to be four in number) went upstairs to the sleeping apartment of Mr. Obe Craig and took the safe key out of his trousers pocket. They then opened the safe and took some eight or nine hundred dollars in greenbacks and some $40 in gold and silver and goods to the value of about $100 and absconded unmolested. Mr. Obe. Craig now resides in St. Joseph, Missouri, and is connected with the firm of Craig Bros. Produce Company, who have bought Harry L. Macomber's orchard several times.

A Wathena Teacher

Miss Bethel Chalk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Chalk, of Wathena, one of the efficient school teachers of Doniphan County, was born at Florence, Kansas, Dec. 30, 1892. Her mother is a sister of W. F. Harlow, who was popular in educational work in Doniphan County in 1885, and who now resides in San Diego, California.

The subject of this sketch graduated from the high school at Blue Rapids before coming to Doniphan County. She taught her first school at Palermo and is teaching her third term in the Wathena school.

Aug. 7, 1866, Mrs. Frances Paul, aged thirty years, died at Wathena.

Christian Poirer First Man to Start Fruit Industry Which Has Made Wathena Famous—Town Named After Famous Kickapoo Chief Who Lived on the Site About 1852—Original Settler on the Land Was Pete Cadue, an Old Indian Trader Who Bore the Title of "Squaw Pete" and Lived on the Land as Early as 1844—Town Laid Out in 1856 and Incorporated as a City in 1873—Mike Bauer, Jr., Is Mayor and Will Martin, P. M.

The earliest known history of Wathena dates back to the year 1844, when Peter Cadue, an Indian trader and interpreter for the Kickapoo tribe, settled on the present site of the town.

The land around the present town of Wathena was originally part of the Kickapoo Indian country, and a village of the tribe once existed on the townsite.

Cadue, or, as he was familiarly known to early Indian traders, "Squaw Pete," removed to the Cadue Reserve, now known as Petersburg Bottom, between the defunct town of Palermo and Geary City. "Pete" had married a Kickapoo maiden and the reservation was set apart for his use on account of the tribal relationship existing between "Pete" and the Indians.

"Pete" was a well-known character, even at that early day, and he had a wide acquaintance among all the Indians in the Western country. It has been frequently stated that he had a squaw in every tribe he ever visited in his trading excursions. He made it a rule to marry into each tribe, in order to make a certainty of corralling all their furs and skins in trade for tinsel and knick-knacks.

With the removal of "Pete" to his own private reserve, the land on which Wathena is built remained idle until 1852, when Wah-ce-na, or Wathena, chief of the Kickapoos, settled there. He was a progressive individual, and had made considerable improvements.

Out of friendship for Pete, he was the first to suggest that the stream which runs through the town today be named Peter's Creek.

Rev. Wm. H. Goode, who was a missionary among several Indian tribes in Kansas, in the early days of the territory, in his book, "Outposts of Zion," thus describes a visit in July, 1854, to the Kickapoo Indian chief, Wathena, who then lived where the town of Wathena, in Doniphan County, now stands.

"During this excursion, I had an interesting visit to the wigwam of Wathe-na, a man of some consequence among the Kickapoos, and found his establishment fitted up after the real Indian style, but superior to anything of the kind I had witnessed. The domicile consisted of two large bark camps, of two apartments each; the sides within were hung with flag matting and the apartments furnished with in catching and breaking wild oxen, and the females employed in manufacturing the flag matting. Marks of thrift and neatness were apparent not commonly found in Indian life."

Mrs. Susan Holt of Greenleaf, Kansas, a sister to John W. McChesney, the celebrated Red Wing stoneware man, whose name is as familiar to the grocerymen of Kansas as that of President Wilson, relates several ludicrous events which transpired on her visit to the camp of Chief Wa-the-na on August 23, 1854. One of these stories is concerning a baptismal service conducted by Rev. J. G. Clark in Elwood, doubtless the first public immersion in Elwood, although Father Irvin had performed the ceremony several times at the old mission. After the preacher had completed his sacred services an old Indian who had been a breathless spectator, evidently got thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the meeting, for he unexpectedly grabbed a squaw by the shoulders and plunged her in the river, much to the consternation of the assembly.

Another recollection of the Greenleaf lady, mentioned above, is that on April 1, 1854, Daniel Vanderslice, who was Indian agent at the old mission, employed a large force of men to cut a road through the forest from the ferry, which landed on the west bank of the Missouri River at Elwood, to Wathena, the trading post which Benjamin Harding had established. The contract was let to Ebenezer Blackiston and Henry Smallwood.

Mrs. Holt is authority for the statement that the first white child born in Washington Township was the daughter of J. R. Whitehead. She recalls, too, that old Chief Wathena was made very proud indeed in July, 1854, by his wigwam being used for religious services by the Methodists.

This woman, who has lived to see the wonderful development of the fruit industry in Doniphan County, says that away back in the spring of 1854, Christian Poirer put out a few berry plants, and the beginning of a vineyard, and he, as little as anyone, realized that the soil was peculiarly and particularly adapted for that branch of agriculture.

Soon after the arrival of Wathena, Benjamin Harding, one of the leaders of the Doniphan County pioneer movement, set up a little trading post, but the first building on the present townsite was a log cabin that had been in-

been completed and was finished in 1854, by Milton E. Bryan. Harding's shack was located in what is now north Wathena.

The land which Cox had settled on was also the site of Wathena's new tribal residence and in 1856 the entire quarter section was bought by M. E. Bryan, P. Morse and W. Ridenbaugh, who paid Mr. Cox $750, in addition to a considerable sum to Wathena for his improvements.

Upon securing ownership to the land, Mr. Bryan, Mr. Morse and Mr. Ridenbaugh laid out the town during the early summer. The first general store was built during the autumn of 1856, and operated by Thomas Kemper. It was known as the "St. Joe Store," and stood on the original site a little back from the main street, for over forty years.

Albert Heath, the first lawyer to come to the little town, established a hotel and did a thriving business between the hotel and the law. Many of the old-timers in after years contended that Florian Leiber had a blacksmith shop on the site of Wathena as early as 1854. The first drug store in Wathena was started in 1863 by G. Miller, who conducted it for almost forty years.

Previous to the platting of the town, Major Vanderslice, the Indian agent, let a contract to Ebenezer Blackiston and Henderson Smallwood to cut a road 100 feet wide from the St. Joseph ferry to Wathena. In after years that was known as the Rock road. Taply Ralph and Robert McSparren were two of the straw bosses employed by the contractors in building the road.

While the present town of Wathena was still a trading post of small dimensions, a postoffice was established in 1856, August 2, with Thompson Kemper as postmaster. He was one of the early settlers to arrive on the townsite and was considered a public spirited man and a safe government employe. He was engaged in business for several years in Wathena and thought the postoffice a nuisance and on July 12, 1859, turned it over to A. B. Bryant, who held the office until March 7, 1860, when Lyman Nash assumed the duties of postmaster. The present postmaster is Will H. Martin.

Wathena did not grow as rapidly as had been anticipated during the first years of its existence, and it was not until Elwood began to decline at the beginning of the war that the town took on new life. Many of the leading business men of Elwood moved there and there was considerable impetus given to building operations.

With the influx of so many kinds of new business, the early settlers concluded that the townsite would be too small for all the business operations and several additions were laid out. Benjamin Harding, whose land joined the original site, laid off an addition called North Wathena, and Constant Poirer laid off an addition on the west, which he called Constantinople, or West Wathena. H. S. Creal also laid out an addition which he named after himself.

In 1873, when Wathena began to assume the proportions of a real town, the citizens decided to incorporate as a city. O. Craig was elected first mayor, and James Mitchell city clerk. The present mayor and city clerk are Mike Bauer, Jr., and Lawrence Poirer.

The town of Wathena has been well supplied with schools since the first days of settlement. A frame school was erected as early as 1857, where the children of the town and adjacent territory were taught for about nine years. In 1867 a large frame house was built for school purposes, and in after years was used as a colored school. In 1870 an elegant brick structure for the white children was erected at a cost of $10,000, Alfred Larzelere being the contractor. At the present time Wathena has ample accommodations of the most modern kind for all the children of school age, and the teachers take rank with those employed in any city of its size in the country.

Among the earliest manufacturing industries in Wathena was a mill that was built in 1860, at a cost of $1,000. After being operated ten years by Barr, Craig & Company, it was purchased by Snively & Hedges for $10,500. Of course, considerable improvements had been made on the original plans and more have been installed since then. It was a steam mill. The Wathena water mill was built on Peter's Creek by S. Cox, in 1862, and cost, with machinery, about $2,500. It was burned in March, 1881, and was replaced by a mill built the same year by J. W. Cook at a cost of $3,200. In 1881 Chill & Perigo built a small corn mill near the railway, at a cost of $1,000.

Wathena is the second town of commercial importance in Doniphan County, and the second in population. It is located in the heart of the great Doniphan County fruit belt, and is the center of the fruit-shipping industry of the county. The population surrounding the town is composed of people of many nationalities who are industrious and progressive. After the first few years of its life, Wathena has continued to have a gradual growth in population, and a steady expansion in trade and business. The town is abundantly supplied with shops, stores and industrial plants of all kinds and its people are characterized by energy and industrial activity.

Germans Good Church Members

Wathena German M. E. Church Looks Back With Pride to Fifty-Six Years of Successful Work in Caring for the Spiritual Welfare of the Early Settlers and Their Descendants—People From the Fatherland Were Thrifty and God-Fearing and Preserved Their Faith.

Rev. Mr. Henry Meyer, Rev. Charles Harms, Rev. Herman Elfeldt, Rev. Charles Ott and Rev. F. Fegenbaum Are Numbered Among the Pastors Who Assisted in Building the Church.

The characteristic thrift and strength of character which is ever present in the German race was forcibly exemplified by the pioneers from the Fatherland who came to Doniphan County in the rough territorial days. Even if the country and the general environment were wild, those early settlers of German birth or descent did not neglect their church or their religious worship. A striking example of the staying qualities of the German people under adverse conditions will be found by perusing the history of the Wathena German Methodist Episcopal Church, written by a reverend clergyman familiar with facts and details. This history will undoubtedly prove interesting, as it will show how the cause of Christ was promulgated and advanced by the few scattering Germans who comprised the early settlers of Doniphan County.

It is a long time to look back to 1858 when Doniphan County was part of the "wild and wooly" West. The country was sparsely settled then and many of those who took up land here were almost as wild as the unbroken ground. However, the German folks were among some of the early arrivals and while battling to subdue the prairie and cultivate the soil, they did not forget their early religious teachings.

And so it was with feelings of thankfulness that they welcomed the first M. E. missionary who came to preach the word of God and establish worship for the German settlers of that faith. Church buildings were an unknown quantity in the region at the time and the settlers gathered for services in log cabins and maybe sometimes in the open air, the weather permitting. The German settlers of the M. E. faith were not very numerous, but they gave of their scanty means to encourage the early missionaries in their noble work.

When the first missionary that had been appointed by the Methodist Episcopal Church arrived in Doniphan County in 1858 he found no organized membership among the German population, but in 1872 the records show that there was a membership of sixty-four in full connection with the church, and nineteen probationers.

The first German M. E. Church building was a log structure erected at Palermo, in 1860, and since that time four other places of worship have been erected from contributions by the faithful congregation. The present church edifice in Wathena is a development of the early log cabin and its handsome quarters is a grand testimonal to the faith and perseverance of the German Methodist Episcopalians and their descendants.

This sketch would scarcely be complete without a word relative to the men under whose leauership the church has grown and prospered. Rev. Henry Meyer, who in 1858 laid the foundation, has been followed by twenty-three preachers, whose pastorates covered periods of from one to five years. Names most frequently mentioned today are those of Charles Harms, Charles Ott and Herman Elfeldt. During their pastorates, numerous spiritual and material blessings were experienced. All three had the privilege to conduct the construction or purchase of church buildings or parsonages. Reverend F. W. Fegenbaum was probably the best known, as he not only served as pastor in 1882 and 1883, but also had his home in Wathena for about nine years after his superannuation. He died February 27, 1914, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jacob Miller, in Wathena.

The present pastor, Reverend E. Crepin, has spent four years of active service in this field, and has made himself well beloved not only by his parishioners, but by the citizens at large. He is of a very unassuming manner, a devout Christian gentleman, and a student of human nature.

During the time from 1858 and 1911, the German language had been used almost exclusively in the services of the church, but since then, English and German, the former predominating, have been used.

First Alfalfa Sowed in Elwood Bottoms

Doniphan County is recognized now as a fine alfalfa country, but it is scarcely more than twenty years ago that the first hay of this kind was grown. N. H. Porter was the first man to raise a crop of this product, and he received a good price for it. Mr. Porter was born in Alden, Iowa, in 1859, and went to Wathena with his parents a few years later. In 1870, his father and mother moved to Elwood on what was known as the Westcott Farm, and which the senior Mr. Porter purchased for $50 an acre.

At that time alfalfa was almost unheard of and the hay merchants would not purchase it because it was not deemed fit for use. There were several sawmills in the bottoms at the time, and most of the energies of the farmers were devoted to cutting and hauling logs. The principal industry among the farmers was the growing of hemp and later they changed to wheat and corn.

The first alfalfa planted was by Mr. Porter in 1894. It was an experiment, and he tried at first about one-quarter of an acre. This was a success, and sold for a good price at St. Joseph, so the following year his brother, Joseph Porter, planted about one-half an acre. Down through the years there has come experience and today the Elwood bottoms are filled with alfalfa, the crop totaling thousands of dollars each year. The feeders have become acquainted with it and the market is not only steady, but it is good. Alfalfa is now one of the principal products of Doniphan County.

James Fulton Killed

On Friday evening, Aug. 7, 1874, a rough-looking stranger appeared at the home of James Fulton, three miles north of Wathena, and said he wanted work. Mr. Fulton said he had need of a man, took in the stranger, who said his name was Stewart, and the next morning, Saturday, Aug. 8, 1874, gave him a scythe and told him to go into the field and cut weeds. The stranger worked about twenty minutes, and, dropping his implement, walked off. Mr. Fulton saw him leaving, and followed. He asked why he was leaving. The man replied, because he did not feel like working. Mr. Fulton then asked him to pay for his supper, breakfast and lodging. The stranger became angered, and drawing a revolver, shot Fulton, killing him almost instantly. He then escaped across the Missouri river and never was captured.

Reunion in Elwood

On Thursday, Sept. 24, 1891, there was a fine meeting of old settlers in Elwood Park. There were races, base ball games, music and a special chariot race for ladies in addition to a fine dinner. Here the older citizens of Doniphan County gathered round the festive board and told stories of their early struggles and of the pioneers, many of whom have long ago passed to the great beyond. All arrangements for the reunion were under the direction of F. J. Clarkson and the affair, which was a decided success, was followed by another reunion the next year. It is to be hoped that the plan will be reinaugurated and that a reunion of the pioneers will be held again even at this late date.

A Booster By Instinct

L. A. Libel, One of the Best Known Bankers in the State and Former Mayor of Wathena, Is a Progressive Citizen Endowed With the True Spirit of Enterprise—A Booster for the Wathena-St. Joseph Chautauqua and a Man of Civic Pride—A Friend to Everyone.

It is not of record that any community in the country can boast of a more enterprising and public-spirited citizen than Doniphan County generally and Wathena particularly can, when referring to the successful achievements of Lambert A. Libel.

Mr. Libel is essentially a self-made man. His success in life is unequivocally the result of his own hereditary business acumen, backed up with a vigorous application to thorough details in all his undertakings. Although only thirty-five years of age, Mr. Libel has made his impress in the financial and business world, in a manner that anybody might well emulate.

Deprived of the opportunities of a collegiate education, Mr. Libel took the sensible course of adapting himself to exigencies of the most adverse conditions and obtained a post-graduate course in the university of hard but beneficial experience. He confronted the world with a grim determination to succeed, and readers of this article will readily perceive that his stamina has been admirably rewarded.

Mr. Libel is the son of John F. and Mary Libel, and is a true type of the Doniphan County product. He was born on a farm a short distance west of Severance, on January 16, 1879. The educational advantages afforded farmers' children of that section were not of the metropolitan kind, and young Libel had to be satisfied with what learning he could acquire in the Star school house, two miles south of Leona.

When about twenty years of age, the subject of this sketch secured an apprentice position in the Farmers' Bank of Leona, having been required to walk two miles each way to and from his work each day. He was industrious and obliging to the customers of the bank, and his habits of frugality were noticed by many of the substantial customers of the institution. His strict attention to duty and his engaging personality soon attracted the attention of B. N. Forbes, and, six months after he had entered the employ of the Leona bank, young Libel was tendered a position by Mr. Forbes when he organized the Fruit Growers State Bank of Wathena.

In the first few years of the twentieth century, there was unmistabable evidence of prosperity throughout

Lambert A. Libel

Doniphan County, with all the indications of a protracted period of good times. This encouraging industrial condition was not lost on Mr. Libel, who quickly perceived the growing tendency toward great wealth by the proper cultivation of the farms and orchards of the county. So, in 1903, he sure enough realized that there was room enough for two banks in Wathena. After associating a number of the most influential men of the community in the new venture, the portant position of cashier and manager.

The organization of the new bank was favorably commented upon all over the county and state, and the business acumen and financial ability of the cashier was referred to in very optimistic terms. Mr. Libel was only about twenty-three years old at the time, and many of the newspapers of the country commented on the fact that he was the youngest bank manager in the United States, and predicted unlimited success for the youthful manager. When the Farmers' State Bank was organized the capital stock was placed at $10,000, but so successful and extensive had the business become that seven years later it was found necessary to increase the capital stock to $20,000. That was in 1910, and the transactions of the institution have grown by leaps and bounds ever since.

The remarkable prosperity of the Farmers' State Bank of Wathena can scarcely be wondered at when the foresight and general popularity of the manager is taken into consideration. The bank is conceded to be the second largest in the county, in point of total assets, having been officially reported to own over a quarter of a million dollars a short time ago. This remarkable showing is a fair indication of the confidence and esteem in which Mr. Libel is held by the people of Doniphan County.

One would naturally suppose that a successful banker would devote all his energies to the affairs of his own institution, but so active is Mr. Libel's mental nature that he has found time to become interested in nearly every local enterprise in his home town. In addition to all this he is an enthusiastic booster for every proposition that has either the moral, educational or commercial welfare for its object. Mr. Libel is also substantially interested in the German-American State Bank of Atchison, Kansas, and is a member of the executive committee of the Chautauqua at Wathena for a number of years, and his energies for the promotion of this meritorious object were indefatigable and self-sacrificing.

The people of Wathena have long ago realized the keen business foresight displayed by Mr. Libel while he was mayor of his home town. During the six years that Mr. Libel was at the head of the city government, the municipal improvements under his administrations were of such a permanent character as to insure their availability for future generations. It is a well-known fact that under his direction the city of Wathena took on the aspect of a real live town. All the superannuated old board pavements and rickety old street crossings were removed and replaced with durable cement walks and crossings.

The superb lighting system with which Wathena is now supplied was secured through the efforts of Mr. Libel during his term as mayor. Previously it had been impossible to obtain a twenty-four hour electrical service in a town the size of Wathena, and Mayor Libel clearly saw the necessity of obtaining the service from an outside source. So an arrangement was perfected whereby Wathena was lighted by power from St. Joseph, it being one of the first small towns to install its lighting system with electrical current supplied by transmission from a large city. Mr. Libel was for many years president of the Wathena Horse Show Association, which held shows annually with great success on the Chautauqua grounds. He is also one of the vice-presidents and a member of the executive committee of the Kansas State Bankers' Association, and during the annual meetings of that body, takes an active interest in the deliberations.

St. Joseph's Church, Wathena, Kansas. Rev. Father Joseph Eiker, pastor.

It is as a good roads booster that Mr. Libel shines also. He believes that good roads are as essential to the prosperity and commercial advancement of any rural community as good streets are to the progress of a city. He likes the automobile, and long ago became a great patron of such means of transportation. But without good roads its usefulness would be practically eliminated for country service, so it was with the idea of giving a practical impulse to the movement that Mr. Libel became a member of the executive committee of the Rock Island highway and the Pike's Peak ocean to ocean highway which pass through Doniphan County.

Occupied with all those numerous and exacting duties and responsibilities, it would scarcely seem possible for Mr. Libel to find time for anything but the necessary amount of sleep. It is a fact, however, that his early environment on the farm has not yet been forgotten, and whenever opportunity presents itself he devotes much of his time to his juvenile profession of agriculturist. He is the proud owner of a nice alfalfa and fruit farm within convenient distance of Wathena, and employs only the most progressive methods in operating the same. Mr. Libel was one of the first men in Doniphan County to exhibit a genuine appreciation of the efficacy of the spray and by the regular and judicious use of the spray in his orchard he has had the satisfaction of seeing the trees now double the value of the product of former years.

There is one feature of Lambert A.'s career which it is almost an impossibility to comprehend—that's his married life—because with all his manifold duties and business connections it does not seem that he could possibly find the time to get married. But he did it all right, but it probably was fortunate for all concerned that he entered into matrimony when he was quite young or, chances are, he would have been too busy in later years to have given the important subject any thought whatever.

On the date of June 14, 1905, Mr. Libel led to the altar Miss Agnes L. Bohr, the popular daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Bohr, who reside southwest of Wathena in Wayne Township, and they have been blessed with a family of four interesting children, two girls and two boys. Beautiful Edifice Erected at a Cost of $35,000—One of the Handsomest Places of Worship in Northeastern Kansas—Building Fund Raised By Voluntary Contributions From All Denominations—Rev. Father Eiker, a Young Man With All the Attributes of a Successful Minister—L. A. Libel, F. C. Foley, M. A. Boeh, John Schonfelder and Joseph Schneider Were Appointed a Building Committee.

The Catholic residents of Wathena and vicinity, and the people of that section in general, are exceedingly proud of the new St. Joseph's Church, completed last year at a cost of $35,000.

The church edifice is an imposing structure, and has an exterior which is both handsome and attractive. The style of architecture is modern and numerous large stained glass windows admit a flow of mellow light to every part of the interior.

The promptness with which the members of the congregation of St. Joseph's, and the people of all denominations, respond to the call for contributions with which to build a new church showed a true spirit of Christian liberality. The fact that the church was completed in less than two years after the necessity for building it had first been suggested, demonstrates the hearty manner in which the people of Wathena and their neighbors co-operated to have the project completed.

The Rev. Father Joseph Eiker.

For some years the growth of the Catholic population in and around Wathena has been so steady that the old church was becoming inadequate to accommodate the increasing membership. When Rev. Mr. Joseph Eiker, the pastor, took charge of St. Joseph's in 1912, he realized the necessiay of a larger church, and the matter was suggested to the congregation by Right Rev. Bishop John Ward and the reverend pastor. The church membership held a general meeting in the spring of 1912, at which time they voted to have the church built on its present site, and the pastor was authorized to select a building committee to solicit contributions for the building fund.

The task of raising sufficient funds for the new church building was at once begun, and so generously did the members and their non-Catholic friends respond, that the pastor and the committee felt justified in employing Trunk & Gordon, architects of St. Joseph, to draw plans and specifications for the edifice. The contract was awarded to V. Bauer & Son, January 10, 1913, and ground was broken for the new church the following spring. The corner stone was laid by Right Rev. Bishop Ward, May 13, 1913, and the building was completed and the first mass celebrated therein by Rev. Joseph Eiker, the pastor, February 22, 1914. The church was dedicated April 14, 1914.

The history of the Catholic Church of Wathena dates back to the primitive days of the settlement of Kansas, but no records are extant of the Church's early history up to 1856, when a pioneer missionary, Rev. Henry Lemke, of the Benedictine Fathers, visited the Catholic settlers in and around Wathena. Father Lemke was a lovable and devout man, and his regular visits to the settlements along the river and far into the interior were looked forward to with keen anticipation by the hardy pioneers.

Father Lemke was succeeded in his missionary labors by several other members of the Benedictine order until 1861, when Rev. Fathers Koch and Faber, two secular priests, had charge of the work. They were succeeded by Rev. Thomas Bartle, who for twelve years had charge of the Mission at Wathena, and under whose direction the first church building was erected in 1869 at a cost of $5,500. The structure was a brick building, 36x65 feet, and it still stands as it was originally built, having afforded the faithful of the parish a house of worship for forty-five years.

The site of the old church was donated by Anna M. Creal in 1869, and the records show that the membership was less than 100 at that time. The present membership of St. Joseph's is fast approaching 800 souls. The good lady who was endowed with such kindly Christian qualities was a devout Catholic and felt as if she were an instrument of Providence in being circumstanced so that she could donate the site for the first church in those early days. Her motives were rightly appreciated for the scattering Catholic population and their non-Catholic friends were quick to respond to the call for contributions for the erection of the church.

Reverend Father Eiker, the energetic pastor of St. Joseph's, is a young clergyman with all the attributes of a successful minister of the gospel. He is a very learned man, as are all the members of the Benedictine order. Although his pastoral duties keep him constantly on the move, he deyotes much time, even at night, to the study of the Scriptures and is known to be an authority on the dogmas of the Catholic Church.

Reverend Father Eiker feels extremely gratified at the generous manner in which the members of St. Joseph's parish, as well as their non-Catholic friends, gave such substantial financial assistance toward the erection of the new church building. The good pastor fondly hopes that as the new church is an ornament to the beautiful town of Wathena, so it will always remain a monument to the Christian spirit and friendly feelings between Catholics and non-Catholics

Court was in session when the court house burned on March 12, 1867, and Judge Graham, who was at that time district judge, secured permission from the authorities of the Presbyterian Church and held court in the church. The first lawsuit tried in the church was the case of the State vs. Samuel Jennings. Stout & Hawkins appeared for the State, Tennent, Keith & Clark for the defense. Sam Jennings was tried for kicking a party in the abdominal regions, but was acquitted. We were unable to learn the victim's name, as the court records do not show it.

Newspaper History

First Publication Issued at Doniphan June 2, 1856, and Others Have Had Interesting Romantic Existences.

The newspapers of Doniphan County date back to ante-bellum days when Kansas was known as the border state, and when there were happenings that were not merely of local interest, but appealed to the reading people of the entire nation. Kansas was rich in happenings in the strife between the North and South because the war centered, so to speak, on the question of whether or not Kansas was to enter as a slave state. So until the first great guns boomed forth, the eyes of the universe were eager in the vigil on Kansas. Harpers' magazine carried a wealth of the chronicles of the struggles and hardships of Kansas. In fact, so great was the interest, even in France, that Victor Hugo saw fit to mention the peerless John Brown in his immortal book "Les Miserables."

It is a generally conceded fact that the power of the press is one of the mightiest of the institutions of civilization. Realizing this, even in those primitive days, men eagerly ventured into this field, and the first chronicle in this county was established June 2, 1856. This was called the Kansas Constitutionalist, a name that was very adaptably given to the paper, which fought through its columns for the territory to be admitted as a free state. Of course, in those early times, dailies were not so far advanced as they are today. The readers were content with wecklies and the greatest number of papers in the entire territory were published weekly.

Competition is the life of trade. It was so in those early times, according to tradition. Thirteen months and two days later, June 4, 1857, the Weekly Chief was established, and has since served its readers with faithfulness and valor.

The general supposition among readers is that the newspaper man has nothing to do excepting on press day, but this is a mistaken idea. He spends much time in gleaning his items, then he must be dexterous in the elucidation of his matter, and is, in fact, often kept from Sunday school because he must give his entire attention to the subject matter which he has under consideration. He must be diplomatic in political matters, an information bureau, a sage and philosopher.

A comparison between the newspaper of yesterday and today must be drawn that the younger generation may appreciate the hardships that were experienced by the pioneers. The matter was "set up" by hand rather than by the modern method of linotype machines. The presses were operated by man-power instead of gasoline, steam or electricity. Papers then were practically one-man concerns, the editor officiating in the capacity of newsgatherer, printer and pressman. More attention was paid to editorials and paragraphs than to local news, but The Chief today far surpassed the paper it was in bygone days in the matter of tinies of The Chief, could tell anything in his columns in a way that would be accepted by everybody better and with more appreciation than any other man in newspaper circles. He could tell anything in print that could be told in words and people would approve of it. He was a reminder of the anecdote related of the Rev. Mr. "Sam" Jones, who, when asked by a woman at Beatrice, Nebraska, why he did not preach like other ministers, told her that in the event he did he would not amount to any more than they. The paper under Miller's regime was more widely quoted than any other in the country. So unique, indeed, were his sayings that they have been handed down from generation to generation until they have become folklore. His personality was reflected in his pages and his brilliancy was known throughout the United States.

Robert Tracy is one of the old newspaper men of Doniphan County, and is now a resident of St. Joseph.

One of the most brilliant men in the United States once said: "Show me your newspapers and I will tell you what kind of a community you live in." If this assertion be true, then the people of Doniphan County are to be congratulated, for they have the oldest and best county newspaper published in Kansas. This quality in management and material, however, is not an accident; neither is it a streak of luck. Rome was not built in a day and America did not attain its present civilization over night.

A newspaper is the product of not days nor months, but of years and years of the most vigorous work and, far more important than all, the injection of character into the publication. Glance over the famous newspapers of today and study their history. Behind them all you will find a dominating personality perhaps dead now, but there when the paper was in the formative period. Take the New York Tribune. Horace Greeley was The Tribune, and The Tribune was Horace Greeley. He outlined its staunch policies so clearly and definitely that even to this advanced day and age, a large portion of his propaganda is still carried out, despite the change in ownership.

The Chicago Tribune is another. It was a reflection of Medill McCormick and Medill McCormick was a reflection of it. Then there is the famous and dignified old Springfield (Mass.) Republican, brain child of Samuel Bowles, who recently died. It has been in that family for more than one hundred years and was not built up in a day. There are numerous examples that might be mentioned, such as the Louisville Courier-Journal, organ of ably piloted by Colonel William R. Henry Watterson, and The Star of Kansas City until a few weeks ago Nelson. Also the Kansas City Daily Journal, edited by Colonel Craig and growth of work and character plus a fidelity to trust and they have made thousands for their owners.

There is a vast difference, however, between the newspaper of today and the newspaper of fifty or sixty years ago. Today editors on metropolitan dailies merely outline their policies, seldom write anything and have a large and steady income which often runs into the thousands. Fifty or sixty years ago the editor not only outlined his own policy, but wrote pretty nearly everything and was responsible for it. He couldn't have made over twenty dollars a week if he had collected for all his advertising, paid notices and subscriptions, which never in the history of the world has been done, and instead of running into millions, his income, in nine cases out of ten, ran from $20 to $30 a week. If he had enough to pay the printer on Saturday night, had $20 for himself and was alive, he considered himself a favorite child of the Goddess of Fortune.

Today it would take six weeks to obtain a personal interview with the editor of a great paper. Maybe he is in Europe and cables the day's instructions from Paris or Rome. Also people are used to seeing newspapers attacked and nothing much is thought of it. How different forty or fifty years ago. Then the editor never had any private offices or secretaries. He was lucky to have a place for his type and press and he could be found any time of day between the hours of six in the morning and ten at night within his place of business. Also people were a little fastidious about what appeared in print concerning them. Indeed, one of the favorite pastimes a generation ago was "making the editor eat his words." Sometimes this plan succeeded and sometimes it did not, but taken all in all, the life of "ye scribe" of long ago was not a bed of roses.

There was one other difference of great moment. This is the day of independent newspapers. A publication will issue forth and proclaim to all the world that it is independent. It will write a few editorials on the danger of the housefly and the desirability of preserving strict neutrality on all occasions where differences arise, and nothing is said. But how different fifty years ago. When a newspaper appeared it had to take one side of the fence or the other, for no straddling was allowed. If the editor didn't opine that he had quite made up his mind, some of the prominent factions of one side or the other would assist him materially in figuring it out. Whether the question was slavery or currency, a man then had to state and state clearly just where he stood. It was in this period that Doniphan County's newspapers began and they brought forth a group of strong, fearless men. Their history is a banner page in the heroic annals of the county.

The first newspaper in the county was established at Doniphan and was called the Kansas Constitutionalist. It made its first appearance on June 2, 1856, and the editor and owner was Thomas J. Key. The subscription price was $2 a year, but there is noth-

Topeka to indicate the life of publication. It is known, however, that the paper was Pro-Slavery, Democratic and rabid in its editorials. It was nine columns wide and composed of four pages. Sometime in 1858—old residents say it was July—the type and press were moved to Iowa Point by Mr. Key and a paper called The Inquirer was launched. Mr. Key remained only a few weeks, selling his interest to Thomas J. Vanderslice, who issued it for a few weeks and it disappeared. Mr. Vanderslice was the father of Howard Vanderslice and well known throughout the county.

Sol Miller arrived in White Cloud on March 28, 1857, and had in mind the publication of a paper. He intended that the first number should make its appearance on June 4 of that year and consequently had the title and date line printed. However, the sale of some Iowa trust lands were ordered and in order to advertise these, Mr. Miller printed the first paper about May 25, 1857. On July 4, 1872, the Kansas Weekly Chief was moved to Troy, where it has been successfully published since and today is the leading paper throughout the county, having a circulation in excess of two thousand copies a week. When Sol Miller, its founder, died April 17, 1897, his son, W. K., continued the paper until July 7, 1898, at which time T. J. Schall leased the paper and changed the size from a nine column folio to a six column quarto, Nov. 24, 1898, and continued to publish same until Aug. 1, 1903, at which time Fred W. Badger became the lessee. His name appeared at the head of the column as editor until April 1, 1904, when H. J. Calnan leased the paper from the Miller heirs, buying it soon afterwards. During a part of this time C. V. Norman, now cashier of the First National Bank of Troy, edited the paper.

The third newspaper was The Geary City Era of Geary City, now a defunct town on the southeast corner of Wayne township near the river. It was established on June 16, 1857, by Edwin H. Grant and Joseph Thompson, the subscription price being $2 a year. Despite an uncongruous editorship, it was a Free State paper and in the issue of Aug. 15, 1857, Vol. 1, No. 12, the name of Earl Marble was added to the list of editors. Here is the political faiths of the men. Grant was a rank Republican, Thompson was a Pro-Slavery Democrat equally radical, and Marble was what today would be called a Wilson neutral. Grant was the first to retire from the publication and Thompson soon followed, leaving Marble to go it alone. He was a scholar and of a highly poetical turn of mind. Scarcely an issue of The Era appeared without one or more of his poems which attracted widespread attention. He continued the paper for a few months, but there is nothing definite to show when it discontinued, although it probably was in the summer or fall of 1858.

Charles Lenhart, a notorious printer in those early days, was employed on the paper during its existence, and the story goes that one night he imbibed of the flowing bowl a little too freely and with mind and body aflame, started out to paint the town a bright crimson. He entered Porter & Cooper's store in which the late Alexander W. Patterson was employed as a clerk, and, drawing his big forty-four, began pounding away at the glassware. Patterson never batted an eye, but drawing a weapon equally large from under the counter emptied one barrel and that was enough. Lenhart fell to the floor with a wound that almost proved fatal. Of the three editors, nothing is known now and it is thought they are dead. Dr. Grant was for a long time employed in the treasury department at Washington; Thompson served in the Civil War and was a resident of St. Joseph, Missouri, while Marble returned to Boston—establishing a literary and musical magazine there and later moving to Denver, Colorado. All of the three were characteristic types of the vigorous and active newspapermen of their period and they played an important part in the develoment of this county.

The first issue of the Elwood Advertiser appeared in Elwood, June 25, 1857, with Fairman and Newman as editors; and it was the fourth paper to be inaugurated in Doniphan County. It was a rank Free State publication. On July 23, 1857, Mr. Newman withdrew and James S. Fairman continued it until Sept. 3, 1857, when E. Russell & Company purchased his interest and published the paper until April 22, 1858. It may have continued longer, but there is no record on file in the State Historical Society to show that it did. While Fairman and Newman were joint proprietors, Edward Russell and Thomas Osborn, the latter afterwards governor, wrote the editorials for the publication which even then suffered several temporary suspensions. Jack Merrick was the editor for a time, but when the Pike's Peak gold excitement arose he, with others, went to Cherry creek, near Denver, and started the first paper there, which it is believed is the present Denver Rocky Mountain News. Merrick was killed or died in the army. Fairman returned to Pennsylvania, where he was later connected with a newspaper, and Newman went North.

The Troy Democrat was the fifth paper established in the county. Near the close of 1858, Joseph Thompson moved the material of the ill fated Geary City Era here and began the publication of a Democratic paper called the Troy Democrat. It lived but a few weeks, when the type and press were taken to St. Joseph, Missouri, for the publication of the Free Democrat in which D. W. Wilder, Thompson and others were interested. It had a petulant career. The Doy rescue occurred during its publication and several of its printers were almost beaten to death. Thompson became involved in a duel, or a challenge to one, with E. Y. Shields, and finally the paper was indicted for opposing slavery. It went out of existence in the excitement incident to the beginning of the Rebellion.

The Palermo Leader, sixth publication in the county, was edited and owned by C. S. Perham and F. W. Emery. It appeared first on Oct. 5, 1858, and was Free State. There are no records in the State Historical Society at Topeka regarding the length of existence of this newspaper, but it is believed to have continued for about two years. The editors both returned to the East, Emery having served in the first state legislature in the spring of 1861, to which he was elected in December, 1859. Perham afterwards connected with his father in an enormous "Gift Enterprise" in New York City. The material of The Leader was purchased about 1862 by Peter H. Peters and moved to Marysville, where he published a paper. On account of its disloyal attitude, the men of Capt. Perry Hutchinson's company of the 13th Kansas regiment, which was then recruiting at Marysville, mobbed the office and Peters was confined for a short time in Fort Leavenworth. Just when the publication passed out of existence is not definitely known, but it probably was when the editor was incarcerated.

Among the other early newspapers in the county was The Iowa Point Dispatch. In the fall of 1859, Ansel Watrous, Jr., and J. W. Biggers, took over a printing office which had been started in Iowa Point and began the paper. Watrous was a young school teacher from Binghamton, New York, and the publication was Democratic. It was edited by Dr. Jabez Robinson, a Maine Yankee, who had lived in Missouri for many years. The paper continued until late in the spring of 1860, the last few weeks under the direction of Charles M. Fisher, a printer from Richmond, Virginia. Watrous returned to New York City, Biggers is known to be dead, and Fisher after enlisting in the 1st Kansas regiment, deserted. Dr. Robinson returned to Missouri, but later emigrated to Montana, when northwestern Missouri became too warm for disloyal men and he was drowned in the Gallatin river, near Helena, while attempting to cross the stream on horseback.

The Elwood Free Press is another of the old papers. The first issue was published Saturday, June 25, 1859, with D. W. Wilder and Albert L. Lee as editors. Frank and Robert Tracy were the printers employed, but in a very short time, H. D. Hunt became the publisher, continuing until Oct. 19, 1861, when he discontinued and enlisted in the 7th Kansas cavalry. A year or two later the material of the office was purchased by John T. and James D. Snoddy, and moved to Mound City, Linn County, and used for years in the publication of the Border Sentinel. D. W. Wilder, after a varied career as a popular writer, state official and publisher, died at Hiawatha only a few years ago. A. L. Lee served as a judge and enlisted in the 7th Kansas cavalry. He was severely wounded in the face, became a brigadier-general, and after making a fortune in Louisiana during the period of reconstruction, he went to New York City. Hunt moved to California.

The Kansas Weekly Press was published in Elwood on Saturday, June 5, 1858, with Whitney and Tomkins as editors. It continued until Oct. 9, 1858, when they severed their connection with it, and Edward Russell and John L. Merrick & Company became the proprietors. They were in charge until Oct. 30, 1858, when F. M. Tracy and G. W. Larzelere took up the burden, their first issue being on Nov. 13, 1858. They continued the paper until Saturday, Nov. 27, 1858, when Tracy and his brother purchased it. The last issue of the Kansas Weekly Press on file in the State Historical Society headquarters was published March 5, 1859, by Tracy and brother. Whether the paper was discontinued at that time is not certain. The publication, however, encountered many vicissitudes during its brief existence and it changed hands more times in the period than any other newspaper in the state of Kansas.

The Weekly Highlander was established at Highland and the first issue appeared Saturday, Jan. 1, 1859. J. E. Faulkner was the editor and the publication was independent. T. P. Herrick and Frank A. Root were his assistants. The latter resides in Topeka. It was neutral in politics and while ably conducted, lasted only a few short months. The material was purchased in 1861 by Charles H. Whitaker and moved to Savannah, Missouri, where a Union Democratic paper was started. When the rebel recruits of Camp Highley started South to join Price's army, said Sol Miller, they loaded the type and presses in wagons and hauled it away with them. At the siege of Lexington when they ran short of ammunition they shot the type at the besieged Union soldiers. Some of the Kansas boys who were captured at the surrender, brought a few of the large job quads home with them, where they were distributed as souvenirs. Of those connected with the Highlander, Herrick became colonel of the 7th Kansas cavalry and die at Highland of cholera in 1866. Faulkner returned to Pennsylvania and Root became a publisher for a time in Topeka, where he still resides.

The town of Doniphan was rich in newspaper history. On Dec. 16, 1858, another paper, the Kansas Crusader of Freedom, made its appearance there with James Redpath and James H. Lane as editors. It was radical Republican, intended as the personal organ of General James H. Lane and to advocate him for the Presidency in 1860. But Redpath and Lane soon quarreled and the paper suspended in May of 1859, the last issue being a special edition devoted to a roast of Lane by his former supporter. The late Governor John A. Martin of Atchison, did his type setting for the first time on the Crusader and it was in it that Miss Josie S. Hunt's now famous poem, "You Kissed Me" first appeared. A few years after the suspension of the publication, the type and press of the Crusader was moved to Atchison, and used in printing The Union and the Patriot. Redpath, after writing a history, left Kansas and afterwards became a famous war correspondent and an organizer of negro regiments. He is said to have been the originator of Decoration Day. In his late years just before his death he conducted a lecture bureau.

The Doniphan Post was another journalistic venture in Doniphan, but was short lived. It was established by William and George Rees in the summer of 1860, and suspended in the fall of 1861. After its "funeral," The Doniphan Democrat appeared, but lived only about ten months or a year. J. J. Ricketts was the publisher and editor. In the fall of 1860, J. W. Biggers moved the material of the Iowa Point office to Troy and started a Democratic paper called the Doniphan County Dispatch. That year was the turning point in Doniphan County and Kansas politics when the Democrats made their last fight. It was the year of Lincoln's election and the party was disastrously defeated all over Kansas. The contest was perhaps more bitter and closer in Doniphan County than in any other part of the state, but the Republicans carried everything. The Dispatch expired shortly after the election. In the summer of 1861, the type and press were purchased by P. Gould

Parker, moved to Hiawatha and used in printing the Brown County Union until the office burned in 1862. Thus ended the printing outfit that came to Kansas in 1855 to print The Doniphan Constitutionalist.

The Doniphan County Patriot was published at Troy and made its first appearance on April 25, 1862, with Dr. E. H. Grant as the editor. The type and press was formerly used in the publication of The Doniphan Post. The Patriot was a Lane Republican journalistic venture and did not last long. F. M. Tracy took an interest in it and subsequently continued its publication alone until the spring of 1864, when it is believed to have been absorbed by another paper, the Investigator. There is no record in the State Historical Society files to show just how long the Patriot existed.

The Holt County News at Oregon, Missouri, which had been a Secession paper, edited by Dr. Jabez Robinson, had been suspended since early in the war. In February, 1864, a company of Troy men purchased the material and moving it here, began the publication of The Investigator, an anti-Lane Republican organ. It was edited by H. C. Hawkins, a lawyer who died in Troy in the fall of 1873. Mrs. Hawkins now resides in Newton, Iowa, and is Mrs. J. Evans Ryan. The end of the war in 1865 saw the soldiers marching home, still full of martial spirit, and the following spring some of the soldier printers gathered in The Investigator office and started a new paper called the Doniphan County Soldier. It was Republican and S. H. Dodge, later of the Beloit Gazette, was the editor. The Soldier, like so many of its contemporaries, had a brief existence, although it had influential backing.

Following the failure of The Soldier, Joseph H. Hunt, a brother of H. D. Hunt, who lived in Elwood, bought the outfit, issued the first number of the Troy Weekly Reporter on April 12, 1865. He continued in business until May 15, 1866, when Robert Tracy, who now is a resident of St. Joseph, became the proprietor. During Hunt's proprietorship, The Reporter was still Republican and the office was in a little frame building alongside of the Higby House, where the new Transit House stands today. Mrs. Hunt was a printer and the two did all of the work in the office. In the spring of 1866, while repairing the roof, Hunt fell and struck the picket fence in front of the office, causing injuries from which he died. Mrs. Hunt attempted to continue the publication for a few months, but finally sold to Mr. Tracy. The first Reporter appeared under Mr. Tracy's management on May 17, 1866. The Troy court house was burned on March 27, 1867, and at once a county seat fight was precipitated, Wathena being the competitor of Troy. Sentiment seemed to favor the former city as it was the largest in the county and on April 3, 1867, the Reporter was moved there. Mr. Tracy in giving his reasons for the removal of the publication at the time said:

"Inasmuch as some of our readers may want to know why this change was made, we feel disposed to give an explanation. Since the burning of the court house in Troy, almost every person in Doniphan County has doubtless felt satisfied that the county seat ought immediately to be located by a popular vote of the county. Knowing that the voters must soon decide this important question at the polls, we looked about us to see which way the sentiment of the people tended. It seemed to us to point to Wathena, the largest and most prosperous town in Doniphan County and the most likely place to meet with the favor of a large majority of the voters. Hence our removal."

There was a general election and it was the hottest campaign in the history of this community. Wathena won and immediately the citizens of Troy, headed by several of the leading citizens, began an appeal. They had two grounds for this; the first being irregularities in the election at Wathena, and the second, a United States statute passed May 20, 1824, under the administration of President James Monroe. This provided that the commissioners in opening counties in territories should set aside 160 acres for a county seat and a 300 foot square in the center for a court house. The attorneys for Troy made allegations that this had been done and sought to show that several hundred more men voted in Wathena than there were in the township. The supreme court of the state decided in favor of Troy. Soon after this decision, Mr. Tracy sold the Reporter to E. H. Snow and George W. Larzelere. Snow retired and it went into the hands of Alfred Larzelere, the father of Robert H. Larzelere, who resides near Wathena today. He sold it to the late F. H. Drenning and Joel Holt, and they sold it in 1873 to W. T. Stewart, who continued the publication until April, 1877. The Doniphan County Republican was started in Troy in November, 1868, by C. G. Bridges, and the paper prospered continued with varying degrees of success until Mr. Sanborn retired in 1874, leaving Mr. Beale sole proprietor. In 1875, The Republican was sold to Sol Miller and the paper was absorbed with The Chief.

In May, 1877, C. G. Bridges bought The Reporter office at Wathena and brought it back to Troy, where he commenced the publication of The Bulletin, which he announced would be a Hayes Republican paper. A great many Republicans were at that time very much dissatisfied with the policy of President Hayes, and Bridges thought he saw an opportunity to be recognized as the orthodox organ and gather in any stray crumbs that might fall. But it was not a success and came out as an exponent of Democratic principles. The first of January, 1879, closed its career. The type and press were taken to Superior, Nebraska, and Bridges went to Mexico, Missouri, where he died some time ago.

In May, 1871, The Doniphan Democrat was started in the town of Doniphan by J. J. Ricketts. The outside pages were printed at the Atchison Patriot office and Thomas Stivers was the editor. The paper did not last more than a year. Ricketts and Stivers both left the state some time ago. On May 12, 1872, the Crook brothers established the Doniphan Herald, which was published only a few weeks. Drs. J. J. and W. W. Crook were the editors, but in a few weeks the publication was removed to Leavenworth. In August, 1872, The Leader, a Grange paper, was started at White Cloud by Yard and Overholt. It lived about two months, the material being moved to Hiawatha and used in printing The Herald.

The Highland Sentinel, independent in politics, was started in January, 1878, by George F. Hammar and continued for only a few months. The only paper Brenner ever had was The Western Emigrant, establirhed June 8, 1878 by W. H. Hoerner. It ran about six months and was discontinued. In February of 1878, the material of the Sabetha Advance was moved to Wathena by E. A. Davis, who started a Greenback paper called the Wathena Advance, which suspended the following June. George W. Larzelere then took up the burden again and published The Mirror, but its life was very short. The first issue appeared July 16, 1878, and on August 15th of the same year, George Larzelere severed his connection with it and the paper was taken up by Alfred Larzelere, father of

The Central State, a Democratic paper, was established in Highland, Nov. 4, 1880, by John L. Parker, and was a five column quarto. Parker continued its publication until Friday, July 15, 1881, at which time he sold out to E. G. Moore, who changed the size from a five column quarto to an eight column folio on Friday, Aug. 12, 1881. The last paper in the files of the State Historical Society was published by Moore on Friday, May 26, 1882. The last week in October, 1880, The White Cloud Review, Republican, was started by George H. Holton and was continued with intervals of suspension until September, 1887, by James P. Beidleman and Henry P. Beidleman. The last heard of Holton he was in Nebraska, where he was publishing a paper. The Beidleman brothers, who were printers, went to Chicago. In October, 1887, a tramp named David Magoun pulled up in White Cloud, got hold of The Review office and started a paper, the first number of which was called The Resurrection, but the permanent name chosen was The Eagle. By "permanent" we mean four weeks, which was its lease of life. In August, 1888, the White Cloud Review again appeared under the management of Saunders brothers and maintained a precarious existence until 1890, when it disappeared.

The Doniphan County Weekly News was published in Doniphan and the first issue appeared March 10, 1882, with Welsh and sons as managers. Owing to the fact that there were only twenty-five issues of the paper on file in the State Historical Society headquarters, it is impossible to state how long it existed, although it is generally believed to have been about six months. The last heard of Dr. Welsh was that he was living somewhere in Kansas. The Bible Investigator made its appearance in Doniphan early in January of 1881, with William Kirby, a devout Christian, as editor. It was devoted solely to religious discussions and had a brief existence. Mr. Kirby is now dead.

On Aug. 30, 1883, The Times made its appearance in Severance, edited by E. F. VanDeventer. There were but four copies on file at the State Historical Society, but it is believed to have passed away on Nov. 8th of the same year. The Severance Advertiser was first issued on Aug. 3, 1883, by Springer & Company. It is impossible to tell how many issues were published, as there is no record on file. The Alumni Annual made its first appearance at Highland University in June, 1883, and we are unable to state how long it continued. In February of the same year a paper was started in Severance called The Enterprise, by H. H. Brooks, but it lived only a few months.

The Troy Times was established Sept. 3, 1886, by A. W. Beale, who had previous newspaper experience. The first issue was a five column quarto and on Dec. 3, 1886, was changed to an eight column folio. Mr. Beale continued until Sept. 3, 1897, when Frank W. Elliott purchased the paper—his first issue being Sept. 10, 1897. He was successful for about three years, and sold out in 1900 to R. C. Bradly, who continued until Friday, June 7, 1901, at which time J. S. Leonard succeeded him. His first issue was June 14, 1901, and the last issue on the files of the State Historical Society is that of Nov. 15, 1901. The paper may have continued longer, but there is no record of it.

On July 4, 1889, the Wathena Gazette made its appearance. It was published by C. C. Bartruff and managed to exist for a year, when it crossed the Missouri river much to the joy of the people of Wathena. The Bendena Echo, published by Gray & Morgan, was established July 13, 1889. It was a three column sheet and only four issues were published; the population of the town being too small to support the project it died Aug. 24, 1889. In December, 1889, The Nuncio was started at Highland by students of the university, and was devoted to matters pertaining to the school.

The first copy of The Severance Weekly News on file in the State Historical Society bears the date of May 11, 1889, Vol. 1, No. 6, and the editor was W. T. Randolph. He continued to publish it until Friday, Sept. 16, 1892, when it was sold to P. L. Gray and W. J. Curtis. Mr. Gray is now editor of the paper and Mr. Curtis is now general passenger and traffic agent for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad with headquarters in Topeka. The first issue of their paper was Friday morning, Sept. 23, 1892. Later on Mr. Curtis sold his interest to L. P. Johnson and Mr. Gray, and Mr. Johnson continued to publish The News until Thursday, May 16, 1895, at which time Mr. Johnson sold his interest to Mr. Gray. His first issue as sole proprietor was Thursday, May 23, 1895. Mr. Gray continued as the editor after that until a date which we are unable to find, when he sold the paper to Miss Eva Ryan; and the first issue edited by her on file was that of Thursday, Jan. 5, 1898. She reduced the size from an eight column folio to a four column quarto and published the same until Thursday, Oct. 5, 1899, when she sold out to M. Lucy & Company, who again changed the size to an eight column folio. Lucy & Company continued until Friday, Oct. 12, 1900, when the size of the paper was reduced to seven columns. The last issue of this publication on file in the State Historical Society is that of Friday, Dec. 28, 1910, and we are unable to state how much longer it continued.

The White Cloud News made its first appearance June 15, 1891, with Burckhalter and Cotton as editors. They continued publication until March 15, 1892, when they discontinued, giving as their reason that John J. Faulkner of Falls City, Neb., intended to establish a paper called The Globe, which he did, the first issue appearing in April, 1892. In the winter following, however, he sold out to E. K. Douglas, who edited the paper for one year. The next owners were Frank and Avery Newlin, who continued until 1898, when E. C. Tennant bought them out and was the editor for five years. Mrs. Tennant was an interesting writer and doubtless helped her husband materially, as some of her works are yet reprinted. Mack Ryan succeeded Tennant and E. L. Marker was the editor until Aug. 18, 1910, when Miss Anna Mallows, a former school teacher, became the editor and proprietor and has since made it one of the most successful publications for a small town in the county.

In February of 1896, H. S. Hogue started The Highland Vidette, a Republican paper which at the present time is under the management of Tobias Larson, who has owned and edited the paper for the past eighteen years. The first issue of The Wathena Star which can be found was that of Thursday, Jan. 7, 1897, and the editor of that paper was Bert Howard. The subscription price was $1 a year. Mr. Howard continued to publish this paper until Thursday, Sept. 23, 1897, at which time he sold it to Pool Grinstead and his first issue was Sept. 30, 1897. In a few weeks, Mr. Grinstead changed the paper from a seven to an eight column folio and continued until Friday, Feb. 23, 1900, when J. S. Leonard was appointed receiver and took charge. On Friday, March 2, 1900, G. E. McNutt was appointed receiver in which capacity he acted until Friday, March 30, 1900, when J. E. House's name, who is now mayor of Topeka, appeared as the editor and manager. The last paper to be found on record is that of Friday, May 4, 1900, and we are unable to state how much longer the publication continued. The Wathena Weekly Republican was published by A. W. Themenson, Jan. 2, 1903, and was the last paper to be established in the county. It still is published.

The Highland Vidette was founded by Harvey S. Hogue in January, 1896, and was purchased by Mr. Larson in January, 1898, eighteen years ago. He has conducted it ever since as a six column, four page newspaper. He has always been a Republican in politics, and was postmaster of Highland for four years, being appointed by President William McKinley, Aug. 3, 1901, just thirty-three days before the assassination of the President which occurred September 6, and served until May 25, 1905. He was clerk to Senator James Allen in the Kansas state senate in 1900 to 1904.

A few years ago Mr. Larson built a nice modern home for himself and family in Highland. Here he expects to make his residence during the remainder of his life, where he is comfortably located.

A newspaper was started in Troy, August 11, 1910, by W. Charles Hopper. He was induced to come here by some of Troy's citizens, but he sowehow failed to make good. He sold out to Mel A. Smith. It was later consolidated with the Wathena Times.

Thus it will be seen that Doniphan County has had forty-three newspapers of which only a few have survived. It has been a struggle and a thorough exemplification of the survial of the fittest. Today, however, Doniphan County stands in the forefront of the journalistic world.

The Wathena Republican

The Wathena Republican is an eight-page, six-column weekly newspaper, which is filling the Wathena field admirably. It was established by Pool Grinstead, G. M. Beall and P. W. Grinstead, March 30, 1900, and is now published by William Stewart and Charles A. Fetter, two industrious newspaper men who are making a success of it. On May 31, 1901, A. W. Themanson took charge and edited the Republican until April 1, 1906, at which time William Stewart bought the paper and on December 31, 1912, Charles A. Fetter purchased a half interest in it.

It is conducted as a straight Republican paper, never wavering from its course, and has a good, fat local subscription list. Its publishers, being practical newspaper men, have a pretty fair knowledge of what it takes to make a readable country newspaper. It publishes about everything going on in Wathena and the neighborhood, but makes no pretensions as a county paper. It wields a wholesome influence in the community in which it circulates, and is to be depended upon at all times to stand for those things which they consider are for the common good of Wathena and community.

C. W. RYAN, EDITOR OF WATHENA TIMES

C. W. Ryan, editor of the Wathena Times, is a son of S. L. Ryan, and was born at Severance, Kansas, in 1876. His early education was acquired in the public schools of his native town and was an apt student from early boyhood. When twenty years old, Mr. Ryan was graduated from the Hiawatha Academy, and was admitted to the bar the same year.

Thus it will be seen that Mr. Ryan had an excellent rudimentary base on which to build any career he might select. Shortly after his admission to the bar he entered the law school of the Kansas State University at Lawrence and his desire for the law was increased as he progressed with his studies. Consequently he took an advanced course in the law department of the Michigan University at Ann Arbor. Thoroughly equipped to pursue his vocation, Mr. Ryan returned from Ann Arbor and entered his father's law office at Hiawatha, where he remained but a short time. Following this he was appointed receiver of a store at Powhattan, and arranged the business to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

About this time the wanderlust seized Mr. Ryan, and he was next heard of traveling overland to Idaho, in 1890, in company with his brother Frank, now an attorney at Weiser, Idaho. The Ryan boys were the first settlers in Lost Valley, in the Seven Devils Mountains, in Idaho. Here they took up government homesteads for which each of them was paid $8,000 a few years later by the Weiser Valley Land & Water Company, after several years of litigation in the Idaho and federal courts.

At the end of about two years the Ryan brothers returned to Hiawatha, where C. W. Ryan entered his father's office again, and Frank took up a law course at the University of Nebraska. When Frank was admitted to the bar the two brothers became the law partners of their father, under the firm name of Ryan & Ryan, with offices in Hiawatha and Troy. In September, 1910, C. W. Ryan bought the Wathena Times, which he still edits. His paper is representative of an intelligent and progressive community.

THE REVEREND MR. B. F. BOWMAN

In Doniphan County, 1856—On Farm Owned by A. B. C. D. Dubach—Early Day Preacher—Married Many Couples.

One of the pioneer preachers in Doniphan County was the Reverend Mr. B. F. Bowman. He was one of the first ministers in the county and belonged to the Methodist Church. He came to Doniphan County, Sept. 12, 1856, and settled on a farm west of Wathena on the Pottawatomie road. The farm is now owned by A. B. C. D. Dubach.

The Reverend Mr. Bowman probably married more couples than any other preacher in Doniphan County. The country was new and the lonely settlers were anxious for the companionship offered by a husband or wife. Preachers, or others with authority to marry, were few and far between. Consequently the Methodist pastor was frequently called to officiate at the wedding of some new home founder.

He was what is known as a circuit rider, and endured many hardships and dangers, like Saint John, "crying in the wilderness," as he spread the truth and fought the battles of life like a brave soldier of the Gospel.

LADIES' AID SOCIETY, M. E. CHURCH, WATHENA, KAN.

The Society's methods of raising money are as delightful as they are original. Pie suppers, ice cream socials and sales of fancy and useful articles are a few of the commonest sources of revenue, and the ladies always give full value for the money. This is personal testimony.

Officers—Mrs. C. H. Bowman, President; Mrs. T. B. Chalk, Vice-President; Mrs. Annie Hayes, Treasurer; Miss Della Spaulding, Secretary.

Membership—Mrs. Acree, Mrs. Allen, Mrs. C. H. Bowman, Mrs. H. C. Bowman, Mrs. C. Brazelton, Mrs. Chalk, Mrs. Clark, Mrs. Clobridge, Mrs. G. A. Dubach, Mrs. Fuger, Mrs. George, Mrs. Goforth, Mrs. Jacob Groh, Mrs. George T. Groh, Mrs. Gunselman, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. A. Hayes, Mrs. Hale, Mrs. L. A. Bounty, Mrs. R. McPherson, Mrs. Peter Manville, Mrs. T. Mawson, Mrs. Jacob Miller, Mrs. Meade, Mrs. Ben Morgan, Mrs. John Meng, Mrs. Pettis, Mrs. Richards, Mrs. Rochon, Mrs. G. L. Stuart, Miss Della Spaulding, Mrs. J. A. Stewart, Mrs. Wagenknecht, Mrs. E. V. Wakeman, Mrs. Williams, Mrs. Winn, Mrs. Bishop.

This society was organized about twenty-five years ago. Their work has been varied as the needs of the church demanded. It was largely through their efforts that an up-to-date parsonage was built in 1909. Now they are starting a new church fund which will probably materialize in a modern church building a few years hence.

On Jan. 1, 1871, Wathena had four teachers and 230 scholars enrolled in the public schools of that town.

On May 10, 1857, the Methodist Episcopal church of Doniphan was organized by Rev. Mr. B. F. Bowman.

The Wathena Chautauqua

Greatest feature of Doniphan County enterprise which reaches from the hearts of the multitude to the broad confines of the nation. An attraction which intelligently demonstrates the progressive ideas of Wathena to keep abreast of the time. Broad in scope and liberal in management. Started at a financial sacrifice by public spirited citizens, J. A. Stewart, J. F. Harpster, George E. Groh, Pool Grinsted and Frank K. Willis, the Chautauqua was soon transformed into one of the most popular movements ever undertaken in the State of Kansas. J. A. Stewart, Secretary, 1899 to 1900; A. W. Themanson, Secretary from 1901 to 1909; L. Z. Stewart, Secretary during 1910; Lambert A. Libel, Secretary during the years 1911, 1912 and 1913; George F. English, Secretary, 1914 and 1915. Celebrated orators and leading public men have addressed the crowds at different times. Grand Tabernacle erected within an ideal grove of stately native timber. Many notable speakers and diversified attractions on this year's program.

To three citizens of Wathena belong the credit for the success of the Mid-Summer Chautauqua, which is one of the grandest features of progressive ambition characteristic of Doniphan County.

Started on an inspiration in 1899, the Chautauqua has with each succeeding year, become more popular and more magnetic than any other enterprise ever promoted in the State of Kansas.

During the fifteen years of its existence the Wathena Chautauqua Association has given to the public a class of attractions with each succeeding year that cannot be excelled.

It is to the self-sacrificing public spirit of the original promotors that the success of the Chautauqua is directly due. Had the three men who backed the proposition at a financial loss during the first year, gotten cold feet, it would never have survived.

But, no; they were so confident of the ultimate success of such a nation-wide movement, looking toward the education and entertainment of the populace that they stood financially responsible and kept it going. They had the foresight to realize that it was not only a great, but a grand manner in which the people might be enlightened at first hand on all the important matters of the day by speakers renowned in every walk of life.

It is to Pool Grinstead, once a well-known Doniphan County newspaper man, with headquarters in Wathena, that the inspiration of the Chautauqua movement first became manifest. But he was poor in worldly possessions and could only give his best efforts toward making it a reality. As editor of the Wathena Times, Mr. Grinstead perceived the great possibilities of the Chautauqua and he confided his ambitions to see it launched to four of the leading men.

Just about that time the Chautauqua movement had taken root all over the country and its branches were even extending to other lands. Mr. Grinstead unfolded his plans to intimate friends whom he well knew were constructed on a caliber sufficiently heavy to bear the burden of any financial outlay that might be entailed. The result was spontaneous.

On the evening of May 27, 1899, five serious-minded men met in Harpster's Bank building in Wathena. They had just had supper and all were feeling mighty good. The quintet included George E. Groh, J. F. Harpster, J. A. Stewart, Dr. Frank K. Willis, and Pool Grinstead. The proposed Chautauqua was the cause of the little gathering, and Mr. Grinstead explained its workings and effects in other places.

The result of the meeting was the organization of the Wathena Chautauqua Association, with George E. Groh, as president: J. A. Stewart, secretary, and J. F. Harpster, treasurer. The question of financing the project was discussed from every angle, and the three officers agreed to assume all financial responsibility for any deficit that might occur in the operating expenses. Of the three original officers of the Chautauqua, Mr. Groh and Mr. Stewart are still among the live wires of Wathena's substantial citizens. Mr. Harpster died January 16, 1901.

Preparations were at once begun to inaugurate the Chautauqua that summer, and Mr. Grinstead boosted the movement in the columns of his newspaper like a Trojan. Arrangements were made in every direction and the site for the Chautauqua was located on a twenty-acre piece of ground, one-half mile east of Wathena. It was an ideal spot, level and surrounded by big native timber. The land was owned by Mr. Groh and is still one of the properties of the family.

Charles T. Grilly, one of the leading Chautauqua managers of the country, was communicated with and he accepted an offer to supervise all arrangements for the opening meeting. Under his direction a program was arranged which was remarkable for the prominence of the orators who were included in the list of speakers. A huge tent was procured for the meeting and the grounds were "dressed up" neatly for the occasion.

Although the Chautauqua was a new venture, its merits were at once realized by the public and as the time approached for the opening the keenest interest was manifested throughout Doniphan and adjoining counties. While the program was brimming over with notable talent, the Rev. Mr. Sam Jones, the celebrated evangelist, was the head-liner. He delivered the first lecture and conducted the exercises on the opening day, while copious showers were falling. Since then he has attended eight Chautauquas and was always one of the strongest personalities during the meetings.

At the close of the Chautauqua the officers held a meeting and in computing the expenses found that they were $3,156 "in the hole." This sum was promptly paid by Messrs. Groh, Harpster and Stewart. These three public-spirited gentlemen never even murmured over the deficit and declared their intention to keep the movement alive. Pool Grinstead and Dr. Willis had no financial interest in the Chautauqua, but they gave it strong public and moral support from the first moment of its inception.

The three officers had the utmost faith in the success of the Chautauqua and the next year—1900—they assumed all obligations for its management. They were more fortunate that year and the receipts were sufficient to justify the payment of a small dividend. The crowds that attended on the various days were enormous and the gate receipts more than balanced all overhead expenses.

In 1901 a re-organization of the Chautauqua Association was effected with fifteen members, all of whom took stock in the enterprise. George W. Kinkead, now acting mayor of Troy, was elected president of the association; J. A. Stewart was vice-president; and B. N. Forbes was made treasurer. The other active members who managed the Chautauqua that year were Jacob Miller, George T. Groh, A. W. Themanson, W. W. Carter, Frank H. Drosselmeier, George L. Stuart, G. A. Dubach, Martin Maag, F. L. Rice, H. N. Winn, S. A. Conaway and L. Z. Stewart.

For four successive years—1901-1902-1903-1904—the Chautauqua was managed by the gentlemen named above, and they made it a good paying proposition. The efforts of the managers to make the Chautauqua a success were ably seconded by Charles T. Grilly, who was superintendent of the meetings for eight years. He is a noted Chautauqua manager and is an expert at the business. To him, as much as to any other individual, may be given the credit for the popularity and prosperity of the Wathena Chautauqua.

At the close of the 1904 Chautauqua, a re-organization of the Association took place and a large number of new members were taken in. The imposing tabernacle, which stands on the grounds today, was erected at a considerable outlay, and other improvements were installed. There was no question about the future of the Chautauqua by this time and the members were enthusiastic in their desire to spare no expense in providing for all possible exigencies.

In addition to Sam Jones there have been many famous pulpit and platform orators in attendance at the Wathena Chautauqua. While the great evangelist was a drawing card at all times, there were other noted speakers who commanded a strong following among the people of the nation. Gen. John B. Gordon, the gallant Southern commander, and author of "The Last Days of the Confederacy," was one of the speakers who drew immense crowds whenever he was on the program. Among the other notable men who attended the Chautauqua at different times were: Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan, Bishop Robert McIntyre of the Episcopal diocese of St. Paul; Rev. Father Nugent, the great sociologist of Des Moines, Iowa; ex-United States Senator Chester I. Long of Kansas; United States Senator Robert LaFollette, of Wisconsin; Willis J. Bailey, former governor of Kansas; United States Senator Benjamin F. Tillman, of North Carolina; former Governor Edward W. Hoch, of Kansas; Maud Ballington Booth, of the Salvation Army; Eugene V. Debs, the great Socialist leader; DeWitt Miller; Rev. Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, of Chicago; Caleb Powers, former secretary of state of Kentucky; United States Senator Thomas P. Gore, the blind statesman from Oklahoma; William J. Burns, the famous detective; Billy Sunday, the great present-day evangelist; Mrs. Lasalle Corbell-Pickett, widow of the celebrated Confederate general who led the heroic charge of his renowned division at Gettysburg; Opie Read, the popular author of Southern stories; Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the Arctic explorer; Strickland W. Gillilan, the eminent writer; Herbert C. Hart, successful evangelist and platform speaker; Frederick Ward, the great actor; Will Carlton, novelist of international renown, and Mrs. Carrie Nation, strenuous militant advocate of prohibition.

J. A. Stewart

Although last on the above list, there is no intention to slight the achievements of Carrie Nation nor to minimize the great benefits to humanity which she accomplished with her little hatchet. It was several years ago, probably the year before her death, that Mrs. Nation attended the Chautauqua. She was not on the regular program for the day, or for any day during the meeting, but her presence aroused more interest than did that of the most notable public speakers. Being a Kansas woman with an international reputation as a joint smasher, Mrs. Nation had only to make her presence known and the people flocked about her. She came to the Chautauqua in the cause of temperance, and incidentally she was armed with sixteen hundred little hatchets.

When it became known that Mrs. Nation was on the grounds the crowds became clamorous to hear her and the management was obliged to cnange the program for the afternoon. As soon as it was announced that the great militant advocate of prohibition was going to speak the people rushed from all parts of the grounds to the tabernacle and so great was the throng that hundreds could not gain admittance.

When Superintendent Grilly sounded the gong at four o'clock in the afternoon, the building was packed with an excited mass of humanity. All wanted to hear the famous saloon buster. Mrs. Nation had no sooner been introduced than she electrified her audience with the strength and clearness of her voice. The people were spellbound, and not a sound could be heard during her address. She spoke on the curse of rum and gave many illustrations of the wretchedness and crime which it caused. She exploded the old theory that poverty and crime are cause and effect, and said that whiskey is the cause and crime and poverty the effect.

There were many people present who held opposite views from Mrs. Nation on the liquor question, but they all said that her address was one of the most powerful arguments against intemperance they had ever heard. The entire audience almost went wild over her words and when she opened her consignment of little hatchets for distribution among the people, the sixteen hundred didn't more than half go around.

The Chautauqua is now on a solid financial basis and is destined to remain so unless there should come a radical change in the customs and conditions of humanity. It is backed by the most substantial citizens of Wathena and the surrounding country. The membership is truly representative and the managers are men who are both liberal minded and progressive. The following is a list of the stockholders of the Wathena Chautauqua at the present time:

It would appear to an ordinary mortal that the people of Wathena and Doniphan County should never forget the men or their memories who were the prime backers of the Chautauqua. Although Mr. Harpster is dead, his work is a powerful factor in keeping his memory green. Had it not been for the initiative of Mr. Harpster, Mr. Groh and Mr. Stewart, the probabilities are there would never have been known to the world such a thing as the Wathena Chautauqua. Mr. Stewart is a prosperous merchant in Wathena, where he has been in business for many years, and Mr. Groh is a highly respected farmer and influential citizen living close to town.

The citizens of Wathena should be proud of the fact that such public spirited citizens as George E. Groh and J. A. Stewart have always manifested the keenest interest in the Chautauqua. Ever since the Chautauqua was started these two men have been most energetic in their efforts to make it the greatest attraction ever promoted in the State of Kansas.

Credit for the Chautauqua, however, is not easy to give. "The directors are loath to talk of the efforts they have expended in making the affair the success it has been," said Robert H. Larzelere, one of the men behind the movement who has had as much to do with it as any one. Mr. Larzelere, however, says the "other man" is the one to receive the credit and not himself. The other man says the same thing.

Fred Rice and Eugene Cordonier are two of the other stockholders who had a share in the successful culmination. "Don't you think you should be given what is due your efforts?" was the question the former was asked. "I didn't do much," was Mr. Rice's reply: "give the others all the praise." And that is the way the men have worked since the incention of the Chautauqua. It has been a spirit of perfect harmony.

As each succeeding year rolls around —and the first Chautauqua was held in 1900—it grows bigger and better than ever. Last year more tents were used than at any other time and this year it will be but a repetition of that story. It is the prediction of the management that the 1915 affair will not only be the largest, but by far the most attractive of any in the past. In the first place a number of new attractions will be on hand.

Another feature to be found — and one that is often sadly lacking in other summer events of the kind—is the pure water. The Wathena men will have this in abundance throughout the grounds, and every other convenience will be had for the patrons. As extra attractions the managemert has arranged for ball games every afternoon and some of the best amateur talent in western Missouri and eastern Kansas will be seen on the diamond. This will prove a big drawing card, as thousands of men and women who are busy on the farms have small opportunity during the summer of seeing a good contest between rival nines.

Not the least of the other features is the distinctive character of the Chautauqua. People come to the Wathena meeting and stay. That is what the tents are for. They do not come merely for an afternoon or evening, but for the entire course of lectures, addresses or entertainments. Everyone who desires to take advantage of the splendid opportunities offered is heartily invited and welcomed with the glad hand. The management never plays any favorites, either in the selection of a place of habitation or other ways.

From every indication this year's Chautauqua is to see an enormous crowd. People in the vicinity far and wide already have signified their intention to attend and are spreading the word among their neighbors of the success of the meetings. Mr. Lambert A. Libel and the other directors are more than optimistic in their views regarding the coming summer. All are confident that the movement will be alone in its class among Chautauquas. Something already has been said of the numerous attractions to be had.

To those who have contemplated attending for at least a portion of the attractions, we can give a word of advice. Make arrangements now; for by waiting until the last moment there will be little chance of obtaining the right kind of accommodations. You will find the directors the finest kind of people and men who will endeavor in every way possible to serve not only the best and most profitable amusement, but see that personal convenience is offered.

The business men of the city of St. Joseph and Wathena are on the alert and take great pride in seeing a large attendance. Many neglect their personal business to boost for the Chautauqua and work with increasing efforts for its success. They believe in the maxim, "that where there is unity there is strength." The grounds are ideal and many noted speakers say they cannot be excelled in the state.

Fourteen years ago, when an organization was first perfected, it was called the Wathena Chautauqua, and was primarily for the pleasure and participation of Wathena, Kansas, people. It has always started on Saturday and lasted nine days so as to include two Sundays, and the time is usually in August, when crops do not need close attention and the farmers are given a chance to enjoy the festivities. In the early days a large tent served as an auditorium where the speaking was held, but after several mishaps by storms, when the canopy collapsed, a spacious open air auditorium was provided, with a substantial wooden covering, an appropriate platform and rows of solid, comfortable settees took the place of the flimsy benches that formerly had been used.

Each year there was seen a continued improvement in the Chautauqua in the entertainment features offered and the accommodations provided. Portable house tents have been popular and many came the first day and remained throughout the entire period. They cooked, slept and enjoyed themselves under the trees and listened to the discourses of the various entertainers in the afternoons and evenings, the Chautauqua promoters being liberal in providing singers and speakers. It was always a strictly religious affair and on Sunday devotional exercises were included in the program.

Sam Jones, the eccentric preacher, became a favorite, and he attended practically every year until his death. The people never seemed to tire of him, with his scathing denunciations of sin and his vivid descriptions of the wrath of God. Not only were his hearers amused, but shocked, sometimes, for often he called names and told from the pulpit the sins of men before him in no uncertain tones. Jones told them a death-bed repentance was an insult to God and many were afraid to further delay conversion. A long time before the days of Sam Jones had passed, however, St. Joseph people had been attending the Wathena Chautauqua in great numbers. It came to be known as the Wathena-St. Joseph Chautauqua. Each year better talent was furnished and special trains were run from all nearby towns in Kansas and Missouri. So great was the interest in the meetings that the stockholders in the company stated that they would rather lose $500 a year on the promotion of the enterprise than to discontinue it.

Wathena's Chautauqua Boosters

Men Who Have Made It a Great Success and a Credit to the Town.

L. A. Libel, cashier of the Wathena Fruit-Growers' State Bank; George Manville, who is engaged in the grocery and implement business at Wathena; and A. W. Themanson of that town, have engaged practically all of the talent which has made the chautauqua one of the great attractions of the summer. These men have taken considerable of their time away from their business to push the interests of the chautauqua and deserve much credit for its success.

George Stuart, manager of the Co-Operative Store in Wathena, is another booster for the chautauqua. He has spared no time nor effort to insure a good attendance and his efforts have met with good results.

W. R. Martin, the efficient postmaster at Wathena, has helped the chautauqua, both in words and deeds, and has rendered some invaluable service to the chautauqua people.

In his business trips, Frank H. Drosselmeier, one of the county commissioners of Doniphan County, always takes time to boost for the chautauqua among the people with whom he comes in contact. He has been cashier of the association since it was organized.

Although Jake Miller of Wathena is kept pretty busy in preparing prescriptions and looking after his thoroughbred roosters, he never fails to put in a word for the chautauqua, and is peculiarly fitted to be a good advertiser for the institution, as he is one of the oldest druggists in the town and has a wide acquaintance.

The farmers of the community are also much interested in this enterprise. Among them, P. A. Pettis, a prominent farmer living south of Wathena, drops a word occasionally as to the advantages of attending the chautauqua. Eugene Cordonier, a leading farmer in Marion township, has much to say in favor of the institution. Ephriam Fleek, a prominent farmer near Blair, is also among those who believe in the educational opportunities offered by the modern chautauqua.

The talk and work of these men is well supplemented by William T. Stewart and Charles Fetter, editors and proprietors of the Wathena Weekly Republican, and C. W. Ryan, editor and proprietor of the Wathena Weekly Times. These men have been quite liberal in giving the chautauqua plenty of advertising through the columns of their papers and in other ways have done much to bring the chautauqua up to its fine standard and make it a success.

However, it has been a paying proposition with the exception of a few years when the receipts dropped off. In seeking a man to fill the place left vacant by Sam Jones, the directors a few years ago cast their eyes on Billy Sunday, and a contract was signed and the famous baseball player-preacher filled one date to the satisfaction of all concerned. Efforts are being made now to obtain his services. There is no thought that there will ever be a cessation of the Chautauqua, as it benefits the young and old alike. There are usually two refreshment stands about the grounds making it convenient for visitors, and in addition to the entertainments there are baseball games and various other contests. There are other Chautauquas every year, but those who have gone to Wathena are loud in their praise and confident that it cannot be excelled.

My faith in the Wathena Chautauqua, in the good to be gained physically by the contact with nature, the education to be secured after one is past school age, is clearly demonstrated in the fact that I have missed but one day since its beginning. The day that I missed was one Saturday of the second year, and a good and sufficient reason was all that prevented my attending, although I had no official connection with the Chautauqua at that time.

The Wathena Chautauqua is a great picnic of nine days' duration, held usually during August of every year. The best available speakers of the United States are procured to lend their services in entertaining in the huge tent, or rather, open-air tabernacle. This tabernacle cost about $3,200, including the seats. So far it has been large enough to accommodate the crowds which attend, but on several occasions when a particularly notable orator was on the platform, it was filled to capacity. In addition to the public speaking, which is held twice a day, there is entertaining of a livelier nature, such as quartet singing and musical numbers. There are several small tents devoted to daily classes of different nature, such as Bible study, etc. The speakers are chosen from the ranks of famous men and women, as well as persons widely known for one reason or another. For instance, William Jennings Bryan has spoken on several occasions; Sam Jones, the evangelist who struck sinners straight from the shoulder, was one of the early lecturers; Carrie Nation was not allowed on a chautauqua platform until given permission to give one of her characteristic bombardments against booze at Wathena, and from then on her fame spread; last year, 1914, Al Jennings, the reformed outlaw, was a drawing card. It may not be a well known fact, but it is nevertheless true that W. C. Maupin of St. Joseph, Mo., the bandman, who is rapidly becoming one of the best in his profession, got his impetus at the Wathena Chautauqua; also the Dunbar quartette of St. Joseph was first proclaimed a winner at this place. No effort or money is spared to make the Chautauqua all that is entertaining, instructive and comfortable.

The Chautauqua ran two years before it was made a corporation, having been begun originally in 1899, and reorganized in 1901, with Frank Drosselmeier as manager ever since. Since its organization it has paid dividends only about half the time. It would go in the hole one year, and come out ahead the next, but it has always managed to break about even. In the last few years it has been like a snowball rolling down hill, gathering impetus and size from its own force.

The grounds cover twenty acres and are owned by George E. Groh. The situation is ideal, being convenient to two railroads, the Grand Island and the Rock Island, and arrangements are made for the cars to stop at the Chautauqua grounds, and the Grand Island gives hourly service between St. Joseph and Wathena during the Chautauqua season. There are more people attending each year. In 1914 there were 350 tents rented by families who bought season tickets and stayed the whole time. People take advantage of the excellent chance for an outing amid the luxuriant groves where no ax has ever marred the beauty of nature. There are great tanks of free ice water distributed about the grounds. While enjoying the vacation, there is the chance to absorb the really wonderful lessons on politics, history and present-day topics of interest that fall from the lips of the lecturers in the tabernacle.

I am one of the heavy stockholders in the Chautauqua organization, owning nine shares, and have been treasurer of it for fourteen years. It costs from $5,000 to $6,000 a year to run it. The admission fee was 25 cents for the first several years, and then we were obliged to raise it to 35 cents. Season tickets have been $2.00 for adults, $1.00 for children, and $1.00 for vehicle privileges.

The concessions include a restaurant or two, where good meals can be bought for a very nominal sum; they also have for hire bed clothing that is clean and sanitary. There are several stands where ice cream and the ever-popular soda-pop are for sale. There are absolutely no grafts of any description on the grounds. Women and children are perfectly safe without an escort, as no intoxicants are allowed, and consequently there are no drunks and no disorderly conduct.

Mr. A. W. Themanson, formerly of Doniphan County and now of St. Joseph, Mo., was secretary for eleven years, and was an indefatigable worker. Although Mr. Themanson is not connected with the Chautauqua as an officer, he is still a great influence in the success of the organization. His wife once said of him that for weeks prior to and during the Chautauqua, they talked Chautauqua and ate Chautauqua until she was thankful when the whole thing was over. Mr. Themanson is a large stockholder in the Chautauqua, and also owns a valuable farm near Wathena, which is now tenanted by the family of Julius Webber.

I have been treasurer ever since Mr. Forbes quit. Forbes was the first treasurer and served but one year. The duties at times are somewhat onerous and it is sometimes a puzzle to know just how to meet certain difficulties, but so far the results have seemed to please everybody, and I have received compliments on my work; whether deserved or not, I cannot say.

L. Z. Stewart has been a great booster and help to the organization, one of the best men we have ever had on the board. Lambert A. Libel of Wathena, was secretary for about four years after the resignation of Mr. Themanson. Mr. Libel was a diligent worker and a good addition to the company; he was personally instrumental in securing the great detective, Wm. J. Burns, for a Chautauqua feature.

The Chautauqua is now on a good running basis, and is well advertised by the hosts of people who have partaken of its hospitality, and I feel confident in predicting greater things for its future.

WHEN BELLEMONT WAS A TOWN

Originally known as Whitehead, the town of Bellemont in the early days was one of the most promising communities and trade centers in Doniphan County. It was situated on the Missouri River, a mile and a half north of Wathena, and ten miles east and north of Troy.

Strictly speaking, the town of Bellemont, or to be more accurate, Whitehead, was the first seat of justice for Doniphan County. It was so named by the first Doniphan County commissioners, but very little official business was transacted there before the county seat was moved farther inland to the present site of Troy, which town was specially laid out and built to be the official headquarters of the county government.

Bellemont did a thriving business at one time and was considered second to none in wealth and commercial enterprise among the many hustling steamboat towns in Doniphan County. During the years 1858-1859-1860 it was one of the liveliest trading points in the county. Its proximity to St. Joseph, Mo., being only four miles straight west, gave Bellemont an advantage over many of the numerous river towns which flourished for a brief period during the early days.

A large steam ferryboat made regular trips from St. Joseph to Bellemont and the trade of the town was out of all proportions to its size. It flourished for some few years and during the "Pike's Peak or Bust" rush, it did more business than any other town in the county. Like all other mushroom towns along the river in pioneer times, Bellemont was destined to lose its grip on trade, and early in the '60's it started to go down. People began to move away, many of the old residents having already settled in Troy. Gradually it went down hill and the decline was persistent. In 1870 the men who promoted Bellemont and were most active in its commercial life wouldn't have known it. 'Twas but a shadow of its former self, and at the present day, few people know that Bellemont ever existed.

Whitehead (Bellemont) was located on Sec. 15, Town 3, Range 22, in what is now Washington Township. It was first settled by J. R. Whitehead, an Indian trader, in 1852, and afterward laid off as a townsite in spring of 1855, by a town company from New York. The seat of justice of Doniphan County was located here two years, 1855-56. A post office was established at this point May 30, 1859, with T. M. O'Brien as postmaster, who served until the 6th of July, 1860, at which time Joseph Badger was appointed and served to July 5, 1861. At this time A. M. Church was appointed, serving the people as postmaster until Jan. 14, 1864. On this date A. S. Marvin was appointed and served until July 6, 1864. To succeed him was appointed A. J. Haskel, July 6, 1864, who served until said postoffice was discontinued, April 10, 1866. This town was located on the river north of Wathena a few miles, and the principal part of the townsite is owned by R. O. Sumner, the Rock Island Railroad conductor; G. A. Dubach, J. E. Martin estate, W. R. Martin, August Hanke, Mathias Vertin, Ed. Parkhurst, John Erb, Mike Frankovitch and August Moirgules. In 1857 Bellemont boasted of a forty-two room hotel which was afterward sold to St. Joseph parties, torn down and moved away.

Elwood Election

At an election held on Monday, July 12, 1858, the following township officers were elected at Elwood: For supervisors, E. Blackiston chairman, Zack Wilson and John T. Brady; for justices of the peace, Geo. S. Hough, N. Abbey, T. Brown and D. Morton; for constables, A. B. Sweet, James E. Dryden, Thos. Perkins and C. Yeager; for treasurer, John Tracy, Nathan Smith as clerk, and J. M. Galloway assessor.

The Central Protective Association

The Wathena Organization Which Provides Protection to Life and Security to Property, Against the Acts of Criminals—Its Members Co-operate With the Public Officials and Aid in Enforcing the Law Rather Than Taking Matters Into Their Own Hands—History of the Organization in Wathena, Which Now Has Nearly 400 Members.

In many rural communities throughout the Middle West there has come a demand in recent years for organized protection to the lives and property of the people against the acts of criminals who infest the cities. With railroads and automobile roads to make possible a quick run into the country and an easy way of getting back, and with little to fear from police or sheriffs, there would be nothing to hinder these criminals making raiding tours were it not for the protection which is given by the volunteer organization of farmers and citizens that is known as the Central Protective Association, sometimes called the "Anti Horse Thief Association."

This modern organization has come into existence to meet the condition above described, and to meet it in a legitimate way. It is not a "vigilance committee" taking the law in its own hands, but is an association of peaceful, law-abiding citizens working hand in hand with the public officials to enforce the law in its application to protecting the people from acts of violence and protecting their property from theft.

There are now several hundred branches of this organization in Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri, and their membership runs up into the thousands. The association at Wathena, with whose operations this article concerns, is a splendid illustration of the value of this kind of co-operation for the protection of life and property. It is Central Protective Association Number 18 and has over 370 members, each and every one of whom is ready at all times to respond to a call to service.

Mr. L. P. Kiefer, now president, has served 15 years in that office. Geo. Manville, treasurer, has held his office 24 years and Charles Renick has been secretary 7 years. Here are a few facts about the Wathena branch of the Central Protective Association, its plan of organization, its aim and purposes and its practical workings:

The C. P. A. is an order pledged to uphold the law and help to capture criminals. The Wathena local has a standing reward for house-breaking of $50 and horse-stealing of $100 for the capture of each offender, and similar rewards for other offenses and petty thefts. They also pay their members for horses stolen two-thirds value if not recovered. They allow no hunting on their premises or trespassing, and will pay a liberal reward to any one who reports hunters or prowlers thereon without the owner's permission. Their mottor is, "Protect the innocent and bring thieves and lawbreakers to justice."

Any one wishing to become a member of Wathena C. P. A. No. 18, should see L. P. Kiefer, president; C. C. Renick, secretary or Geo. Manville, treasurer.

The grand officers of the lodge are J. W. Layton, president, Weston, Mo.; W. H. Smith, secretary, Atchison, Kansas; Andy Loughrey, treasurer, Randolph, Mo.

The initiation fee is $1.00 and expenses are paid by assessment. Only two assessments have been made since 1894, and that was only fifty cents per member each time.

History of the C. P. A.

The Central Protective Association idea of co-operation was first evolved in Clay County, Missouri, in 1863 at the time the James boys were doing so much robbing and when life and property of the farmers were insecure. The James boys made that part of Missouri a sort of rendezvous and the farmer who owned an extra good pair of horses did not know at what hour in the day or night they would disappear. The James boys, however, were not the only outlaws with whom these Missouri farmers had to deal. Roving bands would go through the country stealing everything they could take away, terrorizing the people and often doing violence to them.

One day about twenty-five of those farmers got together and resolved to do something for the protection of their lives and property. Every horse thief they caught they hanged to a tree. Acting spontaneously they took matters in their own hands, as they though they were obliged to do for their own protection.

Things could not always be thus. The time came when the men must suit their actions to the law, lest some innocent man be a victim. They formed an association known as the Central Protective Association, in 1870, adopted a constitution and began to do business on a business basis. Later, in 1870, the organization took the form of the present Central Protective Association.

From that start the movement grew and grew until now it has many branches in the states west of the Mississippi River, and is still growing. A recent statement placed the number of branch organizations at a little over 300 and the membership 35,000.

Under the operation of the association as at present organized thief catching has been reduced to a science by the farmers and it is a wily rascal indeed who can escape the members of the association when the alarm is given over the rural telephone lines or by the rider of a swift-flying horse.

Thief catching, however, it not all that this association does, as the members of the Wathena Association will tell you. It is a valuable aid in any public movement that has for its purpose the betterment of conditions; and when it comes to some great calamity, or some crisis when men are needed and brave men at that, there is in and around Wathena a crowd of some 370 men—and some women also—who are ready to respond to the call.

Concerning the operations of the Wathena Association Mr. L. P. Kiefer says that all of the people of Wathena and community are backing the movement to promote peace and to protect lives and property. The association has 370 members and among them are the best people to be found anywhere in Kansas. There is still room on the membership rolls for others. Among the members will be found the names of several widows, who are eligible to membership. Any well recommended young man over 18 years of age may join, and women over 18 years may also become members for protection. Mr. Kiefer says there is no organization that offers a better way for co-operation on every phase of community life than the Central Protective Association.

Christian Dubach

The Well-Known Lawyer Now of St. Joseph Is a Native of Doniphan County, Who By His Pluck and Industry Worked His Way Up to His Present High Position By Teaching School—A Sketch of His Life With a Review of His Struggles Upward Through Difficulties.

Self-made men are more the rule than the exception in Kansas, as in no other state of the Union are there so many advantages and so many opportunities for self-help and self-education thrown in the pathway of the ambitious young man. Yet it is not every self-made man who rises to great heights, for it is only now and then that one, possessing true genius to go with his industry, is able to overtake his fellows and pass them on the upward climb of the ladder.

These foregoing philosophical reflections are, in fact and in truth, illustrative of the rise, by and through patient toil and industry, of Christian

Christian Dubach.

Dubach from an humble position on his father's farm in Burr Oak Township to an exalted station among the leading members of the bar of St. Joseph. Other men of whom we read in the magazines and newspapers have achieved success in much the same way, but the case of Christian Dubach appeals to the people of Doniphan County more forcibly than those we read of, because this young man's career has all been worked out right here at home—and Christian Dubach is one of us, one of our own kith and kin.

It was on the Dubach farm in Burr Oak Township that this successful lawyer first saw the light of day, on May 16, in the centennial year of our nation's independence, 1876. His father was Gustav Adolphus Dubach, who was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, January 3, 1855, and moved with his parents, Christian and Christina Dubach, to Doniphan County, April 12, in 1865. The mother of the subject of this sketch was Tabitha Isabel Benifield, born in Missouri, and was married to G. A. Dubach December 12, 1874, and being reared in the home of her grandfather, David Schuster, came to Doniphan County in 1862, the family being driven to the extremity of giving up their home in Missouri and moving to Kansas by the bushwhackers.

Mr. Dubach spent his early childhood and young manhood on the farm and during that time attended the common school, receiving his high school education in Wathena, Kansas. When he was eighteen years of age, he began teaching school, continuing in this profession for six years. The first two years of his teaching was in the country, followed by two years as principal of the Doniphan schools, and for the last two years principal of the Elwood schools. During these six years he spent his summers in the State Normal at Emporia and from there obtained his state certificate as teacher. In the autumn of 1900, Mr. Dubach entered the law department of the Kansas State University of Lawrence, Kansas, later taking work in the art school. He was graduated from the law department in 1903.

While at the Kansas University, he received recognition by being elected president of his class one year, and president of the Phi Delta Phi fraternity one year.

On August 27, 1903, he married Miss Lura E. Hewins of Doniphan County, also a teacher of that county. Mr. and Mrs. Dubach established their home in St. Joseph in the autumn of 1903, where they still live.

Mr. Dubach formed a partnership with Charles L. Faust in the practice of law as soon as he went to St. Joseph, with their offices in the German-American Bank Building. This partnership was dissolved by mutual agreement September 1, 1905. Mr. Dubach still has his offices in the German-American Bank Building, and enjoys a lucrative law practice from his many friends in Doniphan County, Kansas, who followed him into the city with their business, as well as the business he has acquired from new friends and acquaintances made in St. Joseph.

Recognizing the fact that he was born and reared in "The Garden of Eden" (quoting his own statements), which is Doniphan County, Kansas, and the surrounding country, Mr. Dubach invested his first savings in land and has continued so to invest until at this time he has fourteen hundred acres of alfalfa land in this vicinity, of which more than one thousand acres is in alfalfa, and he is said to be the largest alfalfa grower in the state of Missouri. His farms are equipped with forty hay barns, and although twelve years ago his total assets did not amount to $1,000, today his land holdings have a total value of nearly a quarter of a million dollars, thus showing the possibilities for a man without means, who is fortunate enough to be born in Doniphan County, Kansas, and wise enough to stick close at home when he makes his investments.

WATHENA CAMP M. W. A.

This Fraternity Was Organized Nineteen Years Ago With Twelve Charter Members, Three of Whom Are Still in Good Standing—Present Membership Numbers Seventy-two, Making the Camp One of the Strongest Bodies of Woodcraftsmen in Doniphan County—Present Officers.

One of the flourishing bodies of Modern Woodmen of America in Doniphan County is Wathena Camp No. 4190, with headquarters at Wathena.

The camp was organized by a dozen aggressive advocates of woodcraft, in September, 1896, and is consequently almost nineteen years old.

The first officers of the camp were S. W. Allen, venerable consul; L. N. Linder, worthy adviser; S. R. Cogdill, banker, and Jesse Milbourne, clerk.

The charter members included J. R. Anderson, S. R. Cogdill, C. Frank, Bert Howard, L. N. Linder, Charles Meeks, E. A. Miller, W. H. Roll, George W. P. Roll, J. E. Scully, H. V. Snively and William Thomas.

Three of the original members are still in good standing and active in the affairs of the camp. They are S. W. Allen, L. N. Linder and E. A. Miller.

The present membership of Wathena Camp numbers seventy-two, and is made up of substantial citizens who take a great interest in the progress of woodcraft and the welfare of their order.

The camp has a characteristic personnel of active spirits who work in the most admirable harmony for the advancement of the fraternity and the social entertainments, which are a great feature of the doings of the camp.

The financial condition of the Wathena camp could not be stronger or in better shape. The treasury is full to overflowing with funds, and all claims are promptly liquidated.

Insurance policies in any amount from $500 to $3,000, are issued by the camp and that department of the order is especially well managed. There are no kicks about extra assessments and all claims are promptly paid.

The present officers of Wathena Camp No. 4190 are F. A. Whitney, venerable consul; John M. Curtis, worthy adviser; Thomas Lankford, banker, and T. B. Chalk, clerk.

Richard Mawson

Richard Mawson, born July 31, 1843, in New Orleans, La. He came to Kansas Easter Sunday in 1855, and settled in Washington Township. Enlisted Aug. 21, 1862, in Company B, 13th Kansas volunteer infantry. Mustered out at Little Rock, June 28, 1865. He ranked as a color sergeant. Has two daughters: (Mary) Mrs. Fred Dubach, Jr., and (Ethel) Mrs. J. S. Brazelton, and three sons, as follows: Richard Irl, Thomas Edward and William Vincent. He resides four miles northwest of Wathena on his ninety-acre farm, which his mother pre-empted. Mr. Mawson enjoys the distinction of being a pen artist, and has served as trustee of Washington Township eleven years.

Henry Jones

the celebrated fruit grower, near Blair, in Washington Township, has worked up an enviable reputation. He enjoys the distinction of having sold more berries off an acre of ground than any berry grower in Doniphan County. Grows the best of varieties and sells plants. Parties who anticipate planting berries should get in touch with this progressive young fruit man. The varieties he grows and the varieties he sells you are the money-makers. Why farm your land in corn and realize $15 per acre from it when Jones will sell you berries that will pay an annual dividend of $100 per acre net?

Brode W. Odem

Brode W. Odem, born near Jonesberg, N. C., 1845, Jan. 6th. Enlisted in Company G, 43rd Missouri, 1863, Sept. 20th, and was mustered out at St. Louis at Benton Barracks, June 20th, 1864, came to Kansas twenty-three years ago last March. Work on the Methodist church of Wathena began Sept. 8, 1866, and the structure was completed Jan. 1, 1867. The ladies of the Wathena Design held a grand festival on the evening of Dec. 26, 1866, for the benefit of the new Methodist church, which was nearly completed at that time. Quite a number of Troy people attended the affair. The receipts of this festival amounted to $121.60.

At Elwood, on Wednesday evening, February 13, 1867, Rev. Mr. J. Paulson officiated at the marriage of Benjamin F. Gifford to Miss Emarillis Roberts, both of Elwood.

Guy Larzelere died April 29, 1908 of blood poisoning. The poison augmented from a little prick by a sand burr.

Lawrence A. Bauman

Wathena's Plasterer and Paper Hanger, an Expert Mechanic and a Citizen Who Stands High in the Estimation of the People of That Neighborhood—The Operator of a Feed Mill—Resided Here Twenty Years.

Doniphan County, and praticularly that part of it which embraces the town of Wathena and the country round-about, has been fortunate for the past twenty years in having some expert mechanics in the building lines. Among these is Lawrence A. Bauman, plasterer and paper hanger at Wathena. Mr. Bauman, of German descent and speaking the language, has through years of industry and practice become recognized as an artist in his line, as is attested by his work on homes and business buildings throughout the neighborhood, and so extensive has been his patronage it may be said there scarcely is a home in that part of the county that has not been favored by some of his artistic work.

Lawrence A. Bauman was born in Sheboygan, Wisconsin, May 30, 1864, and there he grew to manhood and received a common school education.

Mike Bauer, Jr.

He came west when a young man and learned the trade of plasterer and paper hanger at St. Joseph, under direction of John Zeltner, one of the best artists in his line in northwestern Missouri and who had made a success of his trade in that city.

He first came to Doniphan County in November, 1895, working at his trade for several months and then returning to St. Joseph. He soon found, however, that he liked Kansas much better than Missouri and he decided to become a permanent citizen of Doniphan County. After arriving at this decision Mr. Bauman lost no time in making the change. Thus he again crossed over to Doniphan County on March 2, 1902, and became a permanent resident. He purchased the Jack Mann place, which is situated four miles northwest of Wathena, and there engaged in business of raising small fruit, following his trade several months of the year. He lived on his fruit farm five years. Then he sold out his place and moved back to Wathena, where he has since been engaged in the plastering and paper hanging business, with occasionally some other business to which his talents suited him as a side issue. Mr. Baumann's industry and his upright dealings have won him favor among all of the people and he has been quite successful. On October 22, 1914, Mr. Bauman purchased the grist mill in Wathena and has since devoted his time and attention to that business. It is not a large mill, grinding only corn meal and feed, but it has been operated so as to turn out a large volume of business and has brought good returns to its owner and operator.

Mr. Bauman is one of the men of Doniphan County upon whom reliance can be placed to stand for home interests. He has lived in the Wathena neighborhood twenty years, barring a brief residence in St. Joseph, and knows conditions as well as it is possible for any man to know them. He believes in the co-operation of all of the people in the building up of the community, to the end that it become the best place in which to live. His labor, his vote and his influence have always been to the cause of good government and to education. He had done his share toward the prosperity of Wathena and surrounding country. As a mechanic he has made it a principle to give full value of service and workmanship, dollar for dollar, for the money he receives. This has made him popular among the people, in the sense that any dependable, honest and square-dealing man may be popular and well liked among the people with whom he mingles.

Mr. Bauman's wife was Miss Elizabeth Stick, of St. Joseph, who was born October 20, 1868. Their marriage took place on January 28, 1890, the Rev. Father Linnenkamp, priest of the Church of the Immaculate Conception in St. Joseph, performing the ceremony. Mr. Baumann was living in St. Joseph at the time of his marriage, and their first coming to Doniphan County was nearly six years after that event. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bauman. These children, with dates and order of birth, are here given:

Otilla Marie, born October 3, 1894, in St. Joseph, graduated from the Wathena high school, taught school two years, was married to Frank Boeh, April 22, 1911; has one child, Vincent Lawrence, born February 14, 1915.

Lawrence Albert, born March 29, 1897, at Wathena.

Carl Raymond, born June 5, 1902, in St. Joseph.

Frances Ann, born November 7, 1904, at Wathena.

Marceline Katharine, born November 9, 1908, at Wathena.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bauman are an honor to their parents and are being brought up in Wathena and given an education in the splendid schools of Wathena, such an education as is designed to make them qualified for the duties of life and for citizenship.

Mr. and Mrs. Bauman are quiet, unassuming people of Wathena, who enjoy the friendship and esteem of the people who know them. They have a neat little home in the city.

MISS VIRGINIA GORDON

A Native of Washington Township—Educated in Wathena—Has a Bright Future.

The subject of this sketch is the pleasant young lady whom the children of Marion Township have learned to love and respect as one of the nicest teachers they have ever had at Palermo.

It is not always the grizzled pedagogue and one of wide experience that proves to be the most successful with modern children, as witnesseth Miss Gordon. Although this is the young lady's first term at public school teaching, those who know say she is making an undisputed success of her work. Like many of the youthful teachers throughout Doniphan County, this girl is thoroughly qualified for her position by education, instinct and training. Also she is a native product, and it is only loyal to say that we believe a teacher who was reared and educated in our beloved county is better qualified to teach the children of our county.

Miss Virginia Gordon.

Miss Gordon was graduated from Wathena High School in the spring of 1915, under the superintendency of Charles J. Vinsonhaler. She was born at Wathena, and the year 1895 has the honor therefor. Her mother's maiden name was Miss Saluda Batchelor, who was born in 1865 in New Orleans. Her father, John A. C. Gordon, was born in St. Joseph, Mo., in 1863, and his family moved to Wathena the same year. He was married in 1893. He has been in the lumber business for the past twenty-five years, and is well known throughout the county as a shrewd merchant. The Gordons reside in a substantial residence built upon the spot where the construction of the court house was begun when Wathena was voted the county seat.

Beside Virginia, the Gordons have several other children, as follows: John, born Jan. 18, 1899; Vanita, born April 8, 1901, and Ludwell Lea, born January 9, 1903.

Virginia, the first born, already bids fair to add honor to her parents, and we predict that the younger brothers and sister will follow in her footsteps.

ANNA LAURA CORNICK

Efficient Domestic Science Teacher of Wathena—Properly Prepared Food and Its Relation to Divorce—Was Born on a Farm Near Anthony.

Statictics tell us that two-thirds of all divorces in the United States are caused primarily by bad cooking. Men and women who eat out of paper bags, and tin cans, they say, are in no proper humor or physical condition to undergo the little trials and tribulations of constant association and as a consequence are irritable and cross. Quarrels result, there is a temporary separation, then papers are filed in the divorce courts and the once happy couples are parted forever by a lenient court. All because a little food was not properly prepared.

Miss Anna Laura Cornick.

If all this be true, there will be no divorces among the young girls of the Wathena high school—at least no divorces due to bad cooking—for Miss Anna Laura Cornick is the teacher of domestic science in that institution and a better one is not to be found in the state of Kansas. She has had four years of special training in that branch of knowledge and is an expert in the culinary line in all its branches. This knowledge she imparts to her large class of the future women of the country.

Miss Cornick was born near Anthony, Kansas, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Cornick, prosperous farmers in that vicinity. Her early education was received in the country schools and she went through them rapidly. When in her teens she entered the Kansas State Normal school at Emporia, and took a general course, intending at the time to fit herself for a general teacher of all branches. After her graduation, however, and when she received a life certificate as an instructor, she entered the Kansas State Agricultural College at Manhattan.

At this great Kansas school she made up her mind to specialize in domestic science in all of its branches. For two years her work was confined to practical paths which since have proved especially fitting for the work she has undertaken. At the end of her course she received a bachelor of science degree and returned to her home. She taught in the schools of Harper County, Kansas, for the next two years, making for herself an enviable reputation. It was her first effort in her chosen profession and from the first it was seen that she would be a success.

Miss Cornick came to Doniphan County on August 29, 1914, and began her labors which have been so satisfactory thus far, and which promise to end much more creditably. She was engaged by the Wathena board of education for one year. It is useless to say that her services have been acceptable. The records of the school board show that at the completion of this year's term she was unanimously re-engaged for the next year at an increased salary.

Into her work Miss Cornick has brought something more than the mere knowledge of a subject at hand. She not only knows domestic science, but loves it as well. She is a pleasant, tactful and intelligent young woman and not only in the class room but in the city of Wathena she has the greatest admiration of all who come into touch with her. We predict for Miss Cornick a most glowing future in her profession. She takes considerable interest in church and Sunday school work and advocates everything that has the semblance of good.

CHARLES GROH

Native of Washington Township—Belongs to Pioneer Family—An Able Exponent of the Alfalfa Industry.

Charles Groh, who is one of the most extensive growers of alfalfa in this part of Kansas, owning eighty acres of fine alfalfa land in addition to growing alfalfa on many acres of leased land, is one of the most successful men engaged in agriculture in Doniphan County. He was born on a farm one mile east of Wathena, February 1, 1865, and has resided in Doniphan County all of his life. The Groh's are highly respected people and industrious.

The parents of Charles Groh were Peter Groh, who was born in Germany, and Mrs. Bertha McPherson Groh, who was a native of Cape Girardeau County, Missouri, born May 9, 1875.

Charles Groh, the subject of this sketch, was married to Miss Bertie McPherson on July 16, 1890. She was born May 9, 1872. To this union two sons were born, Charles R. Groh, born December 29, 1891; and Peter Joseph Groh, born January 15, 1894.

The son Charles R. Groh was married to Miss Susan Frances Brandt April 27, 1911. She was born near Troy on the old Garvin farm in Center Township May 24, 1895, and was educated in the country school and the Troy and Wathena high schools. They have two children, Martin Louis, born August 10, 1912, and Bertha Lucille, born June 18, 1914.

Joseph Peter Groh, the youngest of the two sons of Charles Groh, was married to Miss Clara Rectchards April 27, 1912, by Justice Flynn in St. Joseph, Missouri. She was born November 17, 1896. Two children have been born to them: Earl Peter Groh, born July 4, 1914. Clara Bernice Groh, born May 12, 1915.

The Groh family is one of the thrifty families of the county of German origin. By patient labor and good management they have prospered and father and sons are recognized as among the best agriculturists of the county. The elder Charles Groh, the subject of this sketch, is considered an expert scientific grower of alfalfa, in which he takes pride, and by his methods of handling his hay he is able to get the best price the market affords.

Doniphan County money can best be employed by investing it at home, is the opinion of L. A. Libel, cashier of the State Bank of Wathena. There is plenty of room for the development of our natural resources.

---

In May, 1857, a town company was organized in Elwood, and they purchased the ground on which the town was laid off, 583 acres, and called it Elwood, in honor of one of the proprietors.

The St. Joseph Bridge

The Great Structure That Spans the Missouri River Provides a Connecting Link Between Kansas and Missouri That Has Helped to Make the City of St. Joseph a Great Market for a Wide Stretch of Fertile Land—Built in 1871-2 and Completed May 18, 1873—Mrs. John D. Saeger and Grant Dishon Remember Some History Connected With the Bridge—Used By Railroads and the Public.

The great railway and wagon bridge that spans the Missouri River at St. Joseph, Missouri, was built for the two-fold purpose of providing an outlet for the railroads to the west and affording the farmers on the Kansas side of the river access to St. Joseph as their natural market place. Its use for more than forty years has justified, many times over, the wisdom of its promoters, for it has done more to add to the prosperity and commercial greatness of the leading city of northwest Missouri perhaps than anything else. When one considers that an average of twenty-nine railway trains cross the bridge daily, there is no way of estimating the vast volume of traffic it has borne since it was built. Likewise there is no estimate to be placed on the number of vehicles and the number of persons on foot crossing it since first it was opened. It has been a popular highway from the start, and here may we add that it would be much more popular so far as the people of Doniphan County are concerned, were it not for the high schedules of tolls charged for vehicles and pedestrians. Some day, however, may we hope that this great public utility will become the property of the public and the toll system abolished, as it is being abolished on nearly all of the old highways and bridges of the East.

There has for years been some speculation concerning the exact date it was opened for traffic. However, there is one Doniphan County woman who knows. She is Mrs. John Davidson Saeger, who has lived all her life within a mile of the western terminus of the bridge. Mrs. Saeger was Miss Stella Hire, born October 17, 1870, on the spot where her present home stands and where she still resides. One of the things that were indelibly stamped on her mind as a little girl was the plate on the bridge which told that it was completed May 18, 1873. She crossed the bridge going to and from Dr. Martin's Seminary in St. Joseph, where she was educated, hundreds of times and ever and always that old legend was staring her in the face, so that she was constantly spelling it out. She was married to Mr. John Davidson Saeger April 16, 1896.

The records bear out Mrs. Saeger's memory, although the old plate has long been missing. On January 18, 1871, several business men of St. Joseph subscribed for stock and organized a corporation known as the St. Joseph Bridge Building Company, prepared the articles of incorporation and were duly incorporated under the laws of Missouri on February 26, 1871. At the first regular meeting these officers were elected to serve one year: W. P. Hall, president; W. L. Ranson, vice-president; I. G. Knappner, treasurer; John Pinger, auditor; J. M. Hawley, secretary. The surveying committee composed W. P. Hall, J. M. Hawley and J. B. Hinman, engaged the services of Colonel E. D. Mason, an engineer, who afterward achieved a national reputation.

The preliminary survey was commenced February 6, 1871, by H. M. Kelly, who was chosen by Colonel Mason as his first assistant. That survey extended through the rocky bluffs near Bellmont to a point seven miles below St. Joseph. The fall in the low water channel for that distance was eighty-two one hundredths of a foot to the mile. Another interesting fact, disclosed by the engineer's data was that the annual rainfall in the basin drained by the river at St. Joseph averaged 19½ inches, while that of the basin below was 26 inches.

June 10, 1871, was the day appointed for the opening of proposals for constructing a railroad, wagon and foot-bridge across the Missouri River, according to the specification of the chief engineer, Colonel Mason. Six of the leading bridge building companies in the United States competed for the work, and their bids were as follows:

|---|---|
| Baltimore Bridge Co. | $1,175,000 |
| King Wrought Iron Bridge Co. | 806,000 |
| American Bridge Co. | 714,000 |
| Keystone Bridge Co.( superstructure only) | 260,000 |
| Phoenixville Bridge Co. (superstructure only) | 317,000 |
| Detroit Bridge and Iron Works | 710,000 |

The contract was awarded to the Detroit Bridge and Iron Works, the lowest and best bidder, and a bond of $100,000 was fixed. The first material for the bridge arrived July 25, 1871, being a train load of stone from White's Camp in Kansas. The laying of the first stone on September 26 of that year was the occasion of a great assemblage of people on the river bank. The long and difficult work of building and landing the piers at bed rock in the river then began. December 8, 1871, the landing of Pier No. 6 on bed rock was accomplished. The caisson for Pier No. 5 was landed on bed rock on January 31, 1872. The caisson for Pier No. 4 was accidentally launched on January 21, 1872, and while the pier was being sunk the ice in the river broke up, resulting in no material damage. However, it was successfully landed on bed rock March 8, 1872. The caisson for the upper pier was placed in position April 27 and landed on bed rock May 30, 1872. It was not until November 4, 1872, that Pier No. 3 was landed on bed rock. The last Pier, No. 1, was launched from the east bank and put into position, the air pumps starting February 5, 1873. The pier landed on bed rock March 5, 1873, and was finished March 25.

The piers, constituting the sub-structure of the bridge, contained 1,457,000 feet of timber, board measure, 16,000 cubic feet of concrete and 172,071 cubic feet of masonry. The largest pier is 45x45 feet at the base and 35 feet in diameter at the top.

Work on the superstructure began immediately after the completion of the piers, the first span being swung May 4, 1873. The superstructure is of three fixed spans of the quadrangle Pratt truss, each 300 feet long, one fixed span of 80 feet at each approach, and a draw span of 305 feet, making the entire length of the bridge 1,345 feet. The weight of the iron in the superstructure is 2,850,000 pounds and of the road bed and track 380,000 pounds. The draw span alone weighs 900,000 pounds, and it is so perfectly adjusted as to be easily opened and shut by one man. The capacity of the bridge is six times as great as the heaviest train that can be placed on it. The approaches over the bottom lands contain 2,025,000 cubic feet of earth and broken rock.

The first locomotive crossed the bridge May 20, 1873. It was engine No. 6 of the St. Joe and Denver City Railway, in charge of E. Sleppy, master mechanic of the road. On board were several bridge and railway officials, together with prominent citizens of St. Joseph and Kansas. On Saturday, May 31, 1873, there was a grand celebration of the completion of the bridge. Many of the Doniphan County people were in attendance.

The first serious accident to befall this giant structure occurred on July 4, 1873, at 6:30 o'clock in the evening when the big steamship Mountaineer broke from her moorings, floated down the river and crashed into the bridge. Twelve days were required to repair the damage, amounting to $16,000.

The control of the bridge was transferred to the Jay Gould interests June 16, 1879, and it has since remained in the control of these interests. It is used by the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railroad and the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad.

Grant Dishon of Troy corroborates Mrs. J. D. Saeger's story relative to the completion of the bridge and says that his first recollections of Kansas date back to May 18, 1873, at which time he came with his father, Oliver Dishon, and brother, William, and crossed the bridge into Kansas, with an idea of ascertaining what Elwood looked like. Grant was wearing his first pair of brass-toed boots at the time and says everything that transpired on the trip over to Elwood is as vivid to his recollection today as though the trip had been made only yesterday.

The prevailing schedule of tolls are: For a two-horse vehicle and driver, 25 cents; horse and rider, 15 cents; automobile, 25 cents.

Residence of John A. C. Gordon.

Probably few people in Doniphan County, when passing by the beautiful residence of Mr. Gordon in Wathena, are cognizant of the fact that this stately residence stands on the identical spot where a foundation for a court house was built during the summer of 1867. On March the 12th of that year, the court-house was destroyed by fire, and a fierce fight for the county seat was participated in by Wathena and Troy, the former winning the laurels. The citizens of Troy contested, and the courts decided in favor of Troy.

Grapes a Success

During the month of August, 1872, Constant Poirier harvested forty-two acres of grapes, which netted him several thousand dollars. He was the pioneer grape man in northeastern Kansas. Enthusiastically devoted to his favorite pursuit, he managed his large business in person and made it a money-making proposition. During the above year mentioned, he manufactured 30,000 gallons of wine and built an additional cellar that fall on his premises for the storage of wine, which was 25x60 feet. Constant Poirier planted his first vineyard, strawberries, blackberries and raspberries in 1855. Besides the main cellar there was an "L" for storing bottles of wine, a packing room 23x24 feet, and a large room 23x90 feet over it to be used as a public hall. The casks put in this cellar had a holding capacity of 10,080 gallons, which, with the others used by Mr. Poirier, gave him ample room for the manufacture of 30,000 gallons of wine, which at New York prices would net him a snug sum of $25,000 for his year's work.

Otto C. Jones of Wathena

Otto C. Jones of Wathena, was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, November 30, 1856, came to Doniphan County with his parents in 1857. Received a common school education and he learned the tinner's trade and has followed it all his life, is now in the hardware business at Wathena. Married Miss Kate Craig, daughter of W. B. Craig. They had one child, a boy, who only lived about two months. Mrs. Jones died June 21, 1908. He started in business for himself in 1877.

Stage Line

On July 2, 1866, the Kansas & Nebraska Stage Company put a line of stages on the route running through Troy from St. Joseph to Nebraska City and Omaha, the first passing through Troy on Monday, July 2d. The coaches were drawn by four horses and the distance was made from St. Joseph to Omaha in thirty-six hours.

Frank H. Drenning

The late Judge Frank H. Drenning of Wathena was married to Miss Lottie E. Gifford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Gifford, Elgin, Illinois, Nov. 1, 1866. The Rev. Mr. C. R. Colver was the officiating clergyman. Mrs. Drenning now resides in Wathena.

ELWOOD & MARYSVILLE RAILROAD

Locomotive and train on the track. On Monday last, April 24, the directors of the Elwood & Marysville Railroad placed on their track the locomotive "Albany," an engine which has been useful from Boston to the Missouri, as railroads have successively stretched their length toward the setting sun. On Tuesday several cars were brought across the river, and a large concource of people gathered to celebrate the actual opening of the first section of the great Pacific road. Col. M. J. Thompson, president of the Elwood & Marysville road; W. P. Hall, president of the St. Joseph & Topeka road; Gov. R. M. Stewart of Missouri, and others, addressed the crowd on the great topic of the day. The speakers were eloquent and felicitous in their remarks, and their congratulations were received with hearty cheers. About 4 o'clock the engine was coupled to the cars, the cars were crowded by a dense mass of men, and amid the ringing of bells, shrill screechings of whistles and deafening cheers, the first train of cars rolled over the Kansas railroad. Last June ground was first broken on this road. The company commenced the enterprise without means, and with slight encouragement of assistance, but with an indomitable purpose to push forward the work, and settle by their own exertions and achievements the eastern terminus of the Pacific road. They have succeeded beyond their most sanguine expectations. Twelve miles of the road are graded. The first section of the track is laid. A large quantity of ties are provided ready for use, and $50,000 worth of iron is already shipped and enroute for this point. We are assured by the directors that by the 1st of July trains will run to Troy, and that during the present season the road will be extended thirty or fortry miles west. This is the result of persistent and continued action, as against the wind power of enthusiastic meetings on which some of our neighboring cities have seemed to rely.—Taken from "The Elwood Free Press," April 28, 1860.

Corruption Charged

Mass meeting. The people in council. Corruption denounced.—"The Elwood Free Press," July 28, 1860.

The Doniphan Post says: Johnson & Strong of St. Joseph have the contract for building our county jail. Their bid was $5,000. Mr. Ingalls of Troy, put in a bid of $4,940, but his bonds were not fully acceptable. Mr. J. F. Forman of our town offered to do the work for $5,000, but as it was not put in in the time specified, it was not entitled to consideration. We are not fully posted in the matter, and for information we ask the county commissioners why the contract was awarded to non-residents and at such a high price, too. We repose too much confidence in the gentlemen to suppose that as the Elwood Press insinuates, that they allowed their political feelings to govern them and awarded the contract to Messrs. Johnson & Strong "because they are democrats." "Not fully posted?" Well, neighbor, you are slow coach. There are very few voters in Doniphan County who are as ignorant of this shameful affair as this editor acknowledges himself to be. An editor ought to give information, instead of asking it. Perhaps the Post will act with more public spirit when it knows something about public matters.

The First Kansas Railroad

On the 20th of March, 1860, the first iron rail on Kansas soil was laid at Elwood, as the beginning of the Elwood & Marysville Railroad, now the St. Joseph & Western Division of the Union Pacific, and known as the St. Joseph & Grand Island. April 28th the railroad had one mile of track, and on that day the locomotive "Albany," an engine which had been used from Boston to Missouri, as railroads had wended their way westward, was brought over the river from St. Joseph in a ferry boat. This was the first "iron horse" that touched Kansas soil. John Godbey, who was killed in the elevator during the severe storm in May, 1904, in Elwood, was on the ferryboat when the engine was brought across the river. The inhabitants of the river bottom gave the locomotive the name of the "Mud Cat." April 29th several cars were brought from St. Joseph and a big celebration was held at Elwood over the completion of what was claimed to be the first section of the great Pacific Railroad. Robert M. Stewart, governor of Missouri, was one of the speakers.

Elwood Guard Formed

The day after Fort Sumter was bombarded at the beginning of the Civil War, the Elwood Guard was formed. The men were mustered into service at Fort Leavenworth and became a part of Company A, First Kansas Regiment. It was reported once during the war that Elwood was to be raided. That night several young men crossed the river to St. Joseph and returned with a small cannon, which was mounted and made ready for use by daylight the next morning. It was never known where the young men procured the cannon and no questions were asked.

"Red Legs" and Gypsies

For a few years after the war the vicinity of Elwood was disturbed by horsethieves, and a class of banditti known as "Red Legs." Some of the wealthy citizens are said to have cooperated with the outlaws. It is charged that one of the residents had a large cellar under his house where stolen horses were concealed. In order to prevent the hiding place from being discovered, a smallpox sign was posted on the building.

On one occasion a valuable gray horse was stolen from a citizen of Elwood. A posse was organized and returned in two days with the animal.

"Where is the thief," one of the men was asked.

"Oh, he was such an innocent looking fellow that we decided to let him go," was the reply.

It was learned later that the horsethief had been lynched. After a few occurrences of this kind the "Red Legs" disappeared.

Elwood has had sensations in later years, too. A band of gypsies went there several years ago and camped in a grove of cottonwood trees. The men traded a few horses, and the women told a few fortunes, and then they folded their tents and went away. No sooner had they gone, than Laura, the five-year-old child of James Nation was missing.

Mr. Nation spent a fortune trying to recover his daughter, and finally sold his home, it is said, to carry on the search. At the end of two years Laura was found in St. Louis in the possession of a gypsy fortune teller known as Madam Rosilla.

William Charles Stuart

Has one son and five daughters: Mrs. Jacob Groh, Mrs. Adam Groh, Mrs. Mary Biehlen, Mrs. Rebecca Inman, Mrs. Catherine Evans. The latter resides at Bellingham, Washington. The son is George Stuart, of Wathena, manager of the Co-operative store, who is one of the live wires of the town.

James Morgan Bryan

James Morgan Bryan was born September 15th, 1843, and came to Doniphan County with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Milton E. Bryan, May 7th, 1854, and has resided in Doniphan County continuously ever since. He is truly the pioneer of pioneers.

Man Killed

An unidentified man was found dead beside the Rock Island tracks between the bridge and Elwood, July 7, 1915. He was about 55 years old, 5 feet 3 inches tall. The body was taken to the undertaking room of L. T. Hargis, of Wathena.

The 15th of March, 1914, was the fortieth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dawe, living three miles west of Troy. Owing to sickness in the family, the event was not celebrated at that time, but was postponed until Sunday, April 5th, the thirty-eighth birthday of William Dawe, their son.

On April 1, 1854, Daniel Vanderslice, who was Indian agent at the Mission, employed a large force of men to cut a road through the forest from the ferry landing on the west bank of the Missouri River at Elwood to Wathena.

It is said that the first white child born in Washington Township was the daughter of J. R. Whitehead.

Chief Wathena's wigwam was used in the month of July, 1854, for a religious service, which was conducted by the Methodist minister.

Christian Poirier was one of the first fruit-growers in the vicinity of Wathena, having planted some berries and grapes in the spring of 1854.

The first marriage ceremony performed in Washington Township was by Justice T. J. Braidy, who united in the bonds of holy wedlock, Jan. 12, 1855, Samuel Piles and Mary Hazelwood.

Washington Township was one of the original five townships laid out in Doniphan County and was organized Sept. 1, 1855. Since its organization three changes have been made in its boundaries. The first change was Sept. 16, 1856, and the second Oct. 20, 1856, and the third June 21, 1859.

On Thursday, April 4, 1867, several citizens of Wathena were relieved of property by some party who had little regard for the eighth commandment. Mr. Wynkoop lost about $10 worth of blacksmith tools, Mr. McPherson lost two pairs of boots and one pair of shoes from his shop; Clark Bros. lost a lot of carpenter tools, and Mr. Cook a few blankets.

Work was again commenced on the St. Joseph & Denver Railroad Company's line on Monday, July 9, 1866, at Wathena.

The Elwood Schools

Estella G. Norman, First Superintendent in New Building—Elwood Claims Best Building in Doniphan County—Constructed in 1902—Board of Education, Miss Sabina Roberts, B. V. Wasser, J. G. Bennett.

Nowhere in the United States is there a town of 1,000 inhabitants, principally populated by a laboring class of people, who manifest the interest in educational work that the citizens of Elwood do. This Kansas town, which, on account of its geographical location, is sometimes referred to as a suburb of St. Joseph, has always taken great pride in her schools. One thing upon which the entire citizenship agree is the provision of every necessary thing to promote the welfare of the schools. Young ideas are taught how to shoot, and to shoot well.

In order to illustrate graphically the extraordinary growth of the Elwood schools, it is interesting to review the past and show how the small beginnings of early days have developed into the up-to-date system of education which distinguishes Elwood above so many of her sister cities. Statistics show that fifty-five years ago, the population of Elwood was over 1,000 people, but on account of the caprices of the Missouri River, the town was practically depopulated, and only in the last fifteen years has Elwood been considered a town to be reckoned with. In 1902, when the new school building was constructed, the town took on a new impetus, and since the completion of the addition, September 6, 1915, Elwood has one of the spacious school buildings of Doniphan County.

The New Spacious Elwood School Building. A Substantial Structure.

They even boast of having the finest school house in Doniphan County. There is no question, however, but what their pride is justified in the new school building. Tourists and visitors to Elwood are always struck and impressed by the imposing building of brick and stone which is located in the northwest part of the town on the main Rock Island highway.

The first brick school building to be erected in Elwood was started in 1901 and finished in February, 1902. It was not a pretentious building in any sense of the word, but it answered the needs of the community for almost fifteen years. Many of the matrons and men of Elwood recall pleasant days spent in the little old frame school house, built years ago. Miss Estella G. Norman was the superintendent of the Elwood schools at the time the first brick school house was built, and had the honor of being the first principal in the new building, in which capacity she served well and faithfully.

In 1914 the fact became apparent that the building was inadequate for the district. For several years the room had been overcrowded and half sessions observed so as to accommodate the pupils, so on July 27, 1914, an election was held to vote $15,000 in bonds for the construction of four additional rooms. Over two-thirds majority was cast in favor of the bonds, exemplifying the fact that citizens of Elwood desired education for their children at any cost. After considerable deliberation by the school board, the contract was given to George W. Wright of St. Joseph, for the construction of the new building.

The school board at that time consisted of Miss Sabina Roberts, treasurer, Mr. B. V. Wasser, clerk, and Mr. J. G. Bennett, president. It was acknowledged by everybody that the school board exercised the best judgment in awarding the contract, as the work was rapidly and well done.

The contractor began excavating on March 20, 1915, and William F. Schrage of Kansas City threw the first shovelful of drit. The present school house has ten rooms, including a large gymnasium. The building was nearly completed on September 6, when school began. The Elwood school building is modern in almost every respect. Its heating and lighting system compares with schools in larger cities.

The teachers for the school year of 1915-16 are as follows: Prof. Lewis B. Roberts, superintendent, of Emporia; Miss Martha Caldwell, principal, Lecompton, Kansas. Mr. Roberts is unquestionably an excellent man for the place he occupies. Fitted naturally, by a keen intellect and discriminating tact for an executive position, he is further aided by the fact that one year of his life was spent in Doniphan County and he is well acquainted with many of the inhabitants of Elwood.

Too much cannot be said of Miss Caldwell, the principal, whose services are greatly appreciated by the patrons of the school. She is always a fair judge and an impartial advocate. It can be said to her everlasting credit that she is a favorite both with pupils, parents and teachers. The enrollment in the high school is twenty-three.

The teacher for the seventh and eighth grade is Miss Leta B. Kirk of Elwood. She has about twenty-eight pupils under her care. Few pupils ever fail under the tutelage of Miss Kirk, and she will soon have ready for the high school a well trained class of boys and girls.

The fifth and sixth grades are taught by Miss Helen Chaney of Burlington. Her pupils number forty-one. Miss Chaney is one of the popular young women of Elwood, as well as of her home town.

The first primary is in charge of Miss Irene Gifford, of Elwood. Miss Gifford needs no introduction, as she has been one of the foremost instructors of Doniphan County for several years and has probably taught more children their ABC's than any other woman instructor in the county. She is in love with her work, and that may be wherein lies her success.

The second primary is in charge of Miss Hava Wilson, one of Elwood's favorite daughters. Miss Wilson comes of a prominent family of Elwood, and won her position through sheer perseverance and grit. She has about thirty-five children under her care, and it is safe to predict that she will develop into one of the best teachers in the county.

The third and fourth grades are taught by Miss Julia Farrar, who has demonstrated her ability as a competent teacher since her connection with the Elwood schools.

The colored school, which is run separate, is in the hands of two capable young women, the Misses Zora Pyles and Eva Johnson. Miss Pyles is from Atchison, where she is highly recommended. She teaches a class of thirteen, and Miss Johnson has twenty-five in her class. The latter is from Wathena. All told there are about 235 pupils in the Elwood school.

Miss Roberts, treasurer of the school board, has resided in Elwood half a century, and enjoys an acquaintance that extends over practically the whole county. Mr. B. V. Wasser and Mr. J. G. Bennett are both good men for the places they hold. Their interest in the children who attend the school naturally promotes the splendid showing in educational work.

The public spirited citizens of Elwood firmly believe that the St. Joseph & Grand Island will build their shops in Elwood in a few years, and that the population will increase to such an extent that another addition to the school building will be necessary.

THE SIEGE OF ELWOOD

Invasion of Troops from St. Joseph That Was Halted.

In August, 1863, there came near being a serious clash between the Missouri militia and the soldiers and citizens of Elwood, over the frequent thefts of horses and other property on both sides of the border of Missouri and Kansas. The thieves were no respecters of persons—union and confederate sympathizers were robbed alike. The thieves would claim to be bushwhackers while robbing a union man, and the same gang would rob a confederate sympathizer, claiming to be federals. They were nothing but thieves, belonging to neither side, and were called bushwhackers in Missouri and jayhawkers in Kansas; all operating in the two states.

Of course the people got tired of this systematic robbery, but the thieves were numerous and hard to suppress. About this time General Guitar of Columbia was assigned to this district, and at a banquet in St. Joseph one night in honor of the new commander, the situation was made known to him. The General promised to relieve the situation and said he "would establish law and order" in Kansas. So the next day he ordered several companies of militia to Kansas, and ordered the ferryboat held for the soldiers. The writer was on a sick leave, recovering from a form of yellow fever contracted in Louisiana, and had spent the night at the home of a sister, and wanting to go to Kansas, he found the ferryboat in charge of the soldiers and got a skiff to cross the river, proceeding to Elwood.

In a short time a cavalryman rode hurriedly to notify the inhabitants that the Missourians were coming to invade Kansas, and that the ferryboat was full of their cavalry. A company of the Sixth Kansas cavalry was situated at Elwood and a few negroes whom somebody was trying to organize into a company of colored troops. In a short time the citizens and soldiers threw up some breastworks at the ferry landing to prevent them landing. The Kansans were very suspicious of Missouri, and Quantrell's raid at Lawrence had just occurred, and they did not want another tragedy.

Maj. Samuel Garth was in command, against his will, of the militia on the ferryboat, and B. D. Evans, a citizen of Elwood, was on the crowded boat. Evans insisted the militia had no right to go across the river to Kansas, and if they did so the boat would be riddled with bullets. The officers said there were some stolen horses concealed near Elwood, and they were trying to capture the thieves and horses, but Evans said they had no right over there; that they had law officers in Elwood, the same as in Missouri.

In the meantime the militia rode off the boat, one by one, convinced they had no right outside the state, and shortly they had all left the boat, both sides agreeing that the soldiers should send half a dozen or more officers and soldiers to find the stolen horses. They returned after a vigilant search. The river banks had become lined with people to see the expected battle between the "marines" and the fortified people on shore.

For two days people in the western part of Doniphan County, following others nearby, came flocking to Elwood with such arms as they could find, to prevent the invasion from Missouri. Doubtless if the boat had attempted to land, a serious battle would have followed.

The First Company to Enlist

On the 12th day of April, 1861, the news of the firing on Fort Sumter came over the wires to St. Joseph. Neighbors took the news across the river to Elwood and it caused much excitement in the two towns. Elwood organized the Elwood Guards the same night and elected J. W. Cook captain of the company. This was the first company enlisted in Doniphan County. The company put in nearly a month drilling, with broom handles for guns, and were taught to "keep step" by the command "hay foot, straw foot."

A re-organization of the company resulted in the election of Bernard P. Chenoweth as captain and the warriors marched at once to Fort Leavenworth for equipments, after the Elwood ladies had presented them with a handsome silk flag. This flag was preserved in a "gunbox" till the war was over and given to the state of Kansas for preservation, but was never floated in a battle.

When the time came for the company to move to Fort Leavenworth to receive equipments and to "put down the rebellion in thirty days" the young soldiers marched out of Elwood to the drum and fife, doing overtime in furnishing music. A little dog headed the procession, fond of music and very military in action. This little dog was the playmate of John Warburton, who was then living in Elwood. The dog was very patriotic and was killed in the "defense of the country" on the battlefield at Wilson's creek, where Gen. Lyon lost his life Aug. 10, 1861.

The company marched to Leavenworth and was organized in the 1st Kansas regiment as Company A. The organization had much experience in Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas, being pushed to the front on all occasions and serving in seven different army corps. It fought under Lyon, Grant, Blair, Osterhaus, Sheridan, Dodge, McPherson, Slocum, Logan, Granger, Stanley, Curtis, McArthur, Dennis, Grierson, Reed, Rosecrans, Clayton, Dietzler, Mitchell, Stephenson, Groesback and Starling.

During the service the following named persons belonged to the company at one time or another, the number being reduced from time to time by the killed, deaths, sickness, resignations, discharges, etc.: Albert Abby, Frederick Amerne, Jared R. Amsden, J. Nelson Burton, Andrew Bailey, John L. Baxter, Lucius C. Booth, Jacob Bowman, Henry S. Beardsley, James Burke, Bernard P. Chenoweth (captain), John Cary Michael, Conley, Joseph Colt, Benjamin P. Curtis, John Collins, William Carroll, Robert Curran, James Dorman, Frank H. Drenning (orderly sergeant), Henry Davis, George N. Devine, Frederick Denning, Simeon A. Easterbrooks, Conard Englehardt, Christopher H. Ford (second lieutenant), Edward Farrill, John Fleming, Thomas Feeley, Thomas Fox, J. M. Fuller (transferred from another regiment and died), Mark Facenbaker, William Foster, Leon B. Hurst, Quincy A. Hershey, Samuel B. Howd, Thomas Higgins, Richard A. Howell, Robert L. Hughes, Charles G. Hairgrove, William Jacobs, Alfred T. Jackson, Peter A. Josephs (first lieutenant), William Juil, John Kestel, Richmond Gibson, John Kimball, Henry Kettlegerdes, James Liddle, Patrick Lucey, G. Mellen Lewis, John Longworth, Alfred J. Luther, John Lawler, John Mower, Michael Murphy, Anderson S. Moonick, John Maynard, John McCrearey, James B. McDermott, John B. McIrvin, Thos. Merrick, Spencer Mitchell, Valentine Mossman, John McDonald, Michael Nolan, William H. Oliver, Edward G. Pait, Jasper N. Pait, Wm. H. ## Superintendent of Schools at Elwood, Was Formerly Connected With the Troy Schools—Is a Young Man Forging to the Front—Thoroughly Reliable and Ambitious.

There is a wonderful opportunity today for ambitious young men in this country and no better example can be found than Lewis Beckford Roberts, the former assistant superintendent of the Troy schools, who leaves this fall to become superintendent of schools at Elwood. During his work in Troy he not only made a place for himself in the affections of his fellow-workers, but the townspeople regard him as a model for other young men to follow. While Troy wishes him all success in his new place, and is confident that he will be one of the future great educators of the state, Troy citizens also realize that she is the loser through his departure.

Prof. L. B. Roberts

Mrs. L. B. Roberts

They showed their confidence by unanimously re-electing him to his position as assistant superintendent here for the ensuing year, but his new place presents greater opportunities, and that is what he desires. He has been signally honored in every way by his associates here, and it is their prediction that he will place the schools of Elwood on a plane equal with any in the state.

Professor Roberts was born in Richmond, Ind., June 7, 1889. He came to Kansas in 1890, when but a baby, his parents settling in Howard County on a large farm. His early education was received in the country schools, and later he entered the state normal at Emporia. He holds a life diploma from this institution which was awarded to him in June of 1912. He was one of the efficient teachers at Elk Rapids, Howard County; and, following his graduation from the state normal college, he instructed in the high school at Osage City. During the summer of 1914 he conducted and managed a summer school which was a glowing success.

Professor Roberts' parents are Mr. and Mrs. George Washington Roberts, who reside now near Ottawa in Franklin County. He has four brothers, Ernest C., Allen W., Arthur W. and Paul N., and two sisters, Bessie May, who is now in the library of the Missouri University at Columbia, and Rebecca Louie. Professor Roberts was married June 5, 1912, to Miss Gertrude W. Hammond, a daughter of one of the pioneer farmers of Lyon County. The ceremony was performed at her home by the Rev. W. C. Templeton, of Emporia. Mrs. Roberts was a state normal student, and one who was popular with her associates and admired by all of her teachers. During their residence in Troy they made many friends, who will always have a kind word for them. To this union one child was born, Evelyn Gertrude, at Osage City, Dec. 30, 1914. Mrs. Roberts is also a former Lyon County school teacher.

THE ELWOOD BAPTIST CHURCH

(Contributed by Rev. John Carpenter.)

The latter part of August, 1888, R. G. Stigers, a licensed preacher and deacon in the First Baptist Church, St. Joseph, Mo., visited a number of families in Elwood concerning the religious welfare of Elwood, and the first Sunday in September, 1888, the first services, out of which the present Church was organized, were held at the colored school house. Reverend Stigers was assisted by James G. Clark, from the South Sixth Street Baptist Church, St. Joseph. Services were held regularly every Sunday afternoon and Friday nights. Those who formed the first band of Christian workers were: Mrs. Mary Jones, Mrs. Mary Luke, William Wilkinson, Mrs. Wilkinson, Mrs. Belle Cogdell, John Cogdell, Martha Clater, Emily St. John, Mary White, Sarah Pillow, Ida Searcy, Almeda Godby, and Georgia Cherry. January 20, 1889, a council was called to consider the advisability of forming a Baptist church. The following, all of St. Joseph, formed the presbytery: Rev. J. L. Lawless, moderator; Rev. W. I. Cole, secretary; W. W. Bernard, Reverend Barker, the Revs. R. G. Stigers and J. G. Clark. The following are the charter members: Nathan Porter, Effie Porter, Mary Luke, Mary Jones, John Cogdell, Bell Cogdell, by church letters; and Martha Clater and Ida Searcy by relation. Rev. J. L. Lawless preached the sermon, Rev. W. I. Cole extended to the Church the right hand of fellowship, Reverend Barker gave the charge to the Church, and the Church adopted the name of "The Elwood Baptist Church." May 3, 1889, the first deacon was elected in the choice of Nathan Porter. Garey Hickman was elected first church clerk on the same date. March 18, 1890, a called meeting was held for the purpose of erecting a house of worship. Joseph Porter was elected temporary chairman of the building committee. December 4, 1890, Reverend Stigers offered his resignation, which was accepted. A call was then extended to Rev. J. G. Clark to become pastor. He began his pastorate in January, 1891. A revival was held in March following, which resulted in five additions. March 23, 1893, J. E. Holyoke was elected deacon. September 14, 1893, Perry Round was elected church clerk to succeed Garey Hickman. In October, 1893, Reverend Johnston, pastor of the First Baptist Church in St. Joseph, conducted an eight-day protracted meeting, during which time four united with the church. January 25, 1894, Perry Round was elected clerk and Mr. Couden treasurer. February, 1894, Reverend Clark of Wathena conducted a protracted meeting. October 22, 1894, a call was extended to Rev. I. T. Williams, who accepted

The minutes of a meeting of January 31, 1896, contain the first mention of the young people's work. In January, 1896, a protracted meeting conducted by Rev. I. T. Williams, pastor, and Mr. Moulten, a layman of the Patee Park Baptist Church, St. Joseph, resulted in eighty-two additions to the Church, seventy-six by baptism. As to numbers, this was the greatest revival in the Church's history. February, 1896, the Church licensed P. D. Round to preach. February 23d of the same year, he preached his first sermon as a licensed preacher. (Reverend Round was drowned, the date being unknown to the writer.) March 5, 1896, Frank P. Marsh and Mr. Gallant were elected trustees. Mr. Marsh has held this office to the present date and has been most faithful in the discharge of the duties of the office. During the years of the Church's later inactivity, he looked after the legal affairs the same as though the Church was alive and working.

January 1, 1897, a motion was made to "discontinue Brother Williams as pastor." January 6, 1898, P. D. Round was elected church clerk. Nellie Craythorne (the late Mrs. Ed Marsh) was elected treasurer. Mrs. Marsh passed away in July, 1914. October 4, 1900, Frank P. Marsh was elected church clerk. Garey Hickman was elected church clerk November 6, 1901. June 4, 1902, a call was extended to Reverend Cook to become pastor. He accepted, and took up the work. (Date not given.) April 13, 1905, Frank P. Marsh, Mr. Miller and R. Lucignani were elected trustees. At this April meeting a committee of three, Mrs. J. B. Canterbury, Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Round, were appointed a finance committee to raise funds for moving the church building, made necessary by the Missouri River changing its channel too speedily and too accurately. Janaury 15, 1906, Nellie Craythorne was elected church clerk and held the office until called to rest in July, 1914. G. G. Miller was elected treasurer.

The foregoing data is taken from the church record. The last minutes recorded showed that the church was trying to secure Reverend Silvius for pastor. The writer has no knowledge as to the success of the extended call.

In May, 1914, the writer visited some of the Baptists of Elwood, and found that there was a desire on the part of most of them to take up the work again. The Church had not had any regular services for some five or six years, and was "said" to be "dead." Preaching services were held frequently and the Baptists began to "come back home." A Sunday school was started on the first Sunday in June, 1914, with twenty-four present.

At a business meeting, July 17, 1914, the Church extended a call to the writer to be pastor. The Church at this meeting elected J. B. Pillow as clerk and treasurer, and Mrs. J. B. Canterbury as superintendent of the Sunday school. Since the work has revived the Church has doubled its membership, some twenty having united since January, 1915; a Baptist Young People's Union has been organized with a membership of over thirty; a Ladies' Aid Society has been formed and has a membership of twenty-four; the Sunday school has an enrollment of seventy and an attendance of 75 per cent. The success in this short time is due to the entire membership being up and doing. The Church received a blessing in the coming of Rev. Cecil E. Sheets, pastor at Troy, in January, 1915, to conduct a protracted meeting. The meeting lasted over two weeks and in that time fourteen united with the church, and the revival has continued, and there are being "added to the church, daily."

The present pastor, who is the author of this "history," has no desire to claim any special credit for the growth of the Elwood Baptist Church during the few months passed. He preaches every Friday night and on the second and fourth Sundays, morning and evening. During the week he works at his trade, that of printer, in the office of the Wathena Republican. The other two Sundays in the month are in service at the District No. 63 school house.

THE LATE DANIEL WEBSTER WILDER

Author of Wilder's "Annals"—One of the Pioneer Newspaper Men of Kansas.

Among the men who were in Kansas in the Territorial times and helped in the making of the state was the late Danial Webster Wilder, author of "Wilder's Annals of Kansas" and for more than one-half century one of the foremost men of Kansas.

Mr. Wilder was born in Blackstone, Mass., July 15, 1832. He received a fine education, finishing in law at Harvard. When a young man he went out to the Border. In 1858 he edited and was part owner of the Elwood Free Press, the first paper published in Doniphan County. After about one year in Elwood he went to St. Joseph and started a Free State paper. There he was indicted by the grand jury because of the anti-slavery tendencies of the paper and fled to Kansas, where he practiced law and also became part owner and editor of the Leavenworth Conservative, also a Free State paper, being associated for a part of the time with the late Daniel R. Anthony.

Daniel Webster Wilder

Mr. Wilder was one of the secretaries of the Ossawatomie convention in May, 1859, in which the Republican party was organized in Kansas. He was appointed by President Lincoln October 8, 1863, as Surveyor General for Kansas and Nebraska. In 1865 he went to Rochester, N. Y., and became editor of the Evening Express. In 1868 he returned to Leavenworth and again was on the Conservative. In 1871 he went to Fort Scott and was for a while editor of the Monitor. In 1872 and again in 1874 he was elected Auditor of the State, but in 1876 he resigned that position to edit the St. Joseph Herald. He bought the Hiawatha World in 1882, which paper he edited until appointed in 1885 as executive clerk by Governor John A. Martin. He was Kansas Superintendent of Insurance for several years and on retiring from that office he established the Insurance Magazine in Kansas City which is now edited by his son, Carter H. Wilder. Mr. Wilder was the originator of the idea of founding the State Historical Society, and in fact is considered the father of that society. Besides his "Annals of Kansas," he wrote a life of Shakespeare and was a contributor to magazines. He died at Hiawatha, July 15, 1911.

Mrs. Wilder, who survived her husband, was Miss Mary E. Irvin, born in Chicago, July 28, 1846. She was married to Mr. Wilder at Kennekuk, Atchison county, Kansas, March 3, 1864. The four children living are Mrs. C. P. Connolly of Rockford, Illinois, Mr. Carter Wilder, now editor of the Insurance Magazine and the Southwest Banker at Kansas City, Missouri; Webster Wilder, a lawyer at Cherokee, Oklahoma; Frau Sarah W. Neidhardt of Munich, Bavaria.

Telegraph Office

On September 5, 1861, the telegraph office was removed from St. Joseph to Elwood, and is located on the corner of Douglas and Fifth streets, where the gentlemanly operator, Mr. Wilbur, can be found. We are indebted to him for our latest dispatches. St. Joseph is now without a telegraph, a railroad and without her best citizens. Verily, secession is a good thing. It does its work swiftly. It kills St. Joseph in one short week.—The Free Press, Elwood, Kan.

Mr. Peates was elected street commissioner at the first meeting of the city council at Elwood.

Elwood, Kansas

Bottoms Famous for Thousands of Acres Alfalfa Land — Huge Elevator Principal Industry of Elwood Now—First Settler Hank Thompson, 1852—Adventurer named Rose Started First Town in 1856 and Named It Roseport —Ten Thousand Dollars Paid for Original Site of Town—Boasted Finest Hotel in the West at One Time.

Railroad Shops Employed Hundreds of Men—Stores and Substantial Business Establishments—Mayor, Harvey Campbell; City Clerk, Major H. M. Kenderdine; Postmaster, S. H. Hegarty.

The town of Elwood owes its existence to an adventurer named Rose, who first came to the banks of the Missouri River in 1856. The land on which the town was subsequently built, had been owned by Hank Thompson, who located on a quarter section there in 1854. When Rose first landed, he at once got busy and interested a number of St. Joseph capitalists in his project of building a new town across the Missouri, on the Kansas side. The man was a genius for organization, and was so gifted with conversational powers that he could induce the most skeptical to listen to his project.

Rose never told anything about himself or his previous career. He was always strictly silent on that point. His proposition to found a town was received with enthusiasm by the St. Joseph men, and they agreed to finance the project. In fact, it looked so good to them that they remained up all of one night in order to be out of bed early in the morning to draw the money out of the bank.

Hank Thompson was approached and asked how much he would take for his holding. Hank was a shrewd business man, and after fondling his whiskers for awhile, he set the price at $10,000, "and not a cent less." Rose took him up and the transaction was concluded. Inside of two days, the Roseport Townsite Company was organized in St. Joseph. The promoter was, to a certain extent, the company, although the financial backers of the scheme were given a sufficient interest to justify Rose in demanding that they furnish all the necessary operating expenses. The town of Roseport was under way in short order, but Rose was fast approaching a snag. When eight or ten months old, Roseport had a number of dwellings, stores and a hotel. The place was considered a splendid location for a town, and the most sanguine predictions were made for its becoming a great commercial point.

Everything went along swimmingly till the summer of 1857, when a stranger came along and made known the identity of Rose. It is said Rose's past wouldn't stand investigating, so he quickly sold out his interest to the other members of the townsite company and disappeared. It was learned afterward that his real name was George Ingraham, and that he assumed the name of Rose to conceal a penitentiary record which he merited through some brazen swindling transactions in the East. The man who imposed Rose had been a victim of his doings, and the sting was still rankling when he encountered the promoter of Roseport.

Upon the disappearance of Rose, a reorganization of the townsite company was effected and the name changed to Elwood, as a tribute to A. B. Elwood, president of the company. Things began to look promising, indeed, when the Great Western Hotel was erected in 1858 by James E. Dryden, the first carpenter to take up a residence in the town. The structure was a three-story affair and 100 feet square, a grand and pretentious building for the times; but it had an ignominous end, being torn down and converted into farm houses, to avoid being washed into the Missouri River. It had only a few years of successful and strenuous existence. Mr. Dryden, the carpenter, afterward settled on the farm two miles east of Troy, where he resided until he was killed in crossing the Rock Island track near his home, Sunday, Dec. 22, 1886.

It is interesting to note that in the days when the Great Western Hotel Webster, it was conceded to be one of the best paying propositions west of St. Louis. It had seventy-five rooms, and scores of travelers gave St. Joseph a wide berth and transacted their business from this hostelry. Those were palmy days for Elwood, and the town was a dreaded rival of St. Joseph. The hotel was the drawing card, as St. Joseph had nothing to compare with it in elegance, service and appointments.

The first structure on the townsite of Elwood was the log cabin where Hank Thompson lived; Rose built a small house, and the third was put up by Andrew Disque, who used it for a combination dwelling and store. The latter was also postmaster during the war. Mrs. Disque is now a resident of St. Joseph. The first business emporium was a booze camp. A. E. Campbell, operated the first general store, and a hardware store was run by W. & F. Ellsworth. A. E. Lee was the first attorney-at-law to hang out his shingle in Elwood, and he was soon followed by T. A. Osborn, who was later governor of Kansas from 1873 to 1879. D. W. Wilder, afterward state auditor, was one of the early settlers in Elwood, and Edward Russell was the first insurance agent. Mr. Wilder was engaged in the real estate business. Some of the merchants who did a thriving business were W. B. Craig, relative of the Craig boys of St. Joseph; George W. Barr, R. S. Sayward, Charles H. Hatcher and James P. Brace, and with the arrival of Dr. S. D. Smith, a physician from New York, there was nothing missing but a preacher in 1858. During that year a number of ambitious and energetic young men settled in Elwood who later made their way to places of prominence in the history of the country. Among the early residents who followed various honorable occupations might be mentioned Dr. J. W. Robinson, D. B. Jones, Charles O. Smith, Arthur Carroll, L. C. Booth and William Lake.

Abel Montgomery opened a meat market in 1858 and Cook and Selover opened a livery business. During that year two steam sawmills were built by W. H. High and W. L. Lewis, but they were moved away after about a year's operation, when all of the timber had been converted into lumber.

A postoffice was established June 10, 1857, with William Saeger as the first incumbent.

The first heavy blow to the prosperity and hopes of future greatness received by Elwood was when the river encroached on the sandy banks in the spring flood of 1859. The sandy soil of the banks was an easy prey to the swift current which made fearful inroads toward the most thickly settled portion of the town. The palatial hotel and many homes had to be moved away, but the residents recovered, and the growth of the town did not seem to be materially impeded. The spring of 1860, however, brought on another rise in the river which commenced to sap the foundations of a number of buildings. Acres of the most densely populated section of the business district were washed away, and for a time, it looked like the town would be wiped off the map altogether.

The population, in 1859, had been between 1,500 and 2,000, but with these calamitous visitations, many residents became frightened and pulled stakes and moved farther inland. A number of business men moved to Wathena, including Craig, Barr, Cook, Selover, Ed Russell and D. B. Jones. Many others returned to the East. The war put the finishing touches to its prosperity, and from 1861 to 1876, Elwood was a mere shadow of its former greatness. Many men had gone to war, and the population had dwindled down to 500 or 600.

In 1876, the town was reorganized, and an election held, which resulted in the choice of J. W. Montgomery as mayor, and the appointment of J. B. Stone as city clerk. The present mayor and city clerk are, respectively, Wm. Ellis and Maj. H. M. Kenderdine.

In the very early days, the steam ferry between St. Joseph and Elwood was a great institution. It was owned by Ebenezer Blackiston and there used to be exciting times getting across when the crowds were too big, or the waters too high, or the primitive machinery too rusty to respond to the call on the steering gear.

Notwithstanding the dampening effect on business caused by the sure approach of the war, the first railroad in Kansas was operated between Elwood and Wathena in the early part of 1860. The occasion caused great excitement.

It was on Monday, April 23, 1860, that the locomotive "Albany," an engine that had been useful from Boston to the Missouri, was placed on the track. On Tuesday several cars were brought across the river, and the large concourse of people gathered to witness and celebrate the actual opening of the first section of the great Pacific road. Col. M. J. Thompson, president of the Elwood and Marysville road; W. P. Hall, president of the St. Joseph & Topeka road; Gov. R. M. Stewart of Missouri, and others, addressed the crowd on the great topic of the day. The speakers were eloquent and felicitous in their remarks, and their congratulations were received with hearty cheers.

About 4 o'clock the engine was coupled to the cars, which were crowded with a dense mass of men, and, amid ringing of bells, shrill screechings of whistles and deafening cheers, the first train rolled over the Kansas Railroad.

There were many secessionists in Doniphan County at the time, and they were a belligerent class. When Jeff Thompson, president of the railroad, proceeded to make a secession speech, there were several knock-downs between the free soilers and the slavery advocates, but the battle was said to be a draw, as matters were about evened up and the railroad was christened anyhow.

Early in the '60's, a macadamized road was built from Elwood to Wathena, but it is now nearly all at the bottom of the Missouri River. There were a number of other public improvements in the early days of the town, but they have either outlived their time, or have passed away with the advance of the oncoming civilization.

During the Civil War, the population gradually diminished to about fifty people, but about twenty years ago, new life was injected into the town, and it began to pick up, and it now numbers about 1,000 souls. The building of the St. Joseph & Grand Island bridge between St. Joseph and Elwood increased the population of the town at that time. The location of the railroad shops attracted many workmen to the Kansas site, following the erection of the bridge.

The best and largest elevator this side of Chicago, owned by the Elwood Grain Co., with offices in the Corby-Forsee Building, St. Joseph, Mo., is one of the leading industries in Elwood. The president is Mr. Ferguson, and vice-president, F. J. Warwick. The elevator employs a great many men, besides attracting considerable trade to the town. There are four good stores there now, as follows: S. H. Hagerty, general merchandise; J. I. Taylor, grocer; Wm. Dockhorn, general merchant, and the store of Mr. Coleman. Elwood is a good town now. Its residence district takes rank with that of any town its size along the Missouri River. The business element is progressive, and the railroad traffic from that point is an important factor in promoting the prosperity of the town.

There is no newspaper published in Elwood now, but soon after the founding of the town in 1856, a newspaper called the Advertiser, had been started, but financial vicissitudes overtook the pioneer editor the following year, and he was forced to dispose of, or abandoned his interests to other parties, who forgot previous adversities of the publication and changed the name to that of the Weekly Kansas Press. As far as could be ascertained, not authentically, the newspaper under this name had little better luck than its predecessor, and the name was subsequently changed to that of the Free Press, which suspended in the fall of 1861.

The town of Elwood is noted throughout the agricultural West as being contiguous to the great alfalfa fields of the Elwood bottoms, which produce four crops each season, with an average yield of one and one-half tons to the acre at each cutting.

The owners of this alfalfa land are practically independent in the matter of gaining wealth, for it is long since established that alfalfa is the safest, surest and best paying crop of any that may be cultivated by the progressive farmer. Of course, there may be such things as enormous wheat crops and gigantic fields of corn, but all the world knows that they bring forth harvests but once a year, whereas the succulent alfalfa will bloom forth in abundance three times each season after the first cutting.

The profits from the crop are enormous; in fact, out of all proportion to the time and labor necessary to produce the harvest. The land is ideally adapted for raising alfalfa all along the Elwood bottom, and about all the farmers have to do is to compute their financial returns at the end of each season after the last crop has been cut.

Web Wilder

Hon. A. C. Wilder and D. Web Wilder purchased the Rochester, New York, Express, Thursday, May 31, 1866. D. W. Wilder was chief editor. The Express at that time was one of the leading newspapers of New York. They continued the publication of this sheet for several months, at which time they disposed of the paper at a good price and returned to Kansas.

The Old Town of Elwood

It Is Rapily Developing Into a Beautiful Suburban Residence City for Busy People of St. Joseph, Affording Every Convenience of the City, Yet Possessing the Advantages of Healthy Country Life—Something About Its System of Municipal Government and the Officials Who Administer Its Affairs.

The historic old Kansas town of Elwood, in Doniphan County, on the west bank of the Missouri River, opposite the city of St. Joseph, just now is experiencing a new awakening—something of a rejuvenation—which is due in part to the fact of its natural industrial growth, but more largely due to the fact that busy men of the larger city across the river in Missouri are recognizing in Elwood the ideal place for suburban homes. Time was when Elwood aspired to be as great a city as her Missouri neighbor, but it was not ordained that it be that way. St. Joseph got a good start in the old river days and became a great city, and while Elwood at this end of the great Missouri River bridge grew to be a lusty town, with its railroads, freight yards, elevators, factories and stores, it never became the city its founders hoped it would be. Now however, Elwood sees the way clear to a future growth and development that in a few years will make it one of the prettiest and most prosperous cities on the river.

Picture yourself, a busy business or professional man, a clerk or mechanic of St. Joseph, owning a beautiful bungalow or a pretty cottage in Elwood, with a modern system of water and electric lighting, telephone and train service, good streets and neat sidewalks, the biggest and best equipped brick school house in Doniphan County, churches, good government, wholesome and sane laws, pure air and no saloons or dives. And then, also picture yourself as receiving supplies of provisions, fruit, ice, everything you need, delivered at your home: fresh eggs, milk, cream, poultry, all from the country and at country prices. Thus you'd find the high cost of living lessened, your taxes less tha nin the city, and the prevailing winds coming from out there in Kansas, keeping you cool and free from the dust and grime of the crowded city.

Elwood is the place where your wife and children should live and where your home—a real home—should be. Where you can leave the office, the store, the shop or the factory in St. Joseph every evening and in thirty minutes find yourself reading your evening paper on the porch of your cottage or bungalow in Elwood.

That is the new idea of Elwood's growth, to be a splendid suburban residence city, increasing its population in harmony with the growth of St. Joseph, working with the Missouri neighbor for the accomplishment of great things, and putting the Kansas spirit into the game.

As an indication of Elwood's recent advancement one has only to observe the expressions on the faces of Elwood's citizens. You never see such expressions on the faces of citizens of a dead or non-progressive town. Elwood's citizens are wide-awake, progressive and intelligent. They are prosperous and happy, and they want everybody else to be properous and happy. They are thoughtful of other people's feelings and comforts, considerate of other people's rights and interests.

When Elwood's people got ready to build a new school house they built the finest building in the county and then equipped it with all things necessary in modern education. Bring your children to Elwood to be educated. Last year somebody suggested that a city hall was needed. Now they have a $7,000 issue of municipal bonds, voted December 7, 1915, with which to build it. Along with other improvements they extended the city electric light service so that the cinder walk from the Missouri River bridge uptown was made as light as some of the "White Ways" in cities the newspapers tell about. The people of Elwood are planning other improvements. The town is growing rapidly, new homes are being built, old homes enlargede, remodeled, or improved. They are sprucing up in Elwood.

Down in the bottoms toward the river there are many things going on. There is to be seen the largest grain elevator in the state of Kansas, with a capacity of 750,000 bushels, handling millions of bushels of grain every season, and busy all the year round. There are other industries and activities that keep a goodly portion of Elwood's population busy; but a great many of the people are in business or are employed across the river in St. Joseph, and the number is increasing rapidly.

Elwood has a good system of city government, with laws and ordinances ample for the proper management and regulation of the city, yet at the same time they are neither cumbersome or expensive of administration. There you are not taxed for the air you breathe. You get what you pay for, quires accuracy and efficiency in the making and keeping of the public records.

Maj. H. M. Kinderdine is the city treasurer. He is a retired agent for the St. Joseph and Grand Island railroad, a veteran of the Civil War, and has resided in Elwood fifteen years. Major Kinderdine has a long record of splendid service with the railroad company and in giving the public the benefit of his knowledge and experience in handling the funds of the city, he is doing a great service.

D. H. Dockhorn, a member of the council, was five years old when he first landed in old Elwood, and he has resided in the town fifty-one years. With such a tenure of residence, he is qualified for the office he now holds, having been a witness to the town's history from the old river days down to the present time. He is, beside, one of the popular citizens and is respected by all.

Councilman Sidney White has resided in Elwood twenty-five years. He is a bookbinder in St. Joseph and daily goes from his home to his business and back again. He has found Elwood a good place in which a busy city man can live in comfort and quiet and in with pure air and sunshine thrown in.

The municipal affairs of Elwood are administered by a mayor, five members of the council, a city clerk and treasurer. The personnel of the administration at this time is an indication that in the selection of their public servants, men are chosen with regard to their qualifications for the offices.

Harvey R. Campbell, mayor of Elwood, was born in the old town thirty-five years ago, and has made his home there ever since. He is now engaged in the barber business and is popular with the people. No one in the city knows Elwood better than he. He is personally acquainted with practically every man, woman and child in the place. He has a good idea how to conduct the affairs of Elwood and in the time he has been in office, he has made an exceptionally good record.

The city clerk of Elwood is C. A. Walters, who has resided in the city four years. He is an operator for the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railroad at Elwood and is one of the most methodical men to be found. Mr. Walters' service in the employ of the railroad has indeed fitted him to the work of city clerk, an office which requires accuracy and efficiency in the making and keeping of the public records. In his official capacity he is making a record such as is commended by the people.

Joe Riley, another member of the council, is a boilermaker in St. Joseph and has been a resident of Elwood five years. He is a good mechanic and his services and his knowledge are of great value to the city in determining many things connected with its departments. He gives his services to Elwood with the same care and attention, and with the same pride in his town he would if paid a high salary.

Fred Henkey, councilman, is a dry goods clerk in St. Joseph. He has been a citizen of Elwood fifteen years, although having his business aross the river. He has two daughters who are employed in St. Joseph. Mr. Henkey, accustomed as he is to dealing with the public, is of especial value to Elwood, and he is always to be found advocating that which is best for the public good.

Councilman William Wilkinson is an old soldier and has resided in Elwood twenty years, long enough to know the old town, its people and its needs. He is a man whose judgment is respected and one who is always to be counted on to see that the interests of the people are honestly, faithfully and economically subserved; and at the same time he is one of the best boosters Elwood ever had.

The old town of Elwood, now a modest little city, is on the Ocean-to-Ocean Highway over which transcontinental motor tourists are passing from east to west and from west to east. It has railroad facilities, is within a few minutes' ride, or walk, of St. Joseph, and is one of the best towns in Kansas in which to live, educate and rear a family. Invest your money in Elwood, buy some vacant lots, build a good, substantial home, and in a few years you will have doubled your investment.

L. H. Utt

Troy, Kansas, Jan. 10, 1895.

Old Timers.—Maj. L. H. Utt writes us from Redlands, California, concerning several old-timers of Kansas and Doniphan County. He says that Charles E. Perham, who, with F. W. Emery, published the Palermo Leader, in territorial days, is living in Redlands, next door to him, and is very ill with lung trouble. He is a relative of Ross Perham, who was a member of Company A, Seventh Kansas cavalry, and was lost on a ship at sea after the war. He also says that John P. Colvere, a member of the Seventh Kansas, died near Los Angeles about two years ago. This is the first information we had of his death. He enlisted from Highland. After the war he traveled for some years for a Leavenworth wholesale grocery house. After living for a time at Osborn, he went to California a few years ago. The Chief has been going to his address for many years, and still goes, but no person has notified us that he was not there to read it. John T. Brady, formerly of Sabetha, is living at Pomona, in Southern California, where he is in the banking business. A. C. Moorhead, also from Sabetha, is likewise in Southern California.

Elwood Population

Elwood contains some 1,500 inhabitants. It is, however, but one and one-half years old. Its neat dwellings and business aspects give unmistakable evidence of the Eastern energy of the people. As Elwood is directly opposite St. Joseph, Missouri, in the direct line of immigration, it will command a great business.—Chicago Press and Tribune, February 19, 1859.

The first hotel constructed in Elwood was in June, 1857, by James E. Dryden, who afterward lived on the farm two miles east of Troy, where D. M. Blevins resides today. The building was 100 feet square and three stories high and was at that time the largest hotel west of St. Louis.

Elwood in 1859

The spring of 1859 finds Elwood in the most prosperous condition. The day of hard times is over, and signs of prosperity are manifested on every side. A large number of buildings are contracted to be put up this spring, and about a dozen are now in process of construction. Mr. C. H. Hatcher is building two large stores on the corner of Foreman and Fifth streets, and a dwelling house on Walker street.—Elwood Weekly Press, February 19, 1859.

Hannibal & St. Joseph

The Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad was finished the 12th of February, 1859, and on the 22d day of the month a celebration in honor of its completion was given in St. Joseph.

The Harroun Elevator Wrecked

The Story of the Tornado of May 9, 1905, Which Twisted Off the Upper Half of the Great Elevator, Wrecking It, Beside Killing Two and Injuring Two of the Workmen—The Elevator Was One of the Largest in the West at That Time—Frank McCoy of Near Troy, Working in Wrecked Elevator.

An historical disaster, to which our people hark back with a shudder of horror, and the mention of which brings sadness to many hearts, was the tornado which visited this part of Kansas on the evening of May 9, 1905, at 9:15 o'clock, snapping off the upper half of the great Harroun elevator at Elwood, causing the death of two employes and the injury of two others, besides doing great damage to other property in its path.

The storm came on early in the evening. The great elevator with its ninety-three bins, many of them filled with wheat, stood 140 feet high, its grayish walls lit up by occasional sharp flashes of lightning. The day force had gone off duty and the men of the night force were busy. Down in the engine and machinery room five of these were at work. The others were at their post of duty in different parts of the building.

There was nothing that was noticed by the employes in the appearance of the clouds or flashes of lightning to foretell what was to happen. Suddenly from the southwest came the awful roar of a tornado, growing louder and more terrifying as it approached, until, before any could realize what it meant, it hit the great elevator. Almost instantly the upper half of the elevator was snapped or twisted off the body of the structure and the wreckage strewn about the ground for some distance to the northeast, whence the tornado took its course.

Down in the lower part of the structure the men were safe, but it was different with those who were up there among the twisting and snapping timbers and machinery. John Godby of Elwood, Harry Smith of St. Joseph, John Chambers of Elwood, and C. Frank McCoy of Troy, all employes, were cleaning the shafts on the scale floor just above the bins and at a point where the upper part of the elevator was broken off. They had little chance to escape. Smith was caught under a heavy crossbeam and his life was crushed out. Godby was buried under tons of grain that poured over him from the hoppers above. Chambers, out of reach of the grain that was coming from the hoppers, was pinioned to the floor by a heavy timber. McCoy escaped death by a miracle, by clinging to a huge piece of timber that lay across a pile of wheat until the whole had been swept into the hopper. He made a dash for the stairway just as the timbers above settled down at the place where he had been laying. McCoy, however, refused to leave his companions, even though he was injured, and later aided in the recovery of the bodies of Smith and Godby and in the rescue of Chambers.

Frank McCoy, who lives three miles north of Troy, has vivid recollections of the tornado and of the awful disaster it wrought. Should any one desire to hear the story told as it should be told and told truthfully, no one can tell it better than Frank McCoy.

The news of the disaster spread rapidly and soon several hundred persons from Elwood and St. Joseph were at the scene. Superintendent E. J. Maxwell, Night Foreman M. L. Alt, and Night Engineer Ed Broyle, assisted McCoy and Fire Chief Kane of St. Joseph in the rescue. The fire chief had under him six firemen, Mike Shaeffer, Harry Brennan, Tom Patton, Ed Bailey, Lee Minski and L. O. Hanor, who did valiant work amid great danger. The bodies of the two dead men were recovered after hard work cutting away timbers from the one and removing a great pile of wheat from the other. McCoy, with many bruises and cuts, had saved himself, but Chambers was pinned to the floor, bruised and apparently dead when the timbers were chopped away and he was carried down.

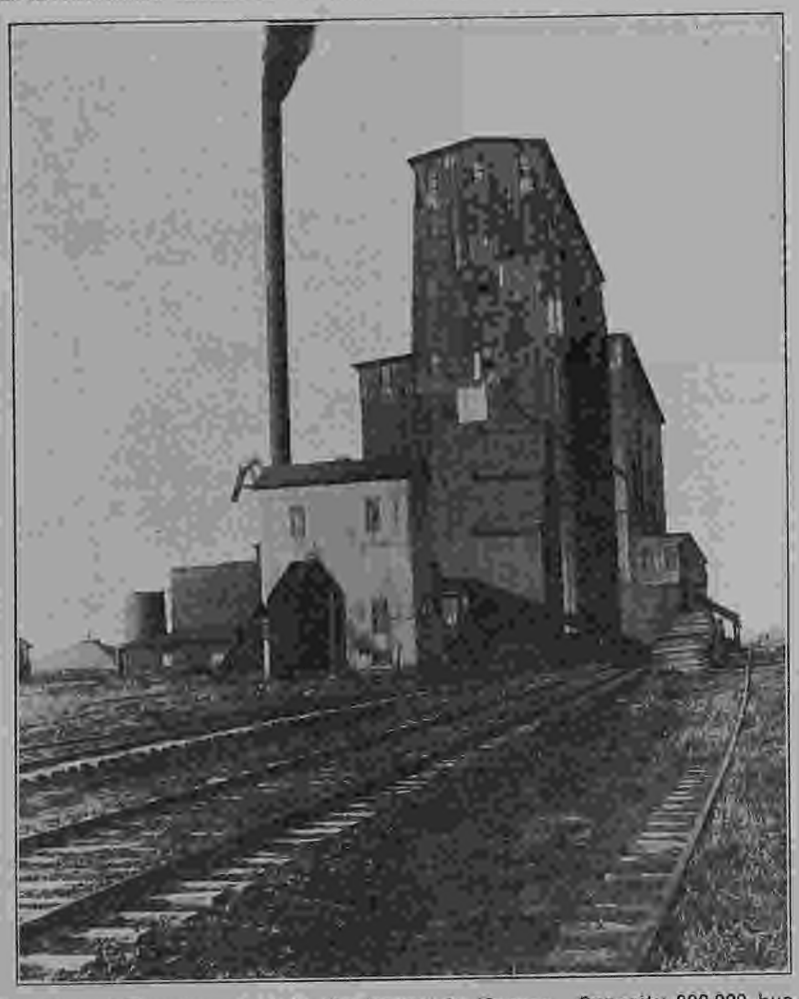
During the work of rescue another disaster was narrowly averted by the quick action of Fire Chief Kane and Tom Patton. A torch had fallen from the hands of one of the men on the top of the building and lighting on a pile of wreckage at the bottom had set fire to it. The fire chief, realizing the danger of an explosion of the oil and the fire that would follow, ran down the stairway and taking off his coat smothered the blaze with the assistance of several men who did likewise. Thus the men working to find the bodies of the victims were not aware of the fact that the remainder of the elevator left standing had been saved from destruction.

The bodies of Harry Smith and Jack Godby were taken to undertaking establishments. Smith's home was in St. Joseph and he was a brother-in-law of E. J. Maxwell, the superintendent. He was twenty-four years old and unmarried. Jack Godby was the only one of the four victims who was married. His home was in Elwood and the grief of his young wife when his body was taken out from the wrecked elevator, was inconsolable. Chambers was taken to a hospital in St. Joseph and he lay for several days between life and death, finally being able to get about, but seriously crippled. The surgeons who attended Chambers the night he was taken from the wrecked building were Dr. W. E. Pentz and Dr. Walter P. Hanson, and the fact that his life was saved after being taken out so severely wounded, was due to their skill.

The scene about the wrecked elevator the next morning, when many thousands of people from St. Joseph and all of Doniphan County visited it, was one that it would be difficult to describe. The entire upper half of the elevator had been wrecked; but the lower half of the building stood intact, with its great bins, ninety-three of them and each sixty feet tall, uninjured save by the deluge of rain that had poured into them after the upper part had been torn away. On top of this was a mass of broken timbers, great beams, twisted machinery, shafting and pulleys, while on the ground below, in the yards and on railroad docks and cars, were great piles of wreckage of every description. To the east of the building lay the great steel smokestack, broken into several pieces, for it had reared its head above the top of the elevator and was first to go down before the awful wind.

The Harroun elevator was built in the year 1900 at a cost of something over $175,000, and up to that time it was one of the largest elevators on the Missouri river, and the largest in the state, having a capacity for 750,000 bushels of grain. About 75,000 bushels of wheat were in it at the time of its wrecking by the tornado, but the damage was great because of the loss of machinery and the water in the tanks, the latter resulting from the bursting of the 200-barrel fire protection tank in the "head" of the building and the rain that accompanied the storm. The machinery in the lower part of the elevator was damaged slightly, while that in the engine house escaped damage.

The Harroun elevator was soon rebuilt and again was in operation, handling a large portion of the 1905 grain, and the great tornado of that year passed into history. It was the worst tornado of record in the eastern part of Doniphan County in the value of property destroyed, and we are all hoping it will be the last.



The Elwood Elevator—next to the largest in Kansas. Capacity 900,000 bus.

RAILROAD

Locomotive and Train on Track —Pacific Railroad in Operation

On Monday, April 24, 1860, the directors of the Elwood & Marysville placed on track Locomotive Albany, an engine which has been used from Boston to Missouri, as railroads have successfully stretched their lengths to the setting sun. On Tuesday, several cars were brought across the river, and a large concourse of people gathered to celebrate the actual opening of the first section of the great Pacific road. Col. M. Jeff Thompson, president of the Elwood and Marysville road, W. P. Hall, president of the St. Joseph and Topeka road; Gov. R. N. Stewart of Missouri, and others, addressed the crowd on the great topic of this day. The speakers were eloquent and felicitous in their remarks, and their congratulations were received with hearty cheers. About 4 o'clock the engine was coupled to the cars. The cars were crowded with men and, amid the ringing of bells, sharp screechings of whistles and deafening cheers, the first train of cars rolled over a Kansas railroad.

Last June ground was first broken for this road, the company commenced the enterprise without means, and with slight encouragement of assistance, but with an indomitable purpose to carry forward the work, and by their good exertions and achievement, the eastern terminus of the road was completed. However, they succeeded beyond their most sanguine expectations. Twelve miles of the route was graded. The first section of the track is laid. A large amount of ties are provided for use, and $50,000 worth of iron is already shipped and en route for this point. We are assured by the directors that by the first of July, trains will run to Troy, and that during the present session the road will be extended thirty or forty miles west. —The Elwood Free Press, Saturday, April 28, 1860.

Elwood-Marysville Railroad; Great Enthusiasm.—On Thursday, July 19th, the people of Kansas and Missouri turned out in great numbers to celebrate the completion of the first section of the Elwood & Marysville Railroad. The cars ran from Elwood to Wathena every half hour through the day, and were constantly crowded. The ride was delightful, and every man present seemed to regard it as a personal honor to take a trip on the first railroad yet build in our flourishing territory. The citizens of Wathena had tastefully fitted up the grounds in a beautiful grove near the road where the exercises were held. All seemed inspired with the importance of the great work which is now going on, and the speeches which were made glowed with genuine eloquence. Col M. Jeff Thompson called the vast assemblage to order and opened the ball with appropriate remarks. He was followed by Mr. Gardner, Wm. Thompson, Esq., Hon. A. Larzelere, Hon. Wm. P. Hall, John Miller, Joseph Edgar, Joseph Grubb, D. W. Wilder, J. Y. Rucker, T. A. Osborn, A. W. Slayback, W. L. Lewis, St. Clair Miller. Mr. Miller has been the superintendent of the road, and has worked day and night for its interests; he was received with the most rapturous applause—Col. A. G. Ege, and other distinguished gentlemen. — Taken from the St. Joseph Gazette.

Speaking was the order of the day and, judging from the number and enthusiasm of the speakers and the applause they received from the audience, we are justified in saying that no event has transpired since the opening of the Hannibal & St. Joe Railroad, which has been regarded both by our own citizens and those of northern Kansas, with such anxious solicitude and the source of so much pleasure to all interested, as the opening of the first section of the railroad destined ultimately to connect St. Joe with the gold regions of the Rocky Mountains, with those of California and with the shores of the Pacific Ocean. The Jackson Guards and German Rifles were on the ground, and, like everybody present, shared in the pleasure and enthusiasm of the day. Good music, and plenty of it, was furnished by Professor Cruft's and the Union Brass Band of our city, and everything passed off pleasantly. The officers and stockholders of the road deserve great credit for their zeal and perseverance in successfully prosecuting the work thus far, and now let every man in St. Joe and every man near the line of the road in Kansas contribute to his mite for its success, and thus enable the company to "push the work along." At a late hour the meeting broke up, every one being determined to work on, and work ever, until our road touches the golden sands of California. — "The Elwood Free Press," Saturday, July 21, 1860.

Election at Elwood

At an election held in Elwood Tuesday, April 9, 1861, Dr. J. W. Robinson was elected mayor, and Messrs. Croff, Millsaps, High, Ferguson, Devine, Booth, Neal, Cook and Disque were chosen as councilmen. A. A. Bradner was elected marshal, and W. L. Lewis city attorney. The election was a spirited one.

John Warburton, Only Survivor of Original Elwood

Former Residents of River Town Dead or Scattered, and Now the Only Known Living Man Who Knew Elwood in Her Palmy Days is John Warburton of St. Joseph, Mo.—A Grand Army Man.

In the days when Elwood was looked upon as the coming trade center for Kansas and Missouri, there dwelt in its midst a young man who toiled at the trade of printer on the old Free Press. Little did the youth think then that the time would eventually come when of all the busy crowd he mingled with day after day, he would be the only one who could be located, and possibly the only survivor of Elwood, the original.

The thriving, busy Elwood of "befo' de wah" is now practically buried in the Missouri River, as the treacherous current gradually ate in until the business houses, hotel and dwellings were either torn down or moved back, and the settlers either moved away, leaving no address, or the men folks went to war never to return to their old haunts. John Warburton, a hale, hearty old man of St. Joseph, Mo., is the only person now to be located who personally remembers the old town of Elwood, or rather the only living person who dwelt in the town in its prime.

John Warburton was born on November 22, 1845, and became a resident of Elwood in 1856, when only eleven years old. In those days, a lad of eleven was not the care-free, dependent child that he would be today, but he realized that times were hard, and he would soon be compelled to help make a living, so he started, when but a mere boy, to learn the printer's trade, and being naturally of a quick and retentive nature, he soon mastered the type and composing stick, and by the year 1859 he was a faithful and indispensable employe of the Free Press. As he made up copy, day after day, setting forth stories of slavery and the different political positions in regard to the evil, he foresaw the great war which was inevitable, and made up his mind which side to champion when the crisis came.

However, the storm broke sooner than was expected, and when the call to arms was sounded, it found John a clear-headed and intelligent boy, but only sixteen years old, and too young to enlist. He was resourceful, though, and so, after he was denied permission to enlist as a regular soldier, he braced his shoulders and remarked, Well, I'll just go along anyhow, and be handy in case you want me." The company with which he departed was the Seventh Kansas. He recalls that Albert L. Lee was a non-commissioned officer in that company, and afterward became major, and finally attained the rank of brigadier.

In 1862 the young soldier came back from the war, but found Elwood a ruin for the time, and accordingly went to St. Joseph, Mo., where he worked on the Herald during the summer. The call of battle had warmed his blood, and he had led an exciting life in the strife, and he could not resist the chance to enlist in September, 1862, inasmuch as he had reached the required age. This time he joined the Thirteenth Kansas, and among his comrades were Robert H. Montgomery, well known throughout Doniphan County, now deceased, and Wellington Kirkpatrick of Holton, Cy Leland, Frederick S. Moser, Jap Calvert and Tom Wood.

Among some of the notable battles in which Mr. Warburton participated were Cane Hill, Prairie Grove. The regiment finally wound up at Van Buren, Arkansas, where they camped for some time. They later came north as far as Springfield, Mo. During the campaign, the Thirteenth Kansas marched up through what was then known as the Cherokee Nation and Choctaw Nation, and eventually got back to Webber Falls. A few weeks later they pitched camp at Fort Smith. Mr. Warburton was mustered out at Little Rock, Arkansas, June 26, 1865, and returned to St. Joseph, where he has been ever since.

When young Warburton worked on the old Elwood Free Press, the city attorney of the town was Tom Osborn, and he occasionally came into the office and set type gratis, just to keep in practice, as he was a printer by trade. This is the same Thomas Osborn who afterward became governor of Kansas. The subject of this sketch also remembers the old saw and planing mill that was run by Ward Lewis. He, as a boy, spent some time around the mill with Lewis' two sons, Mell and Lon. These two boys also went to the war, and are now in an old soldiers' home in Los Angeles, Cal.

In 1860, when there was great excitement in Elwood, occasioned by the arrival of the old engine "Albany," on the ferryboat, John W. was one of the men who grasped the rope that pulled the locomotive up the bank. He also recollects in a humorous way the day that the engine was set on the track and christened. Jeff Thompson, president of the railroad company, and also mayor of St. Joseph, Mo., stood up on a flat car to make a speech and, being a rebel, he indulged in a few pointed remarks. The riot that followed was bedlam broke loose. The track was only a mile long, and all day long the engine pulled the cars up and down the short line, crowded with merry men and boys. Later, when the track was completed to Wathena, there was a free picnic, and a great celebration was had.

Mr. Warburton inherited a taste for the army, inasmuch as his father was a member of the Missouri State Militia for years previous to the outbreak between the North and South. He was a member of Pennick's Regiment in Missouri, but later, having been mustered out, he enlisted with the Fifteenth Kansas.

Mr. Warburton's reminiscences include many stories of St. Joseph, as well as Elwood, and he is authority for the statement of the fact that the first bank in St. Joseph was organized by Armstrong Beattie, in 1852, and conducted in a building known as the City Hotel, on Main street, and afterward moved over on Second street. The next bank was established by a company headed by Milton Tootle as president, and was styled the Western Bank. During the war these banks, in conjunction with all others, issued paper called "blind script," which was practically worthless.

John Warburton was married July 20, 1871, to Margaret L. Long in St. Joseph, the ceremony being performed by Doctor Runcie, husband of Mrs. Eleanor Runcie, for whom the Runcie Club of St. Joseph was named. Doctor Runcie was an Episcopal minister, and this was the second couple he had joined together. The Warburtons have four living children, as follows: Katie L., born April 6, 1873, now Mrs. C. N. Williamson; Mary J., born April 17, 1875, now wife of Oscar Voss, the wall paper dealer; Pearl, born March 26, 1884, widow of Arthur Beckner, and now a trained nurse; Delia, born May 3, 1888, who is stenographer in the office of E. M. Swartz at the court house.

Mr. Warburton was elected justice of the peace in 1902 and served a very satisfactory term. He ran again for the same office in 1914, but was defeated. He was a good loser, and now has a good position as clerk in the office of Justice of the Peace Oswald.

Anecdotes by G. A. Dubach

My father, Christian Dubach, ran a sawmill at Bellemont in the early days of Doniphan County. The mill was located on the banks of the Missouri River, and one day a bunch of young fellows, including myself, were standing nearby, engaged in idle talk, when suddenly the packing flew out of the pump on top of the boiler. The steam escaped with a roar and a hot spray covered the mill instantly; of course, every man took to his heels without waiting to say goodby, but Jacob Gunzelman had the advantage of the rest of us, as he was sitting on his horse while he conversed, but in the excitement that followeed, he jumped off the horse and hot-footed it down the road. It was a great joke on Jacob for a long while, that he did not retain his wits enough to spur the horse and get out of danger the quickest way.

An incident that I often recall, although it has o particular point of humor or interest, is one that occurred while my family was moving to this part of the country. I was only five years old, and my child-like mind was greatly impressed by the fact that we were moving at all, and when we got to St. Joseph and were obliged to take the ferryboat over to Bellemont, Kansas, my cup of happiness was full, and the events that followed are as clear as though they happened but yesterday.

We had a pet cat, of which the whole family was very fond, and to prevent him jumping into the river, we put him in a heating stove. The poor animal was panic stricken at its unaccustomed surroundings, and it scratched and meowed most piteously. At length, when we landed at Bellemont, and were driving up the bank, the stove lid gave a heave, and all we saw was a streak of dusky fur—and we never saw our cat again.

In years gone by, the only way to make ground fit for cultivation was by use of a team of "breaking oxen," as they were called. I owned six yoke, and many a hard day's work have I put through with those great, strong brutes. With the coming of civilization and prosperity, oxen on the farm were doomed to oblivion as a work animal, and I disposed of mine before they were entirely worthless. Nowadays, they might be worth something at the stockyards, but certainly not on the farm.

Alfred Larzelere

Alfred Larzelere is expected to speak here today. The best speech we had on the last canvas was made by him. All will recollect how tenderly that "Free State" Democrat, Cary B. Whitehead, was handled by Mr. Larzelere. His bogus Democracy was shown up amid the cheers and shouts of white men, and shame-faced silence of the Africans. Cary tried to reply, but was so mixed that he had to sit down. Mr. Larzelere has labored through the present campaign as earnestly as ever for our principle and our ticket. We hear him already talked of in other parts of the territory as speaker of the state legislature, a position he has already shown himself fully qualified to occupy.—The Elwood Free Press. Saturday morning, December 3, 1859. Note—Mr. Alfred Larzelere was the father of R. H. Larzelere, who served Doniphan County in the state legislature, as sheriff and county treasurer, and will always serve the county as an upright citizen.

Wathena

Mrs. Susan Holt, Greenleaf, Kansas: Old Wathena was chief of both bands. I remember him as a very old man, something near ninety years old. His people used to pass our cabin on their hunting trips up to the big timber—what is now known as Burr Oak Bottom, hunting the red squirrel. Sometimes they would cut a bee tree and have a quantity of wild honey, which they always shared with my father. I cannot remember just the year the Indians were moved to White Cloud agency, but not long after, perhaps a year, when a few families came over from Andrew County, Missouri, and took claims.

When Lincoln Spoke at Elwood

The Great Liberator Met at St. Joseph by Web Wilder and Judge Delahay—Same Speech Afterward Delivered at Cooper Institute in New York—Kos Harris of Wichita and W. E. Connelley of Topeka, Believe Elwood Should Be Designated a Historical Town.

Kos Harris, an old-timer of Wichita, has written to the State Historical Society suggesting the old town of Elwood, in Doniphan County, just across the Missouri River from St. Joseph, as a point for a marker of great historical interest. Mr. Harris says he has been "mousing around" some, and finds that Abraham Lincoln, on February 27, 1860, at Cooper Institute in New York, made a speech that really was one of the factors in his nomination at Chicago in May, 1860. But Mr. Harris also finds that Lincoln made almost the identical speech in Elwood, Kansas, several months earlier. Mr. Harris calls attention to this paragraph in Wilder's Annals of Kansas:

"December 1, 1859, Lincoln arrived in Elwood, Kansas, and made a speech. He was met at St. Joe by Web Wilder and Judge Delahay. His speech was substantially the same thereafter delivered in Cooper Institute in New York City. Subsequently Lincoln made a speech at Troy, Doniphan, Atchison and Leavenworth."

"Now," says Mr. Harris, "I do not know how big Elwood is, but I am absolutely sure that Kansas should have a stone, a marker, a monument or a slab at Elwood as near the place this speech was made as it can be placed, and on the same there should be mentioned that on this spot was made the first speech of Abraham Lincoln in Kansas, and the same was, in fact, the first gun of the campaign of 1860."

"Mr. Harris' idea is a good one," said Secretary W. E. Connelley, of the State Historical Society. "It should be talked about until something substantial materializes. But this is not the only claim Elwood has to fame. This modest little town sent forth Daniel W. Wilder, Edward Russell, Thomas A. Osborn and Gen. Albert L. Lee, brigadier-general and colonel of the Seventh Kansas Jayhawkers; here the Doy rescue party was given great inspiration, and upon their return a great reception; here the first locomotive touched the soil of Kansas, April 23, 1860—there being a mile or so of rack extending from the river to the bluffs—on which occasion the free boilers and the pro-slavery people indulged cheerfully, heartily and lovingly in the first grand drunk—there were possibly others, but this one is on record—which sometimes characterized the pioneer railroad excursion.

In a statement by Charles S. Gleed, the facts being obtained from a participant, it was a remarkable and glorious union of the champion drunkards of Kansas and their brothers from Missouri, headed by the then governor of that state. The only sober man in the party, an editor, thrashed the president of the road, M. Jef. Thompson.

"Elwood in its prime was on the map good and strong, and surely from such an inspiring start, the continuous leadership and usefulness of old Doniphan County may be accounted for. There should be a marker at Elwood commemorating Lincoln and the first locomotive, resurrecting and establishing the historical significance of the little town itself."

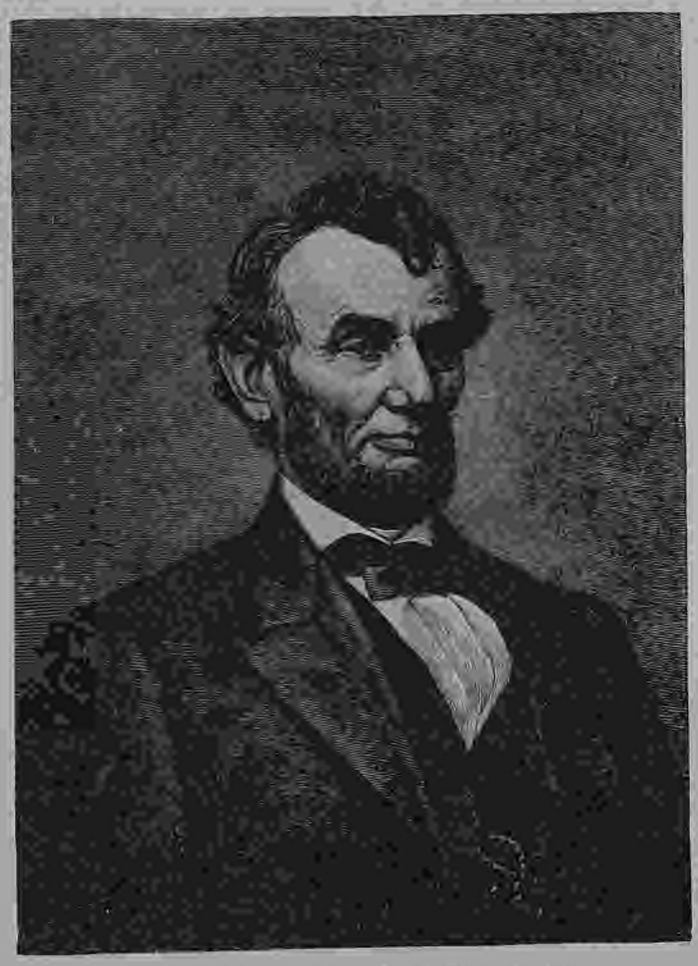
It is a matter of history, and almost ancient history at that, that the first sawmill, planing mill, shingle mill and lath mill were located in Elwood, and established in the year 1854.

Hon. Abraham Lincoln arrived in Elwood Thursday, December 1, 1859, although fatigued with the journey and somewhat under the weather, he kindly consented to make a short speech here. A large number of our citizens assembled at the Great Western Hotel to hear him. Mr. Lincoln was received with great enthusiasm, and stated the reasons why he was unable to make a speech this evening. He could only say a few words to us, who had come to meet him the first time he had placed his foot upon the soil of Kansas territory. Mr. Lincoln said that it was possible that we had local questions in regard to railroads, land grants and internal improvements, which were matters of deeper interest than the question arising out of national politics, but of these local interests he knew nothing, and should say nothing. We had, however, just adopted a state constitution, and it was probable that under that constitution we should soon cease our territorial existence, and come forward to take our place in the brotherhood of states, and act our part as a member of the confederation, and Kansas would be free, but the same questions we had had here in regard to freedom or slavery, would arise in regard to other territories, and we should have to take our part in deciding them. People often ask "why make such a fuss about a few niggers?" I answer the question by asking, what will you do to dispose of this question? The slaves constitute one-seventh of our entire population. Wherever there is an element of this magnitude in a government it will be talked about. The general feeling in regard to slavery has changed entirely since the early days of the Republic. You may examine the debates under the confederation in the convention that framed the constitution, and in the first session of Congress, and you will not find a single man saying that slavery is a good thing. They all believed it was an evil. They made the Northwest territory the only territory then belonging to the government, forever free. They prohibited the African slave trade. Having thus prevented its extension, and cut off the supply, fathers of the republic believed slavery must soon disappear. There are only three clauses in the constitution which refer to slavery, and in neither of them is the word slavery or slave mentioned. The word is not used in the clause prohibiting the African slave trade; it is not used in the clause which makes slaves a basis of representation; it is not used in the clause requiring the return of fugitive slaves. And yet, in the debates in the convention, the question was disussed, and slaves and slavery talked about. Now why was this word kept out of that instrument, and so carefully kept out that a European, be he ever so intelligent, if not familiar with our institutions, might read the Consituation over and over again, and never learn that slavery existed in the United States. The reason is this: The framers of the organic law believed that the constitution would outlast slavery, and they did not want a word there to tell future generations that slavery had ever been legalized in America. Your territory has had a marked history; no other territory has ever had such a history. There had been strife and bloodshed here, both parties had been guilty of outrages. He had his opinion as to the relative guilt of the parties, but he would not say who had been most to blame. One fact was certain, there had been loss of life and destruction of property. Our material interests had been retarded. Was this desirable? There is a peaceful way of settling these questions—the way adopted by the government until a recent period. The bloody code has grown out of the new policy in regard to the question of territries.

Mr. Lincoln, in conclusion, adverted briefly to the Harper's Ferry affair, and he believed the attack of Brown wrong for two reasons. It was a violation of law, and it was, as all such attacks must be, futile, as far as any effect it might have on the extinction of a great fault.

We have a means provided for the expression of our belief in regard to slavery—it is through the ballot box—the peaceful method provided by the constitution. John Brown has shown great courage, rare unselfishness, as even Governor Wise testifies.

Mr. Lincoln closed his brief speech by wishing all to go out to the election on Tuesday, and to vote as became the free state men of Kansas.—Elwood Free Press, Saturday, Dec. 3, 1859.



Abraham Lincoln, the Great Emancipator

Lincoln Visited Elwood Dec. 1, 1859

The Great Western Hotel entertained distinguished guests in the early days. Lincoln registered there December 1, 1859, while on a sightseeing and speech-making tour through Kansas. Horace Greeley was in Elwood the same year on his way to the Osawatomie convention. Wm. H. Seward was a visitor the following year.

"Kansas was then in the business eye and the name of Kansas and Elwood were uttered in the same breath," wrote one of the Elwood chroniclers.

The open-air printing office of the Elwood Advertiser was one of the early wonders of the village. A newspaper man drove into town one day in 1856 with a printing outfit in a covered wagon. He endeavored to rent a building for an office, but none was vacant. "This town needs a newspaper," the pioneer editor said, "and must have one at once."

He unloaded his press and type under a large elm tree close to the river bank and issued the first number of the Elwood Advertiser, while workmen were building him an office from the green cottonwood lumber. Col. Robert Tracy, a retired printer and editor, now living at St. Joseph, worked in this outdoor printing office.

Elwood had a press agent in those ante-bellum days, and no doubt some of its fame is due to his efforts. Read what one of the fraternity had to say in the New York Daily Times of December 18, 1858:

"Elwood is one of the most promising places in Kansas, and from the eligibility of its position and great local advantages, bids fair to become the commercial metropolis of the future state. Situated directly opposite St. Joseph, Missouri, it is placed in direct communication with one of the most populous and wealthy cities of the East. It lies on the west bank of the Missouri River, on the verge of an extensive and thickly wooded bottom, which requires no grading. Its streets are broad and rectangular, and its levee can be approached with safety by the largest boats, and is sufficiently spacious for an immense commerce."

Drunken Row

Man shot in a drunken row that occurred at Geary City a few days since. Charles Lenhart shot a German in the arm, and was himself shot in the abdomen and arm by a man named Peterson. His wounds are dangerous, and he is not expected to live.—Elwood Advertiser, March 25, 1858.

Abraham Lincoln spoke in Elwood on Thursday, December 1, 1859. Although fatigued with travel and somewhat under the weather, he made an effective speech, relative to the slavery question, and to Kansas coming in as a free state.

Silas Harrison Highley

A Native of Indiana He Came to Doniphan County in 1870, After Thirty Years of Hard Work at Saw Milling, and During the Thirty-Nine Years of His Life Here Made a Fine Record as Merchant, Farmer and Citizen, Leaving at His Death His Widow, Four Sons and Two Daughters, All Prosperous, Well-to-Do and Respected.

The career of Silas Harrison Highley is one that appeals to those thoughtful people who measure and value a man by his record of citizenship and his achievements. Men who, without making much ado, labor patiently year in and year out, leadling honorable lives, laying up something as they go along, and always thoughtful and considerate of their wives and children, constitute the strength of our American citizenship. Such a man was the subject of this sketch.

Silas Harrison Highley was a native of La Porte Ind., born September 12, 1836, of parents who were among the plain people who helped to transform that wonderful wilderness of timbered land of the early half of the preceding century into one of the finest farming regions of the Hoosier state. He resided at La Porte until 1842 when with his parents he came to St. Joseph, receiving such education as the schools afforded, and at the time of his arrival at young manhood he was strong and able bodied and could do a man's work.

In those days saw milling was one of the important industries of that timbered country, and this young man engaged in the saw milling business, doing his share toward converting the giant trees into lumber. Finally he went out into the west and for a long time was engaged in the saw milling business in Montana, that land of wonderful trees, and his experiences in those years, could they be reduced to writing would be intersting to read.

After all of this saw milling experience Silas Harrison Highley came to Kansas in 1870 and established himself in Doniphan County, satisfied in his own mind that he had reached the place that was to be his home for the remainder of his life. He engaged in milling for awhile, but in 1870 abandoned his business and went to merchandising at Old Charlestown, where he conducted a general country store until 1881. In that year he purchased the old John B. Zimmerman farm of 160 acres in the north part of Center Township, one of the rough farms adjoining Burr Oak bottom on the south and went to live in the house on the farm which was the first one built in the county by Al Garvin.

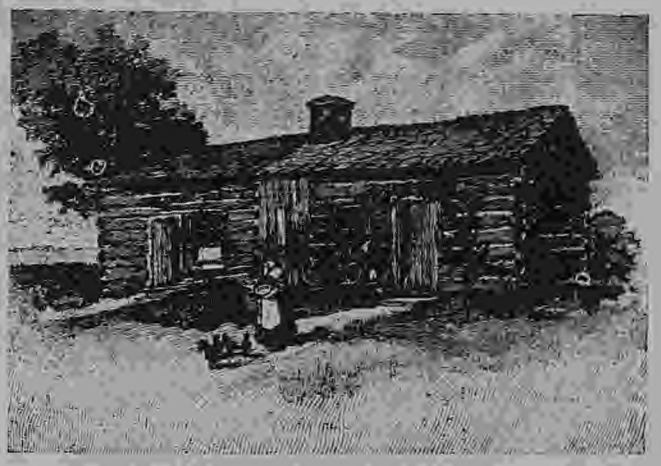
Here Mr. Highley took his wife, who was Miss Mary Angelia Olin, after their marriage on October 20, 1875, and here their children were born. Mrs. Highley was born in Canton, New York state, October 15, 1853, and came to Doniphan County with her parents when she was fifteen years old and settled five miles north of Troy on the farm now owned by John J. Thornton. Here they found enjoyment in life on the farm, took an active interest in the affairs of their neighborhood, became prosperous and were numbered among the best people in that farming community.

To Mr. and Mrs. Highley were born two daughters and four sons. They were all reared to manhood and womanhood, given as good education as the parents could afford, and were well started on their life careers when, on March 8, 1903, Silas Harrison Highley passed away, beloved by his widow and sons and daughters and honored by all people of the community as a devoted husband and father and a splendid citizen.

The two daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Highley were Lois Edna and Mattie Irene. Lois Edna was born in Doniphan County on the farm October 9, 1884. She was first married to Arthur C. Little, and to them one son, Sidney Oral, was born January 29, 1904, near Holton. Arthur C. Little was born near Holton, January 11, 1880, and died March 6, 1905. Lois Edna on August 18, 1912, married Dr. Harry Goodfriend, of Boise, Idaho. They are now living in that city where he enjoys an enviable practice. Martha Irene was born on the Doniphan County farm the date being November 27, 1887. She was married June 8, 1914, in Boise, Idaho, to Marion Simpson, of Meridian, Idaho, and they have since resided at that place.

The four sons of Mr. and Mrs. Highley were all born in Doniphan County except Charles J. who was born in St. Joseph, and, like nearly all of the boys who were born in the county and grew up here, they have developed into fine men and each is pursuing an honorable career with success to crown his industry.

Charles J. Highley, who was born December 1, 1876, is now engaged in ranching near Meridian, Idaho, and is accounted one of the best ranchmen in that state and also a splendid citizen. He was married August 29, 1898, to Drucilla R. Gabriel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gabriel, who was born August 28, 1878. Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Highley are parents of two daughters, Lois Hazel, who was born June 5, 1901, and Mary, born January 22, 1907. They also have two sons, Raymond, born October 27, 1903, and Silas William, whose birth was on April 2, 1909, in Idaho.



President Abraham Lincoln's cabin home.

Daniel Olin Highley, born in Doniphan County June 29, 1879, is a popular railway mail clerk and resides in a snug little home in Elwood which he owns, and is prosperous and well-to-do. He was married to Miss Lenora Belle Varvel, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac J. Varvel, old citizens of Doniphan County and among the prosperous farmers of which the county is noted. Mr. Varvel was born April 10, 1842, in Boone County, Missouri, and died June 5, 1908 at his daughter's in Elwood.

Mrs. Laura A. Varvell was born May 29, 1861, and died June 29, 1892, in Burr Oak Bottom.

Mrs. Daniel O. Highley was born in Holt County, Missouri, across the Missouri River from Rulo, Nebraska, November 25, 1880, and was reared and educated in this county. To them three children were born, Gladys Irene, born September 1, 1903, in Center Township; Daniel Roland, born June 8, 1905, and Gordia Charles, born June 19, 1909.

Daniel Olin Highley entered the railway mail service on February 20, 1906, his first run being on the Kansas City-Northwestern division of the Missouri Pacific system from Seneca to Kansas City. After being on that run for a time he was given the run on the St. Joseph and Grand Island railway making trips between St. Joseph and Grand Island. He has proved himself to be an efficient man in the service and is well known and prosperous, having a good home in Elwood where he is so well known and honored.

James Harrison Highley, born February 28, 1882, and Robert Earl Highley, who was born June 24, 1893, are both unmarried and are engaged in ranching in Idaho. They are both hard working young men and are an honor to their parents.

Mrs. Mary Angelia Highley, widow of Silas Harrison Highley, and the mother of these two daughters and four sons, came to the county when she was a school girl and resided here until April, 1906, when she went to Boise, Idaho, to reside on a fruit farm adjoining that thriving city. The death of Mr. Highley, March 8, 1903, and the removal of all of her children, save Daniel Olin Highley, to the state of Idaho caused her to take up her residence there, that she might be near them. She is doing well on her fruit farm and is proud of the fact that all of her sons and daughters are prospering. Mrs. Highley retains a warm place in her heart for old Doniphan County and she has a host of warm friends here.

✓FRANK P. MARSH

Surveyor of Doniphan County Now Serving His Seventh Term, Worked His Way Through School When He Was Thirty Years Old and Is One of the Most Efficient Men in the Engineering Line—Knows Every Road in the County.

In these days when the public is demanding improved highways Doniphan County is fortunate in having in the office of the county surveyor a man who not only understands how to stake out a road but can tell how to make a good road and what the cost will be. Frank P. Marsh, who has been in the office of county surveyor for nearly fourteen years, now serving his seventh term, is truly an expert engineer upon whom the people can depend.

Mr. Marsh is not a native of Kansas but he has lived in the state long enough to be acclimated. He was born in Buchanan County, Missouri, August 3, 1861. His parents had come from Cincinnati and had only temporarily resided in Missouri. In 1866, when the subject of this sketch was only five years old, the parents came across the river into Kansas and settled at Elwood, which has been Frank's home ever since.

In Elwood Frank P. Marsh grew up and attended the public schools of the old town. Whether it was because Elwood was the first spot in Kansas from which a railroad was surveyed, or whether the surveyors gangs that came after to lay out the railroads now operated influenced him, he early in life wanted to be a surveyor, or more properly speaking, a civil engineer. He was ambitious to win success in that line, but the opportunity did not come to him until, when he was thirty years old, he attended, in 1891, a school in St. Louis, working in that city in the day time and attending to his classes and studies at night.

After the death of his father, which was February 25, 1902, Mr. Marsh came home from school and has since resided there with his mother. He has three sisters, Mrs. Ida Searcy and Mrs. Nellie Sherwood, of St. Joseph, and Miss Julia Marsh, who lives with her mother in Elwood. His brother Edward resides in Elwood and another brother, Albert, died February 17, 1915.

Mr. Marsh's ability as an engineer caused him to put forward as a candidate for the office of county surveyor in 1898. He was elected by a very handsome vote of the people and during the two years that followed he filled the office so well that he was again put forward. After that he was continued in office until he served six terms in succession. He was out of office two years, during which he was deputy in the county surveyor's office, under Harry Wagonknecht, then surveyor. He was again returned to the office in 1912, although it was against his wishes, and he has held it by election ever since, making fourteen years of service as county surveyor, and two years as deputy.

Such a record as that shows the public appreciation of an official who is efficient and faithful and it is something for a man to be proud of. Mr. Marsh's long residence in the county and his work as surveyor has made him the best informed man on geographical and topographical lines in the county. He knows every mile of road in the county and every section line as well. He has made copious field notes, from which he is able quickly and accurately to locate corners.

During the time Mr. Marsh is not out on surveying work he writes insurance, having the agency for several of the most reliable companies. He has built up a fine business among the people and is so well and favorably known as to make him one of the most popular men in the county. His interest always has been for the public good and he is one of the men who believe there is no better community on earth than right here in Doniphan County. He believes in old Elwood, which has been his home for so many years, believes that some day it will be a great town, with large factories and commercial houses, and a good marketing place.

Mrs. Marsh, mother of Frank P. Marsh, is proud of her family of children and especially is she proud of her son, the county surveyor. Mrs. Marsh is properly reckoned as among the pioneers, having passed nearly fifty years in the old town of Elwood. She recalls the old days of the Missouri river steamboats when she first came to Kansas and it makes her glad to know that the once favorite means of transportation is being revived on the "Big Muddy." She is known to everybody in Elwood and all the people honor her. She has lived there amid such pleasant surroundings for so many years that no inducement that could be offered would induce her to leave the old town. She will spend her declining years there with her son and daughter and in the society of her friends, many of whom have grown up to manhood and womanhood under her kindly care.

Abraham Lincoln first set foot on Kansas soil in Doniphan County, December 1, 1859. He spoke at Elwood, Troy and Doniphan on that date, and on the second and third at Atchison and Leavenworth.

Town of Blair

First Began As a Jumping Off Place for Passengers—Ignored By the Railroads for Several Years—Development of the Fruit Industry Has Made Blair the Best Little Town in Doniphan County.

The town of Blair, situated in Washington Township, is one of the rising commercial spots in Doniphan County and it will not be surprising to see it expand considerably in the near future.

Situated as it is on two lines of railroad in the western portion of Washington Township, its destiny to grow into an important commercial center cannot very well be questioned.

Blair has had its drawbacks, but these must be directly traced to the oversight of the railroad companies, whose lines run through the town. Instead of receiving encouragement from the railroads while the town was in its baby clothes, the railroads ignored the place altogether.

When the Grand Island Railroad was built through that way, Joel Blair owned the land on which the town is located, and he realized that it would be an ideal site for a town. He laid one out and named it Blair. As a matter of courtesy the trains were allowed to whistle and stop there for a minute or so for the first few years and then even that accommodation was denied the people of the vicinity.

Naturally the place was small at first, but for ten years not a train stopped there long enough for the people to see its shadow. Gradually the adjacent country was settled up and the berry industry began to be developed.

The residents in that section of the country requested the Grand Island to build a depot at Blair, but the best they got was to have the trains stop there. The Rock Island had built in, in the meantime, but that company did no better.

Finally, a few years ago, when the berry business got real heavy, the Grand Island road put up a little depot and a shed in which produce could be handled for shipment. The Rock Island had been stopping its trains there for some time but the company, up to this day, has ignored all requests for a depot. The only thing the Rock Island company has installed to take the place of a depot is a dilapidated box car.

A few years ago the farmers living in the territory around Blair organized a company and erected a large building for mercantile purposes. It is located on the highway to St. Joseph, where all the wagons and automobile traffic go both ways. The building was rented to Baggett Brothers who opened a general country store, including farming implements. They also bought fruit and all manner of farm produce.

With the establishment of the store a number of houses were built and now there are over a dozen dwellings in the town, with the indications that many more will be erected in the near future. When business began to hum in good shape, Henry Foley erected an elevator which has been doing a good business since the first day it opened.

Three years ago a fruit-growers' organization was formed which takes care of the shipment of several hundred crates of berries daily during the season. Charles Baggett purchased the interest of his brother John in the store some years ago, and after conducting the establishment for a year he sold out to Jess D. Euler, who is still running the store.

The Fruit-Growers' Association is managed by Prof. Charles Marble, of the Troy High School, who will work for the interests of the fruit-growers from May 20 until the berry season is over in August. The people who reside within a radius of several miles of Blair are enterprising, prosperous and thrifty and there does not seem to be any remote reason why the town should not continue to expand in commercial and industrial importance. There is a good school firmly established there that was presided over the last term by two of the most capable teachers in the county, Miss Ida Kirwin and Miss Ila White.

On Thursday, November 25, 1915, about five hundred assembled at the Blair school house to listen to the program arranged by the teachers and to attend the sumptuous dinner prepared by the ladies of the district. It was a raw day and many left in the afternoon before the program was completed. The Blair band furnished the music for the occasion. Speeches were made by the Reverend Mr. Church, pastor of the Baptist Church at Sabetha, who drew the plans for the building, was master of ceremonies. Jacob Gunselman and Richard Mawson pulled the flag to the top of the pole. The following made brief speeches: John Baker, Charles W. Reeder, county attorney; Prof. Charles Marble, C. W. Ryan, editor of The Wathena Times; Prof. Charles I. Vinsonhaler, superintendent of the Wathena schools; Edwin Brown, probatejudge. Robert H. Larzelere read the history of the district from 1854 to 1871, and C. Edward Walton, from 1871 to 1915. The school girls sang "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" and "The Star-Spangled Banner." The teachers were Miss Margaret Larzelere, Miss Mary Kanaly and V. S. Davis. The members of the school board were George Cordonier, Ephraim C. Fleek and Oscar E. Madinger.

ROBERT SMITH, EARLY SETTLER

Came to Doniphan County from England in 1870—Farms 160 Acres—Is Prosperous and Progressive.

Robert Smith is among the several Doniphan County people who came from England and made the most of his opportunities among surroundings and conditions totally strange to him. By his British pluck and perseverence, he succeeded remarkably well and now farms 160 acres of fertile soil five miles due east of Troy on the St. Joe road.

Mr. Smith was born in Yorkshire, England, Feb. 8, 1843. His early life was spent on a typical English farm, but he heard so much of America as offering better opportunities for advancement that as he grew up he determined to try his fortune in the new country.

He left his pleasant English home with its neat, but small farms, and well kept lanes, and came to America. He did not linger long in the East, but soon pushed on to Kansas and arrived in Doniphan County in March, 1870. He was confronted with conditions entirely different than to which he had even the speech was somewhat different than the customs and broad dialect of his native Yorkshire home. However, undaunted by strange environments, he selected a farm five miles south of Blair, and made the most of every bit of the ground after the manner of the English agriculturist.

He married Miss Elizabeth Eimer, on Feb. 13, 1877, and considers it his lucky day, although the thirteenth. The Smiths became parents of three children, Guy T. Smith, Rebe E. Smith and Kitna V. Smith.

Some time after having located in Doniphan County, Mr. Smith moved from the farm south of Blair to a farm of 160 acres, five miles due east of Troy on the St. Joe road.

The Smiths have had an unusual degree of success and their land is well cultivated and their hard work has brought its rewards in good yields. Mr. Smith has always believed in hard work and getting the greatest amount out of every foot of ground.

His daughters taught school in Doniphan County nine years and were most efficient and well liked. They inherit their parents substantial character and business ability. They became prominent in their professions and won the high respect of their pupils, the parents of the pupils and the members of the board in the districts in which they were employed.

Both daughters are married and their husbands are among the most substantial farmers in Doniphan County. Rebe E. married Earnest Herring, Nov. 12, 1913, and lives in Iowa township, one and one-half miles south of Sparks. Kitna V. married Earl Dutton, June 10.1915, a progressive farmer of his neighborhood.

The Blair Sunday School

Despite all handicaps, such as the lack of a church building or a regular pastor, the Christian people of Blair have not become discouraged and lacking in the desire for regular worship. They have a Sunday school that is one of the largest in a country school house. Services are held in the Blair school each Sunday and there is always a large attendance from the surrounding country.

The following are active members:

Class 1: Teacher, Mrs. Smith. Pupils, Edith Kiger, Helen Smith, Bessie Smith, Willie Smith, Ernest Crystal, Orvis Keck, Lawrence Cross, Keneth Crystal, John Ramier, Evert Flesck.

Class 2: Teacher, Mrs. Cross. Pupils, Norise Fleck, Lieutte Ramsier, Agnes Cross, Maggie Kiger, Anthus Crystal, Alta Euler.

The Blair Association

An Organization Which Has Made Commercial Small Fruit Growing a Success Through Its Ability to Market Its Products on a Sound Business Basis—Organized in 1913, Its Sales for That Year Were 23,200 Crates of Berries, Which Were Increased in 1915 to 30,200 Crates—Blair the Best Berry Ground in Kansas.

Of recent years commercial growing of berries and small fruits has been reduced to a business basis in that rich country surrounding the village of Blair in Doniphan County, Kansas, and located on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific and the St. Joseph and Grand Island railroads. The land in that community is particularly adapted to this class of fruit growing; in fact it is considered the best berry land in Kansas and the Middle West.

While Doniphan County has long been considered the home of the big red apple it also has long been known as a berry growing region. From the early history of the county berries have been grown here, and some of the pioneer growers have engaged in the business somewhat extensively and with good returns from their investment and labor. All men who engage in a particular branch of farming or fruit growing, however, did not make a pronounced success. It is a well-known fact that the average grower of berries who complained of "bad luck" would have been really successful if he had understood the business or marketing side of berry growing. As an individual grower he was at a disadvantage at every turn. To meet competition in the market, to obtain the best price, he must know many things; the variety of berries that are the best sellers, how to pack them, ship them and how to sell them.

Finally the idea of co-operative growing and selling took hold of those Blair berry growers. It was the solution of the whole problem. It meant the converting of hundreds of acres of those rich Blair lands into berry fields, the growing of berries on an extensive scale hereto unthough of and best of all a system of marketing by and through which the individual growers, as members of the association, were enabled to obtain larger and more satisfactory returns from their fields and for their labor.

The Blair Association was organized January 8, 1913, by the growers of berries and small fruits of that locality and for their mutual good. The result of the organization was seen in a more extensive planting of their acres to berries, a more general interest in the varieties, packing methods and the selling side of the business, the most important of all.

The officers and directors, chosen from among the growers who became members of the association, entered upon their work with a unanimity of purpose to work together to win success for the association and for each and every one of its members. The 1913 officers and directors were: David M. Duncan, president; George W. Cordonier, vice-president; George Stunz, secretary and treasurer; Charles F. Baggett, manager; Jesse D. Euler, E. S. Bird, C. Edward Walton, Joseph P. Schneider.

In the first year of this organization it handled 7,346 crates of berries. Of strawberries there were 3,147 crates, of raspberries 2,111 crates, and of blackberries 2,118 crates. By the introduction of modern business methods in marketing the members of the association realized prices for their berries far more satisfactory than any they had received when acting individually in shipping to market or selling to berry buyers.

The success which attended the association in its first year brought increased interest in berry growing along with an enlargement of the operations of its members. It was a tremendous stimulus which made berry growing and marketing one of the most important industries in Doniphan County. It was a practical illustration of the value and need of organization among the producers.

As an indication of the growth of the berry industry in the Blair neighborhood the operations of the association for 1915 are here presented. The total number of crates handled for that year was 13,741. These were as follows:

|---|---|
| Strawberries . . . . . | 6,340 |
| Raspberries . . . . . | 3,446 |
| Blackberries . . . . . | 3,955 |

By these figures it will be observed the 30,242 crates marketed by the association in the year 1915 brought $21,561.40 in money to the members of the association. Had these berries been sold by the individual growers in the old way, the members in competition with each other, what might have been the amount of money realized from the sale? So much for the value of co-operative selling of berries.

The association employs an experienced grower and a thoroughly capable business man as its manager, in the person of Professor Charles Marble, paying him $900 for the season for his services. It is through this manager that all of the selling is done—and in disposing of berries in large quantities the association manager is able to ship to the market at which the best price is to be obtained. The association's plan is to pay its members the platform price of their berries, and when the season draws to an end and the collections are all in dividends are declared to the members according to the quantity of berries each has sold through the association. By this method there is an equitable distribution of the expenses and of the profits. Any member of the association will say that under the association or co-operative plan the expenses of marketing are less, the profits proportionately larger, and the member, who usually is a busy man with many cares on his hands, has little to worry about.

Mr. and Mrs. Pete Ramsel of Blair.

The members of the Blair association believe in the maxim, "In Unity There is Strength." They have abundant proof of the fact. They intend to keep up their organization, to increase their operations, to improve the quality of their offerings and in every case to promote the welfare of the berry growing industry and those engaged in it.

Just now the association is planning to organize a bank, not for the purpose of competing with the regularly established banks of the county, but to facilitate the handling of their association business through the proper channels.

The officers and directors of the association for 1916 are comparatively young men, all successful growers and keenly interested in the success of the berry industry and of the association.

Peter Ramsel, who occupies the position of president of the association, is a native of Doniphan County, born north of Blair. He has spent all of his life in Doniphan County and is recognized as a good business farmer and berry grower.

Siegel Weythman, born north of Blair, is vice-president of the association and is a representative of the sturdy industrious Teutons who have contributed so much to the agricultural and horticultural interest of our country.

George Stunz, secretary, is also a native of Germany and is one of the intelligent thrifty men of the Blair community. He has a great pride in the association and performs his official duties with accuracy and to the satisfaction of his fellow members.

The treasurer of the association is Joseph Weber, born in Germany, and one of the successful farmers in and around Blair. Mr. Weber has made a study of berry growing and as a result of that study he is considered as one of the best informed men engaged in the business.

The four other directors are Guy T. Smith, William Lehman, Jesse D. Euler and Charles Marble, manager.

Guy T. Smith was born on a farm one-half mile west of Blair and was reared and educated in that neighborhood. He is a capable business farmer and fruit grower and is popular with the people.

William Lehman, of German parentage and born near Blair, is an energetic young man who has achieved a knowledge of fruit growing that has enabled him to make it a specialty and a source of profit.

Jesse D. Euler, also a native of the German community near Blair, has taken an active interest in the association from the start and was one of the directors at the time of its organization. He is an expert in small fruit and berries and has made good at it.

Charles Marble, the manager, is a native of Ohio. He is principal of the Troy High school, a good educator and an expert fruit man, also a good business man as the record of his management of the affairs of the association disclose.

The Blair Association now has a total membership of fifty-two. They are as follows:

| Peter Remsel | D. W. Bantle |
| Joseph Weber | Sam Lewis |

Robert McClelland

Robert Andrew McClelland was born September 9, 1855, in Buchanan County, Mo., where it is now almost the heart of the city of St. Joseph, and was brought to the old Eph. D. McClelland homestead at the age of two weeks, and is still living across the road from where he was reared, which will make him a resident of Kansas sixty-one years September 9, 1916.

Eliza Jane Fitzhugh was born May 14, 1862, near Lone Star, Gentry County, Mo., and at the age of six, with her parents, moved to Nodaway County, Missouri, near Burlington Junction, where she resided until she was married to Robert A. McClelland on January 16, 1881, at Burlington Junction, Missouri, and on the 26th of the same month came to the farm they still live on and have for thirty-five years. To this union was born one daughter, Grace Ethyl McClelland, near Blair, March 6, 1882, and reared on the same place. She graduated from the Wathena High School on the second day of June, 1900, under Prof. Geo. W. Kinkead, after which she taught ten years in this county. April 12, 1910, she went to Cold Springs, Oklahoma, and settled on a homestead which she still holds. This prominent schoolma'am was married on January 9, 1911, in the Baptist parsonage in Hobart, Oklahoma, to Ray David Manchester of Cold Springs, Oklahoma. Ray D. Manchester was born November 5, 1878, near Denton, in Mount Vernon District, Union Township, and went to Oklahoma in 1902 and settled on a claim which he still owns. November 20, 1915, a daughter was born to them, which her grandma named Anna Mary Manchester.

Ephraim D. McClelland

Ephraim D. McClelland built the old country inn, or tavern, as some called it, in 1860, which is located about half way between Troy and Wathena. It was the first country inn built in the county, and for many years it was a popular hostelry at which many travelers put up. In the early days of Kansas, before the railroads came, there were many guests entertained there who were to have a prominent part in the development of Kansas and Nebraska. The old inn is still standing and is occupied by Charles McClelland.

Ephraim McClelland was also a public benefactor. He piped water from a spring one-fourth mile to a large iron tank, which he purchased and placed at the side of the public highway, always keeping the tank full and for many years travelers along the road from St. Joseph, Wathena, Troy or Hiawatha stopped there and refreshed their horses. He was a Republican leader and did splendid service for the people, serving as a member of the board of county commissioners from 1862 to 1865.

Charles E. McClelland

Residing on the farm where he was born, January 6, 1857, Charles E. McClelland and Teressa Belle Moore McClelland enjoy life to the utmost extent. They have one son, Howard Walter, born January 16, 1889, and Marie Teressa, who was born December 10, 1900. The latter having been born and reared on the old farm. She is an exceptionally bright young lady and received her primary education in the Blair district. She is a freshman in the Troy High School, and because of her fidelity to her work, pleasing smile, charming manner and loyalty to the school, she has endeared herself to her teachers and classmates.

Wathena's Successful Druggist

Ernest Fuger Conducts Establishment Devoted Almost Exclusively to the Sale of Nyal Remedies—Came as a Stranger From Brown County Fourteen Years Ago and Has Reared a Fine Family of Girls and Boys.

Fourteen years' residence in Wathena has demonstrated the unquestionable ability of Ernest Fuger as a sound business man and a first-rate druggist. Mr. Fuger came as a total stranger from Hamlin, Brown County, in the year 1900, and he has certainly worn well as a citizen of Wathena ever since.

His drug store is one of the best and most reliable establishments in Doniphan County, and is known far and near as the headquarters for the complete line of Nyal remedies. Mr. Fuger is a pharmacist of recognized ability, and he is both competent and painstaking in compounding prescriptions. He makes no mistakes in putting up medicines and the people have the utmost confidence in his integrity and ability.

The Fuger drug store is modern in every respect and the articles for sale are the best manufactured. The medicines are always fresh and the sundries are up to date and attractively displayed so as to catch the eye of the customers.

The fixtures of the Fuger establishment are of solid walnut, and the soda fountain is a favorite resort during the summer months, when all kinds of plain and fancy soft drinks are in great demand by both old and young. The young folks who have a liking for ice cream can find every flavor that their palates desire, throughout the season, and it is no exaggeration to state that few metropolitan drug stores have a better variety of all manner of good things than may be found at Fuger's.

Elwood

It was here that the free-state ideas were first discussed. It was here that nearly all the men who are or have been prominent in state politics, first settled.

It was here that ex-Governor Osborn located as a lawyer. It was here that Gen. Webb Wilder did his first newspaper work in Kansas. Other men who were in Elwood at that time, who are alive, are Gen. A. L. Lee, now in New York; Ed Russell of Lawrence; William Ellsworth of Salt Lake; Bolts and Smith of Chicago; Senator Chaffee of Colorado and A. E. Campbell of Wathena.

Roseport, the old town, was established in 1842, by Robert Rose, as a trading post, and in 1854 the name was changed to Elwood, being named for John B. Elwood, of Rome, New York. It attained its greatest population in 1856; 800 votes were cast. The town decided the future of Doniphan County and at its first election only seven votes out of the total poll were cast for the pro-slavery ticket.

The largest hotel on the river, from St. Louis up, was built by two men who have become prominent, Gen. A. L. Lee, of New York and State Senator Chaffee of Colorado. This was torn down several years ago to keep it from falling into the river.

Perhaps the only man who was one of the first settlers is John D. Hier, who has stuck to the town through all these years and now resides on a beautiful farm in the bottoms. Mr. Hier put up a sawmill at Elwood and in 1860 furnished all the ties and bridge lumber for the building of the St. Joseph and Topeka Railroad. He took two-thirds of his pay in St. Joseph bonds, and the balance in cash, and has held to these bonds until the present time.

John T. McClelland

There are many old settlers in Doniphan County but dates show that John T. McClelland, who was born in Buchanan County, Missouri, on the land St. Joseph stands on, and who came to Doniphan County, November 12, 1854, is evidently one of the oldest settlers in Doniphan County. He has resided in the community where he lives today ever since. He has a son, Ephriam McClelland. He remembers attending the first school in the Platte district in 1855 and can relate many ludicrous incidents which are as vivid to his recollection today as though they had transpired only yesterday. He was married to Mary J. Wallace, March 28, 1872, and they reside on their farm four miles East of Troy, where they are in comfortable circumstances and enjoying all the happiness this life affords.

ERNEST FUGER, Proprietor, Wathena, Kansas

On Friday evening, Feb. 27, 1914, T. H. Wakeman, an old settler of Doniphan County, died suddenly in his buggy while on his way home from a meeting of the trustees of Marion township at Troy. He was a highly respected citizen of the community in which he lived.

During the latter part of January, 1914, William Robert Young, better know as "Uncle Boss" Young, in Wathena and Doniphan County, an aged negro farmer of Wathena, who was a slave in his younger days, decided to quit farming and sold a yoke of oxen that had attracted so much attention at a tobacco show held a week before, to the St. Joseph stock yards for beef. The old negro was born in Kentucky and has lived on his farm north of Wathena for fifteen years, and is the head of a good sized family.

On January 21, 1867, a mock legislature was organized in the city of Wathena, which met once a week at the court house. The organization was effected by the election of H. D. Hunt as governor, Alfred Larzelere as speaker and Ed Downward, clerk.

On Dec. 12, 1866, in Wathena, the Rev. Mr. John Paulson being the officiating clergyman, John O. Stephens and Miss Sarah Janetta Dineles were married.

James Atha, an old citizen of Wathena, dropped dead in the postoffice at that place on Sunday afternoon, March 1, 1914. He was forty-five years of age.

Elwood

Elwood is a station on the St. Joe & Grand Island R. R., on Section 24, Town 3, Range 23, in Washington, opposite St. Joseph, Mo. Was first laid off in the summer of 1854, by the Roseport Town Company. The town was first named Roseport, but shortly afterward changed to its present appellation. Original townsite consisted of about 160 acres.

MISS ESTELLA BOWMAN

A Native of Doniphan County and a Prominent Teacher.

Among the prominent young ladies and educators of Doniphan County must be mentioned the name of Miss Estella Bowman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Bowman of Wathena. She was educated in the Wathena schools and Washburn College at Topeka. She taught school several years in Wathena and is at present teaching in the Garden City schools, where her work meets with the approval of the pupils and patrons of the district. It is on account of the courtesy extended us by this young lady and others that we are permitted to use several half-tone cuts of the Wathena High School girls and boys.

Above is represented the most common inhabitant of Doniphan County sixty years ago, the American buffalo. The buffalo is almost entirely extinct on the plains of America, but a half century ago whole droves of them roamed the Kansas prairies and among the Indians' table delicacies was buffalo meat. Buffalo hunts were a common form of amusement.

A. Disque, who made an attempt to establish the Pioneer, a German paper, to be published at Elwood, was appointed assistant postmaster of Elwood, by Postmaster Robinson, June 10, 1861, and moved the postoffice into the deputy's office on Foreman street.

L. A. Libel, cashier of the State Bank of Wathena, is an encyclopedia of information. If you desire to know something about the town of Wathena or the county of Doniphan, ask him.

Many a man has found out when it is too late, there is a flaw in the title to the home he is supposed to own. You stand no chance to lose your property when A. L. Perry makes the abtract and attaches his "O. K." on the instrument; so careful is he as an investigator of titles.

One of the business institutions of Troy, of which all of Doniphan County is proud is the big A. L. Decker grocery house. You should not fail to call there when in Troy, and you will be cordially received whether you want to buy anything or not.

Burr Oak Township

COUNTY SEAT WAS VOTED TO COLUMBUS AT ONE TIME

One of the Original Five Townships Laid Out in Doniphan County —First Township Settled.

Columbus City was located on Sections 20 and 21, Town 2, Range 22, in Burr Oak Township. Was laid off by a town company in May, 1857.

The town prospered for a few years and was inhabited by several enthusiastic men who were successful in securing the county seat for Columbus, but the records were not moved to place and a vote was taken later, when Wathena secured the county seat. The construction of the court house was begun upon the lot where John A. C. Gordon's beautiful residence stands, but about the time the foundation was completed the officials were prevented by the court from moving the records, and the county seat remained at Troy.

Columbus, long since defunct, was located by a town company, R. Hays, president, May, 1857. The company purchased the land for the townsite, of Henry Wilson, there being about 320 acres. The town received its name at the instance of T. H. McCullough, who named it after his son, Columbus.

Henry Wilson erected the first building on the townsite, before the town was laid off, in 1855. Soon after, he built a wagon shop, and after the town was located, used it as a warehouse.

In the spring of 1857, P. Burke established the first general store. On July 3, 1860, a postoffice was established and Henry Wilson was named as postmaster and served until July 6, 1864, at which time Benjamin Heflin Brock, father of Mrs. R. H. Montgomery, was appointed. He served until Aug. 23, 1865, when Romulus Hunter was appointed. The latter was engaged in the mercantile business and the rear of his store was utilized for a saloon, and the Department objected to the postoffice being kept in a building where liquor was sold, and as a result Mr. Hunter moved his saloon into another building. He served as postmaster until March 9, 1866, when Dr. J. T. Lewis was appointed. Mr. Lewis served until Feb. 14, 1867, when John Grable was apointed, who served two months, at which time C. Q. Johnson was appointed on April 14, 1867, and served until the office was discontinued, a date which the writer was unable to ascertain. Dr. J. T. Lewis of the eclectic school, located in Columbus in 1857 and was known as the first physician in that section of the country. About the year 1858 a large cabinet shop was built, and Daniel Darnam located the first blacksmith shop. In 1858, the citizens went to Wathena for their mail. The place had a population of about 200 souls and had attained the height of its prosperity, and at the beginning of the war the place gradually began to go down and there is nothing at this time to mark the spot where a thriving town once stood, except the cornfield of John Jacks, who owns the old Columbus townsite.

This township received its name from the great quantity of burr oak timber found within the confines of the township. It was one of the five original townships, and was organized Sept. 1, 1855. Its boundaries were fixed as follows: "Bounded on the north and east by the meanderings of the Missouri River, on the south by the second section line south, dividing Townships 2 and 3, and on the west by Iowa and Wolf River Townships."

T. W. Waterson and L. Prichard were appointed justices of the peace, and James Waterson constable.

The first election in this township was held on the first Monday in October, 1855, at the house of John W. Smith, in Smithton.

On the 16th day of September, 1856, the county board caused the boundary line of this township to be changed so as to occupy all of the territory lying east of the range line between Ranges 21 and 22, except that part occupied by Wayne Township.

On the 21st day of October, 1856, the county board redivided the county, forming two new townships—Marion and Center. The boundaries of Burr Oak Township were changed and fixed as follows: "Commencing at a point one and a half miles south of the town line, dividing Towns 2 and 3, on range line between Ranges 21 and 22; thence north along said line until it strikes what is known as 'Burr Oak Bottoms,' at the foot of the bluff; thence along the foot of the bluff to the Missouri River; thence down the main channel of the river until it strikes the open line one and one-half miles south of the line dividing Towns 2 and 3; thence west to place of beginning."

On the 21st day of June, 1859, a change was made, and the present boundary was fixed as follows: "Commencing at the southwest corner of Section 14, Town 2, Range 21, thence down the Missouri River to the southeast corner of Section 1, Town 3, Range 22; thence west to the southwest corner of Section 1, Town 3, Range 21; thence north to northeast corner of Section 23, Town 2, Range 21; thence west to place of beginning."

The surface of the township is very broken, ridges running in a northeast direction. At one time there was a great deal of bottom land, but the Missouri River has gradually cut away such a large portion that at the present time there is scarcely one-half the bottom land left on its west bank.

The township is watered by several small streams. Smith Creek, named in honor of the founder of Smithton, is the principal stream. It heads in the southwest corner of the township, on Section 36, flows in a northeast direction and empties into the Missouri River below where Smithton was formerly located. Well water is obtained at depths from twenty to sixty-five feet.

The first actual settler in the township was John W. Smith, who came in 1852, and settled in the township, before the country was opened for settlement. In 1855 he laid out the town of Smithton, and organized the first Masonic lodge in the state.

After the country was opened for settlement in 1854, the following persons arrived and took up claims: B. H. Brock, C. H. Rodgers, the Tribble brothers, T. Baker, S. Calvin, T. W. Watterson, McCullough, Andrew McChesney, James Craft and others. The people came in rapidly and settled mostly on the bottom lands.

The first marriage in the township was in the spring of 1854, the contracting parties being a Mr. Viles and a daughter of William Clenons. The ceremony was performed in what was then known as Boston, by the Reverend Landers, from St. Joseph, Mo.

The population increased so rapidly that it has been impossible to obtain facts regarding the first birth in the township, but among the first was Mary, a daughter of Henry Moore, some time in 1855.

In the spring of 1854, Joseph G. Rodgers located in the township and built a cabin, preparatory to making his home there. In June of the same year, he was taken sick with a fever, and not getting better, was removed to Boston, where he died in a few weeks. This was about the first death of which any record can be found.

The first religious services in the township were held in the spring of 1855, by Reverend Davis, of Andrew County, Mo., who represented the Southern Methodist Church. He preached at various places throughout the township, in open air, there being no buildings large enough in which to hold services at that time. In the fall of the same year, he held an old-fashioned camp meeting in a grove on the "Boston Bottoms." Reverend Birch of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church, held services in Columbus and other points about that time.

In the spring of 1857, Dr. John Lewis taught a subscription school at what was then known as Columbus, in a small frame building erected by the Methodist denomination. Another school was taught about the same time by Mrs. John Lewis, one-half mile below Smithton.

The first school district was organized under the administration of C. C. Camp, county superintendent at Columbus, and was taught by M. T. Kincaid, who drew the first public money for school purposes in the township.

Dr. Wm. B. Sharp located as the first physician, in the spring of 1855, at Columbus.

A steam sawmill was built in the "Burr Oak Bottoms," three miles northwest of Columbus, in the fall of 1856, by Chas. B. Hamilton. In the fall of 1857 he bought a new mill and located it at Charleston, in Center Township. The mill continued to be operated for several years.

Robert Hayes built the first steam grist mill in June, 1856, at Columbus. The capacity of the mill was small—one set of burrs—but sufficient for all the work necessary at that time. He also operated a sawmill in connection with it. The mills were operated until the close of the war, when they moved to Missouri.

Probably the first sorghum manufactured in this township or in the county, was made in the fall of 1858, by B. H. Brock and J. B. Weythman.

In April, 1867, occurred the first overflow of the Missouri River, causing a great amount of damage.

The principal products of the township are corn and wheat; fruit of all kinds is also largely raised. This is considered the only timbered township in the county, the principal varieties being burr oak, walnut and cottonwood.

Writes Interestingly of Early Events in Doniphan County History.

(By Mrs. Mary Manuel Holston.)

There were many interesting events when this territory was opened for settlement on the 30th day of May, 1854. The Kansas and Nebraska bill had been introduced by Stephen A. Douglass, and, while it passed Congress on May 22, 1854, it was not until May 30th that it was signed by President Franklin Pierce. My father, Phillip Manuel, came over from Missouri in the fall, Oct. 10, 1854, and took a claim four miles southwest from the old Columbus sight in Burr Oak Township. He built a log cabin on it and on March 1, 1855, moved his family across the Missouri River at Amazonia, Mo., in a flat-boat steered with oars.

About three miles northeast of us there was a little store and blacksmitn shop called Smithton. It was named in honor of John W. Smith, who organized the first Masonic lodge in Doniphan County, and it is at Highland today and still is known as Smithton Lodge No. 1. Our nearest neighbors were Thomas Watterson, whose son Smiley, now lives at Marysville, Kan.; Benjamin H. Brock, the father of Mrs. Mary Montgomery, who lives on her farm two miles northeast of Troy; Joseph Crippen, who is the father of Albert Crippen, who now lives in Elwood; W. C. T. Hill and Mr. John Weythman, father of Siegel Weythman, who resides on the old farm, also Charles Rogers, whose family now lives at Concordia. We were all many miles apart, but still neighbors in the fullest sense of the word in those days.

We went to church in a linch-pin wagon hauled by an ox team, and the minister traveled on horse-back. There were few buggies in those times, and we seldom if ever saw the pastor and his wife traveling except on horseback. Our home was the stopping place for the ministers on their circuit, and the Rev. James Skinner was one of the first to deliver a sermon in Burr Oak Township. He is now in the Old Soldiers' Home at Decatur, Ill. He used to preach three months at a time and make his home with us.

I remember clearly the first school I ever attended. It was in the fall of 1856, and in an old log cabin 16x20 feet. The seats were logs split in two and pins put in for legs. The scholars came as far as five miles on horseback to attend, for it was the first opportunity they had to get the rudiments of an education. I will never forget our teacher, Miss Minerva Perkins, who was from Missouri. After many years of hard work, my father's health failed and he sold the old homestead to Andrew Elsinger, and we moved south of Leavenworth.

I am surely proud of Doniphan County, where I grew from a small child to womanhood and I have many friends yet living in Wathena and Burr Oak Township. I am also proud to know that I was reared in the state of Kansas. I have watched it grow for sixty years. It was a wild prairie when I was little. There were wild turkeys, buffalo, deer, wolves and other animals in great numbers. All any settler had to do in order to get enough meat to last his family a week or more, was to take a rifle and go out on the plains. He could not by any possible chance come back empty handed. It has grown from a wilderness to one of the best states in the Union. It has grown from the ox wagon to the automobile and the aeroplane; and I often wonder what the next improvement in the country will be. Although I have made many friends in my home here at Vermillion, I often long to be back in dear old Doniphan County.

The Celebrated Doniphan County Veteran Pioneer Traveling Man —Oldest Traveling Salesman in Kansas—Has Represented the Red Wing Union Stoneware Company for Nearly Fifty Years—Came to Doniphan County in 1854— Resides in Kansas City, Missouri—Served in Civil War—His Father Was Engaged in Manufacture of Pottery.

"The traveling salesman who has backbone and nerve turns trials into triumphs and vexations into victories," is the language of the celebrated pioneer stoneware man of Kansas, John W. McChesney, who for nearly half a century has represented the Red Wing Union Stoneware Company of Red Wing, Minnesota, in northeast Kansas.

This venerable old man, who made his first trip over Kansas soil with an ox team and lynch-pin wagon, who assisted in preserving the Union, and who carries upon his countenance the effulgent rays of sunshine into every store in the state of Kansas, where he has been a welcome visitor for the past half century, was born at New Port, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, October 11, 1838.

He moved with his father, Andrew McChesney, to St. Joseph, Missouri, in 1853, and early in the spring of 1854, he, with his father's family, came to Doniphan County, settling on a claim near old Smithton in Burr Oak Township, where his family resided for a year and a half, moving from there across the Missouri River to the town of Old Boston.

Before this business-like young man was of age, his father conducted a small pottery shop at Old Boston, in Andrew County, Missouri, and later at St. Joseph. When Fort Sumter was fired upon, April 12, 1861, this persevering and energetic young man returned to the state of his nativity and enlisted in Company C, 64th Ohio volunteer infantry, June 4, 1861, in Summit County. After four years of good service, fighting for his country, participating in many important battles, he was mustered out June 8, 1865.

Soon after the war had ended he returned to Kansas, moving to Marshall County, where he engaged in the pottery manufacture in Marysville and also Waterville. However, as the clay there is not adapted to pottery manufacture, the enterprise was a failure. About this time he became engaged as salesman for the Red Wing Stoneware Company of Red Wing, Minnesota, and has been with that same firm ever since.

The subject of this sketch is probably the best known traveling man in Kansas and likely the firm for whom he works will never know the worth of this man until he dies and a new man is sent to cover his territory. This pioneer is an ideal salesman, possessing the ability to cope with the situa-

His wife died a few years ago and his family now consists of his two daughters: Miss Norma and Sabra McChesney Cunningham, and his grandson, Robert Douglas Cunningham, who live at 1817 Ward avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, where they have a comfortable home.

Elmer E. Hoyt, the manager of the Red Wing Union Stoneware Company, enjoys the distinction of being a Kansas man and one of those who, on account of his remarkable achievements, have shed luster upon the state of his nativity.

Murder—Dunn-Schultz

In the early days, Doniphan County was populated by all classes of people some of whom were belligerent and were tough citizens. In Burr Oak bottom on the place Lee Brandt owns today was committed an atrocious crime by Wm. Dunn, who killed Wm. Schultz. The murder was committed in the fall of 1862. Shultz's assassin hid the unfortunate man's body in a hemp shock and it was a couple of weeks before the crime was brought to the attention of the public. There was no eye witness to the crime but the best of circumstantial evidence.

Austing George

Austing George, of Burr Oak Township, died Sunday, February 15, 1879. came to Doniphan County, April 5, 1856, enlisted in the 4th Kansas Volunteer Infantry and then when the 3rd and 4th consolidated, forming the 10th Kansas Volunteers, Company K, he participated in the battle of Drywood, Osceola, Van Buren, Prairie Grove, Cane Hill, Fayettsville. Was severely wonded at the battle of Prairie Grove. Ranked as corporal sergeant. Was mustered out on September 20, 1865. His wife was a sister to Julian D. Hazen, of Leona.

Abolitionist Killed

Early in 1857, a free state man named John Collins, who operated a saw mill at Doniphan, was killed by a pro-slavery man named Joe Lynch. It is believed that he was prompted to do this through political spite.

NEW HOPE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

A Handsome House of Worship Six Miles Northeast of Troy Which Was Erected By the People of That Neighborhood With a Fund of $3,045.30 Raised By Subscription—The Dedication a Big Event in the History of the New Hope Community.

One of the finest things to be observed in these Kansas people is the unanimity of effort when it comes to the building of churches for public worship. Go into any city, country town, or community in rural Kansas, and it is the same—men and women of all shades of religious belief joining together in the erection of churches. Nowhere is this fact, or trait, of the Kansas people better illustrated than here in Doniphan County, and in the New Hope neighborhood, about six miles northeast of Troy, where the people patriotically and willingly, even cheerfully, went down into their pockets and took out $3,045.30 of money with which to pay the cost of a Methodist Episcopal church. This act of generousity is of so recent occurrence as to be fresh in the minds of the people, and viewing the results from their efforts, one cannot deny them the right of feeling pround of their achievements. They have the feeling of satisfaction, and rightly too, that they have provided themselves with a house in which to worship, and one in which their children are to be educated in the Scriptural truths.

On February 12, 1913, Al Garvin and Frank Walker, William Euler, Charles Himes and Emil Haas began circulating a subscription paper among the people of that neighborhood asking for subscriptions to a fund to erect a church building on two acres of ground donated by Joseph H. Salle in Burr Oak Township.

The men were received with cordiality by the people they visited and many gladly set down sums of money for the fund. Others took up subscription papers and soon the fund reached $3,045.30. The announcement of their success in raising the fund was received with joy and on April 6, 1913, when excavation for the foundation and basement began, the enthusiasm of the people ran high. Mrs. Rodgers, wife of the minister, threw the first shoveiful of earth, and with twenty men of the neighborhood, all giving their services, worked hard all day with shovels, spades and scrapers.

The date for the laying of the cornerstone was set for June 1, but it was not ready and the date was changed to June 8. The Rev. Walter M. Rodgers, pastor of the Troy Methodist Episcopal Church, the Rev. Mr. Stavely, district superintendent, and the Rev. George Weber of St. Joseph delivered sermons before a large congregation composed of the people of the neighborhood. The dedication of the church was on Sunday, September 6, 1913. District Superintendent C. T. Durberaw, President Mason of Baker University at Baldwin, and the Rev. Walter A. Rodgers, participated in the dedicatory service, which was one of the notable occasions in the religious history of this part of Kansas. There was a big dinner in the basement of the new church—the basement having been built for dinners, suppers and bazaars, as well as for Sunday school classes—and the women did honor to the occasion by providing a splendid feast.

The new church is one of the handsomest country churches to be seen anywhere, and is a testimonial to the splendid spirit of brotherly love and deep religious fervor on the part of the people. In the building of the church, J. W. Brown of St. Joseph was head carpenter, and he was assisted by Elmer Surface of Blair and many of those residing in the vicinity of the church. A considerable part of the work was donated by persons who were glad of the opportunity to lend a hand to such an institution. The materials were bought of Charles Baggett of Blair. The first six loads were hauled by Charles Himes, Frank Euler, Clarence Euler, Emil Haas, Frank Walker and Henry Weber.

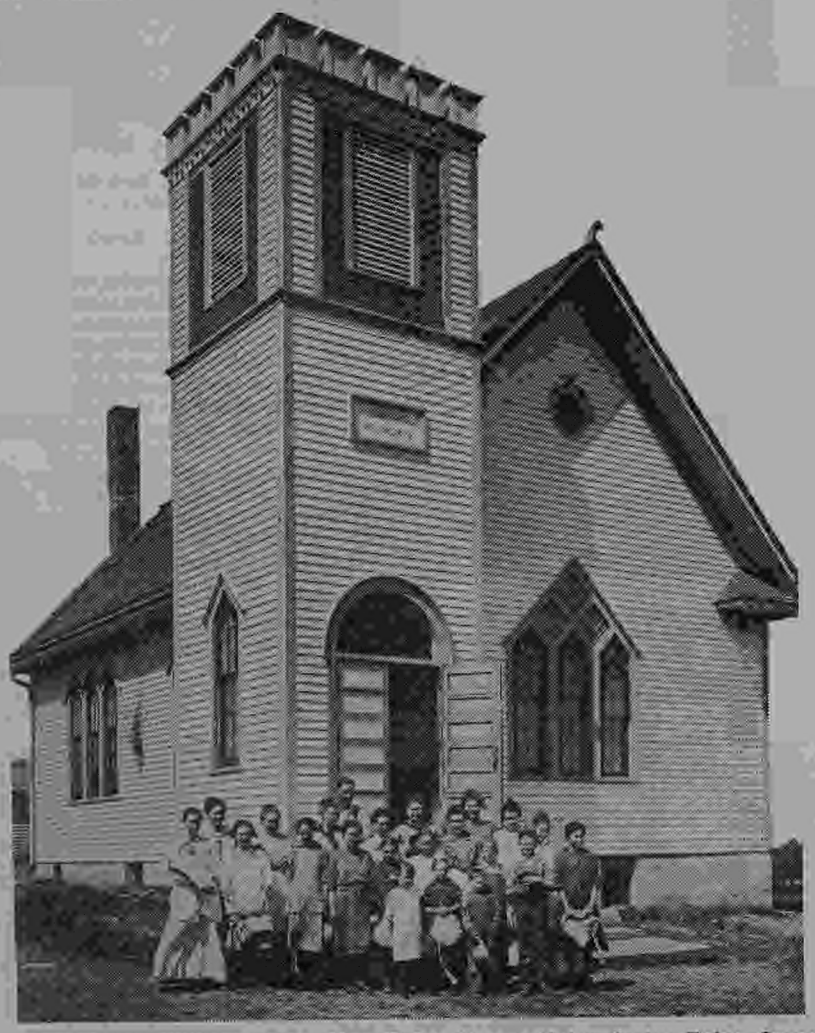
The New Hope Methodist Episcopal Church has been one of the live religious organizations of Burr Oak Township since the date of the inauguration of the movement for the erection of the house of worship. It has a potential influence on the religious life of the community and its religious activities have not been permitted to wane. The present pastor of the church is the Rev. C. I. Rose, who is keenly interested in extending its work and to bring within its fold the people of the surrounding country as one big, happy Christian family.

The official board of the church is composed of Henry Weber, Walter Euler, Wm. Arnold, George Euler and Henry Euler.

The Sunday school is regularly organized and its work touches the lives of the children of the entire community. The graded system of lessons is here used and with a splendid corps of teachers it is fulfilling its mission splendidly. The Sunday school officers are: Superintendent, Walter Euler; secretary, Walter Worman; treasurer, Arthur Euler; chorister, Emma Weber; organist, Mrs. Cal Euler; librarian, Marion Himes and Ralph Euler.

The church has a Ladies' Aid Society which is doing a great work and its officers are: Josie Euler, president; Anna Worman and Grace Sallee, vice-presidents; Emma Weber, secretary; Esther Euler, treasurer.

The people of the New Hope neighborhood are all proud of their church and of its influence on their lives.



Mesdames William Euler, Chas. Euler, George Euler, Justus Euler, Oscar Brenner, William Sallee, Misses Anna Euler, Hazel Euler, Mabel Euler, Pearle Euler, Veda Euler, Verda Euler, Blanche Euler, Ollie Brenner, Emma Weber, Mr. F. E. Euler, Masters Ralph Euler, Paul Euler, Carl Euler.

Wm. Cackler, of Smartville, Nebraska, was killed by lightning Wednesday, April 16, 1905, in Burr Oak Township.

First Baptist Church of Burr Oak

Organized in 1892, the Little Band of Members Worshipped in the School House Until a Church Was Built and Dedicated in 1896 —A History of the Organization—Ministers Who Have Preached There.

(By Charles F. Shelton.)

The First Baptist Church, of Burr Oak was organized by a little band of faithful Baptists who, desirous of having a place for worship for themselves and their families, and to bring the Gospel to their community, met together in conference in the school house of District No. 38, located in the Burr Oak bottoms on the old Henry Moore farm now owned by William Gabriel. The date was January 21, 1892. Elder G. W. Wilson was preaching for the people of Burr Oak at the time of the organization about one-fourth of the time. It was Brother Wilson, with the members resident of the community who invited the following members of the Baptist Church to sit with them at the organization, Brother Wilson acting as moderator of the council; M. N. Edge, of Sharp's Grove, Missouri; Brother Isaac Graves, of Troy Church, William Trant and Lester Trant, of the Troy Church, and John S. Mansfield, of Highland Station Church. After the council was organized they then proceeded to the election of the following as the first officers of the church:

Church clerk, Charles F. Shelton, Jr.

Deacons, Isaac H. Varel, John Chase and Enos S. Jennings.

Treasurer, John Chase.

The first minister called to the church after its organization through the efforts of Brother Wilson was Brother F. W. Davis. He was called for a term of six months, beginning April 1, 1892.

During the early years of this church organization religious services were held in the old school house regularly until the new church building was erected and dedicated on August 30, 1896, which was a happy occasion for the members and also for the people of the Burr Oak community, the dedicatory sermon being preached by the Rev. Mr. Whitehead of Topeka.

The erection of this church was something of an undertaking for the small membership. The building committee was composed of Charles F. Shelton, Sr., Enos S. Jennings and William Euler. This committee had labored unceasingly soliciting a building fund by private donation from the members and the loyal people of the community who were able to give.

The tract of one acre on which the new church was erected was a gift to the church made by Brother John Chase, being a part of the old townsite of Gabriel, but owned at the time by Brother Chase. It sometimes was called the old Hadrix farm. It was located about one and one-third miles from the old school house and almost due south. The lumber for the building was purchased from Cyrus Leland, Jr., of Troy, and the cost of the building in money was about $1,500. The committee raised this amount by soliciting private donations to the church building fund.

The Rev. M. B. Sill, of Darlington, Missouri, has preached at this church eighteen years for the people, holding services one each month. He is a faithful minister and one of whom it may be said is a worthy servant of the Lord.

The church, though small and unpretentious, has wielded a grand influence upon the lives of the people of the Burr Oak bottoms and their affection for it is akin to adoration.

FIRST SETTLERS IN SMITH CREEK

Andrew McChesney, Father of Mrs. Susan Holt and John W. McChesney and His Family First White Settlers in Vicinity of Smith Creek in 1854.

Mrs. Susan Holt recalls many tales of the early days of Doniphan County, and she undoubtedly is in position to know a great deal regarding pioneer days, as her father's family comprised the first white people near Smith Creek and vicinity in 1854, when they took up land and set forth to make a living.

Like so many pioneers, Andrew McChesney was of hardy stock and he simply took hold of the means at hand and made the best of his meager opportunities. At first their only neighbors were the Indians, who were none too friendly, and who had to be treated very diplomatically to get along with them at all. The Sioux and Kickapoos, who lived at Wathena, were their closest neighbors.

Before a plow had turned the virgin sod, wild flowers grew in profusion over the prairies, their vivid colors mingling in glorious abandon with the fine green grass. On the other hand, there were also catamounts, wolves and rattlesnakes that crept along in the same lovely grass, and dampened somewhat the poetic inspiration which the scene occasioned.

The first white neighbors of the McChesney's was the family of George Gore, a merchant from Savannah, Mo., Charlie Rodgers and wife; George Bonifield and family; Dan Miller and family, B. H. Brock and family, and John W. Smith, who built the first store house in Burr Oak Township in 1854, three months before the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill on May 30th of that year. The store house was built entirely of logs which were hauled to the site by three yoke of oxen hitched to a "linch pin wagon." The lower floor was used as a store room, while the second story was utilized as a lodge hall. Mr. Smith was Worshipful Master of Smithton Lodge No. 1, at one time.

This same man Smith had an emphatic argument one night with some pro-slavery fellows, and one of them threw a missile which put out one of Smith's eyes.

NEGRO KILLED AT WHITE CLOUD

Joe Sisto Stabbed Negro Fatally June 22, 1895, for Insulting White Woman, He Alleged—Sentenced to Penitentiary Three Years—Good Behavior Cut Penalty to Two Years.

One summer day, June 22, 1895, White Cloud was the scene of great excitement. People left their places of business and their homes and crowded agitatedly on the main street. Clerks left the counters and the barbers rushed out of their shops, leaving customers only lathered or not more than half shaved. Something unusual had taken place.

Joe Sisto had stabbed a negro, inflicting a wound that had resulted fatally. Sisto was soon taken into custody by Sheriff Zeph Hayes, but did not appear much concerned. Sisto claimed that he had stabbed the colored man for a good reason, alleging that the negro had insulted a white woman and that as a decent citizen he felt it was his duty to avenge the affront. Thus Sisto explained the affair to those who held him and to the men who gathered around him while some one was telephoning to Zeph Hayes, then sheriff, at Troy, about the fray. Hayes drove over to White Cloud as soon as possible and took the slayer of the negro to the county jail at Troy. Sisto was convicted and then the court sentenced him to three years in the penitentiary at Lansing. His good behavior shortened his sentence to two years.

Keller, captain; was married to Miss Lottie B. Piper, September 15, 1904, at Troy, Kansas, and to this union have been born four sons and daughters, Ralph Lee, born April 29, 1908; Vachel W. G., March 5, 1910; Fredia L., November 6, 1912; Ermal G., November 26, 1913.

Joseph Shelton

One of the pioneers of Doniphan County who settled in Burr Oak in 1856, and endured the hardships of pioneer life. Enlisted September 5th, 1862, in Company A, 13th Kansas Volunteer Infantry. Was discharged September 29th, 1863, on account of a wound in the left foot. He was married to Miss Merritt, at Maynardsville, Tenn., and this union was blessed with three children. Mary M., now Mrs. Miller; Minerva, now Mrs. Sam King; and Charles F. Shelton. The latter was born October 12th, 1857, on the old John Lewis farm, four miles northeast of Troy, where Charley Cox lives today. Charles F. has reared a large and useful family and is one of the best types of American citizenship. Several years ago he identified himself with the Baptist Church in Burr Oak, and has manifested considerable interest in his church ever since. He is a public spirited citizen and a good booster for Doniphan County.

Politically he is a Republican, and has at all times shown considerable activity in politics. You can always count on Charley voting straight.

He has witnessed many changes in Burr Oak and is a firm believer in the prediction that they will be able to secure an interurban railroad.

A man who desires to invest in Doniphan County real estate will save time and trouble and money, too, by having the title to the property examined and the abstract made by A. L. Perry of Troy.

Troy people are prosperous. It is because they are good savers and careful spenders. They have one of the soundest banks in Kansas, in the First National Bank of Troy, in which to deposit their money.

Burr Oak Bottom

A Stretch of Forest Skirting the Missouri River That Was Cleared By a Colony of Settlers in the Early Days and Now Is One of the Richest Tracts of Farming Land in the West—Something of the History of the Development of This Land and Those Early Settlers.

The Burr Oak Bottom is, properly speaking, a tract of about 2,600 acres of land circling the Missouri River in Doniphan County, of which 400 acres are in Center Township and 2,200 acres are in Burr Oak Township. Sixty years ago this land was covered with a dense growth of great forest trees—sycamore, burr oak, black jack, walnut, cottonwood and maple trees—with a thick growth of underbrush that made it almost impenetrable by man. The Burr Oak Bottom of today, however, is different. The magic hand of man has in those sixty years transformed it into one of the richest farming tracts of land in this country—land that produces fifty to eighty bushels of corn to the acre, twenty to forty bushels of wheat to the acre, or when set to fruit, yields enormous crops. The story of the Burr Oak Bottom and how it was transformed is one of the interesting chapters in the industrial history of Doniphan County.

Sixty years ago a party of men—James Gabriel, Patrick Tindle, Joseph Shelton, father of Charles Shelton, and several others, came into this strip of land in the northeast part of Doniphan County, intent upon conquering this forest. This party included, beside those names, the following: Joseph Gabriel, William Eye, Tom Dinning, Alf Dinning, Sam King, Tompkins Wykert, Benton Wykert, Henry Clark Wykert, William Wykert, Richard Wykert, Rev. Nicholas Wykert and several others. The men were all hardy woodsmen who knew something about timber and its value, and how to turn it to good profit.

Within a few hours after their arrival these vast woods re-echoed with the sounds of axes and saws. These settlers had gone into the timber business on a large scale. Sawmills were set up and the great logs were sawed into lumber and loaded on flat boats and rafts and sent down the river to Kansas City, St. Louis and intermediate points. Silas Highley operated a sawmill for years. That which was not good for lumber was split into fence rails, and the fence rail business was a big part of the industry. Farmers back from the river, who were without such means of converting their timber into lumber, came from the western part of Doniphan and Brown Counties, and from up in Nebraska, and hauled away many thousands of feet of the lumber.

It was a great business enterprise, but it was not all pleasant. There were many dangers. The woods were fairly alive with wild animals, wildcats, timber wolves and foxes, and such savage animals and also many wild turkeys, while about every kind of snake known to this latitude was represented in this natural menagerie. The timber men worked on, however, and gradually the area of forest was reduced. Although the animals were at first inclined to stand their ground, they soon apparently realized that the men were there to stay. Then they began to scape. In the spring of 1881 during the flood, a panther, it is said, floated down the river on a cake of ice. At such times the people of the country bordering on the river would be thoroughly frightened.

At last the great forest was subdued and the land, as rich as any land out of doors, was given over to crops. And such crops! Anything that could be grown in this latitude would grow on this land and yield an enormous crop. Corn and wheat were the principal crops, though some planted orchards and set out many acres of small fruits for the growing of which it is especially adapted. Charles E. Shelton has ten acres of orchard, which brought him in $1,200 this year and Charles and Frank Wykert banked about $3,000 on twenty acres of orchard this year.

These enterprising Burr Oak Bottom farmers and orchardists are some twelve miles from Troy or Wathena, and this suggests the fact that they need a railroad or an interurban line. It costs 7 cents a bushel to haul wheat or corn to market as only one load can be hauled in a day. A few years ago a new road was built to Blair, and it helped some; but what the Burr Oak Bottom needs is a railroad. Since a steam road is practically an impossibility on account of the difficulty of reaching the place, an electric interurban line has been suggested. Bailie Waggner made an effort some months ago to interest the McKinley Syndicate in the building of a line to the Burr Oak Bottom, but was unsuccessful. It should be mentioned in this connection that these thrifty farmers stand ready to donate a right of way and even do a part of the grading if only they can get some kind of transportation. As it is, it is a long haul by wagon or by the river route.

The Burr Oak Bottom is a fine community. Sam King has the oldest house there. It was built in 1857, of logs, and contains three rooms, yet Sam has reared seven mighty fine boys and one girl. Sam King, Jr., runs the store and the Sheltons run one at their home. It had a postoffice, established October 7, 1895, called Lee. Cy Leland objected to the name, and Congressman Case Broderick had it changed to Gabriel, in honor of one of the fine old families of those early settlers, Joseph and William Gabriel, May 6, 1897. In 1904, February 15, however, the rural free delivery system came along, and the postoffice was discontinued and Burr Oak Bottom put on a route out of Troy. Charles R. Mills was the rural route inspector who laid out the route. W. Henry Montgomery was the first rural route carrier, and Elmer Trant is the present one. L. R. Cropp was the first postmaster, and served until May 6, 1897, when George W. Surles was appointed, serving until December 15, 1900, when George H. Schuler was appointed. He served until May 28, 1901, when Charles Frank King was made postmaster, and he served until the office was discontinued.

The Burr Oak people have a Baptist church which was built in the spring of 1896 and dedicated August 30, the same day a son, Clarence Franklin, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Frank King. The church was organized by the Rev. M. B. Sill of Darlington, Missouri, and has thirty members.

Robert H. Montgomery taught the second school there in 1858. Charles Rappylea, D. W. Brown, Albert Hazen were among the early teachers. The first school house was built of logs, clapboards and puncheon floor. The next one was built of native lumber, and the next was of native dimension timber, and the finishing lumber was hauled from Troy. Phoebe M. Cox is the present teacher.

The Burr Oak Bottom has in the past been subject to overflow. There was the great flood of 1844, but no white people lived there then. There were floods after that, but the flood of 1881 drove all the people out and the crops were entirely lost. Then the people all got together and built a great levee to protect it. Now the Burr Oak Bottom, beginning at the old site of Charleston in Center Township, and following the meanderings of the Missouri River seven miles to the south and east, to the old Henry Gummig and August Haupt farm, is worth from $75 to $125 an acre, cash, and nobody anxious to sell. It is a fine farming and fruit-growing region and a community of fine, industrious people. A railroad would enhance the value of the land to $200 per acre.

JAMES PATRICK TINDLE

Doniphan County Pioneer Is Still Living, Hale and Hearty, in St. Joseph at Age of Eighty-Seven.

James Patrick Tindle was one of the earliest settlers of Doniphan County. He was born in Virginia on Nov. 10, 1828, and came to this county in the early '50's, taking a claim in Burr Oak bottom. To Mr. and Mrs. Tindle were born six children.

William T. Tindle, a son, was born in Clinton County, Ky., Aug. 7, 1850, and came to Kansas in 1854, settling in the Burr Oak bottoms with his father. He married Miss Mattie Sweeney, April 27, 1872, in Amazonia, Mo., Justice of the Peace Stinson performing the ceremony. Her mother's name was Pyrkneety Jane Sweeney and she was born in Burr Oak bottoms. She has one brother, James Sweeney, who lives at No. 122 E. Buffalo street, South St. Joseph, Mo. Two children were born to William Taylor Tindle; Ida A. is now Mrs. John Palmer of St. Joseph, and Laura Isabelle is now Mrs. Charles E. Stark, who lives at 325 Virginia street, South St. Joseph.

The other children of James Patrick Tindle are Lewis Albert, who married Mary Elizabeth Swiney, and who lives six miles northwest of St. Joseph, Mo.; Dora Tindle, who married Malen Schuster, and who lives in Wathena; Washington Scott Tindle, who married Nannie McKee and who lives north of Wathena; Jennie, who married Elijah Sollars and who lives five miles north of St. Joseph, and Martin Van Buren Tindle, who married Miss Clemmie Duncan, and with whom James Patrick Tindle now makes his home at Second street between Oak and Walnut, St. Joseph, Mo.

Smith Creek German Church

Of all the beautiful landscapes of Doniphan County, none are more beautiful than the valley of Smith Creek, in Burr Oak Township. In the center of this valley stands a building used as a house of worship by the sturdy Germans who settled in this community. This building is situated a mile or so south of the townsite of the defunct town of Columbus. It is a monument to the thrift and energy of the good Germans who are among the best resources of the county.

These people worshiped at the houses of the members, bupt about 1878 they thought they were strong enough to accomplish something in the matter of a place of worship. The following members of the church hauled the material from St. Joseph: George Schuler, Joseph Schuler, John Rapp, Edward Ozenberger, Matthew Rapp, Geo. Gummig, Henry Gummig, Andrew Hauz, William Schuler, Matthew Schuler and William Ramseier

George Schuler deeded one acre of land for church purposes. The material was purchased from the St. Joseph Lumber Company. The church was built during the spring and summer of 1879, and dedicated on June 2, of that year. The Reverend Henry Fegenbaum and reverend C. Ott assisted in the services of that day.

Dr. Percy E. Melbourne

The Popular Davenport, Nebraska, Physician and Surgeon Is a Doniphan County Man Who Worked His Way Up to the Top By His Own Efforts—Won a Scientific Degree By Correspondence—Son of a Pioneer Educator.

Men like Dr. Percy E. Melbourne, who work their way to the front ranks of their noble profession by hard and persistent work under discouraging conditions, are the kind we all delight to honor.

Percy Elmore Melbourne, as most all of the people of Doniphan County know, is a son of J. F. Melbourne, and was born at Highland Station, Aug. 11, 1874. The father was an old-time school teacher to whom many of our prominent citizens of today went to school and received their first school instruction. The son, Percy, received his early education under his father, attending different schools of the county and later attending the schools of St. Joseph, Missouri. He early decided on a professional medical career, but after graduating from the common schools at Highland Station, he taught school at Burr Oak and Columbus from 1894 to 1897. During all the time he was teaching, however, he was preparing himself for his professional career. He studied at home, often late into the night. He took an examination under the Missouri state board of education which was equivalent to a four years high school course and successfully passed. After that he continued his home studies for his degree of bachelor of science from the college at Oskaloosa, Iowa, which he won by perseverance and close study without interfering with his work at home.

Having thus far been remarkably successful in his educational studies, the subject of our sketch began a four years course in the study of medicine in St. Joseph, Missouri. Here he found his preliminary educational work stood him well in hand, for he mastered his studies with remarkable ease and graduated in 1910 at the head of his class, being honored by his fellow classmates by being chosen as president of their class.

It was a hard up climb for the doctor, but once having received his diploma, after mastering every study under more or less difficulty, the victory he felt was worth all of the effort. He was burdened with a large family and had but little of this world's goods, but his educational equipment was now such as to insure for himself a successful career as a practitioner.

Dr. Milbourne first began to practice medicine and surgery at Carleton, Nebraska, in 1910, the year he received his diploma. Later he moved to Davenport, Nebraska, where he now lives and is enjoying a very successful practice.

Dr. Milbourne was married April 25, 1895, to Mary L. King, daughter of S. F. King of Burr Oak township, who proved to be a valuable helpmate to him in his arduous work of mastering his scientific studies while teaching school. To them were born these children: Violet L., born April 9, 1896; Rachel M., born Jan. 23, 1898; Hazel K., born Jan. 15, 1901; Percy E., born March 28, 1902. Benjamin K., born June 10, 1904; Joseph Archie, born April 25, 1907; Mary Naoma, born Feb. 7, 1910; Ruth, born Feb. 28, 1915. Six of the children of Doctor and Mrs. Melbourne are in school and are fitting themselves for the duties of life, three of them being in the high school. Violet, the eldest of the children, was married to John M. Hagler of Davenport, Neb., May 14, 1914, and has one child, the first grandson. His name is William Elmore Hagler, and he was born March 16, 1915.

All of the sons and daughters of Dr. and Mrs. Milbourne are exceptionally bright and it is with great pride to the parents that they are eager to equip themselves with a good education that will be of practical value to them later in life, whether they are to engage in professional work or whether to grace the home. The parents are believers in education and are determined that their children shall have all of the advantages of good schools they can obtain for them.

In his medical and surgical practice Dr. Milbourne pursues much the same course he did when he was obtaining for himself an education. He gives to each patient the thoughtful care the patient's case requires, always with the purpose in view of effecting a cure, or of relieving the distress, and by the simplest and surest methods. The doctor is one of those physicians and surgeons who believe in progress, not being content to rest merely on what he learned in college, but profiting by each new step of progress in the advancement of the science of medicine and surgery. He is an honor to his profession and to the community which he serves.

Dr. Milbourne lived in Doniphan County almost all of his life, except the time he was away attending school, and is well known all over the county. He is a pleasant man to meet socially, as are also his wife and children. He is a wide-awake public-spirited citizen who is doing a great deal of good in this world, not merely in pursuing the practice of the noble art of healing, but in his daily association among the people of his town of Davenport, who count it an honor to have amongst them a citizen of such fine qualities.

Fred W. Blume

On Saturday, August 23, 1913, Fred W. Blume, who resided northeast of Troy, about nine miles, was thrown from his wagon on Fourth street, south of the St. Joseph bridge, when his team became unmanageable, and sustained injuries which resulted in his death, Sunday, August 24. The unfortunate man lay on the street in excruciating agony until an ambulance was called and he was taken to the Sisters' Hospital.

Thomas Benton Wykert died July 2, 1909. He was a pioneer of Doniphan County, having come here in 1856, settling in Burr Oak Township near where his widow and daughter and sons reside.

Willie Wykert, thirteen years old, son of Benton Wykert, accidentally shot and killed himself, November 10, while hunting ducks, along the river in Burr Oak Bottom.

GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH

The Organization of the Old Church on Smith Creek Dates Back to the Year 1869, When Services Were Held in the School and in the Homes of the Members—The Present Church Was Dedicated in 1904—Pastors Who Have Served the Congregation.

The German Reformed church on Smith Creek in Burr Oak township was organized by the Rev. John Biery in December of the year 1865, as a means of bringing the Gospel to the German people of that part of Doniphan County. For the first three years of its existence altars were set up in the homes of the people and in the little district school house where the members of the congregation met regularly for worship. Often in the long summer Sundays the services would be held out of doors and on these occasions the Gospel would be preached as it was in those early times of history when "the groves were God's first temples."

There are a few among our citizens living who were members of that old congregation in those early times and to such the mention of those services bring a flood of tender memories.

The first church building of this congregation was erected on the Jacob Bittinger place near Smith creek and was dedicated to the service of worship of the Triune God on July 13, 1868. For thirty-six years this building was the place of worship for the German Reformed congregation, while men of God carrying the Gospel of Christianity came and ministered unto the people and went their way, each to be succeeded by another pastor.

The present substantial church building which was erected to take the place of the historic old structure, was dedicated June 12, 1904. The building was erected at a cost of $1,500, and was paid for by the members of the congregation of that prosperous neighborhood.

The membership, starting with only a few families in the 1860's, is now one hundred and forty-five and composed of the substantial people of the community. The present officers are: Henry F. Hoffmann and H. William Mehrwein, elders; John Weis and William C. Haug, deasons; the Misses Huldah Hoffmann and May Lehmann, organists; W. C. Haug and W. A. Lehmann, Sunday school superintendents; Jacob Weis, janitor; E. C. Berger, sexton.

Sunday school is held at 10 o'clock and services for worship at 11 o'clock every Sunday. Instruction in the Heidelberg catechism, preparation for confirmation, on every Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, except in the summer months. At the present time the services are conducted in both German and English, two Sundays in the English language and one Sunday in the German language. The services of the church usually are attended by a large portion of the membership, while the Sunday school brings out a good attendance of the young people.

The Rev. C. William Deglow

During the life of the church eight different pastors have ministered unto the congregation of this church. They have all been men of strong character and personality and well educated. The Rev. Mr. John Biery, the first pastor and organizer, is remembered by the older citizens as a man of great power as an organizer and a profound preacher. He was succeeded by the Rev. Mr. Weisser E. Schultz. Then came the Rev. Mr. Nicholei A. Bolliger, and after him the Rev. Mr. J. E. Graf, the Rev. Mr. F. Keller, the Rev. Mr. J. G. Martin; then the Rev. John Biery for his second pastorate, and after him the Rev. Mr. C. William Deglow.

The Rev. Mr. C. William Deglow, the present pastor of the German Reformed church on Smith creek in Burr Oak township, is a native of Missouri. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. Herman A. Deglow, who lived on a farm one mile east of Amazonia in Andrew County, Missouri, where this popular minister was born Jan. 11, 1880.

After receiving a common school education in his home school district, and growing up on the farm under the parental training, he was sent to the Mission House Academy near Franklin, Wisconsin, in the autumn of 1898. He applied himself studiously to his work in that excellent educational institution and graduated from the Mission House College with the degree of bachelor of arts in 1904. Then he took a course in theology to further prepare himself for the ministry by attending the Mission House Theological Seminary, from which he graduated in 1907.

Having received the education essential to a career as a minister of the Gospel the subject of this part of our sketch was licensed to preach, being ordained as a minister. His ordination was a proud day for himself as well as for his parents, for it meant the entering upon a life of activity in the service of the Master, and the consummation of their high ambitions.

On July 14, 1914, Mr. Deglow, now the Rev. Mr. C. William Deglow, D. D., B. A., began his work as pastor of the German Reformed church on Smith creek in Burr Oak township of Doniphan County.

It is worthy of mention at this particular juncture, that the present pastor of this historic old German Reformed church is a man of broad learning and sympathies and is keenly interested in the welfare of each and every member of his flock, sustaining to those members and the people of the community the ideal relation of a pastor who is both a spiritual adviser and a friend and counsellor.

Joseph H. Sallee

Hardy Farmer Who Bought 160 Acres of Black Jack and Burr Oak Land in the 1870's and Transformed It Into One of the Richest Farms in Kansas—Now Owns $50,000 Worth of Real Estate in St. Joseph Beside His Farm, and Is a Model Man and Citizen.

The pioneer settlers in northeastern Kansas, who came to this wonderful country when it was in its natural wild stat did not find it all level or rolling prairie. Along the Missouri River, stretching back for a considerable distance, were a good many hills that were covered with timber. Some of the pioneers passed up these timber lands and went back further from the river to take up the prairie lands where the timber lay only along the streams, because less labor was required to put their newly acquired farms in condition. Those farmers who took the timber lands near the river were a shrewd, far-seeing lot. They recgonized the soil as the finest they ever saw, and capable of producing a variety of crops, and producing abundantly, though much hard labor was required to clear their farms.

One of these wise, far-seeing men was Joseph H. Sallee, who came from Andrew County, Missouri, April 15, 1872, and took up 160 acres of land six miles northeast of Troy that was covered with black jack and burr oak timber. It required a long siege of mighty hard work for Mr. Salle to clear the land and grub out the stumps so that he could plow it, but this patient, hard-working pioneer will tell you it was worth every bit of the effort and more. There isn't a better piece of land anywhere in this zone than this same farm that once was covered with a thick growth of black jack and burr oak.

Mr. Sallee comes from good old French stock, the kind of people who were not afraid of hard work and who were shrewd enough to make the most of every opportunity for their own advantage. He was born in Andrew County, Missouri, eighteen miles north of St. Joseph, November 13, 1849, his parents having been early settlers of that region. He attended the Missouri schools of his locality and grew to manhood used to hard labor on his father's farm.

Deciding he would like to own a farm for himself Joseph H. Sallee, as before stated, came to Doniphan County and purchased the 160 acres of black jack and burr oak lands six miles northeast of Troy which now constitute his valuable farm. Mr. Salle's stories of his experiences in clearing the land are interesting to hear. He went to work with a will, and, as stated previously in this article, put in many days of hard and patient toil clearing the land of the growth of timber.

His farm for many years has been under a high state of improvement, the equal of any in this locality, and the crops that have been turned out annually have made the owner wealthy, his investments including business and residence property in St. Joseph, Missouri, valued at more than $50,000. Mr. Sallee is one of those French farmers who farm neatly, leaving no waste places, and by their labor getting the most out of the soil. He is a general farmer, stock grower and orchardist whose judgment and foresight and whose tireless labor have brought a good fortune for himself and family.

Mr. Sallee married Miss Lizzie Mider April 11, 1881. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mider, one of the old German families of this section. To them were born five children: Josie, January 2, 1882, now Mrs. Frank Euler; William, born April 25, 1884; Marie born December 11, 1888, now Mrs. George Albers, and residing on a farm near Bendena; Joseph H., Jr., born September 13, 1894; George, born June 2, 1898.

The children have been given the best of home training and a good education by their father, and are worthy of this care, thus bestowed upon them. They partake largely of the qualities of industry and frugality possessed by their father. While possessing many of the accomplishments which fit them for high social positions, the daughters are proud of the fact that they are good housekeepers and know how to cook like mother cooks. The sons are fine specimens of young manhood who will make their mark in the world. The subject of this sketch finds much to rejoice over in his long and well spent life in this community, of his worldly possessions and all that, but most of all he rejoices because he has reared a family of boys and girls who are a credit to the community.

Mr. Salle was always a home man to a certain degree, yet his keen interest goes out to the neighborhood and extends to all things that are for the public good. He is interested in the religious life of the community. When the New Hope Church was built Mr. Sallee gave two acres of ground as a site for the church building. Mr. Sallee's interest in giving the children of the district the best education the taxpayers can afford caused him to be elected and re-elected, time and again, on the district school board. He is not a politician by any means, being at all times interested in good government and good men to fill the public offices. He has lived a model life. He is clean and upright in all of his dealings. He is one of the substantial citizens of Burr Oak Township and can call every one his friend. His father was William Sallee, who died October 17, 1907, and his mother was Josephine Hunter, born in Kentucky and died August 10, 1897.

Jacob Ferdinand Edward Osenberger

A Prominent Farmer Who Has Resided in the County Since 1858 and Who Has Rendered Important Service as Trustee of Burr Oak Township, Member of the School Board and as County Registrar of Deeds—A Family History.

Among the men who have been most prominent in the affairs of Burr Oak Township is Jacob Ferdinand Edward Osenberger, who resides on his splendid farm of eighty-five acres five miles northeast of Wathena. Mr. Osenberger has been a resident of Doniphan County fifty-eight years and is known throughout the county as a successful farmer, a valuable public official and a citizen whose influence has counted for the good of the people.

Jacob Ferdinand Edward Osenberger was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, April 7, 1856. His father was Jacob Osenberger, a native of Switzerland, who came to America at the age of twenty-five years, and his mother was Elizabeth Schindler, who was born in Germany. The father was a carpenter by trade and was engaged in building houses in Kansas. Early in the year 1856 he had gone to Seneca to erect a building and while thus engaged he received an injury which caused his death a few weeks before the son was born. In 1858, when Jacob Ferdinand Edward was only two years old his mother moved to Doniphan County and settled on a farm north of Wathena where she resided until her death on March 23, 1878.

In the old school house of District 53, which is now in the Missouri River, Jacob Ferdinand Edward Osenberger received his early education. His mother was ambitious for him to succeed. After he had gone to school there he went to school in Topeka for two years.

The marriage of Jacob Ferdinand Edward Osenberger to Miss Ida Flora Lehmann occurred on September 12, 1878, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lehmann, who were prominent among the old families of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Lehman were of the thrifty Germans who came to Doniphan County in the pioneer days.

To the union of Mr. Osenberger and his wife, who was Miss Ida Flora Lehman, were born three sons and two daughters, as follows: Edwin Samuel, who was married to Miss Julia Prophheter. They have one son, Milton Edwin.

Cornelia Elizabeth was married to Adolph Propheter, and they have one son, Oliver Walter.

William Frederick, the youngest of the family, was married to Miss Clara Gunselman, and to this union one daughter has come to bless their home, Vera Louise.

William Charles, their second son, died at about the age of two years. The other child died in infancy.

Jacob Ferdinand Edward Osenberger still resides on his beautiful farm of eighty-five acres five miles northeast of Wathena in Burr Oak Township, and has been successful as a farmer and as a citizen who has always kept abreast of the times. From the time he became a young man he has taken an interest in public affairs and helped to shape the destinies of his community. His interest in education resulted in his being elected to the district school board, in which official capacity he served fourteen years. He was trustee of Burr Oak Township eight years and also served two years as clerk of the township. He was elected to the office of registrar of deed of Doniphan County in the fall of 1899 and was re-elected in 1902, having held over one year on account of the bi-ennial election law. He was afterward re-elected again and he served in that office until 1905, having in all five years. His official work was so efficiently performed that his record is pointed to as one of the best the county ever had.

Mr. Osenberger may be regarded as one of the pillars of Bur Oak Township. While he keeps in close touch with the management of the farm he finds time to do his full share in community management. He is a member of the German Methodist Episcopal Church of Smith Creek, and has been an active worker since the church was first organized many years ago. He belongs to the Anti Horse Thief Association and is always on the alert to protect his own and other people's property. As a farmer he has taken the lead in many movements having for their purpose the advancement of the farming interests and while giving unselfishly the benefit of his experience to his friends and neighbors he has enabled many others to prosper as he has prospered.

KINCAID MURDER

Killing of Alexander Kincaid By Joe Tribble Was Brutal and Premeditated Assassination.

The murder of Alexander Kincaid by Joseph Tribble on the morning of Sept. 8, 1861, in Burr Oak, during a camp-meeting, was one of the most brutal and premeditated crimes in the history of Doniphan County. Kincaid, a Union sympathizer and recruiting agent for the 13th Kansas, was the Abolitionist leader in the county at the time and Tribble was just as ardent in his work for the Southern cause.

Price's band of Missouri raiders were just across the river in that state and their leader did not like Kincaid. As an excuse for his crime, Tribble claimed that Kincaid had insulted his brother, so on the morning of the camp-meeting he rode to Burr Oak and there confronted Kincaid. He endeavored to pick a quarrel, but the Union man, standing with his arms folded across his breast, refused to fight. Suddenly, Tribble drew a knife and stabbed Kincaid in the throat. The latter tried to turn and escape from the assault, while Tribble pursued and stabbed him two or three times in the back, and jumping on a horse he rode away.

He stopped at the home of a family nearby, named Mullin, and Mrs. Mullin got a wash basin for him. He told her he didn't like to cleanse the knife, as he wanted to show Price the blood of a damned Abolitionist. Then he rode to the river, jumped into a skiff which was waiting for him and was rowed to the other side, where he joined Price and his outlaws. That the murder was premeditated is shown by the fact that on the way to the river he met an acquaintance whose name was Sol. Miller, also a Southerner.

"Come on," Tribble shouted to him, "I've got good news. I just killed Kincaid."

Tribble served during the Civil War with the lost cause and then settled in Mississippi, where he married and reared a family of three children. His Nemesis, however, was to be found later, when an overpowerful feeling caused him to return to Doniphan County on July 4, 1890, nearly twenty-nine years after his dastardly crime. There was a Fourth of July picnic at Wathena and Isaac Clary noticed a tall, well-set-up stranger and immediately recognized him as Tribble. He telephoned to Troy and the sheriff, R. M. Steel, made the arrest just as Tribble was about to board a train. He was returned here and tried during the October term of court in 1890. Tribble brought a large number of Southern men here as witnesses, all of whom testified they were in Burr Oak when the murder occurred. As a matter of fact, however, none of them were ever seen by any of the witnesses who testified, and as a result of the trial, Tribble was acquitted. He took the first train out of Troy and has never been seen in the county since. The murdered man was a son-in-law of B. H. Brock and Mrs. Kincaid afterwards became the wife of Albert Hazen.

The Rev. Mr. Gardner was preaching at the time of the camp meeting and had just started his discourse when Tribble came upon the scene and stabbed Kincaid.

Center Township

A GREAT FRUIT CENTER

This Is One of the Most Fertile and Thickly Populated Settlements of Doniphan County—Has County Seat Located in Troy With Railroad Connections All Over the Country Afforded by Three Great Trunk Lines—People Thrifty and Progressive Along All Agricultural and Horticultural Lines.

While not one of the original townships of Doniphan County, Centre Township has made up in importance what it may have been deprived of through not being among the first five.

Its territory is not dotted with the graveyards of defunct towns and it escaped the blighting influences of townsite promoters in the first days of settlement.

Better still, Centre Township has the distinction of having within its borders the town of Troy, which was and is, and will be the only official county seat of Doniphan County.

Centre Township was established in 1856 from chunks of territory sliced from the western portions of Washington and Burr Oak Townships. Many of the old timers have always believed that it was created for the express purpose of having the county seat located within its confines.

Among the earliest known settlers in Centre Township were Athon Simonson, a well-known Doniphan County carpenter, who later settled in Troy and assisted in the construction of many buildings.

Other early arrivals were Harrison Calvert, Isaac Tallman, Henry Thompson, the two Blairs, Joel P. and Samuel P.; James R. Willis, William M. Hamner, Daniel Graves, Charles W. Stewart, Robert Rockey, John Stevens, John Wegmiller, Newton Carter, J. B. Maynard, John Montague, Eli Gabbert, James Horr, Messrs. Fields, James McGalliard, Mansfield, John Edwards, Iles and Frede S. Moser.

Soon after the formation of the township, Centre became a sure enough center of activity. The county seat had been located on Section 17, Washington Township, on the previous October by Commissioners Cramer and Payne, who had been delegated for that purpose by the territorial legislature.

Subsequent to that a local attempt had been made to establish the county seat at Whitehead, but the action of the promoters had been ignored by the legislature. So the baby township of Centre was given the honor, even before its birth. When the commissioners arrived on the site of Troy, after they had examined every place boosted for a county seat, they decided that the present site of Troy was not only the best available, but the most ideal location.

The propinquity of the county seat was a powerful magnet in attracting settlers of Centre Township, and it did not take long to have all the land either pre-empted or sold outright to incoming settlers. The fertility of the soil all over the township had long before been realized and with the permanent establishment of the county seat people had no hesitation in getting as close as they could to what was destined to be the best town in Doniphan County.

Subsequent events have demonstrated that Centre Township was due to develop beyond expectations and the town of Troy was not left out of the calculations. The railroads were among the first to realize the immense possibilities of great traffic advantages to be gained by building their lines through Centre Township and incidentally connecting with Troy. Now three of the great trunk lines of the country, the Rock Island, the Burlington and the Union Pacific, which is the Grand Island, traverse the township and lead into the county seat at Troy.

This township received its name from the fact of its being located in the central part of the county.

It was organized on the 21st day of October, 1856, at the same time Marion was formed. Prior to its organization, the territory it now occupies, including the west tier of sections now occupied by Burr Oak and Washington Townships, was known as Washington Township. Its boundaries at that time were as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of Section 7, Town 2, Range 20; thence east, with the Missouri River to Burr Oak Township; thence south, with the line of Burr Oak and Washington Townships to the southeast corner of Section 36, Town 3, Range 21; thence west to the southeast corner of Section 35, Town 3, Range 20; thence north to place of beginning.

J. R. Willis was the first justice of the peace. On the 21st of June, 1859, a change was made, and the boundary was fixed as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of Section 14, Town 2, Range 20, thence down the Missouri River to the northwest corner of Section 23; thence along the north line to the northeast corner of said section; thence due south to the southeast corner of Section 35, Town 3, Range 21; thence west to the southeast corner of Section 35, Town 3, Range 20; thence north to place of beginning.

The surface of the township is mostly rough and broken, especially that portion lying in the north and eastern parts. The south and western portion of the township is less broken and diversified.

Centre Township is well watered by Mosquito, Cottonwood, Peter's and numerous smaller branches. Peter's Creek heads near Troy, the county seat, and flows nearly due east, leaves the township on Section 23, Town 3, Range 22. Mosquito Creek also heads near Troy, flows nearly due north and empties into the Missouri River.

The township contains at present sixty-one square miles, or 39,040 acres (fractional), 99 per cent of which is tillable.

Among the early settlers who located in the township and took up claims may be found Joseph Hayton, James Marcrum, J. Hampton, Henry Boder, Wm. McKendre Hamner, Albert Heed, H. Bryant, Robt. Rockey, J. M. Edwards, M. Iles, F. McClellan, John Morehead, L. Rullman, B. Chapple, and others.

The first marriage ceremony in which parties living in the township were interested was that of John Granfield and Miss Nancy Jane Edwards, on December 25 (otherwise known as Christmas Day), 1854. There being no minister in the township at that time, they were married at the agency by Rev. S. M. Irvin. The wedding festivities were participated in by four families, the only settlers in the township.

The first birth occurred in the spring of 1855, Charles, a son of J. M. Edwards, receiving the honors.

N. Carter died after a short illness, of cholera, September 8, 1856. This is probably the first death occurring in the township. Probably the next death was that of a man named Connor, who was killed by a pony, one-half mile east of Troy, September, 1857.

About the first religious services held in the township were presided over by the Rev. H. Maxwell, a Methodist minister of Doniphan, in the fall of 1856. Mr. H. Calvert having the largest house in the neighborhood at the time, the services were held there. About the first school taught in the township was at Troy, early in 1858, by a Mrs. Brown. The school building was built a la log cabin style, in the fall of 1856.

Doctor Hudnell was the first physician to practice in the township, in the spring of 1855. Doctor Dolster located at Lafayette in 1856, and was probably the second of his profession to locate in the township.

A sawmill was built in 1856 at Columbus, by Charles Hamilton. The mill was run for a few years only. During the same year, one Lyman built a sawmill at Lafayette, which was operated but a short time.

As a general thing, no improvements were made in the township until the year 1856. From that time to this, excepting an interval of about five years during the war of the rebellion, the township has steadily improved, both in point of population and in that which always marks a firm and substantial growth.

The St. Joseph & Denver City Railroad was graded through the township as far as Troy in 1859 or 1860, but was not completed until after the war.

No information can be obtained in regard to the organization of the first school district legally organized.

The products of this township are substantially the same as found in other townships. It is claimed that the largest fruit orchards in the county are located in this township.

Rev. L. I. McDougle

The Rev. Mr. Leonidas Irving McDougle, a former Methodist minister in Troy, who was one of the recognized leading spirits of the town, during his pastorate, was born at Gilboa, Ohio, Oct. 10, 1861, and entered the ministry in April, 1886. He was married at Wathena, Kan., April 25, 1889, to Miss Stella May Walter, daughter of John Thomas and Abigail Haines Walter of Linden, Virginia. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Samuel E. Pendleton, presiding elder of the Atchison District of the Kansas Conference, at the home of August and Mary Haines Miller, who on the same day were celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding.

To their union six children were born: Stella May, Jan. 24, 1890, died July 26, 1893; Edith Augusta, May 13, 1892; Leon Walter, March 10, 1894, died Sept. 1, 1895 at Troy, Kan.; Edward Gladstone, Oct. 14, 1895, died Aug. 5, 1909; Warren Vincent, Oct. 24, 1898, and Leonidas Irving McDougle, born Dec. 21, 1900. The Rev. Mr. McDougle at present is the pastor of the large and flourishing Richardson Park Methodist Episcopal Church at Wilmington, Del., and he also is secretary of the Methodist Preachers' Association of that city. Both Mr. and Mrs. McDougle have a large circle of friends in Doniphan County who will remember them with pleasure. He was a conscientious man and fostered every movement for the betterment of the town during his pastorate at Troy.

Rev. Charles Atherton

Many of the older citizens of Troy will recognize the name of the Rev. Charles Atherton, who was pastor of the Methodist Church here from April 2, 1889, to April 3, 1890, and who three years previous to that time supplied the pulpit here by order of the presiding elder. Many of these same older citizens also will be saddened to hear that the Rev. Atherton's loving helpmeet through all of his trials, was taken away on Aug. 13, 1914, at the minister's home in Kansas City, Kan. When he came to Troy in 1889 to take the pastorate permanently, Rev. Atherton found the church membership small, and he will be recalled best, perhaps, by the campaign he waged to increase the church membership. He has three sons and one daughter, all living: James M. Atherton, 2545 N. 18th St., Kansas City, Mo.; James F. Atherton, 619 Philadelphia Bldg., Pittsburg Pa.; Charles W. Atherton, Dennis, Kan., and Mary Atherton, who is now married and resides in Girard, Crawford County, Kansas.

C. J. (Buffalo) Jones operated a nursery in Troy and built a large greenhouse. They had quite an acreage of apple trees, pears and peaches during the year of 1866.

HOW THE DONIPHAN COUNTY TOWN GOT ITS NAME

Is One of the Real Old Towns of the State—The Late James N. Gibbins Told About It in The Chief Several Years Ago.

In the summer of 1855 the territorial legislature divided Kansas into counties. One of these originals was Doniphan. The same session of the legislature appointed Joel P. Blair, Alec Dunning and E. V. B. Rogers as county commissioners, and A. Payne and T. J. B. Cramer as special commissioners to locate the seat of justice.

The county commissioners met and organized for business at Whitehead, or Bellemont, on September 18, 1855. Bellemont was chosen as the temporary seat and here was done all of the county business until the new county seat was ready in the fall of 1856. The county seat commissioners met at Bellemont on October 11, 1854. On the next day they chose the southwest quarter Section 17, Township 3, Range 21, as the site for the future county town. By an act of Congress in 1824, each county of a new territory where there was public land was given the right to pre-empt a quarter section, the proceeds of the sale of lots to go to public improvements, buildings, etc.

The commissioners drove a stake on the limits of the present court house square, and wrote on one side the inscription, "The County Seat of Doniphan County is located on this quarter section." On the other they inscribed their names and office, with date, October 12, 1855. Their work was now completed. The county commissioners on October 16 had appointed James F. Forman county surveyor, and wanted him to survey and lay off eighty acres of the townsite into lots and also a square of 300 feet each way for a court house. Mr. Forman had completed his work by the last of November. His original field notes, still in existence, read, "and a public square 300 feet, located upon the eminence where the commissioners erected a stake." The commissioners who located the site took dinner with Mrs. Hamner, then living near, on a claim. She obtained from them a promise that she should have the christening of the new town. They promised they would call the town Saltillo. She was attached to this name since Mexican war times. Imagine her chagrin and surprise when the first town lots were advertised for sale, they were the town lots of the town of Troy, and not Saltillo, as she had fondly hoped. As her house was headquarters for all of the surveying parties and commissioners' meetings, she took the first opportunity of upbraiding them about their promise. They told her they thought Troy a short and easily spelled name, and that was why they had not lived up to their promise. Sol Miller said that they had always lived among people to whom a short and easily spelled name was of the first importance; and he further commented by rejoicing that if such was the case, "We owed to this fact that we were living in Troy, and not in Saltillo." However, I can only give Mr. Miller as authority for the Saltillo story for, although Mrs. Hamner is an intimate friend of mine, we having been school mates in childhood, I have never talked to her on the subject.

Origin of Doniphan County Names

The town and county of Doniphan were named for Alexander W Doniphan, a colonel in the Mexican War.

Troy was named by James R. Whitehead, for the ancient city of Troy, in Asia Minor; that is, the name Troy was suggested to the commissioners, and A. Payne and T. J. B. Cramer, the special commissioners who located Troy, accepted the suggestion of the name Troy, given by Whitehead, and thus ignored their promise, made to Mrs. Hamner, to call the town Saltillo. The only excuse the commissioners gave for failing to carry out their promise was that they did not like a word containing so many letters.

White Cloud was named in honor of Ma-Hush-Kah, or White Cloud, a chief of the Iowa Indians. Wathena derived its name from Wa-The-Na, a chief of the Kickapoos, who settled there before the Kansas-Nebraska bill was passed, May 30, 1854. Peter's Creek which flows through Wathena, was so called for Peter Cadue, a Frenchman who lived on its banks and traded with the Kickapoos. He was also interpreter for the tribe.

Iowa Point and Iowa Township derived their names from the Iowa Indians, who formerly owned that portion of what is now Doniphan County.

Highland was not so named because of its elevated position, as is generally supposed, but it was given this name by William Sugg, a pioneer Swiss resident, in the hope that a Swiss colonization could be induced to emigrate to the place from the Swiss settlement at Highland, Madison County, Illinois, where Sugg came from.

Bendena was originally called Albers, after John Albers, who owned the land on which the town was located. When a postoffice was established, January 19, 1888, it was found necessary to change the name because there was another office of this name in Kansas. A young man named Morgan, the first telegraph operator at the place, induced the men at the head of the new municipal project to allow him to name the town for his sweetheart, and her name was thus immortalized.

Severance was named for John Severance, one of the original proprietors of the town company.

Purcell was so called for members of the well-known Purcell family of that vicinity, and Denton for Moses, John and William Denton, who helped to lay out the town.

East Norway was settled principally by Norwegians, hence its name, and the town was afterward named Moray, in honor of a prominent Grand Island official.

Geary was named for J. W. Geary, then governor of the Territory of Kansas.

Fanning was named by Jesse Reed and James Bradley, its founders, in honor of Major Fanning, engineer of the A. & N. Railroad.

Elwood was originally called Roseport, after a man named Rose, who helped to found the town. The town company was afterward reorganized under the name of Elwood, in honor of John B. Elwood of Rome, N. Y.

Ryan's Station was named for Joel Ryan, an uncle of Simon L. Ryan, who settled on its site in 1854.

Brenner perpetuates the name of one of the best known families of Doniphan County.

Gabriel was named in honor of the Gabriels, well known citizens of Doniphan County and Burr Oak Township.

Moray was named in honor of Al Moray, a former officer of the Grand Island Railroad.

Blair's Station was so called for Joel P. Blair, an old settler and one of the early county commissioners of Doniphan County.

Palermo was laid out by William Palmer in 1856, and it is said that in order to give it prominence, he suggested the name "Palermo," after a city in Italy, which is noted for the production of macaroni and anarchists.

Eagle Springs derived its name from the mineral springs at that place, and the fact that eagles at one time frequented the bluffs in that vicinity. Prior Plank once said that they had a tame eagle at the springs which developed a fondness for chickens equal to that of the Methodist circuit rider. "For this and other little idiosyncrasies," said Mr. Plank, "we tried to shoo him off the place, but he was so well pleased with the bill of fare that he refused to be shooed. We finally got a friend, Sheriff Nat C. Bailey, to take him away, and he became a wanderer over the county, with headquarters in the court house park at Troy. Joe Scheltzbaum, a former county clerk, used to feed him on wolf pups that hunters brought in for the bounty thereon. He finally disappeared from Troy, after cleaning up all of the stray cats around town and incurring the displeasure of chicken raisers in general."

Wayne and Marion Townships were named for revolutionary heroes. Washington Township for our first President. Burr Oak Township from the abundance of burr oak timber within its confines when the township was organized, September 1, 1855; Wolf River Township after the creek of that name; Iowa Township after the Iowa Indians; Union Township because its history is so closely woven with that of Wolf River Township; Center Township because it is in the center of the county.

Mosquito Creek was so named by early travelers because they were pestered by mosquitoes while camping there. According to Father Hamilton, the early missionary, its Indian name was Eneshae, signifying "a ripple."

Wolf River is a translation of the Iowa Indian name for that stream, Shun-ta-Nesh-nang-a.

Spring Creek, which flows through the old town of Doniphan was thus called because it is fed by numerous springs.

Nearly every county in northeastern Kansas has a Walnut Creek, and so has Doniphan County, so named because of the prevalence of walnut timber along its banks.

Mill Creek was the site of one of the first mills in what is now Doniphan County, and from this its name was derived. The mill was built by the government to grind the cornmeal for the Indians but the latter showed their ingratitude by burning it, about the year 1840.

Cold Spring Branch derived its name from cold springs near an old station on the Pottawatomie trail, near the present site of Bendena. The spring from which it rises was exceedingly cold, which suggested the name to early travelers on the old route.

Independence Creek, which rises in the southwestern part of Doniphan County, and forms a portion of its south boundary, was so named by Lewis and Clark, in 1804, in honor of Independence Day, July 4, on which date they discovered the stream.

Rock Creek, as the name implies, was so designated because of its rocky bed, which is said to be unusual in Doniphan County streams.

Brush Creek received its name from the heavy growth of underbrush along the stream. It was originally named Yellow Ochre Creek by Lewis and Clark in 1804, because they discovered a deposit of that material near its mouth.

Cedar Creek was so named because at an early day there were clusters of cedar trees growing upon the bluffs near where it enters the Missouri River, between Iowa Point and White Cloud.

Cottonwood Creek received its name from the cottonwood timber along its course.

William S. Follis

William S. Follis was born in South Carolina, March 27, 1886, and was educated in the schools of his native city. For several years he was connected with a large drug company, manufacturing all kinds of drug materials. Although he had a responsible position, the opportunities did not seem to be what they should, so in 1896, Mr. Follis took the examination for civil service under the government and passed successfully. Since that time he has been in the postoffice at Sioux City, Iowa, and a more efficient and genial clerk can not be found. Mr. Follis, who lives at 714 Cool street in "Soo," has a host of friends who predict he will go much higher in the government service.

F. M. Colburn

The best general delivery clerk in the United States, is what people say of F. M. Colburn in the postoffice at Sioux City, Iowa. If ever there is a hard job and one that requires brains, patience and tact, it is the general delivery window of a postoffice. One is liable to be asked what time the next train leaves for Squeedunk or how old is Ann, as he is to be asked for mail. Yet Mr. Colburn has filled the place acceptably for several years. People don't need to tell him their name twice, as he possesses a faculty for remembering every man, woman or child by their proper name the second time they call. He's a first-class man, making good in a first-class place.

Frank F. Brown

A Young Man of Doniphan County Who Deservedly Has Worked His Way to the Front as a Business Man, Now Provision Sales Manager for the Hammond Packing Company—His Grandfather Who Lost His Life in the Battle of Prairie Grove, Fought Gallantly for His Country.

Frank F. Brown, the present provision sales manager for the Hammond Packing Company at St. Joseph, Missouri, is a product of Doniphan County of whom the people are justly proud. He is in a true sense a self-made man, for he has by close application to business, honesty and integrity and devotion to the interests of his employers, won his way to the front ranks as a sales manager for one of the great meat packing concerns of America.

The young man who is the subject of this sketch was born in Troy, Kansas, January 4, 1884. He is the eldest son of Eugene and Sarah A. Brown, the father a native of Platte County, Missouri, and his mother a native of Doniphan County. His father is a son of the late Frank Brown, one of the early settlers of this community who was one of the efficient school teachers of the county and for many years filling the positions of district clerk, justice of the peace and member of the school board in the Troy District No. 21. The mother of this young man was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Berry, her father being a soldier in Company B, 13th Kansas, who was wounded in the battle of Prairie Grove and died April 13, 1864, the day before President Lincoln was shot. Mrs. Phoebe Berry, his grandmother, died January 9, 1900, at her home near Troy.

The grandmother of Frank F. Brown on his father's side, died April 12, 1888, and the grandfather died March 9, 1915, both honored and respected as among the old families who devoted the best years of their lives to the upbuilding of Kansas and to rearing a family of children and grandchildren who would be an honor to them and to the community.

Frank F. Brown was educated in the public schools of Troy. He grew up in the town and was generally commented on by the people as an energetic boy who would win success in anything he undertook. He was a good mixer among the people and he commanded the respect of his elders by his fine qualities and his thoughtfulness for their comfort and welfare. It is not strange that they all liked young Brown and were glad of any opportunity to encourage him in well doing.

After securing his education in Troy Frank F. Brown, with high hopes and ambitions, left his home and went to St. Joseph, Missouri. There he obtained a position in the large establishment of the Townsend & Wyatt Dry Goods Company. It was a new experience for him, but he found it to his liking. He began work in earnest, starting in at the bottom determined to work his way up to a responsible position and to learn everything that was to be learned about salesmanship. He held positons with this establishment for three years, acquitting himself with honor and leaving the house with the friendship of his employers and all with whom he had been associated.

Frank F. Brown's ambition was to attain a high position in the line of commerce. The great meat packing concerns of the Middle West, rivals for the business of supplying the world with their products, were reaching out for the best talent obtainable among the young and ambitions men. The Hammond Company, one of the old and established houses of St. Joseph, recognized in this young man from Doniphan County the qualities that make a successful salesman. Frank F. Brown at once recognized the opportunity he had sought to attain a high position in the trade and he did not fail to seize upon that opportunity.

Having been born and reared in a community that produced cattle and hogs and sheep Frank F. Brown had learned a great deal that was worth knowing about these food animals. He already had mastered the art of salesmanship to a remarkable degree in the dry goods establishment which was a help to him in his new position. He soon had a general knowledge of meats and the numerous other products of the packing concern and it did not take long for him to make himself indispensible as a salesman for the Hammond Company. From that time on his rise was rapid. He was a valuable man to the company and the officials were not slow in attesting their appreciation of his services and his true worth.

Finally he was honored by being promoted to the position of sales manager of the St. Joseph house, one of the best commercial positions in the Middle West and one to which thousands of successful men aspire. His territory includes the field covered by local shipments from the St. Joseph house and the volume of products that annually are sold under his management run up into millions of dollars. He is proving his worth in that high position and is popular with his employers and his salesmen. He has made good and will continue to make good.

Such has been the rise to a high position of Frank F. Brown, a Doniphan County boy. Of course, it isn't possible for all aspiring young men to become sales managers; but by injecting into their work the perserverence, energy, intelligence and integrity that this young man has put into his business life they can at least make good.

John Terry Accidentally Shot

On the evening of October 17, 1903, John Terry, a respected farmer, was sitting in his home on the Vachel Clary farm, five miles northeast of Troy, his gun resting in a corner of the room. In some way the gun was discharged by the five-year-old son of Mr. Terry, the charge causing instant death to the father. The accident caused sadness throughout the neighborhood, many persons going to the house to comfort the widow and her children. Mrs. Terry was Clara Keckler, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Keckler of Troy. She sold the farm to her father and is now the wife of Robert Fuller, operator for the Grand Island at Severance.

The Town of Troy

County Seat of Doniphan County Had Narrow Escape from Being Named Saltillo by the County Commissioners, E. V. B. Rogers, Alex. Dunning and the Late Judge Joel P. Blair, Who Founded the Town Which Bears His Name.

Were Appointed By the Territorial Legislature to Locate Seat of Justice—Nelson Rodgers Built First House in Troy, Which Is the One Where Chris Jenkinson Now Lives—Mrs. Toner Erected First Store Building and Frederick S. Moser, Who Resides North of Troy, Hauled Lumber from Flickinger's Sawmill, Geary City, With a Yoke of Oxen.

With all the written and traditional history of Troy available to the citizens of today, few of them are aware of the fact that they had a narrow escape from being residents of a town with another name.

A Troy man said it was simply due to the limited education of the commissioners, who named the site of Troy a few days after the three hundred and sixty-third anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, that prevented the town from being named Saltillo. The knowledge of orthography possessed by the trio of worthies, delegated to name the town, was confined to words of one syllable; otherwise the county seat of Doniphan County would have to live its life under the burden of a Mexican name. The name Saltillo was suggested by Mrs. William McKendre Hamner, with whom the commissioners boarded. The Hamners, as they were generally known, resided where William Townsend now lives, one mile northwest of Troy. Mrs. Hamner was a kindly, romantic soul, and during Mexican war times, she had run across the name Saltillo and immediately fell in love with the sound of it.

When the commissioners went to board at her home, she made up her mind to persuade them to call the new town after her ideal. She besieged them with the best provender, and they lived on the fat of the land. Upon obtaining a promise from them to permit her to name the town, she announced her choice as "Saltillo," and spelled out the word a dozen times, letter by letter. The commissioners, it seemed, were not fortified with sufficient education to keep the name in mind, and they concluded that the word was too big anyway. So they named the town Troy, in honor of that Troy of ancient Greece, and Troy it has remained and will continue to remain.

The Act of Congress, approved by President James Monroe on May 20, 1824, granted counties in each state and territory where public lands were situated, the right of pre-emption to a quarter section of land to be laid off in lots for a county seat, and it was under this act that the town of Troy was located.

It was specifically provided that the proceeds of the sale of all such lots should be applied to the erection of public buildings for the administration of the government of the county, and it was in this manner that money was obtained to build the first court house in Troy.

When the territorial legislature convened in Pawnee, July 2, 1855, the question of county seats in new territory, was brought to the attention of that body with the result that A. Payne and Thomas J. B. Cramer were appointed commissioners to locate the seat of justice for Doniphan. The act stipulated that the county seat should be located within six miles of the geographical center of the county; so, after inspecting a number of much boosted spots throughout the county, the commissioners on Oct. 12, 1855, decided upon the present site of Troy as being an ideal location for a county seat, and which was less than two miles from the center. The legislative commissioners made known their decision to the first commissioners of Doniphan County and the official report of the selection of a site was filed with County Clerk Van Arsdale. It is still in the archives of the county in the court house. The county commissioners held a meeting on Oct. 16 of the same year and decided it was time to start something; so that afternoon, James F. Forman, who resided in Doniphan, was ordered to lay off eighty acres of the quarter section into town lots, and to make a draft of a plat of the town. Mr. Forman was instructed to provide for a public block three hundred feet square, where the legislative commissioners had driven a stake in the ground, this block to be used for court house purposes.

The sale of lots was ordered to take place on Jan. 1, New Year's Day, 1856, and when the auctioneer mounted his platform there was a large gathering of people on hand to bid in some of the choicest parcels of real estate, which was then nothing but virgin prairie.

In 1857, the Troy Townsite Company was organized, and surveyed a quarter section of land on the east, which is now known as East Troy; Hayton's, Leland's, and other additions have been surveyed and practically built up since that time. The town was incorporated in 1860 by a special act of legislature, including East Troy, and extending the city limits to one-half section of land.

A final section of the incorporation act provided "that S. D. Benight, Leonard Smith and John B. Brady are hereby appointed judges of election to hold the first election for mayor and councilmen under this act." The judges were empowered to set the date for the election, and they named March 20, 1860, when a full corps of city officers was chosen, headed by Isaac Powers as mayor, and William H. Truesdell, city clerk.

Nelson Rogers erected the first house in Troy, situated on the northeast corner of the court house square, on property now owned by Chris Jenkinson. Mrs. Toner soon after built a store-room, which was occupied by Heed & Earl with a line of general merchandise. Fred Moser, Sr., who now lives four miles north of Troy, hauled the lumber for this building from the saw mill at Geary City with three yoke of oxen. Mr. Heed had previously conducted a tavern at Wathena and was a resourceful sort of individual. In addition to running the store at Troy, he at once branched out as a lawyer and real estate operator.

Settlers swarmed into Troy, like bees to an alfalfa patch, and the town assumed an air of bustle and activity from the start. The only drawback the citizens experienced or the only one they openly complained of, was the absence of a postoffice. They were a growing community and did not relish the idea of being compelled to hike fourteen miles to Doniphan for their mail at a combination blacksmith's shop and postoffice.

This little inconvenience was speedily remedied by E. V. B. Rogers, who succeeded in having a postoffice established on his farm two miles north of Troy, Jan. 22, 1857. The farm is now owned by Mrs. Frank Laroff. The Troy postoffice was established March 16, 1857, and Nelson Rodgers was the first official and duly authorized postmaster of the town. Nelson Rodgers also had the distinction of being the first blacksmith in Troy. His shop was running full blast three months after the sale of the town lots. He started work on the building March 4, 1856, and was shoeing horses in the building inside of three weeks. Nelson's shop was located on the Cyrus Leland property where Nick Theis' shop now stands.

Early in the year 1857, D. S. Sergent erected a building and opened a store on the property where Mrs. Wilson now lives, and which is owned by Ed Reese, of Topeka, and Will E. Reese of St. Joseph, Mo. It is situated directly across the street east from the old Methodist Church. That same year, J. B. Brady, the St. Joseph carpet and drapery dealer, moved a store building from Charlestown, and planted it on the site now occupied by Winzer Brothers hardware store. Mr. Brady later sold out his business to Henry Boder, father of Mrs. Anna Strong, and went back to his main house in St. Joseph, Mo., which was conducted to this year under the old name of the Brady Carpet Company, when it was changed to the Brady Furniture and Carpet Company.

Upon the arrival of "Cheap John" in Troy, he rented the old Brady store and did a thriving business until he was burned out in 1878. John was an original character and his business methods were something new to the people of Troy. He had a wonderful trade, notwithstanding the fact that he refused to give credit to anybody—every customer being required to pay spot cash. John's store was burned, and the belief was prevalent among the inhabitants of Troy that his son applied the match that brought on the conflagration. The cause of this rumor, it was alleged, was the sending of a telegram by the youth the next morning to his father in a distant city, bearing these cryptic words, "She's burnt." It was said that the father had departed several days previous, taking with him all goods that could not be replaced or that were of any value or consequence, which was pretty conclusive evidence, in view of the fact that John compromised with the insurance company in a submissive manner.

The first building used in Doniphan County for a court house, after Troy was made the county seat, was a part of what was known as the Higby House, which stood where the New Transit House stands today. Abe Lincoln, the martyred President, spoke in this building Dec. 1, 1859, and there are a few living in Troy who attended the meeting. It was built in the summer of 1856, and was used for a court house until December of 1859, when a new brick court house was completed on the north side of the public square, nearly opposite the Old Higby House, but on the east side of the walk to the present court house. The new building combined both court house and jail. Previous to the erection of this court house, there was no county jail, and the prisoners were taken to Atchison for safe-keeping. After the new court house was completed they were confined in the lower story of the building. This building was an ungainly brick affair, and many of the early residents called the new seat of justice an architectural monstrosity, and they were not very sorry when the building was destroyed by fire March 27, 1868. A bitter county seat fight was precipitated after the fire, which engendered considerable hard feeling and caused no end of litigation. The struggle was carried on with much bitterness, but the contest was finally won by Troy. Insurance to the amount of $3,200 was recovered and bonds were voted, and the contract for a new building was let to James E. Dryden, who completed it in the fall of 1868 at a cost of $6,000. Mr. Dryden owned the farm where D. M. Blevins resides, about two miles east of Troy. He was instantly killed by a Rock Island train while attempting to drive across the track near his home on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 22, 1886.

From time to time improvements were made that increased the total cost to about $10,000. In the summer of 1880 an addition was made to the building on the west side. A new jail was erected in the spring of 1870 at a cost of $8,000, and was said to be a credit to the county.

This third building was used until 1905, when the present court house was erected at a cost of $54,000, and moved into on July 6, 1906. During the construction of the new building, the county officials occupied Cy Leland's building. Mr. Leland has been not only the leading spirit in Republican politics in Doniphan County, but in the entire state of Kansas, for over forty years.

When the proposition to erect the new and last court house was first brought up in the year 1903, there was much opposition to the project, because of the fact that the county was then in debt to the amount of $480,000. The inadequacy of the old building for the growing business of the county was conceded by everybody, but many of the people were against assuming any additional burdens of taxation. When the county officials had about given up in despair of finding any means of raising the money, Cyrus Leland, Jr., solved the problem.

The promoters of the new court house realized full well that if the matter were put to a vote of the people, the proposition would be defeated, but Mr. Leland, who was a member of the legislature from Doniphan County, came to the rescue. He, too, felt confident that the voters would defeat any measure providing for issuing bonds to build the new court house, but he found another way out of the difficulty.

When the legislature convened, Mr. Leland had a special law enacted, authorizing the county commissioners of Doniphan County to levy an assessment on the taxpayers for three years for the purpose of raising the necessary funds to build the new court house. There was no very great "howl" raised over this, except some little objections made by some of the taxpayers when they were called upon to pay the first annual assessment. After that everybody forgot their troubles when they saw what a splendid building had been erected in northeast Kansas. It is an imposing, stately building in exterior appearance, and is commodious and spacious within. The contractor was John Henry Wagenknetcht, of Wathena.

Aton Simonson was the first carpenter to settle in Troy and he did a fine business all his life. He died in June, 1914, at Hiawatha. He was related to W. D. Baldwin, the well known carpenter of Troy. John Frank Kotsch was the first shoemaker in Troy, locating March 4, 1859. He established the first shoe shop in Doniphan County on the farm now owned by Ellis Martin, five miles southeast of Troy. He died a few years ago in Troy.

The first hotel in Troy was opened by A. J. Allison, who died on his way to Pike's Peak, in 1859. It was afterward conducted by a man named Wilson, and he was succeeded in the management by Leonard Smith. Mr. Smith was a relative of Andrew Porter, one of the pioneers who settled north of Troy on part of the farm now owned by Henry Haupt. The site of the hotel was on property now occupied by Jeff Claytor's residence in the northeast part of the town.

Another hotel was built about 1859 on the west side of the court house square. It was a concrete building, and was afterward remodeled and converted into the City Hotel, which burned down Oct. 19, 1879. The first landlord was a brawny old chap, named Fitzmaurice, and there were many amusing anecdotes related of the manner in which he conducted the business. One of them concerns two lively characters of that day, Tom Osborn and Webb Wilder, both of whom lived in Elwood. One winter night they came to Troy on a little celebration, and, while zig-zagging around the town late at night, came to a halt outside the Fitzmaurice hostelry.

"Hold on here," said Osborn, "let's go in here and start a rough house." His companion was agreeable, but neither was aware that Landlord Fitzmaurice heard the conversation. He was standing inside the door when the remarks were passed; with his sleeves rolled up to the elbows, he greeted his guests with these words, "Yes, gentlemen, step right in. Step right in; don't be backward, but come in and raise all the rough house you want to. It won't cost either of you a cent."

Having relieved himself of these few remarks, Landlord Fitzmaurice proceeded to do a little rough-house work himself and he was a good hand at the game. Osborn and Wilder went home with most of their blood either oozing out of their noses or collected around their eyes. They didn't show up in Troy again for a long time.

Although Troy started out in life with the brightest of prospects for immediate greatness, it did not make very much progress until after the war. In 1870, when the St. Joseph & Denver City Railroad was completed to Troy, the town took on a boom and grew rapidly until the panic of 1875 gave it a serious setback. The citizens were hopeful, however, and their faith in the future was unshaken, although Troy seemed rather to decline than to progress. It remained in that condition of lethargy for a number of years, and it was not until the early 90's that the town began to revive.

Considerable taxes had been allowed to accumulate, and on the first signs of improvements, people started in to clear up the titles to their property. New buildings and residences were soon under construction, and, while the revival was gradual, the growth was steady and deliberate. That condition has continued from the 90's to the present time with the result that Troy is now one of the most prosperous towns of its size in the country. It has fine stores, banks, churches, schools, a modern hotel, boarding houses and restaurants of the finest kind; flouring mill, grain elevator, grain warehouse, lumber and coal yards, splendid railroad facilities from three great lines giving direct connection with three state capitals and the metropolitan cities of the East and West; a newspaper and mechanics and working men of all classes.

Albert Perry.

The fruit industry has helped the properity of Troy materially in recent years. The population has been considerably increased by people who have been attracted to the town through the advertising it has received from the superb quality of the apples and berries that are produced in such large quantities in the territory contiguous to Troy. The fruit men have established such a reputation abroad by the high quality of their product that they do not find it necessary to send their annual harvest yields to the markets in other cities any more. The buyers from all sections of the country flock to Troy every season and invariably purchase the fruit crop on the trees.

The first house built in Troy, now owned and occupied by Chris Jenkinson.

Among the seeming necessary business enterprises that were established in Troy at an early date was a saloon, operated by Connor & Howell. Their building stood where A. Perry's law office is now located.

A Sabbath school was organized as early as 1859, James B. Maynard acting as the first superintendent.

Probably the first physician who located in the town was a Dr. Payne, who came in 1859.

Until the year 1862, Troy progressed rapidly, but during the war it came to a standstill. After the war, it received a new impetus in the St. Joseph & Denver City Railroad, which commenced running trains, and soon made the place a good shipping point.

Maynard (Troy Junction) was laid off and received its name from Judge J. B. Maynard, March 4, 1871. It is the junction of the Burlington & Nebraska and the St. Joseph & Grand Island railroads.

Since the establishment of the seat of justice at Troy (1856) all county business has been transacted here, and all meetings of a public character, where the public welfare was interested, have been held at this place.

In the winter of 1859-60, during the session of the territorial legislature, an application was made to have the town incorporated, which application was granted. Since the incorporation, the city has maintained her organization.

The post office was established March 16, 1857, and the following is a correct list of the postmasters and the dates they were appointed and the length of time each one served:

A Native of Troy, Now a Successful Physician at Centralia.

Dr. Charles R. Townsend, one of the most successful physicians in Kansas, is a native of Troy. He was born here Oct. 9, 1870, and is a graduate of the local public schools. Mrs. Townsend was born at Goodhope, Illinois, Oct. 29, 1874. They were married at Centralia, Kansas, Sept. 23, 1896, and one son was the result of their union. He is Charles Rees Townsend, born Feb. 22, 1905.

Dr. Townsend is one of the many Troy boys who have gone out into the world and made a place for themselves. A big majority of the present citizens remember him and his family; and he also is well known throughout the county. Dr. Townsend has had extensive preparation for his profession, being a graduate of the Kansas Medical College. He also has done considerable research work and is showing the result of that application in his steadily increasing practice at Centralia.

Third in Population

In August, 1857, the census showed Doniphan County to be third in point of population in the territory, Leavenworth and Douglass counties being represented as more populous. At that time Doniphan County had a river border of seventy-five miles, and was from three to twenty-five miles wide from north to south. It had vast bodies of timber, sufficient for building purposes and fuel, any quantity of springs and streams of pure water, vast quantities of stone, for building purposes, large bodies of coal and any amount of clay for bricks and a soil unsurpassed in productiveness and adaptation to the growth of all kinds of grain, fruit and vegetables and a climate unexcelled for health. It had more towns than any other county in the territory. Up to the year 1857 a great portion of the country had been shut against the admission of settlers, but at that time it had opened up and settlers were coming in very rapidly. There were four newspapers published in Doniphan County at that time, being the Kansas Chief, The Elwood Advertiser, The Geary City Era, and the Doniphan Constitutionalist.

Perry Hutchison

Perry Hutchison, the celebrated miller of Marysville, who had the distinction of erecting the first flour mill in Kansas, was born Dec. 2, 1831, in the Empire state, at Fredonia, Chautauqua County, New York. He was married Dec. 19, 1855, to Miss Lydia Jeanette, daughter of Champlin Barber, a farmer of Chautauqua County, New York. To this union was born two sons, Frank W., who resides in Marysville, and Wallace W., who is superintendent of the large mill at Hutchison, and one daughter, Etta Viola, now Mrs. Harry L. Kotsch, of Sturgis, South Dakota.

Woman Meets Fatal Accident

Mrs. Lynch of Sabetha met with a serious accident at the Grand Island depot on Tuesday, April 9, 1872, while passing from one coach to the other. She fell between the coaches and sustained several broken ribs, her clavicle and femur were broken and she was also injured internally. Physicians took her to the old Higby house, where the present Transit House stands today, where she was treated by skillful surgeons, but notwithstanding their aid, she died on Thursday morning at six o'clock, April 11th.

Morgan Lee, a well known citizen of Doniphan County, living south of Troy, died July 3, 1872.

Miss Margaret Schletzbaum

Former County Clerk of Doniphan County Is One of the Best Known and Best Liked Women in Northeastern Kansas—Served Twenty Years as Deputy Clerk and Nine Years as Clerk—Daughter of the Late Joseph Schletzbaum, Who Had Been Elected Three Terms as County Clerk During the Eighties—Has Every Detail of the Office at Her Fingers Ends—Maintains a Nice Home for Invalid Sister.

There are few counties in the state of Kansas that can point out a woman more favorably and more widely known than Miss Margaret Schletzbaum, former county clerk of Doniphan County.

Not only has Miss Schletzbaum the grand record of having served nine years as county clerk, but she has been deputy clerk for twenty years. While the duties of the office are generally believed to be the proper work for a man, Miss Schletzbaum has demonstrated by many years of expert work that it is not outside a woman's sphere to handle the position.

The subject of this sketch was practically reared in the office. She first became connected with the county clerk's office during the incumbency of her father, who was three times elected in the eighties, and she has been most continually there ever since.

Miss Schletzbaum is the daughter of the late Joseph Schletzbaum, who settled in Doniphan county in 1864, locating in the town of Doniphan, where he followed the occupation of wagonmaker and blacksmith. He was a native of Germany and an upright and industrious man. His wife was a Miss Christine Feller, also a native of Germany. They were married in Leavenworth, September 21, 1864.

In 1883 Mr. Schletzbaum was first elected county clerk, and re-elected in 1885 and again in 1887. He died while in office, on December 28, 1887, and was buried beside his wife in Doniphan cemetery. Mrs. Schletzbaum died February 27, 1881. Both Mr. and Mrs. Schletzbaum were eminently respected residents of Doniphan County and they numbered among their friends a very large circle of people.

After serving under her father as deputy, Miss Schletzbaum was appointed to the same position by W. H. Forncrook, and she continued under him for twelve years. Later she served four years under Len Roberts, in a similar capacity.

With such a vast amount of experience it was little wonder that Miss Schletzbaum had gained the confidence of the people to such an extent that she was elected county clerk in 1899 and served five years. She was again elected to the office in 1908 and served four years.

Miss Schletzbaum is a woman of keen executive judgment and is familiar with every detail of the county clerk's office. The taxpayers have the highest regard for her ability and she has a personal acquaintance with the people from every section of the county. Her well known capability to perform the duties of the office, coupled with her obliging personality, has never failed to win friends and retain them.

Miss Schletzbaum is the most kindly and charitable of women. She has a true feminine instinct for the works of mercy and never fails to visit neighbors in sickness and sorrow. With true womanly feeling she gives aid and consolation to those in distress. Her kindness is one of her grandest attributes, and she is both refined and unostentatious in her sympathies and her deeds.

Deprived of her mother at an early age, and of her father some years later, Miss Schletzbaum has had her full share of the burdens of a family. Her sister, Emma, has been an inlavid all her life and it fell to the duty of Margaret to give all the love and care that she lost when her mother died. What sacrifices she has made can well be imagined when it is known that she maintained the home and the sick sister on the twenty-five dollars a month salary she received during the twenty years she served as deputy county clerk.

Miss Schletzbaum not only maintained a home for herself and sister, but she even managed to save enough to buy it outright from what little amounts she could put aside from her meagre salary as deputy clerk. The struggles which she had to endure in order to accomplish this can better be imagined than described. The best years of her life have been given to doing humane acts. She was fortunately fortified with good and noble instincts, to the everlasting credit of herself and the admiration of her wide circle of friends.

Miss Schletzbaum's second sister, Bertha, also lives at the pleasant Schletzbaum home in southwest Troy, where the three girls dwell content and happy in each other's society, and have always a hearty welcome for their numerous friends.

Miss Emma Schletzbaum has an enviable reputation among her friends for her clever needlework. She turns out piece after piece of artistic and difficult patterns with as much ease as the average person turns a hem or binds a seam. Her friends have been the recipients of several of her nice pieces.

John Triplett

John Triplett, one of Doniphan County's best-known farmers and stockmen, is almost a native; however, Mr. Triplett was not born here, that event taking place in St. Joseph, Mo., May 11, 1866. He came here with his parents in 1868, when they settled on the farm where George Large now lives, six miles northeast of Troy.

His early education was such as the country schools afforded at that time, and when about seventeen years old, Mr. Triplett decided to shift for himself. He did not wish to give up his education, as he was studious and industrious, but his father was unable to educate him on account of having such a large family to provide for, and insufficient funds. The elder Triplett, like so many of the early day settlers, found, however, that the son was needed more at home than in school, and reluctantly the young man gave up his hopes.

The next twelve years were the hardest in Mr. Triplett's life. While in school his mind had been focused on farming, but he saw that it was but a poor proposition at best to rent, and that the only hopes of fortune and a place of position in the community was to purchase a farm. Therefore he determined to become an owner himself, and being well fortified with courage, grit and confidence in himself, he started out as a hired hand, working by the month and from place to place, for a period of a dozen years.

It was not lucrative work. His wages varied, sometimes running as high as $20 a month, and sometimes dropping to or below $16. One thing was certain, however, young Triplett was never idle. He accepted any place offered, regardless of the compensation, because he had an ambition, which was to own a farm of his own. Also it can be truthfully recorded that what little money he spent during his early life, went for necessities.

Finally, at the expiration of twelve years of this strenuous toil, the worn and faded pocketbook and fat bank account contained enough for Mr. Triplett to realize his ambitions. Using the good business sense which he has since been called upon to bring into play for his community's interest, he looked the field over carefully and picked out the northwest quarter of Section 3, Town 3, Range 21. His judgment as to the value of that property has since been justified, for today it is one of the most productive farms in that section of the county.

The subject of this sketch was married Oct. 4, 1894, to Miss Etta Steavens, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Steavens, a highly respected family. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. L. I. McDougle, and to this union has been born one child, Edna May, Dec. 30, 1896.

Mrs. Triplett has been a loving helpmate to her husband, and the responsibility of the home has depended largely upon her efforts. She brought to her young husband the rays of sunshine which are characteristic of her, and have had a bearing upon their daughter through her youthful years. The daughter received her early education in No. 60 school and was a student at the high school in Troy. She is an industrious young lady and is endowed with many admirable attainments. Mrs. Triplett's father died Nov. 28, 1906, at his residence five miles northeast of Troy, after a brief illness, and Mrs. Steavens, who was born in Morrisville, N. Y., Feb. 7, 1844, followed him to the great beyond on her birthday, two years later, at the age of sixty-four years.

Mr. Triplett, one of the county's honest and substantial farmers, has served the community well. Against his wishes and only upon the urgent request of his many intimate friends and acquaintances, he served as township trustee for several terms, filling that office to the general satisfaction of everybody. Later he was elected county commissioner. Mr. Triplett engages in general farming, but is an expert cattleman and has some exceptionally good ideas regarding fine stock. His farm is one of the best equipped in district No. 60, and he has a substantial residence on the place where he can be found at any time, either out among his stock or in the fields or before the hearth of his own fireside.

William Leibig

William Leibig was born in Boston, Mass., on April 4, 1843, and enlisted in Nemeha County, Kan., Oct. 18, 1861, as a private in Company D, 8th Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry. He served three years and nine days and was mustered out at Villanova, Ga., on Oct. 18, 1864. He was married April 26, 1865, to Miss Sarah A. Logue, at the home of her brother, about three miles southeast of Wetmore. Four children were born to that union, Ellenora and Ruth who are dead, and Charles and Dora.

Troy, the City With a Future

A Community Rich in Resources, With the Progressive Spirit of Today—An Abundant Faith in the Future Greets the World in These Pages.

Troy is a city of about 1,500 people, and is one of the leading cities in northeast Kansas. The surrounding country is famous for its bluegrass and fine stock, and it is also noted as the premier fruit-producing county in the state.

Troy is a business center which possesses admirable institutions of culture, and is therefore found to be not only a good place in which to make a living, but also a good place in which to live. Troy's wide and straight streets are well graded. They are adorned by well-kept parkings and lawns and by beautiful shade trees, which also set off with pleasing effect cozy cottages and palatial homes. Add to these all the modern conveniences, an unsurpassed public school system, numerous powerful church organizations, each comfortably housed, several flourishing literary societies, and we have evidence that Troy has a liberal progressive citizenship, well advanced in moral refinement and culture.

Troy citizens today live in the midst of pleasant, helpful surroundings, more perfect and satisfying than ever before. The present in this respect is heritage of the past—the aggregate result of more than sixty years of endeavor by those who have been actuated by the noblest motive—the public good.

Troy was laid out in the midst of a broad prairie by James W. Foreman, sixty years ago.

Troy, after the first sale of lots, grew rapidly in population and while its society was imperfectly organized and was under few of the restraining influences known to old communities, yet there were among its citizens many intelligent and cultivated people of noble inspirations. Institutions such as they had known, such as they hoped to enjoy, existed then in Troy, if at all in imperfect form, but they were active, progressive, public spirited, and withal disposed cheerfully to make the best of circumstances with due regard to the future. From this beginning has grown the city of today, with its broad area, its graded streets, its blocks of business houses and miles of residence property, and with a population far beyond the fondest dream of the early-day pioneer.

The natural advantages of Troy are all in its favor. Blessed with a good climate and with a beautiful setting, it is an ideal location. Nature has been wonderfully kind. With this comes the acquired advantages, its schools, its churches and most everything else that could be wished for in the way of accommodation and beautiful for homes. With this comes, of course, its commercial location.

Troy is favored with the main line of the Grand Island and the St. Joseph and Topeka branch of the Rock Island railroads. It has also connections with the B. & M. at Troy Junction.

From a Financial Standpoint.

The banking institutions are, in a large measure, the financial pulse of the community. The banks of Troy are among the most substantial in the state of Kansas, and they have a statewide reputation for soundness and progress. The two banks of the city are on the soundest possible basis, and their statements all show a steady increase in deposits and volume of business each year. That these institutions have the confidence of the people is shown by the fact that the deposits in them aggregate large sums which are showing a healthy increase in every case.

Residential Improvements.

Troy has made wonderful strides in the matter of erecting new homes, too, and all over the city the blocks are dotted with new houses that have been erected in the past few years. Notwithstanding this activity in the building line, there are not sufficient houses in Troy to care for people who desire to move here. Troy has no "blue-stocking" residence district. The first thing that strikes the stranger on his tour of the city is the fact that most every street boasts its beautiful residences. These, however, do not detract from the cozy and sightly, yet pretentious cottages which everywhere impress the visitor with an air of substantial comfort and plenty, a "homey" feeling that creates a desire to own one and become a resident of the promising city.

Churches.

The religious interests in Troy share in the general prosperity of the city, as nearly all denominations are represented by large and zealous congregations whose liberality is manifested in the many fine houses of worship. The Protestants have churches of the following denominations: Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and Christian, while the Catholics are represented by the St. Charles Church. The church spirit in Troy is not an exclusive one. Rich and poor alike are welcomed at any congregation and strangers are given a hearty welcome. All branches of church work are maintained and much charitable work is being done.

School System.

Our public school system is a constant source of pride to the citizens of Troy. In no place can there be found a stronger or more wholesome school sentiment and the work is perfectly organized in every department. No high school in Kansas or in the entire country does higher or better work. Its work is recognized by all the leading colleges and universities, so that students who complete this work are admitted to them without examination. A large number of its graduates are now pursuing work in these higher institutions of learning, and many of the alumni are numbered among the most prominent citizens of the state and the entire West.

Troy's Open Door.

Troy is determined not only to hold the position of commercial importance she has attained, but to constantly advance. Her growth is the outcome of material and natural advantages and harmonious work on the part of her enterprising citizens. Troy's position is rapidly becoming more prominent each year, and the investor can locate here with the assurance that he is growing with one of the wide-awake towns in this section of the country, and amid ideal and desirable surroundings.

Troy is always ready and willing to meet the stranger at the door. She balks at no legitimate enterprise and welcomes every man, rich or poor, who comes to add his efforts to the upbuilding of the city.

To the man or woman who is seeking a home, we would say, come to Troy. You can find no better place to live than here. You will be among people who are happy, congenial, hopeful and aggressive. If you are seeking a home where modern conditions prevail, you will find these conditions here. If you wish to live where Christianity and morality prevail, where society is wholesome and elevating, come to Troy. You will be welcome and will have a home among the best people on earth.

In the various parts of this edition will be found sketches of various industrial and mercantile institutions which stand foremost in enterprise and progress in this community.

The Odd Fellows

While some authors trace Odd Fellowship back to ancient origin, its beginning, so far as it is authentically known, was in England in 1812, when it became a national organization. Previous to this time, local lodges had been organized in different towns under the name of Odd Fellows. The main purpose of the organization was to render assistance to every needy brother who might apply, if he were well attached to the queen and government, and faithful to the order. For several years these lodges existed in England, each being separate and distinct from the others, although each lodge was doing work similar to that of the others and on March 14, 1842, they united.

The order is not an insurance organization, as many persons suppose, yet it disburses millions of dollars annually. Its members pay a stipulated amount (from $4 to $6 a year), as dues in return for which they receive from $2 to $6 per week in case of sickness or accident. On the death of a brother the lodge pays a stipulated amount toward funeral expenses. And, too, the members receive not only financial benefits, but also brotherly care and attention when sickness or accident befall them.

The First Odd Fellows' Lodge Organized in Doniphan County.

The first lodge of Odd Fellows organized in Doniphan County, was White Cloud Lodge No. 6, instituted December 15, 1858. It was the first lodge chartered by the Grand Lodge of Kansas, the previous five lodges having been chartered by other states. They were located at Topeka, Leavenworth, Wyandotte, Lawrence and Atchison. The following are the charter members: Sol Miller, Henry Ulsh, Francis E. Armstrong, William D. Beeler, John Q. A. Troy, Henry F. Macy, Oliver C. Whitney, Christopher M. Williams. Morris Fraley, Joshua Taylor and Jeremiah F. Swartz were taken in on card, immediately after the lodge was instituted.

The following were the first officers: Sol. Miller, N. G.; Henry Ulsh, V. G.; Christopher M. Williams, secretary; Francis E. Armstrong, treasurer; J. F. Swartz, warden; Henry F. Macy, conductor; Morris Fraley, outside guardian; John Q. A. Troy, inside guardian.

Of the original members, all are dead.

The lodge temporarily suspended in December 1862, by reason of so many of the members having enlisted in the army that there was not a quorum left to hold meetings.

Daniel Graves

One of the Pioneers of Both Missouri and Kansas Whose Span of Life Covered the Most Remarkable Period of Development the World Has Known—A Native of Tennessee, He Moved to Missouri in '42, Was Married There to Eliza Robertson, and They Came to Kansas, Settled in Doniphan County, Later to Move to Washington County.

Daniel Graves, who is numbered among the first of the pioneers of Kansas, was born at Sharp's Chapple, in the state of Tennessee on February 4, 1827, and died at his home near Washington, Kansas, on December 6, 1907. He had reached the age of 80 years, 10 months and two days. He was an industrious man and well liked by his neighbors.

The life of Daniel Graves covering a span of more than three-fourths of a century also encompasses a period of the most wonderful development the world has even known. The steamboat, the railroad, the telegraph, telephone, electricity and all of the great inventions that have blessed mankind—all these came to us while Daniel Graves was upon this earth.

The early life of Daniel Graves was passed in that romantic period when neighbors anywhere west of the Allegheny Mountains were few and far between and when the settlers were gradually encroaching on the hunting grounds of the Indians and driving them toward the setting sun. In 1842 the Graves family moved from Tennessee to DeKalb County, Missouri. Arriving at young manhood the subject of this sketch took unto himself a wife. Miss Eliza Robertson, who was born May 21, 1832, near Terre Haute, Indiana, and was one of the brightest young women of her neighborhood. They were married on July 30, 1848, in Missouri.

This sturdy young couple, seeking a home in the new country for themselves, journeyed west to Doniphan County in the year 1854, settled north of Troy on the farm now owned by Joseph Hargis and his mother, and here they resided until the year 1887, they again moved westward to Washington County, which was their home for the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Graves died January 31, 1906, near Washington, Kansas. Mr. Graves, as before stated, on December, 1907, surviving his wife one year, ten months and five days.

This remarkable couple of pioneers of Missouri and Kansas were the parents of eleven children, as follows:

Nervesta, born June 13, 1845, near DeKalb, Missouri, now Mrs. Logan Collins of Pond Creek, Oklahoma.

Sarah Francis, born February 8, 1851, near DeKalb, Missouri, now Mrs. A. D. Whetstine of near Troy.

Adeline and Caroline, twins, born July 24, 1853, near DeKalb, Missouri; Adeline is now Mrs. Adam Taylor of Nodaway, Missouri; Caroline is Mrs. Thomas Meers and resides at Davenport, Nebraska.

A son was born August 15, 1855, and died in infancy, being one of the first whites born in Center Township.

Albert Robertson Graves, born near Troy July 23, 1856, now resides at Selma, California.

Louisa Anna, born September 1, 1858, in Doniphan County, and died June 3, 1894. She was the wife of Paul F. Werner.

John Woollen Graves, born December 25, 1860, in Doniphan County, now resides south of Washington, Kansas.

Hugh Graves, born March 8, 1863, in Doniphan County, and resides two miles north of Troy.

William Elijah Graves, born in Doniphan County March 24, 1865, and died June 21, 1880.

Thomas Lee Graves, born February 13, 1867, in Doniphan County, and now resides at Selma, California.

Of the eleven sons and daughters, children of Daniel and Eliza Graves, eight are now living useful and honorable lives to bless the memory of these noble pioneer parents who lived lives worthy of emulation.

Fred J. Close

One of the men who will be recalled by practically every one of the older citizens of Doniphan County, is Fred J. Close. He was one of the ablest lawyers in Eastern Kansas, although at present he has forsaken the bar and is giving his time exclusively to his duties at Inspector of National Soldiers Homes, drawing a salary of $4,000 a year.

To Mr. and Mrs. Close were born four children, one girl and three boys. They are Miss Flora Close, born April 3, 1892, in Troy, Kansas. At present she is secretary of the Young Womens' Christian Association at Kansas City, Kansas. ## FRANK A. HAUBER

Coming From Germany When Eighteen Years Old, He Found It Difficult to Master Our Language, But Now He Is the Owner of Good Doniphan County Farms and Town Property Worth $65,000 Cash, and Is One of Our Best Business Men.

The large element of our Doniphan County citizens who were born in Germany and came to America, where larger opportunities offered, has a worthy representative in our genial friend and successful business man, Frank A. Hauber, the story of whose success reads like a romance.

Frank Hauber was born in Germany, October 14, 1868. He was reared and educated in his native land, a fine specimen of industrious young manhood. At the age of eighteen years he joined the tide of emigration to America, where greater opportunities then were offered to industrious young men than were offered at home. Naturally he came west to St. Joseph, Missouri, to which point hundreds of our earlier German settlers had come.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Graves, pioneers of Center Township.

In the year 1895, Frank Hauber came to Troy. He was a baker by trade and he had found so much difficulty in mastering the English language he scarcely could make himself known to any one who was not conversant with the German language. Still, Frank Hauber had the right mettle in him. He was ambitious to win for himself a position among our people as a business man and citizen. He went to work for Jess Horr at a salary of $20 a month. He remained with Mr. Horr one year, by which time he had become acquainted with our people and their ways and had made good progress towards mastering our language. Leaving Mr. Horr's place he went to St. Joseph and was gone six months. He had gotten some of the Kansas ozone in his system, for he only remained in St. Joseph six months, returning to Troy April 24, 1896.

Mr. Hauber's second appearance in Troy was as a business man, rather than as an employe. He went into the bakery business on his own account, leasing a building of Cyrus Leland for five years, and by the end of that period buying the building. Frank Hauber has been a resident of Troy ever since and has made a phenomenal success in the nearly twenty years he has been engaged in the bakery business for himself. Now his holdings include farm lands in addition to his town property, aggregating in value about $65,000.

While much of Mr. Hauber's success has come to him through fortunate investments it must be said that primarily his remarkable success is due to his tremendous energy, his tireless industry and his application of common sense economic rules to his business and to his life. He came to Troy, from choice of location, determined to make it his home for life and to build up a successful business here that would be an honor to the name and to his wife and children. With such a purpose in view, and knowing the type of man he is, there is no surprise that he has succeeded in doing what he set out to do.

Mr. Hauber's bakery establishment in Troy was barely started when he decided to take another step forward. He went over to St. Joseph and on November 25, 1896, married Miss Alice Hefern, a daughter of one of those thrifty Irish families who have made St. Joseph one of the best commercial ports on the Missouri River. She was born in that city August 7, 1871, and for many years had lived on Sacred Heart Street, though her parents now are living at 1103 South Fifteenth Street. Their wedding took place in St. Patrick's Catholic Church, with the Rev. Father Graham performing the ceremony.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hauber were born five children: Mamie Josephine, May 15, 1898; Louis Francis, January 13, 1900; Carl William, April 19, 1902; Alma Helen, December 5, 1903; Alice C., November 18, 1911. The children are an honor to their parents and are growing up here in Troy and receiving all the advantages of excellent parental training and education that can be given them.

Mr. Hauber has been assisted materially by his excellent wife in the conduct of his business affairs, and to her indefatigable efforts and her splendid home management have been the kind of wifely help needed to insure the success of her husband's business ventures. A sister, Usula Hauber, had lived with Mr. and Mrs. Hauber and also has been of great assistance to him in the bakery business.

Year in and year out the business of Frank A. Hauber in Troy, has increased and brough goodly returns to the owner and founder. Each year he has earned something more than his expenditures, and his savings have been wisely invested in Doniphan County land and the Avon Hotel property in town. This is the way he has succeeded. He has been economical; yet he and his family have lived well. He believes in economy and efficiency in public service, yet he is in favor of public improvements, good schools and everything that tends to the good of the community. Mr. Hauber is admired by our people for his successful business management and for his splendid citizenship.

Miss Sharp was born in Tennessee, May 20, 1830, and came from Holt County, Missouri, with her parents to the first settling of Doniphan County. On May 20, 1866, her birthday, Mrs. Sharp Fincklea married George W. Schauffler, who was a native of Germany. He departed this life, December 29, 1878. Mrs. Schauffler has the following sons and daughters: Hugh Fincklea, Emma, now Mrs. George W. # David W. Landis

Born in Doniphan County in '67, He Has Spent a Busy, Useful Life Among Us and Has Made a Success of Farming and Fruit-Growing—He and His Wife Both Methodists and Active in the Religious Affairs of Their Community.

David W. Landis, farmer and fruit grower near Troy, is a product of Doniphan County who knows the soil and what it will produce, and who loves it so well he could not be tempted to exchange his home place for any other on earth. Mr. Landis is one of the citizens to be proud of. He is no quitter. He sticks to his good old Doniphan farm and "makes hay" while the dissatisfied and discontented go chasing after the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow.

Mr. Landis, be it known to one and all, was born January 29, 1867, the very day the great state of Kansas was six years old. Moreover, he was born in Kansas, in Doniphan County, and on the farm near Troy on which he now resides. It was after the Civil War and while the tales of border strife were still fresh in the minds of his parents and his elders that young David Landis grew up on the farm. There was something in the times and the environment that produced the kind of Kansas patriotism and pluck that has brought our state to the forefront as a producer of agricultural and horticultural products as well as of men and women and great ideas.

This Kansan of whom we write had an ambition from his earliest boyhood to be a producer, to do something. In school he pursued that ambition by showing up in the morning with his lessons well prepared. There was no boy or girl in any of his classes who was going to pass him if he could help it. On the farm he learned everything he could, working early and late and taking an interest in everything. He learned to farm in the right way. He followed his father's methods and where he found an improvement on those methods he did not hesitate to adopt it. David Landis soon earned the reputation of being a good farmer, and he deserved the honor. He was a success from the start at grain growing and he demonstrated his ability to handle live stock properly.

After a while he conceived the idea of turning a part of the farm into a money making orchard. The old farm orchard had been a good producer of apples, and with a wide spread demand for apples it was worth while to figure on the future. It required no great amount of figuring, however, to convince David Landis that with proper attention to his trees and care in gathering and marketing his apples there would be more money earned per acre by growing apples than by growing grain or any other farm product.

The result of all this was that Mr. Landis became a successful apple grower and has for years obtained a good revenue out of his orchard which has been enlarged from time to time until he now has a commercial orchard of respectable size and is recognized as a successful fruit grower. His success in this particular branch of the farming business is due largely to his own efforts. He applied himself from the time he first entered the business to the careful study of horticulture. He knew the kind of trees that bore good fruit and he planted that kind. He knew how to care for the trees. If they needed spraying he sprayed them. If there was anything doing damage to the trees or the growing fruit he set to work and did not rest until he discovered what was the tropble and how to remedy it. His conclusion is that, based on his own experience, there is no reasonable excuse for the loss of an orchard, and that where such losses occur it is largely the result of carelessness. Mr. Landis, who now markets large quantities of good apples each year and gets a good price for them, will tell you that the best way to get a good return from the high priced land of Doniphan County is to set them to orchards.

Mr. Landis does not claim full credit for himself to his success on the farm. A good part of it belongs to Mrs. Landis, who was a Doniphan County girl, Miss Mary A. Hargis, who was born June 30, 1871, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jackson Hargis. They were married at the residence of her parents in Brenner, February 19, 1889, by the Rev. Mr. Charles F. Atherton, then of Troy, but now a resident of Kansas City, Kansas, who has been on the superannuated list for several years.

Mr. and Mrs. Landis are parents of two children; Earl H., born August 20, 1890, who was educated in country schools and was born on the farm six miles south of Troy; Eva L., was also born on the farm November 26, 1894, and died April 3, 1910.

Mr. and Mrs. Landis are members of the Methodist Episcopal church and exert a wholesome christian influence in the community in which they reside. Mr. Landis also is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Troy and is a faithful attendant at its meetings, living up to the high and honorable principles of that splendid fraternal order.

The subject of this sketch owns a farm of sixty-four acres four miles south of Troy and eighty acres six miles south and a summer home on Birch Lake, Minnesota, and a residence in Troy situated on the spot where the old mill stood.

John Asher Gorham

He Is Popular as an Auctioneer and Has Scored Some Remarkable Successes With Big Farm and Special Sales in Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri—A Man of Unusual Business Ability Who Started in as a Merchant in St. Joseph at Twenty-One.

A very necessary man in any farming community is the auctioneer, and to be an auctioneer requires that a man should know human nature, that he has the whole run of values at his tongue's end, that he keeps the crowd interested in what he is selling and that he gives every bidder a square deal. It is about one man in one hundred thousand who makes a good auctioneer, and when one is going to pull off a big sale the first thing one should do is to engage the services of a good auctioneer. Troy has the honor of having one of the best auctioneers in this part of the country in the person of John Asher Gorham, proprietor of the New Transit Hotel, which is the only first class hotel in the city. Mr. Gorham's reputation as an auctioneer has been established by the many sales at which he has officiated in the states of Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri during the twelve or thirteen years he has been engaged in the business. He has conducted a number of big farm sales and makes a specialty of special sales for merchants in the three states in which he does business. These have become popular with the people as well as with the merchants. The sales usually are put on for two weeks and during each evening goods are sold at auction and knocked down to bidders. In this way the people get some exceptionally good bargains, hence the sales are popular.

John Asher Gorham is a Missourian, born at Richmond in Ray County, October 16, 1863. His father, John Gorham, died before the subject of this sketch was born. His mother lived to the age of sixty-two years, and died at Birmingham, Missouri, sixteen years ago. John Asher Gorham attended school and got all the education he could until he reached the age of fifteen. His boyhood was spent in hard work, but it was the kind of work that develops the genius in men.

At the age of twenty this then young man entered the mercantile business in St. Joseph. He continued in that business twelve years. Then he sold out and went to Great Falls, Montana, where for seven years he was engaged in the sheep business. Returning to St. Joseph he decided to enter the auctioneering business, with the result that he has made an unqualified success at it, as indicated in the foregoing part of this article.

Mr. Gorham years ago purchased the hotel in Troy which is now known as the New Transit House, and while operating it as a first class hotel and one of the best in the country, he has made it his headquarters for his auctioneering business, receiving orders for his service by mail or telegram. As proprietor of the hotel he is popular with its partons on account of his splendid service. In connection with this he makes use of his automobile by driving traveling men to the towns within a radius of twenty to forty miles.

Mr. Gorham was twice married. His first wife was Jennie Pope, whom he married at St. Joseph on April 12, 1887, by the Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Presbyterian Church. To this union was born two sons, Walter Harvey, August 27, 1889; Norton Q., who was born August 28, 1891. Both are good business men residing in Los Angeles, California.

The present Mrs. Gorham was Ida Kramer, of St. Louis, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Kramer, Germans. She was born in Germany near Solinger, July 6, 1864, and came with her parents to the United States at six years of age. Her marriage to Mr. Gorham was in St. Louis on June 18, 1905, by the Rev. Mr. McCord, pastor of the Good Avenue Methodist Church. Mrs. Gorham speaks both German and English. She is a good business woman and is highly respected by all who know her. To this union has been born two children, Rosa May, February 16, 1908, at Maitland, Missouri, and John Henry, June 2, 1911, at St. Joseph, Missouri.

Troy's Telephone System

Owned and Operated By the North East Kansas Telephone Company, It Is a Public Utility that Is Indispensable, Putting This Entire Community on Speaking Terms as One Big Happy Family—When the First Telephones Were Installed —A Controversy as to Who Put in the First Switchboard By Clark I. Stocking and Cyrus Camp—The People Who Serve the Public at Troy.

The modern system of telephone service, such as that which is supplied by the North East Kansas Telephone Company, brings together the people of town and country into one big happy family. Time was when the houses on the hills and in the valleys and on the prarles of Kansas were few and far between and neighbors were almost strangers. But things are different now. Though the farm houses may be just as far apart, the telephone makes them all right close neighbors and the best of friends; and the people of town and country no longer are strangers to each other. Considered as a modern utility, whether used for business transactions, or for whatsoever purpose it may be put to use, the telephone is indispensible, and Troy and all the country round may well be congratulated on having one of the best equipped, managed and operated telephone systems to be found in any part of the United States.

The present telephone system, with its exchange in Troy, is operated under the name of the North East Kansas Telephone Company, and is a stock company, with stockholders scattered over the counties of Doniphan to Brown. From a small beginning with a few subscribers the system has grown until it has many subscribers in Troy, and scores of subscribers in every direction for a distance of many miles out from the towns of Tracy, Wathena, Highland, White Cloud, Robinson, Horton, Morrill, Doniphan and Hiawatha, with direct connection with neighboring cities and long distance connections with the entire country.

The telephone has a somewhat interesting history, so far as its inauguration in Troy and Doniphan County is concerned. So far as we are able to find out there were only four or five telephones in Troy twenty years ago. As to who it was that installed the first switchboard in Troy that gave the present telephone system a start is a subject of controversy between Mr. Cyrus Camp, a former telegraph operator at Troy and now of Pilot Point, Texas, and Mr. Clark I. Stocking, who is one of the managers of the North East Kansas Telephone Company. Each of these two gentlemen claims to have installed the first switchboard. We have letters from both Mr. Camp and Mr. Stocking, each giving some interesting history of the inauguration of the telephone system in Troy and Doniphan County and we reproduce parts of these letters leaving the readers to judge for themselves as to the merits of the controversy.

Mr. Camp, writing from Pilot Point, Texas, in his first letter on the subject, says:

"I may not be exactly correct as to dates, but it is my recollection that it was in the fall of 1895, after I had worked a couple of months in St. Joseph for the Citizens Telephone Company, that I made and installed the first switchboard in a room upstairs over what was then Norman & Zimmerman's store. This board had a capacity of 14 drops and had connected five telephones in the following locations: Doniphan County State Bank, Bank of Troy, C. C. Camp's residence, Henry Boder's residence, and H. L. Boder's residence. At about this point I constructed a private line for Dr. W. B. Campbell which connected his residence and office. (Soon after this Clark I. Stocking became a partner of mine, and we, with his brother Egbert's assistance built a larger switchboard and soon after this I turned the whole thing over to him.) In the fall of 1899 I went to Caldwell, Kansas, where I installed a new system and operated same eleven years, selling out in December, 1910. After this I spent the time in St. Joseph and Garden City until the middle of last year (1914), when I again engaged in the telephone business in this city. My study of electricity has covered a period of about thirty years and my telephone experience about twenty years. I consider this a pretty good record considering the fact that I am now only thirty-five years of age."

In another letter Mr. Camp reaffirms his statements contained in the foregoing, with the additional statement that the room in which his first switchboard was installed was the office room of James M. Trant. The building is now occupied by Elwood Brothers' grocery store. Mr. Camp connecting the Swiggert livery barn and the Junction, which was owned by Mr. Cyrus Camp. While working for the Postal Mr. Cyrus Camp made the arrangement, as shown by the drawing, which was screwed to the wall in the Postal office, and one of the wire levers which extended through a hole in the box, was connected to each of the private lines mentioned above, by pressing down on any one of these wires, brought same in contact with the wire, (which you will see located close to the lower edge of each hole) which connected to his telephone.

"This made Mr. Camp a convenient arrangement for connecting his office phone to the different lines, but you will notice there was no provision for connecting the different lines, together, there being no plugs, cords, or keys of any kind, nor did Mr. Camp contend at the time it was for any other purpose than to connect his own office phone."

Mr. Stocking adds that "I am surprised that Mr. Camp would attempt to call it a telephone switchboard, unless he is under the impression that it would not come to the notice of a telephone man."

Haran Kirby, manager of North East Telephone Company in Troy; Mrs. Ida Agee, Miss Grace Howard and Miss Jessie Privett, bookkeeper.

Clark I. Stocking is now one of the managers of the North East Kansas Telephone Company, in which he also is a stockholder. His home is in Hiawatha. He frequently visits Troy and has a large acquaintance throughout Doniphan County.

The North East Kansas Telephone Company has a well equipped exchange in Troy and a force of employes who serve the public with courtesy, dispatch and efficiency.

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH ANN ZIMMERMAN

This Daughter of One of the Early Day Citizens, Judge James B. Maynard, Who Was a Personal Friend and Follower of "Jim" Lane, Looks Out From Her Window to the Spot Where Her Parents Located in 1885—Her Husband an Insurance Man Many Years Before His Death, and Her Daughter, Anna, Now Engaged in That Business.

From a widow in her home in the south part of Troy, where daily she sits and muses over the days that have gone by, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Ann Zimmerman, who came to Troy September 10, 1855, where she lived in a tent on the spot where the St. Joseph and Grand Island depot stands. Looks out upon the spot where her parents, Judge and Mrs. James B. Maynard, erected their log cabin when they came to Doniphan County in 1855. Her father hauled the logs from Burr Oak Bottom to build the little hut. It is not given to many of our elderly people to look from our present abode across a span of nearly sixty years to the little log cabin of the Territorial days, as Mrs. Zimmerman does. Also it is not given to many of us to experience these feelings, much less to describe them, that come to this woman with the flood of recollections that come to her with each glance out of her window, only a few yards by linear measure, but in time more than a half century.

Mrs. Zimmerman was born in New York, on December 2, 1851, and was brought by her parents to Doniphan County, who located in Troy in that year, 1855, as before mentioned. They landed right in the most interesting and exciting period of the Territorial times, the border troubles growing out of the conquest over the question as to whether Kansas should be slave or free, being then at their height. How these things concerned Mrs. Zimmerman, then the little Maynard girl, she scarcely knew or realized. It is certain, however, that they had much to do with the state of the family mind, for her father, Judge Maynard, was a personal friend and an ardent follower of "Jim" Lane, the brave leader and general of the Free State forces and afterwards our first United States Senator elected from Kansas. Thus Mrs. Zimmerman has many things to remember, looking out of her window to the scenes of long ago.

Her marriage to John Zimmerman was solemnized November 4, 1869, by the Rev. F. E. Sheldon, a Presbyterian minister. Her husband was a resident of Troy for many years and engaged in the insurance business. To their union two daughters were born, Anna, who lives with her mother in Troy, and Georgil, who died October 15, 1899. Mr. Zimmerman died December 20, 1911, and was buried in the Troy cemetery, within sight of the spot where his father built his first home in Kansas.

Mrs. Zimmerman and her daughter Anna occupy a neat little home in the south side of Troy, which the mother owns. Miss Anna is a great comfort and joy to her mother. She is engaged in the insurance business, having inherited a talent for underwriting from her father and also inheriting a large clientage which he built up. Miss Anna is a practical business woman, efficient in everything she undertakes, and pleasant and obliging as well. She is one of the popular young women of Troy and is held in admiration by all with whom she has dealings or comes in contact.

Mrs. Zimmerman, in the declining years of her long and useful life, possesses a remarkably vigorous mind and recalls so many things of her early experience and observation, such as to make her a delightfully interesting talker. She enjoys the friendship and good will of every person in the town and country round, and they all delight in doing her honor. She has in her possession the first dining table set in Troy. Her father preempted the Joseph Hayton farm and after selling same bought the farm where Mount Olive cemetery is located. Her niece, Olive Zimmerman and her sister Olive Maynard were the first persons buried in the cemetery which was named after them.

DAISY MINNIE STOCKING

The First Telephone Operator Employed in Doniphan County.

The name of Mrs. Edward L. Confer may not sound as familiar to readers of these pages as Daisy Minnie Stocking, but they are one and the same person. Many persons will recall Daisy as the pleasant and obliging telephone operator at Troy for several years, she being the first regularly employed telephone operator in Doniphan County.

She is a daughter of Mrs. Ira D. Stocking. Her father was born in Syracuse, N. Y., March 26, 1833, and died February 26, 1908. Her mother is still living. The paternal grandfather of Mrs. Confers, David Stocking, was the first preacher to locate in Center Township, and he did all the marrying and the burying for many years. He was one of the prominent pioneers who came to this county in 1855. He taught the first school in Burr Oak.

Daisy Minnie Stocking was married in Falls City, Neb., on March 11, 1911, to Edward L. Confer. He was born May 7, 1883, making him about three months old when his wife-to-be entered this vale of sorrows on August 12, 1883. Ed Confer served his flag during the Spanish-American War in Company D, Sixteenth Infantry, Kansas Volunteers. He enlisted April 22, 1899, at Leavenworth, Kansas, and spent practically all of his time in service in the Philippines. This young soldier was mustered out and discharged at Angel Island, California, May 10th, 1902.

There is one child of this union, Vivian Daisy Confer, who was born July 3, 1912. The family resides at Twenty-seventh and Lake boulevard, St. Joseph, Missouri. Edward is now an engineer on the Burlington running out of St. Joseph, and was formerly employed in the Chief office, where he made good. Mrs. Stocking, mother of the subject of this sketch, and of Clark I. Stocking, was born in Ducain, Illinois, June 28, 1841, and was married to her husband November 27, 1860. Ira D. Stocking was a silversmith, and one of the first in Kansas. He was a highly respected citizen and a member of the Masonic order.

Charles Erie Sherrer

Charles Erie Sherrer, prominent merchant, who was engaged in the grocery business in Troy, with a store in the J. W. McClellan building on the north side of the square, is a native of Virginia, Illinois. He was born there on July 3, 1870, passed his boyhood years in that town and came to Doniphan County August 16, 1888. He went to live on a farm near Severance and for more than twenty-five years he pursued the peaceful occupation of a farmer. March 15, 1915, Mr. Sherrer purchased the grocery store which he now owns and is conducting with success.

In Atchison, on June 27, 1905, Mr. Sherrer was married to Mrs. Pearl B. McClellan Wykert by the Reverend Mr. Waldraven, pastor of the Metho-Episcopal Church, South, and they went to live on a farm two and one-half miles west of Denton. Mrs. Sherrer was born on Christmas day, 1880, two and one-half miles south of Troy on the farm now owned by Mike Forest. She was educated in the Troy schools, graduating in 1898 under U. S. C. Busch. She taught school two terms in Star District No. 19 in Union Township, and in Burr Oak District No. 38. She was previously married, October 12, 1898, to George C. Wykert, and had one daughter, Inza Lou Wykert, who was born August 5, 1899, on the Henry Clark Wykert farm, west of Troy, now owned by Dixon A. Porter.

Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Sherrer. Carol Pearle was born October 20, 1909, on the farm in Union Township, and Maree Clella was born November 23, 1912, in the J. W. McClellan home in Troy.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherrer are well known and highly respected among the people of Troy and vicinity. Mr. Sherrer, during his residence of more than twenty-six years, has been regarded as an upright citizen and a good farmer, and in his new occupation as a grocer he is receiving a substantial patronage from his old acquaintances and from his new-found friends. He strives to please his patrons and has become deservedly popular as a square-dealing merchant. He is at all times glad to greet his old friends at his place of business.

Miss Inza is a student in the second year of the Troy High School course. She is a young lady of close application in school, esteemed alike by classmates and teachers, and is well qualified and apt in music as well as literary talent. This young lady will be a source of pleasure to her grandfather and parents in their declining years.

Sinclair-Jones Burglary

On April 4, 1895, occurred in Troy one of the glaring burglaries in the history of the town. It was at that time that a burglar entered the stores of M. H. Bailey, (familiarly known as Carpenter Bailey), and A. D. Jones, hardware, and D. C. Sinclair's drug store. He secured about $160 in money besides several pistols and other merchandise.

Electric Lights in Troy

Lights Installed Under Mayor Oscar G. Winzer's Administration Connecting Troy With Atchison Plant—Citizens Believed More Economical to Buy Lights from Atchison Than to Build City Plant—Line Cost $14,500.00, and Was Constructed By Jesse Mann — Current First Turned on December 17, 1910—The 331 Lights Bring City Revenue of $450 Per Month—Farmers Along Line Between Troy and Atchison Have Tapped the Wire.

A good lighting system is one of the best advertisements and one of the most valuable adjuncts to any town. Troy has one of the most up-to-date systems in its electric lighting arrangements. Troy has a twenty-four hour current.

The Chief takes a great deal of pride in the fact that, backed by the sentiment of progressive citizens, this paper was responsible for the installation of Troy's electric lighting system. The idea was generally advocated by Henry J. Calnan, during his administration as mayor of Troy and completed under Oscar G. Winzer's, who in June, 1909, published an article in the Chief telling of the advantages of electric lights.

The article attracted wide attention and interest and the idea gained ground. Within a week after the first article about the proposed improvement appeared in the Chief, Henry J. Calnan, mayor at that time, and the city council, figured the expense of lighting Troy by the latest method.

After the election of Oscar G. Winzer as mayor of the city of Troy several meetings of the council were called. At each meeting prominent citizens talked, giving his ideas as to the plan. Some advocated the city building and owning its plant. Others urged that the more economical method would be to connect Troy with the plant in Atchison, sixteen miles south of Troy.

Frank Blake, of Troy, representing a St. Joseph concern, was the first one to appear before the council for a franchise to secure electric lights for Troy. His proposition did not appeal to the council and presumably on account of that he took no more interest in the affair. Jack Stephens and C. I. Stockings, of Hiawatha, were the next ones to appear for a franchise, but their proposition did not meet with the approval of the council, however, after several weeks of deliberation, this plan was adopted, after city officials and others figured with representatives of the Atkinson plant as to how much per kilowatt electricity would cost Troy, furnished by the former city.

The meetings pertaining to this project were usually held in Judge J. D. Smith's office in the northeast room of the basement of the court house. The following were members of the city council: George B. Smith, a retired farmer; Frank F. Paige, a retired school teacher and farmer; Professor Charles Marble, connected with the Troy schools; William Bailey, a stone mason and plasterer, and Henry Zimmerman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Zimmerman, who was engaged in business at that time in Troy. At one of the meetings, a committee to investigate the feasibility of constructing the line was appointed, consisting of Henry J. Calnan, Frank F. Page and George B. Smith, and Oscar G. Winzer as mayor accompanied the party. At the next meeting the committee made a favorable report which was adopted by the council.

Following sometime later, May 10, 1910, an election was held and $15,000 bonds were voted to cover the cost of constructing a line to connect Troy with the Atchison electric plant. Jess Mann was awarded the contract on the construction work.

The work progressed nicely until about the time they reached Troy, with the construction of the line, the Northeast Telephone Company filed an injunction against the city of Troy to prohibit them from building the line closer than fifteen feet to the telephone line, which was upheld by Judge Stewart.

All summer and fall saw the undertaking being carried out. Great interest was felt in its progress, and Troy people anxiously awaited its completion. This came in November and on the evening of December 17, 1910, by Robert Wilson, then city marshal in charge of the lights, the first electric lights in Troy were turned on.

Marshal William Hoeft, of Troy, informs us that at present Troy has 331 lights. The current is furnished for four cents per kilowatt, and the total cost to the city is $300 per month. However, the revenue from the lights coming from the families who pay for the use of the convenience amounts to $422 per month, or a net profit to the city of $122 per month. And thus the bonded indebtedness will soon be liquidated.

Frank Keckler did most of the wiring for the houses when the system was installed. Now, the families who have the use of this modern convenience are wondering how they ever got along without such an improvement. They appreciate not only the steady, clear light the current furnishes, but the application of the "juice"—as linemen and electricians say— to household appliances. Their bread is toasted on the electric toaster and house cleaning is robbed of half of its horror.

Instead of the work of tearing up the carpet after back breaking work and beating the dust out of it in the back yard, and another siege of neck tiring endeavor to tack it down, electric current furnishes power for a pneumatic sweeper which sucks the dust from the floor as noiselessly and as quickly and thoroughly as a cat laps cream from a saucer. It is said that the time will come when the stoves and coal furnaces will be things of the past; that the houses will be heated with electricity and all cooking done on an electric range—think of that, no more fires to make or sweltering over cook stoves in summer. Turn a switch, wait, and the cooking will be done. As a matter of fact, electric ranges are used in some of the cities.

This is not mentioning the fact that many young ladies are finding the electric current a side partner of Cupid. For when the young man calls at the girl's home to take her out riding his wait is considerably shortened. Why? Because the young lady in an up-to-date home in Troy does not juggle with a pair of curling irons over an oil lamp. No, the electric curler attends to that, and these articles are warranted to curl the hair quickly and so naturally that the most experienced bachelor can not tell the electric-curls from the natural ones.

When the auto starts out for a quiet little spin through the streets there is little danger from collision, getting on the wrong road or running against the curbing—the arc light makes the road as bright as a shop window at holiday time.

It is almost needless to say that the well lighted streets also are an insurance against robbers. No holdup man is liable to confront any one when the glare of a street lamp is full on his face. Verily "those that prefer darkness because their deeds are evil" find the Troy lighting system disconcerting to their plans.

The time may come when the country roads will also be lighted by electricity. As a matter of fact some of the farmers between Troy and Atchison, who are also progressive have tapped the line to light their homes: William Wilke, Henry Foley, Charles Nitz, Mrs. James E. Rhudy, Frank Kinsey, W. E. Boscher and Peter Keckler are already using the electric light. Perhaps then an economical way of lighting the country roads may be devised. It is really a practical plan to apply electricity to much of the farm work, as has been done in some places. To some extent electricity is used for operating churns, pumping water, sawing wood and various other work about the farm. If chores are thus cut down, the farm boy in the vicinity of Troy will have more time to visit in town and to practice with the Troy ball team.

It is also possible to stimulate the fertility of soil by the electric current according to the technical journals, in which many articles appear illustrating this idea and giving accounts of where and how such a thing has been done.

It is a tungsten burner against a candle than when such scientific methods have been demonstrated to be be a success and practicable, the alert, progressive and up-to-date farmers around Troy will not be the last to adopt the methods.

In fact the ready acceptance of the idea of lighting Troy by electricity, and the quick adoption of its uses to various work, indicates the higher average of intelligence possessed by the people of Troy and vicinity. Their support of the proposition from inception and the constant increase of the number of people taking advantage of the latest method of lighting shows that Troy people are "desirous of new things."

No other town and community is more wide awake to the benefits of living in the Twentieth century, with its improvements and conveniences; and no other people realize more than do the citizens of Troy the contrast between their comfortable circumstances and bettered conditions and the discomforts and hardships and inconveniences of the pioneers who settled here. It is also unusual that these pioneers themselves desired that their children be given these benefits of modern days and so helped to bring the child of the inventor Edison to Troy. Everyone in Troy is elated over the convenience of the electric lights except the young lady who desires to tarry a few moments at the front door Sunday evening after church (when "the heartless old lady" turns on the porch light.)

When such men as Jap. Calvert, John Morehead, John Otten and Charley Young turn on the electric light in their homes their memory involuntarily flashes back to the days when they were obliged to snuff the candle for illumination. What a pleasure it must be to these veterans to note the perceptible changes that the great inventor, Edison has made since their youthful days.

The cost for an electric light in a home is nominal, the minimum charge being 75 cents per month. Up to fifty kilowatts the patrons pay 12 cents per kilowatt, from fifty to one hundred, 11 cents per kilowatt, from one hundred above 10 cents per kilowatt, a special rate being made for day current for running motors.

Troy Catholic Church

St. Charles, Built in 1882, When There Were Only a Few Catholic Families in Troy and Vicinity—Mission Established by Reverend Fathers of the Benedictine Order as Early as 1866—First Services Held in the Home of John Frank Kotsch by Rev. Thomas Bartl, O. S. B.

Present Church Erected Under the Direction of Rev. Father Timphause on Ground Donated by Mr. Kotsch—About Thirty Families Now Compose the Congregation—Pat. H. Kirwin, Nick Bohr and Mrs. J. F. Kotsch Were Instrumental in Raising Funds.

The Roman Catholic Church of St. Charles, of Troy, is the fulfillment of the early anticipations of the Catholic families in that vicinity to secure a clergyman to guide their spiritual welfare.

Its history is replete with the struggles which characterized pioneer settlements in the sacrifices so willingly made to obtain spiritual guidance. The few Catholics who settled in the neighborhood of Troy bravely met the difficulties encountered by all early settlers, but they preserved their faith and cherished the day when they could have a permanent house of worship.

The erection of St. Charles Church of Troy, almost thirty-three years ago, was a stupendous undertaking for the few members of the Catholic faith who resided in the town, and the adjacent country. There were then not more than seven Catholic families in that neighborhood, but their energy was indomitable and their zeal contagious. They were not wealthy, but they showed the true spirit of religious determination in contributing their means, their time, and their labor to the accomplishment of such a grand and worthy object.

As early as 1866 the Catholics at Troy were ministered to by the Benedictine Fathers from the abbey at Atchison. The spiritual visits of Rev. Thomas Bartl, O. S. B., after the dawn of that year, were a source of great comfort and consolation to the faithful members of the Roman Catholic Church. The good Missionary was welcomed with delight, and the few Catholics there then placed their houses at his disposal for religious services. As far as can be ascertained from the records, the first mass celebrated in Troy was solemnized by Father Bartl at the home of John F. Kotsch, early in 1866.

With the establishment of the Troy Mission on a firm basis, the Benedictine Fathers came from Atchison at stated intervals and held services, first at one Catholic home, and then at another. Every Catholic family manifested a pleasing desire to have the services in their own house, and show their hospitality to the Missionary, but conditions were such that the visiting Father invariably alternated between the different homes most convenient for the residents to congregate in.

From 1866 to 1878 services were held at various times by Rev. Father Pourmine M. Koumly, O. S. B.; Rev. Peter Kassens, O. S. B.; Rev. Boniface Verheyen, O. S. B., and Rev. Placidus McKeever, O. S. B., all from the Benedictine Abbey at Atchison. In 1878 the Troy Mission was put under the pastor of Wathena, Reverend Father Schreiner, who was succeeded about that time by Reverend Father Timphause, who set about having a church built in Troy. The problem was not an encouraging one for the very good reason that the number of Catholic families was small and their means limited.

When the proposition to erect a church of their own was placed before the faithful of the Mission, it was accepted with expressions of great gratification. The Catholics of the vicinity realized their limitations, but they were courageous in their fortitude and generous in their religious proclivities. So they decided to build the church, no matter how heavy the sacrifice, nor how onerous the financial obligations they would be obliged to assume. The ways of building the church were apparent enough, but the means were sadly lacking. However, the Catholic population was a determined unit when such a worthy cause was placed before them, and men and women offered to do all in their power to carry the project to a successful completion.

The first real encouragement in the work was the donation of a site by John F. Kotsch, April 8, 1882, located in the West part of Troy, eighty feet square. The spot was geographically ideal, for it was fairly convenient to the people of Troy, and not too remote from the country Catholics. Patrick H. Kirwin, who at that time resided two miles south of Troy; Nicholas Bohr, who lived six miles south of Troy, and Mr. and Mrs. John Frank Kotsch, of Troy, were the active and commanding spirits in carrying on the work. They first started to solicit funds and did the principal part of this most important work. Not only the Catholics contributed toward the building of the church, but the non-Catholics and public generally were exceedingly liberal in their contributions. It was stated at the time, and during many years since, that Mrs. Kotsch was instrumental in collecting more money for the new church than any of the other women. She was a strenuous worker and unceasing in her efforts to have the building free of debt before it was ready for worship. The late Ab Kent was one of the large contributors and he took a keen interest in the ultimate success of the undertaking. The McKernan family, who reside northwest of Troy, was also active in furthering the completion of the church, as well as the Corcorans, Forests, Crowleys, O'Sheas and Morrisseys.

The six or seven Catholic families donated their services toward getting the material for the building on the site. Patrick Kirwin gave up his business altogether in order to supervise the quarrying and hauling of the rock, the transportation of the lumber and all incidental supplies. He did some of the hauling with his own teams, but the greater part of it was done by some of the most practical Catholics. A. J. Goddin was the principal contractor for the building, but he was not on the scene at all times, only going there occasionally in order to give instructions regarding the work. R. Myron Steele, now of Los Angeles, Cal., did most of the work, assisted by Athan Simonson, one of the best known carpenters who settled in Doniphan County in the early times. Both Mr. Steele and Mr. Simonson stuck regularly on the job until it was completed. Mr. Simonson died almost a year ago in Hiawatha, Kansas, and with his wife, was buried in Troy.

The most uncomfortable part for the men who had to handle the financing and executive work on the new church was the struggle to obtain the necessary cash with which to pay for the building material that could not be donated or worked for by the willing helpers. Pat Kirwin and "Nick" Bohr made a tour, or maybe many tours, of the Catholic settlements throughout that part of Doniphan County. The estimated cost of the church was $2,000, exclusive of all the time and labor that had been donated. Mr. Bohr and Mr. Kirwin, having exhausted the local field, were received with much kindness by the Catholics of Severance, Purcell, St. Benedict's out in the country, and at a number of other places in Union Township, where they made substantial collections. In fact, when the time came for a final financial reckoning, they found they had more than sufficient money with which to roughly complete the church, and the residue was expended in finishing the interior. It was a happy day for this little handful of Catholics at Troy when their new and first house of public worship was completed, and they have always given due credit to the people of other denominations for the kindly assistance so nobly rendered.

With the transfer of the Reverend Father Timphause to Wathena, the Troy Mission was given in charge of Reverend Father Connelly (the Irish pronunciation and spelling in olden times was Conealy). The latter was a young priest recently ordained, and had been placed in charge of the Mission at Fanning. He had been assigned to the Mission by the then Bishop of Leavenworth, under whose ecclesiastical jurisdiction both Troy and Fanning were then, and are now. The people of Fanning had been long asking for a resident pastor and, when the bishop assigned Father Connelly to the charge, he assumed naturally that the Fanning Catholics would build a residence for the new pastor, who would also attend to the spiritual wants of the few people at Troy.

When the people at Fanning failed to build a parsonage for Father Connelly, he was sent to the Catholics of Troy, who built a neat little residence for himself and young niece, who acted as her uncle's housekeeper. The young priest and his little niece were exceedingly well liked by all classes and they became very friendly with both Catholics and non-Catholics. A short while afterward Father Connelly was recalled to the diocesian headquarters at Leavenworth. He had been in failing health for some months.

The scattering of Catholic families around Troy felt the recall of their beloved priest keenly. A delegation was named to visit the Bishop and request that Father Connelly be sent back to them. The priest was not sent back. He was stricken with tuberculosis and died soon after.

After Father Connelly had been withdrawn the Troy Mission reverted to the charge of the Benedictines of the Atchison Abbey. Rev. Father Matthew Bradley, O. S. B., administered to the Mission of Troy from the recall of Father Connelly until 1887. Rev. Placidus McKeever, O. S. B., was next in charge until 1896, and Rev. Peter Kassens, O. S. B., from 1896 until 1901. When Father Kassens left that year he was succeeded by Rev. Father Gregory Neumayer, O. S. B., who attended to the Mission until 1904. During the ministrations of Rev. Father Neumayer the church was renovated, stained glass windows were put in, the tower was built, and a bell was purchased and installed in the tower.

Rev. Father Gregory was succeeded as pastor by Rev. Fabian Stindel, O. S. B., who remained from June, 1904, to August, 1905. Rev. George Keim, O. S. B., was the next Benedictine Father to minister to the Troy Mission until September, 1906, when Rev. Father John B. Stader, O. S. B., member of the Order of St. Benedict, became pastor. Father John, as the pastor is more familiarly known among the people of Troy, attends the parish regularly. He is not a resident priest, but comes there at stated intervals from the Abbey at Atchison and celebrates mass. There are now thirty families attached to the Catholic Mission of Troy and the congregation is regular and faithful. Many of the old people are gone to their reward, and some others have left the neighborhood since the church was first built. But it still stands in all its modest grandeur, a monument to the fidelity and perseverance of the good people who believe in the true Catholic faith.

So elated were the Catholics of Troy with the success of the work to build the Catholic Church that many of the youthful element among the parishioners are so proud of it now they are claiming the first honors for everything. Records of church events have been kept which will not admit of any dispute. Two of these are that Mrs. Lambert Libel, of Wathena, was the first baby baptized in the new St. Charles Church of Troy. She was named Agnes Bohr, and she is well-known as the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Bohr. The other event is the marriage, the first to be solemnized in the new church, of Miss Molly Kotsch and Nick Hess, of Troy. Miss Kotsch had almost a prior right to the first honors, although between the Kotsch, Bohr and Kirwin people there is an even field for equal honors in furthering the erection of the church. It might be said in conclusion that Mrs. Kotsch was the most indefatigable worker among the feminine contingent which rustled for subscriptions, and her success entitled her to see her daughter emerge from St. Charles the first bride, and a happy one.

Nick Bohr wishes it made known that Cyrus Leland, Jr., was the heaviest contributor to the fund for the new church, although not a member of that faith.

The priests invariably had their headquarters at the home of Patrick Kirwin, until he left the farm about seven years ago. We are indebted to Messrs. Kirwin and Bohr and Father John B. Stader for practically all the facts set forth above.

St. Charles Church, Troy

A Handsome Church Edifice

Methodist Episcopal New Building in Troy Equal to That of Any Town of Similar Size in the Country—Church Was Organized Fifty-Five Years Ago By W. F. Bowman, a Pioneer Methodist.

The surest index to the prosperity of any city or community will be found in the general external appearance of the churches. Where the churches are well supported it is safe to conclude that the business and moral welfare of the place are thriving. Coincidentally the social life is bound to be of an elevating status, for church activities and hearty sociability are cause and effect.

A visitor or stranger to Troy is first greeted by the imposing spires of numerous churches towering high over the ordinary city buildings and residences. Their commanding significance at once impresses the visitor, and the conclusion is immediately reached that the town must be a good one in every respect. Human nature is the same the world over, and whenever high church steeples are found pointing heavenward, the sight to a stranger never fails to produce a lasting effect.

While the city of Troy is remarkably well equipped with churches for a town of its size this article will deal particularly with the First Methodist Episcopal Church, one of the oldest institutions of its denomination in this section of the state. Like all other religious organizations, the Methodist Episcopal Church sprang from a small beginning fifty-five years ago, and continued to grow in spite of many vicissitudes to its present magnificent proportions. The date of the church, strictly speaking, precedes that time by four years, when the first church service was instituted by a sturdy handful of faithful pioneers.

It was away back in 1856 when some of the few people then residing around the present town of Troy decided the community was becoming large enough to have religious services on the Sabbath. So the good people of the Methodist Episcopal persuasion banded together and arranged for the first preaching service which was held at the home of Alexander Berry in October, 1856, and for several months thereafter meetings were held at the homes of Alexander Berry, William Privett and several others. Later the scene of the preaching was transferred to the school building and court house of Troy.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church of Troy was organized by Rev. W. F. Bowman, June 26, 1859. Reverend Mr. Bowman was one of the pioneer Methodists of Doniphan County and was an influential citizen until the day of his death. For many years he resided on a farm on the Pottawattomie road about three miles west of Wathena, and where A. B. C. Dubach now resides. Reverend Mr. Bowman's two sons, Homer C and Collins H., now live in Wathena, and are well known and highly respected throughout the county.

Two years after the organization of the First Methodist Episcopal Church the members of the congregation realized that the time was ripe to have a Sunday school and this was quickly formed, with Edward Case as the first superintendent, notwithstanding the fact that he was Congregationalist. That was in 1860, and Mr. Case served until his death in 1866, when he was succeeded by Charles Rappelye. Mr. Case's two sons, Frank and Norman, respectively, reside at Hiawatha and Highland.

Methodist Episcopal Church, Troy

During the earlier years of the church, Troy was attached to the Columbus City circuit and later to the Elwood charge, but in 1863 Troy was made the head of the circuit, with Reverend Mr. Lloyd of Doniphan, the first regular pastor in charge. In 1864 Rev. James Lawrence (now of Lawrence) was given the charge and he took up his residence in Troy, where he remained two years. In 1866 the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Troy was granted a charter, and the following year ground was broken for a church building. A neat brick structure was erected, which still stands, and was dedicated with impressive services on October 20, 1868. For twenty-nine years this building remained the central place of worship, and in 1897 an addition was erected under the pastorate of Rev. Charles N. Riggle. Twelve years later the congregation, having outgrown its old quarters, undertook the erection of a new church building under the pastorate of Rev. A. E. Ryan.

The new church is a beautiful structure, 60 by 60 feet, of brick veneer, with a basement extending under the entire building. The church proper and the Sunday school quarters are completely furnished in modern style. The entire structure cost a total of $10,000. Too much credit for the erection of the new church cannot be given to Rev. A. E. Ryan, who was indefatigable in his spiritual and manual labors in order to accomplish the success of the undertaking. Reverend Mr. Ryan not only succeeded in raising practically all the funds for the construction of the new church, but he also spent a considerable portion of his time, not only superintending the erection of the building, but actually doing a man's share of the mechanical labor. Mr. Ryan was a natural craftsman, and he could perform the work of a carpenter or bricklayer with as much finesse as he could perform a wedding ceremony. The present parsonage was built during the pastorate of Rev. J. B. Gibson, in 1890.

The following is a complete list of the pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Troy, from its founding to the present time: Rev. B. F. Bowman, Reverend Mr. Bennett, Reverend Mr. Lloyd, Rev. James Lawrence, Rev. J. Paulson, Reverend Mr. Thornbrough, Rev. James Shaw, Rev. James Lawrence (a second pastorate), Reverend Mr. Shackleford. Reverend Mr. Mohan, Reverend Mr. Leak, Rev. Amos R. E. McBride, Reverend Mr. Porter, Reverend Mr. Biddison, Reverend Mr. Walker, Rev. George Gage, Rev. Father F. M. Pickles, Reverend Mr. Wescelins, Rev. Charles Atherton, Rev. J. B. Gibson, Reverend Mr. Lamb, Reverend Mr. McDougal, Rev. C. N. Riggle, Rev. Thomas Campbell, Reverend Mr. Hancock, Reverend Mr. Perry, Rev. William Whitney, Rev. E. L. Butler, Rev. J. B. Vernon, Rev. W. L. Morris, Rev. A. E. Ryan and Rev. Walter M. Rogers.

Rev. Walter M. Rogers, the present pastor of the Methodist church, came to Kansas from Ohio in 1879, and has resided in the state ever since. He was educated at Baker University and entered the ministry in 1903. His first pastorate was at Cedar Point, where he served with remarkable success for four years, going from there to Severy, where he remained three years. After one year spent in Richland, Reverend Mr. Rogers came to Troy in 1911, and his work in that field has been eminently successful from every point of view.

Since coming to Troy, Reverend Mr. Rogers has had an exceedingly active career. Through his efforts the Methodist Episcopal church was dedicated October 20, 1912, and he has cancelled a debt of $3,000 and has expended over $1,000 in equipment and improvements. Besides having met all its obligations the church has contributed over $1,700 to the $500,000 recently pledged for Baker University, ranking sixth among the charges of the district. In the year 1913 a handsome little church was erected at the outside point, and named New Hope, at an approximate cost of $3,750. This church is in a thriving condition, is out of debt and has a large membership. It is situated about one-half mile east of the Aberle school house, seven miles northeast of Troy, on an acre of land donated by Joe Sallee.

Reverend Mr. Rogers has a charming wife and two manly boys, which are the pride of both parents. Mrs. Rogers was Miss Charlotte Wells before her marriage to the pastor by the Reverend Mr. Dalton of Topeka, March 10, 1896. The boys are named Harold Walter and Joseph William.

Sunday school services are held regularly at the church, with George Vogt as superintendent, with an average attendance of about 125. It is impossible in this write-up to include the names of all of the past superintendents, but we wish to make a special mention of Dr. J. C. Myers, who has been an indefatigable worker in the church and Sunday school for over thirty years.

Buys Apples Extensively

George Strubb Comes Regularly to Doniphan County Every Year to Purchase Apples for North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota.

It is no small proposition for one man to supply the apple markets of three states regularly every year, but that is what George Strubb has successfully accomplished from Troy during the past eight seasons.

Mr. Strubb is one of the most substantial railroad fruit merchants in the Middle West, with his headquarters in Silver Lake, N. D. In addition to his dealings in fruit Mr. Strubb buys and sells produce in carload lots, and his trade in this particular line is becoming more extensive every year.

George Strubb's Men Loading Apples in the Orchard Near Troy.

The apple men of Doniphan have a high regard for Mr. Strubb personally, and hold him in great esteem as an upright business man of sterling integrity. His coming to Troy each year is welcomed by the apple growers, who place the utmost reliance on his sound judgment and fair dealing. He is immensely popular with men in every branch of the fruit industry and with them his word is as good as a government.

Mr. Strubb is to be congratulated on the fact that during his visits to Troy the outside business is capably managed by his son, Willie, who conducts the sales and superintends the delivery of consignments in North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota. Willie Strubb is familiar with every branch of the business and has inherited the energetic mercantile instinct which has brought so much prosperity to his father.

George Strubb is a native of Illinois, having been born in Thomson, that state, August 13, 1860. In 1884 he was married to Miss Carrie Gregory, at Ellendale, N. D., and on Christmas Day, 1887, their home was brightened by the arrival of the boy, Willie M. Mr. Strubb is a direct descendant of Abraham Lincoln, the martyred President having been his great uncle. He is a member of the Association of Lincoln Descendants, and last year attended the reunion at Boston, Mass.

WAYMAN A. HARGIS

The Rock Island Railway Agent at Troy for Twenty Years Is a Native of Doniphan County, and One of Our Substantial Citizens—Began By Learning Telegraphy When a Boy and Worked His Way Up to a Position of Responsibility.

A great many fiction stories are printed in the newspapers and magazines nowadays telling how plucky young fellows have worked their way up to high positions from small beginnings. Such stories are all right and proper as a means of inspiring hope and encouragement for the youth of today, but there is a case here at home which should appeal to the young men of Doniphan County, for the reason that it's all true. It is that of Wayman A. Hargis, who has held the responsible position of agent for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway at Troy for twenty years (with the exception of one year), and who got his start by learning telegraphy when a boy.

Residence of Wayman A. Hargis in Troy.

Wayman A. Hargis, as the reader should know, is a product of Doniphan County. He was born on a farm three miles north of Troy on June 13, 1873. The fact that he was born on the "13th" and in the year of the great panic and also the year the grasshoppers came to Kansas seems not to have affected the career of our hero, as subsequently in this writeup we shall prove. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Jackson Hargis, plain old-fashioned farmer folk of Doniphan County of whom it may be said they were as good as gold.

As a boy Wayman A. Hargis attended the Brenner school for several years and then attended the schools in Troy, receiving a good common school education such as fitted him for the ordinary duties of life. He was an acute thinker and was given to hard study, always having his lessons at recitation time and usually the first to hold up his hand when his teacher called on some member of the class for an answer or an explanation of some question or problem. Like other boys, he indulged in sports, but in the school room there was no play for him. Acquiring an education was to him a serious matter, for he was so minded that he could realize what even a common school education would mean to him when he grew to manhood.

The Rock Island railway main line had been opened from St. Joseph west through Doniphan County in 1886, and a station had been established here. Will Reese was the first agent. M. C. Brown was the agent and telegraph operator when this young man began telegraphy. He took an interest in Wayman Hargis, with the result that the boy started in to learn the (to him) mystery of telegraphy. It wasn't long until Wayman Hargis was able to interpret the meaning of the clicking of the instrument. A little later he began to receive and send messages. Then in a remarkably short time he became proficient as an operator.

From such a beginning the subject of this sketch worked his way into a good position with the Rock Island railway. After a while he was put in charge of the station. He was not content to be merely an operator. He looked out for the interest of his company. He hustled for trade by inducing the business men and farmers to ship over the Rock Island lines, and when our people desired to travel or to go anywhere by rail, why, Wayman Hargis convinced them that the Rock Island was the road to patronize. It is such loyalty to an employer's interests that enables some men to pass others in the race. It was not only a matter of satisfaction for this young man to know that he was doing his duty, and doing it well, but it pleased him to know that his services were appreciated. They were not always patting him on the shoulder and telling him what a fine young man he was. The company's appreciation was attested by promotion and an increase in the amount written on his pay check.

To say that Wayman A. Hargis has made good is only half telling it. He has builded and furnished a magnificent residence in the northeast part of Troy, and in every way it is an ideal home for himself and his little family, consisting of Mrs. Hargis and their two boys, Paul and Ralph.

Mrs. Hargis was Miss Etta U. Kotsch, born in Troy, Sept. 10, 1873, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Frank Kotsch. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hargis was at St. Joseph, June 15, 1898. Judge Gates performing the ceremony. Paul Jackson Hargis, eldest of the boys, was born Nov. 21, 1908, and Ralph Wayman Hargis, the youngest, on Oct. 22, 1913. They are fine youngsters who are proud of their parents and are keenly interested in their father's efficient management of the business of the Rock Island lines in Troy, and who knows but that they are to follow in their father's footsteps?

Mrs. Hargis is an ideal wife and mother and worthy of her high position as queen regent in their beautiful home, which she considers the highest position to which a true woman can aspire. She has a large circle of friends who admire her for her womanly graces and her broad and sympathetic nature.

Mr. Hargis is one of our most popular citizens. He knows everybody and is respected by everybody, sustaining an ideal relation to the community as a citizen. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and is popular in the blue lodge as well as in the commandery.

The subject of this sketch was elected mayor of Troy in the spring of 1913, and is serving a second term as a member of the council.

Rev. John B. Vernon

The Rev. Mr. John B. Vernon was a Methodist minister in Troy for more than two years. He was installed Mar. 16, 1904, and left Mar. 17, 1905, serving four points on the charge, viz: Troy, Wathena, Elwood and the Webber school house point. He preached three times every Sabbath and had four Sunday schools and three Epworth Leagues in addition. From this it will be seen that the Rev. Mr. Vernon not only was efficient, but a hard worker. He will be remembered by hundreds in Doniphan County for his cheerful countenance and big heart.

The Rev. Mr. Vernon was born in Jefferson County, Iowa, Nov. 27, 1862, and was married near Centralia, Kan., Mar. 10, 1887, to Miss Zillah Kuhn, the Rev. Mr. A. G. Murray performing the ceremony. To this union four children were born—Bertha Carrie, Dec. 29, 1887, near Corning, Kan.; Leah Esther, Sept. 27, 1890, at Axtel, Kan.; Chester Benson, Jan. 29, 1892, at Baldwin, Kan., and Lawrence Harazel, July 6, 1895, at Robinson, Kan.

During his pastorate the congregation has increased materially, and to all branches of the work he has brought an enthusiasm and energy that has made him loved and respected by all in his new community.

Shot from a Six-Shooter

On Aug. 12, 1878, some pusillanimous fellow fired a couple of shots at Bob Flickinger's dog while riding by the house on horseback, missed the dog but hit the headboard of a bed upon which Bob was asleep. The alarm awakened Bob and in less time than it takes to tell it, he was out in the yard to ascertain who the culprit was, but to no avail.

Fire in Leland Block

The Buildings, Which Were Situated on the North Side of the Public Square, Suffered Three Fires—Heroic Work By the Citizens of Troy Saved the Town—First Building Used for a Court House in Doniphan County Destroyed By Fire, November 15, 1899.

The property situated on the Leland & McClellan block on the north side of the public square passed through several disastrous fires. On the evening of Friday, Jan. 16, 1894, volumes of smoke were seen pouring out of the room occupied by a millinery store owned by Mrs. Eugene Brown, mother of Probate Judge Edwin Brown. The entire room was ablaze but after some hard and swift work the blaze was extinguished. The ceiling was burned through in several places. Over this store and the adjoining one, on the east, was the skating rink. Next to the millinery store on the east was George Schwartz's harness shop, who now resides in Denton. Then a stairway; then James W. McClellan's store. Over this store was Baker & Bell's office. The whole upper part was connected by openings so that had the fire gotten above, the entire block would have been destroyed, except the Leland store perhaps, which was next to the millinery store on the west and presented a brick wall with no openings. Mrs. Brown's stock was entirely destroyed. The loss was estimated at about $1,200.

Again in the early morning of November 15, 1899 as a party of young folks had gathered to watch for falling stars, Frank Sturgis stepped outside to take a look and discovered the McClellan hardware store was on fire. He gave the alarm and the crowd of boys ran to the scene of disaster, shouting Fire! Fire! Fire! Ed Appleby, who arrived first attempted to force an entrance but was met by a blow caused by the explosion of a powder keg in McClellan's store. On account of the scarcity of water very little could be done, but work was immediately directed toward saving the opera house which could have been saved had not the old "Higby House" caught. This was a historical building, a part of it having been built for a court house in 1856. As soon as it caught all attention was turned to it, neglecting the opera house until the fire had gained so great a headway it could not be checked. Attention was then turned to the Leland store. The stock of goods was soon carried to the street and the bucket brigade by swift and diligent work saved the building. The losses from this fire were indeed portentous. Those experiencing loss were: Cyrus Leland, Jr., J. W. McClellan, Baker & Bell, Chris Jenkinson, Thos. Triplett, W. A. Helvey, The Doniphan County State Bank, the Masonic, G. A. R. and W. R. C. lodges.

Peace from disastrous disturbance reigned in this block until the night of February 18, 1911, when again alarms were given that the old block was attacked by the enemy. Wood Sturgis, brother of Frank, who discovered the fire in the McClellan building twelve years before, saw flames of fire in the back of the Leland store on former occasions did good service this time. The tin roof over the store and the snow which had fallen during the day were also helpful factors in saving the nearby buildings from catching. The windows in the Chief office and post office, which stood across the street on the west side of Leland's store building, were broken by the intense heat and it was necessary to keep the bucket brigade busy on the front of these buildings. Winzer's furniture store occupied the room next to the Leland store and under the opera house. The next room east was occupied by Winzer's hardware store and above was Baker's law office, then came George Schuler's grocery store and a cream depot operated by Leonard Hargis; and next was the Hotel Avon. The contents of these buildings were carried into the street, but this afterward proved unnecessary as the flames were quenched before reaching them. The losses caused by this fire were quite heavy.

Cyrus Leland commenced business on that corner in 1866 in a little frame building which he moved away and replaced with the building destroyed by the last fire. The stock was the largest in the county and was always well kept.

WILLIAM E. REESE

Well Known Credit Man and Adjuster for Wholesalers in St. Joseph Is a Former Doniphan County Man.

William E. Reese, for several years past an adjuster for wholesale mercantile houses, and whose office is at 818 Corby, in St. Joseph, is a native of Doniphan County and the son of Evan Reese, who was one of the early-day citizens of Doniphan County.

Evan Reese, father of the subect of this sketch, was born in Wales, March 25, 1822. He came to America when a boy and at St. Louis on January 1, 1853, was married to Miss Christina Spicer, who also was born in England, July 29, 1828. They came to Kansas in April, 1861, by river boat from St. Louis to Atchison, where they bought an ox team and completed the journey to Doniphan County, landing one mile south of Troy. They spent one night on the journey in camp at Cold Springs near Bendena. They purchased a farm of eighty acres of Ed Davis, to which they added forty acres, purchased from Ike Tollman. This 120 acres still belongs to the family. Evan Reese died in Doniphan County June 29, 1902, and his wife died April 1, 1910, at the home of her son, 2522 Jule street, St. Joseph.

William E. Reese, the son of these pioneers, was born on the farm one mile south of Troy, September 6, 1864. He spent his boyhood days on the farm and was educated in the Climax School No. 9. At the age of seventeen he took up telegraphy, receiving instruction from H. H. Wheeler, then agent for the Grand Island railroad at Troy.

He soon mastered the mysteries of telegraphy and for a period of five years was employed at various places. At the time the Chicago, Kansas and Nebraska railroad, now known as the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, was built in the fall of 1886, Mr. Reese was given the position of operator, also assuming the position of passenger ticket agent in Troy, November 4, 1886. He was the first permanent operator employed after the road left the Missouri River. When the station was finally opened April 1, 1887, Mr. Reese was made agent, continuing until July 1, 1888, when he resigned to take a position in Colorado.

Four years were spent by Mr. Reese in the West. He returned in 1891, located in St. Joseph and engaged in telegraphy, being employed in the office of the auditor of the Burlington system there. From that he took up commercial work, first as a bookkeeper and later as credit man with the Englehart-Davison Mercantile Company. He held the position with that concern thirteen years.

In 1912 Mr. Reese took a position with the Tootle-Campbell Dry Goods Company as special agent and adjuster, a business for which he had become thoroughly qualified.

For the past two years Mr. Reese has specialized in adjustment work for large wholesale houses of St. Joseph, having an office at 818 Corby street. He is senior member of the organization known as the Reese Mercantile Adjustment Company. While employed in his various occupations Mr. Reese read law and, by hard knocks mastered his studies and, passing the examination, was admitted to the Missouri bar. His position as adjuster requires an expert knowledge of law, and he has built up a fairly lucrative practice. Mr. Reese is secretary of the Specialty Shoe Machinery Company of St. Joseph. He owns a good home in St. Joseph, and 160 acres of good western Kansas land.

Lorne T. Hargis

The Leading Undertaker of Doniphan County—A Native Son of Doniphan County, Who Made Good as a Soldier in the Spanish-American War; Was Member of Twentieth Kansas—Is a Successful Business Man and an Efficient Public Official.

Doniphan County has produced a great many native sons engaged in the different walks in life who are making good, but among these none is entitled to more credit for honorable conduct and successful achievement than is Lorne T. Hargis, our present county coronor, and the leading undertaker of Doniphan County.

Mr. Hargis was born on a farm near Brenner in Doniphan County, on December 27, 1878, his parents being Martin V. and Sarah J. Hargis, pioneer settlers, who had been attracted to Kansas in the early days by the wonderful fertility of the soil and by the wholesome conditions and influences that made it the best state in the Union for the rearing of their children.

The boy grew up on the farm a sturdy, wide-awake Kansan, ambitious to win success in whatever venture he might undertake. He completed his home education with a course in the high school. He was ambitious to go deeper, the better to fit himself for a business career, but the Spanish-American war, breaking out in 1897, took him out of school.

Like thousands of our native sons of Kansas, he was fired with patriotism and a desire to serve his country and its flag. Although only seventeen years old, he enlisted April 29, 1897, as a private in Company H of the Twentieth Kansas volunteer infantry, and served two years in the Philippines under Colonel (now Major-General) Fred Funston. Everybody who reads history will recall the muster-in at Topeka of that now famous regiment, the trip to San Francisco, the long wait at the Presidio, the voyage across the Pacific, then the splendid fighting of "our boys" in the Philippines, pushing their way through jungles, wading rivers, together with the hardships and privations, sickness and death of many of the Kansans, and the return home and muster-out at San Francisco, October 28, 1899. In all of which Lorne T. Hargis, the Doniphan County boy, had a part.

Following his honorable discharge from the army service in 1899, Lorne secured a position in the postoffice at Temple, Tex., which he filled with credit to himself and the government for six succeeding years, returning to Kansas at the time of the death of his father, which occurred April 20, 1905. The loss of his father decided the ambitious young man to remain here in his native county, as nowhere else in all of his travels were there better opportunities for a young man to engage in business.

Desiring to engage in the undertaking and embalming business, Mr. Hargis proceeded to prepare himself for that work. He went to Chicago and took a full course in the Barnes School of Sanitary Science and Embalming, being graduated from that institution in the spirng of 1910. With his brother, William, a business was established at Hiawatha in 1910, which was continued for about eighteen months, when William found it necessary to go West for his health.

Lorne T. Hargis then came to Troy and decided to start into the undertaking and embalming business, and on June 9, 1912, he purchased the undertaking establishment and business of M. L. Kemp. This establishment, including the neat and substantial office building now owned by Mr. Hargis, is one of the best and most complete in northeast Kansas. It provides thorough scientific and sanitary, as well as humane methods of care for and burial of the dead. Always adhering to right principles in the conduct of business, Mr. Hargis has builded up a large clientage in Doniphan County and has won the friendship and esteem of the people of the county.

Mr. Hargis' popularity won for him the nomination by the Republicans for county coroner in the campaign of 1914, and his election to that office by a substantial vote in the November election. He is now filling the office with honor to himself and economy to the taxpayers.

Mr. Hargis married Mrs. Leotha B. Mohler of Highland, on June 18, 1912, who had one son, Charles Oliver, who was born Nov. 25, 1907, in St. Joseph, at 624 East Missouri avenue. They have two children, Martin C., born May 17, 1913, and Clay M., born June 10, 1915. Mr. and Mrs. Hargis are both members of the Christian church and are among our best people.

On May 1st, 1914, the subect of this sketch opened an office in Wathena, and on September 1st following, D. O. Eberle began work in the office where he has remained since.

The Rev. A. E. Ryan, Kansas Man

Former Troy Methodist Pastor Born at Manhattan—Son Traveling Financial Agent for Kansas University—Daughter Supervisor of Music, Jackson (Minnesota) High School.

Perhaps no more popular preacher ever held a pulpit in Troy than the Rev. A. E. Ryan, former pastor of the Methodist church, where he officiated from 1909 to 1911. His sermons had the rare quality of being both practical and spiritual and were among the helpful influences of the community. In them he breathed the power of one who had the force of his convictions, and as a result his congregations were always large and attentive. His retirement from the pastorate in Troy was attended by many expressions of deep regrets from members of his congregation, and from other prominent citizens as well.

The Rev. Mr. Ryan is a Kansas man. He was born at Manhattan, Feb. 7, 1864, and attended the Clay Center high school, where he graduated in 1886. Education and romance seems to have been closely interwoven in his life, for he was married the following year to Miss Femma J. Marley of Clay Center, on July 20, 1887, by the Rev. John T. Mayor in the Methodist parsonage.

Rev. Mr. A. E. Ryan and wife, formerly of Troy, but now of St. Marys, Kansas.

Not only did this minister prove his ability as a preacher of the gospel, but he portrayed the life of his Master in his own life by early learning the trade of a carpenter. He planned and supervised the construction of the new Methodist church during his pastorate in Troy, and did a large share of the carpentry himself. In this he proved his popularity, as he appeared in the garb of a workingman during the week days, and later when the edifice was completed he filled its pulpit with just as much grace as he had while upon the scaffolds with his hammer and saw.

Next year following his marriage the young couple went to Meadville, Pa., where the husband attended Allegheny College. After his graduation he was licensed to preach at Edinboro, Pa., June 2, 1891, at the regular session of the district conference. His first sermon he delivered at Cleveland, Ohio, in the Jennings Avenue Methodist church, and in the spring of 1892 he was stationed at Saegertown, Pa., as a supply and was later given his first regular appointment at Volusia, New York.

Mrs. Ryan was among the well liked women in Troy and was always a willing helpmeet to her husband in his pastoral duties. She was ever ready to visit the sick, to wait upon the needy and to extend succor and encouragement to the distressed. She was active in her work among the societies of the church, and her leadership was ever appreciated by the other women who looked to her for guidance and suggestion. Her pew was never vacant unless sickness or other unavoidable causes kept her at home on Sunday morning and evening or during the midweek services. The success of her husband in his chosen work was largely attributed to her untiring efforts and interest in his vocation.

The Ryan children have become distinguished in the educational world. Frank W. Ryan in 1914 was professor of English at the Peacock Military College, San Antonia, Texas, and is now professor of science in the St. John's Military Academy, Salina, Kansas. In this capacity he has an opportunity to meet students of the most distinguished citizens of the state of Kansas, and the training that he received in the home of his parents is one of the assets which have contributed to his success. He was born at Meadville, Pennsylvania, July 25, 1888. Miss Grace Ryan has become one of the most proficient musicians who ever resided in Doniphan County. She has been elected supervisor of music in the State high school of Jackson, Minn. She was born at Volusia, New York, Dec. 22, 1892.

A Zealous Pastor

Reverend James M. Delezene, of the Troy Christian Church, Has Substantially Increased the Membership of His Congregation and Wiped Out a Large Indebtedness.

The many good Christian people of Troy take a keen interest in the growth and expansion of their respective churches, and the pastors in charge thereof. The members of the Christian Church have a well-established right to be proud in this respect, as the handsome edifice of this denomination is a credit to their zeal and energy, and also to the Rev. James M. Delezene, who accomplished remarkable results during his pastorate from September 1, 1913, to January 3, 1915.

When the Reverend Mr. Delezene came to the Troy Christian church, there was a debt of $1,100 on the building, which had been incurred by the building of an addition to the church proper. Immediately upon his arrival, he set about to liquidate this financial burden, with the co-operation of his congregation, and his efforts were admirably rewarded. The large debt has been entirely wiped out, and, furthermore, two more lots have been purchased from Mr. W. A. Helvey, to provide for future expansion of the church building. In addition to clearing up the church's indebtedness, this tireless worker obtained grand results in increasing the membership of his congregation, due in part, no doubt, to his pleasing personality and his recognized ability as a leading pulpit orator. Shortly after coming to Troy, Mr. Delezene saw that the Sunday school attendance was not what it should be, and he took steps to increase same. After much personal exertion and assistance from several members of the church, he had the gratification to gaze upon 658 attendants at the Sunday school session Easter Day, 1914, and it didn't stop there, either, for new members are gradually being added.

Rev. James M. Delezene was born in Louisville, Nebraska, April 12, 1882, and was educated in the public schools there and later at Cotner University at Lincoln. He completed his education at Campbell University, Holton. Mrs. Delezene was Miss Mabel Murdoch of Louisville, and they were married by Rev. Edward Clutter, an evangelistic clergyman. Two children have been born to them, Edward W., born March 3, 1909, and Marie, born Feb. 22, 1911. Mrs. Delezene is unusually interested in her husband's work, even for the wife of a preacher. She is the personification of activity in church work, and aided materially in lightening the burdens of her husband's labors, and in promoting the social and intellectual aspect of the church life of the Christian congregation. Reverend Delezene is surely very fortunate in having such a congenial helpmate.

During his pastorate, Reverend Delezene was instrumental in securing 147 new members. Much to the sorrow of his flock, he resigned his charge January 3, 1915, in order to devote his whole time to evangelistic work. His home will be in Troy. We feel safe in predicting a glorious future for the former pastor of the Christian church, as he has the knack of touching men's hearts in a gentle manner and getting gratifying responses, and his converts are the kind that stick; not the hysterical fanatics of a camp meeting, but sober, deep-thinking men and women. He has accomplished in Troy work that will live after him, and his friends and well-wishers give him God-speed in his new work.

Since the above was written, Rev. Mr. Delezene has been called to the Woodson Chapel in St. Joseph, which is located on St. Joseph avenue.

Ruth Louise was born June 30th, 1915, in the old John Frank Kotsch home in Troy.

Rev. Willam H. Sellheim

The Rev. William H. Sellheim was born on Independence Day, July 4, 1876, at Philadelphia, Pa. His early education was received in the East, in the City of Brotherly Love. When Mr. Sellheim decided to prepare for the ministry, he made no half-way calculations, but made a thorough job of it, and we imagine that is the scheme of his life, to do things thoroughly. He took a complete college course, and later studied at a theological seminary, where he was honorably graduated.

The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Delezene, formerly of Troy, who reside at 2511 St. Joseph avenue, St. Joseph, Missouri.

The Reverend Sellheim assumed the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church in Troy, September 12, 1914. This church had no regular minister for several years and the members had gradually taken to attending churches of other denominations. Now with a Presbyterian pastor in charge, the members of the church are coming back to the fold, and with the co-operation of his congregation, we feel justified in expecting great things of the new minister. Reverend Sellheim is of German parentage and speaks the language fluently.

In addition to a thorough preparation for his life's work, the subject of this sketch was for awhile in the writing game. During a year and a half's interruption in his studies he was engaged in reporting and editorial work on the Philadelphia dailies. In this capacity he served as a war correspondent in Cuba during the revolution. Among the mementoes in his possession that he now prizes is the passport given by this government and used by him in the war-torn island.

His interest in his work is shown by the fact that at the conclusion of his college and seminary course, he was not content to hunt up a charge with a good, fat salary attached, but volunteered for home mission work, and faithfully served his church in the remote fields of northwest New Mexico and southwest Colorado. His peculiar abilities soon asserted themselves here, and in addintion to his work as pastor, he had much to do with the development of the country. By reason of the excellency of his judgment, the saneness of his views and the administrative ability shown in matters gen -ally connected with these things, there fell to his lot the correspondence with reference to the extension, concession and urging of railroad enterprises, the opening of desert lands for settlement, the fostering and encouraging of a worthy immigration and preparing for the press copy and fact and data of the great San Juan country, practically giving into his nands the publicity and advertising of a country that is well-nigh an empire in itself.

All this was done without noise or fuss, and with a skill that is worthy of one of maturer years, and the work in every way was commendatory. In the matter of sincerity and disinterested loyalty, Mr. Sellheim is possessed in a large measure.

THOMAS BARTLEY NEAL

Thomas Bartley Neal was born on November 1st, 1846, in Galia County, Ohio, near Patriot. Enlisted in Company H, Fifty-First Missouri volunteer infantry, at Maryville, Missouri. Was mustered out in August, 1865, at Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Missouri. Was married to Mary E. Wilcox, December 25, 1870, near Maryville, Missouri. Their children are as follows. Mary I., Mrs. Dr. Frederick S. Seafers of Port Arthur, Texas; Ulysses A., of Lyle, Washington; Olive L., Mrs. Verne Wray of Pickering, Missouri; Olinda A., Mrs. LeRoy Bennett, of Riverton, Nebraska; Sophia A., Mrs. Lenis Parker, of Seward, Nebraska. Came to Troy the 15th of December, 1910, and bought a home a block and a half north of the northeast corner of the square.

Walton Powell

Walton Powell, a native of Kentucky, came to this country in October, 1838, at the age of eighteen years. He enlisted at Troy with Company C, Thirteenth infantry, and was mustered out at Little Rock, Arkansas. Mrs. Powell is still living, and they have two married daughters, Mrs. W. H. Finley and Mrs. J. F. Breeding, and two sons, G. E. and I. G. Powell. They own their residence in town and some farm land.

CHIEF WATHENA'S TENT THE FIRST MEETING PLACE OF THE METHODISTS IN DONIPHAN COUNTY

The Early History of the Methodist Church in England, the United States and Doniphan County, Kansas—How the Name "Methodist" Originated—Sons of Pioneer Methodist Reside in Wathena—The Tragic Death of One of the First Pastors.

(Contributed by Rev. W. M. Rogers.)

The Methodist Episcopal Church is the outgrowth of the great Wesleyan Revival of the 18th Century, and John Wesley as the instigator and organizer of the first church, deserves mention.

John Wesley was born at Epworth, England, June 17, 1703, and educated at Oxford University. It was while at Oxford that his methodical habits, touching his studies, deportment, dress and religious exercises, won for him the sobriquet of Methodist. The name was given in derision by his fellow students, most of whom scoffed at religion of any kind, but the name stuck and has ever since adhered to all who endorse John Wesley's interpretation of the Sciptural Truth.

After spending some years as a Professor at Oxford, at the same time preaching at Epworth and Wroote, he decided to accompany James Ogelthorpe to the new colony of Georgia in America. This trip was made in 1735, and he remained as rector of the Savannah Church until 1738. This was his only visit to America. The real Wesleyan Revival began upon his return to England in 1738. From that time until his death, March 2, 1791, Wesley was one of the most active men in England, preaching more than 40,000 sermons and traveling by horse and carriage a quarter of a million miles.

The first Methodist service in America was in 1765, when Philip Embury, an emigrant from Ireland, having been licensed to preach by Wesley, began preaching in his own home in New York. The work grew rapidly, and Mr. Wesley sent several preachers from England, one of them being Reverend Francis Asbury, who afterward became the First Bishop of the Church in America. The organization of the church in America was effected at the Christmas Conference, held at Baltimore, Md., December 24, 1784, England having in that year recognized American independence.

Mr. Wesley evidently thought it wise to sever the ecclesiastical connection also, and authorized the above action. From this beginning the church has grown until in America today, it has a membership of 7,328,829. The increase in membership for the year 1914 was 231,460, this being thirty per cent of the entire increase of the membership of the thirty leading denominations represented by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, from which the foregoing figures are taken.

Methodism found its way to Kansas in 1828, when a Mission was established among the Shawnee Indians. In 1844, Reverend James Gurley came from Ohio to work among the Wyandotte Indians; but the first official appointment was that of Reverend W. H. Goode, sent out by Bishop E. R. Ames. The Rev. Goode arrived July 4, 1854, and began his work within a few miles of Lawrence, Kansas.

The first annual conference in the state was held Oct. 23, 1856, with Bishop O. C. Baker presiding. The meeting was held in a tent and a company of armed men had been detailed to guarantee the Bishop safe passage to the place of meeting, as the country was full of a lawless element that took each and any opportunity to commit robbery or depredations of any nature.

The same year that Reverend Goode was made Presiding Elder of the Kansas-Nebraska District, 1854, the first Methodist service was held in Doniphan County in the tent of Chief Wathena on Peters Creek. The Indians were fervent converts, once the idea of religion was thoroughly understood and imbued. The following year three churches were organized; one at Smithton by Rev. Hiram Burch, one at Doniphan by Rev. A. L. Downey, and one at Palermo, but the name of the pastor is not obtainable, although it was probably one of the above.

Rev. Downey of Doniphan was ably assisted in his work at that place by Rev. Samuel Collins, who set up the first saw mill in that town. Politics were a serious issue in those days, and Mr. Collins met a tragic death in the autumn of 1855, being shot to death by an unseen enemy.

By 1860 there were eleven Methodist Church organizations in Doniphan County. One of the most active workers in those early days was Rev. B. F. Bowman, who organized the Troy Church, and traveled much over the county. His sons now reside at Wathena. The Methodist churches in Doniphan County aggregate about one thousand members and jointly own property valued at $52,000.

Charles Stewart, Born 1813

One of the early residents of Doniphan County was a Kentucky man who emigrated to Kansas with his wife, Catherine, as early as 1855. It was in those days that real heroes lived, when men had to hew raw lumber for homes and dodge rattlesnakes and bad Indians at the same time. The Stewarts first lived at what was then called Cottonwood Springs, on a farm now owned by Hugh Finklea, two miles south of Troy, known as the old Chamberlain farm. Later they moved to the present site of Troy, where Mr. Stewart and his oldest son, Thomas, helped to lay out the town of Troy. Mr. Stewart's effort and his public spirit were rewarded by his friends who elevated him to the office of sheriff of Doniphan County, which office he filled acceptably and well for a number of years. Later he acted as deputy.

Mr. Stewart's oldest daughter, Martha, was married March 12, 1861, to William Warner of Lincolnshire, England, who came to Doniphan County in 1859, when twenty-three years old. Mr. Warner was a good citizen, an industrious man, and reared a large family, who are good citizens.

Retired Minister of Kansas Conference Remembers Pastorate in Troy With Pleasure—Father of Mrs. E. E. Doughty of Troy.

It gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity of filling a small space in this edition, as I can thus publicly express my appreciation of the many friends I have in Doniphan County, and of the courtesies extended me while pastor of the Troy Methodist Church.

I was the humble instrument of my Master in bringing into the church several souls, who are now faithful Christians and good church workers. I was appointed pastor at Troy by Bishop A. G. Andrews in 1896, and was there two years, 1896 and 1897. I was preceded by Rev. L. L. McDougal, and was succeeded by Rev. Thomas Campbell, both very able and willing servants of the Lord.

Rev. C. M. Riggle, formerly of Troy.

During my pastorate the old church was remodeled, a new roof put on, new windows installed, and a practically new building was the result, at the nominal cost of $1,000. I shall always recall the Troy Church as a place where I made many friends and was made to feel very comfortable and happy while I was among them. Troy is also the home of my daughter, Mrs. E. E. Doughty. My other daughter, Mrs. R. B. Arnold, resides at Hoxie, Kansas. Her husband is a jeweler and optician. Ed Doughty is so well known in Troy that it is not necessary for me to introduce him. Both of my children have good homes, for which I am grateful, and I take great pleasure in visiting them.

On account of failing health, I accepted a retired relation in the Kansas conference, of which I have been a member since 1881, and at present reside at 1132 College Ave., Topeka, Kansas, on the Lowman car line, where we will be pleased to welcome our friends. REV. C. N. RIGGLE.

Rev. James Barton Gibson

The Rev. James Barton Gibson, a former Doniphan County minister, who is remembered here, was born in Warren County, Ill., on Dec. 19, 1852, and was educated in the common schools. He received a license to preach when only 17 years old. He came to Kansas on March 10, 1882, and preached his first season at Mt. Ida, Anderson County. On July 18, 1876, he was married at Creston, Iowa, to Miss Sirrelda J. Scott, and to this union were born two children, both boys. They are Arthur H., who resides in Kansas City, Mo., and Roy R., who also lives there. The Rev. Mr. Gibson was in Troy for three years from 1890 until 1893, and will be recalled best as the man who raised the money and built the Methodist parsonage. At the present time he lives at No. 1518 Lane street, Topeka, Kan.

Rev. George W. Bell

The Rev. George Whitney Bell is now the pastor of a flourishing church at Nicholasville, Ky. He was born at Weston, Mo., on Feb. 12, 1856, and received his early education in the country schools, later graduating from Mt. Carmack Seminary and Park College. The Rev. Bell married Miss Joanna Fritzlen, and to their union, four children have been born. They are, Miriam, Herrick, Jessamina and Katherine. The Rev. Mr. Bell has occupied several pastorates with great credit and has given universal satisfaction to the communities in which he has served. The subject of this sketch is a brother to A. C. Bell, an attorney of Troy.

Rev. William L. Morris

The Rev. William L. Morris, whom everyone in Troy, except the younger generation, remembers distinctly, is at present located in Fort Scott, Kan. The Rev. Morris was pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church here from April, 1906, to 1909. During his last year here, he started a campaign to raise funds for the construction of a new church building. Practically every innovation was tried and at the end of a successful six weeks or more of work a total of $2,500 was turned into the church treasury. The Rev. Morris also was a pastor at Wathena and Elwood. In the latter place he inaugurated a movement to enlarge the congregation, and added a large number, if not doubled it. While in Wathena he succeeded in obtaining pledges and cash to the extent to $1,300 for a parsonage, which since has been constructed through his efforts. Since his departure from Doniphan County, the Rev. Morris has had a most successful career in Fort Scott, adding sixty-three members to his church there.

Rev. Cecil E. Sheets, formerly of Troy.

AN ENERGETIC PASTOR

Rev. Mr. Cecil E. Sheets, of the Troy Baptist Church, Has Been Highly Successful in Ministering to His Congregation.

The office of pastor to an intelligent congregation must be administered by a clergyman with a discerning understanding of scriptural interpretation. He must not only adapt himself to the progressive tendency of the times, but must also combine spiritual vigilance with worldly admonition.

Such are the attributes of the Rev. Cecil E. Sheets, pastor of the Troy Baptist Church, who is a successful minister in every sense of the word. The members of his congregation have realized the fact and they have a sincere appreciation of his energetic labors.

Although Reverend Mr. Sheets has only been in Troy since May Day of last year, he has proved himself to be a clergyman of unusual religious zeal, with a predominating instinct to have others do unto their neighbor as they should wish to have done to themselves.

Rev. Cecil E. Sheets has come in contact with the world in a manner calculated to equip him with a keen insight into the ways of life. Born in Harrison County, West Virginia, November 11, 1871, Mr. Sheets is a sure enough son of the sunny South. After going through the public schools of his native place, he attended Broaddus Institute at Clarksburg, West Virginia, and later took a course at the State University at Morgantown.

For fifteen years Reverend Mr. Sheets was engaged as a school teacher, but his natural inclinations always pointed toward the church, and he was licensed to preach the gospel March 6, 1897, and ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry May 8, 1907, at Bristol, West Virginia. Reverend Mr. Sheets was married March 27, 1897, to Miss Lethe Columbia Olive Kirkpatrick of Glenville, West Virginia, and four bright children have been born to this union. They are: Hazel Irene, born January 15, 1898, at Morgantown, West Virginia; Cecil Wilbur, born November 10, 1899, at Troy, West Virginia; Wayland Franklin, born December 22, 1903, at Baldwin, West Virginia, and Virgil Dana, born July 30, 1905, at Troy, West Virginia.

Mrs. Sheets is a fine lady, and her efforts are mostly devoted to helping her husband and spreading sunshine among the dark places in the world.

Since the above was written The Rev. Mr. Cecil E. Sheets has been called to the Baptist church at White City, Missouri.

Church Incorporation

At a meeting called for that purpose on the 21st day of May, 1866, at the Presbyterian Church in this town, a society was organized under the title of the Methodist Episcopal Church Corporation, for the purpose of maintaining a house or place of worship in the town of Troy.

D. M. Johnston, Geo. H. Mosley, John Rhue, J. Y. McAdams, J. A. Wood, Chas. Rappelye, Geo. Loid, A. B. Burr, John Holden, N. Redd, X. K. Stout, Albert Perry and E. S. Davis associated themselves together as incorporators under an act of the legislature, approved Feb. 27, 1866, after which they immediately held a meeting and proceeded to the election of officers, which resulted as follows: D. M. Johnston as president and Chas. Rappelye as secretary.

A board of trustees was also elected, consisting of Messrs. Johnston, Rappelye, Davis, Perry, Mosley, Rhue and Burr. The board of trustees then met and elected D. M. Johnston president, Chas. Rappelye secretary, and A. B. Burr treasurer. Albert Perry, E. S. Davis and J. A. Wood were appointed a committee to select a lot for the church. Also Geo. H. Mosley, J. A. Wood and E. S. Davis were appointed a building committee. D. M. Johnston, Chas. Rappelye and John Rhue were appointed a committee to solicit subscribers for erecting a church building. Monday evening, May 21st, at 8 p. m., the board of trustees met at the Presbyterian Church and the committee to select a lot reported that they had chosen Lot 6, in Block 13, in Troy, upon which to construct the church.—Troy Weekly Reporter, May 24, 1866.

Mount Olive Cemetery

We are glad to learn that the cemetery has been finally located on the land of Rev. F. E. Shelden and J. C. Power, north of Mr. Shelden's barn. A meeting for the purpose of electing officers to lay out the ground, to sell lots and inclose the same, will be held Thursday, December 13th, at the court house. The bells of the church will ring to remind people of the hour of assembling. At the meeting held in the court house, X. K. Stout, Albert Perry, H. C. Hawkins, Charley Higby and Mr. Baker were appointed a committee to lay out the cemetery.—Troy Weekly Reporter, Dec. 13, 1866.

McClellan taught his first school in Doniphan County; Mt. Vernon, which was laid out just north of Joe Hargis' farm, five miles north of Troy, were vacated.

Rev. J. B. Gibson, formerly of Troy.

On April 23, 1866, a brass band was organized in Troy by Mr. Nixon, with Fred Lehman as instructor, but the first name of Mr. Nixon is omitted, and we are unable to state to whom credit should be given for the organization of this band in our historical edition. This, however, was the first band organized in Troy.

J. C. Myers, D. S.

He Began Practicing in Ohio Fifty Years Ago, and Is Still at It—A Veteran of the Civil War and an Honored Citizen of Troy for More Than Thirty-Seven Years—His Church Activities.

Dr. J. C. Myers, who has been a citizen of Troy since early in the year 1878, probably is the oldest practicing dentist in Kansas in the number of years of actual service. He began practicing in Ohio in 1865, after seeing service as a musician in an infantry regiment, and, save for an occasional brief vacation for rest and recreation, he has pursued that honorable profession continuously to this date.

Such a record of usefulness to humanity is not vouchsafed to every man. It comes only to those who, possessing the intelligence and skill required, apply themselves with heart and mind and right living to the life tasks set before them. It is the man who loves his profession, who believes in it religiously, and who practices by the Golden Rule that is able to pursue the practice of dentistry, as Dr. Myers has, for one-half century and still have a desire to practice to the end of his life. Thus it is not difficult to understand with what veneration and esteem he is held by the profession of dentistry and by the people among whom he has lived and practiced for so many years.

Dr. J. C. Myers was born in Harrison County, Ohio, Aug. 4, 1844, when the Buckeye state was new and its largest city, Cincinnati, was only a river town with some metropolitan aspirations, and Kansas was unheard of save as a part of the Great American desert, peopled with murderous bands of Indians driven there by the tide of civilization that was slowly advancing westward. As a boy he attended school and by applying himself to his duties with something of the same zeal that characterized his later life he achieved a good education; and it was the kind of an education—gained by constant digging and hard knocks—that counts most for future success in life.

Encouraged by his parents, who were the kind of plain, old-fashioned people whose fondest hopes were centered in their children, the subject of this sketch made a study of dentistry with a view to making it a life profession. He studied diligently early and late and, being the kind of a young man who knew no such word as fail, he mastered the profession.

The Civil War was on in the year 1864, and Ohio was sending her bravest and best sons to fight for the preservation of the Union. The young dentist was twenty years old when he marched away with the other patriotic young men of his community as members of Company F, in a regiment of Ohio volunteer infantry. He had learned to play the fife and the bugle during the years the martial spirit ran high, and thus he became a fifer, serving with his company until Sept. 1st, when he was honorably discharged. With his instrument he could be of service to his country. For the thrilling notes of the bugle and horn and the rythmic beat of the drum have ever inspired men to deeds of valor and patriotism.

The year 1865 was an important year in the life of this young man, for it marked the beginning of his career as a practicing dentist. He chose the town of Uhrichville, Ohio, as his field and for five years he practiced there with success, earning an enviable reputation as dentist and citizen, and establishing himself in a high social position and as a religious worker.

Although enjoying a large measure of success in Ohio, the young Dr. Myers saw greater possibilities for a young man in Kansas, which was drawing thousands of young men from the Eastern and Middle states. Early in the spring of 1870 he came to Doniphan County and decided to locate here permanently. The following year, or to be exact, Sept. 12, 1871, Dr. Myers was married to Miss Martha A. Campbell, of Highland, who was born Sept. 7, 1844, in Pittsburg, Pa. Shortly after their marriage the doctor was called back to Ohio. He remained there seven years until, in 1878, he again heard the call of Kansas, and this time it was to settle down here in our city of Troy for the remainder of his life.

Through all the years that have followed, Dr. Myers and his family have been regarded as among the best people of Troy and this community.

As a man and citizen, Dr. Myers is universally liked. He and all the members of his family are Methodists and have been associated with the religious life of the community. As a religious worker, Sunday school superintendent and teacher he has exerted a quiet influence that has been felt throughout the community. Dr. Myers' interpretation of the Bible is always simple and adapted to the needs of the present everyday life. His talks to the Sunday school pupils are practical and are spiritual uplifts. He and his family are constant in their attendance at Sunday school and religious services. In the family circle, Dr. Myers is an ideal companion to his children, and a noble friend and counsellor to those in trouble or distress.

Mrs. Myers was a true wife and mother, an inspiration to her husband and children, and a neighbor who was sympathetic and kind. During her life in Troy she was a member of the church in which, with her husband, she labored faithfully for the Master. When she died Nov. 8, 1908, the people of the town and country felt that they had lost one of their bravest, noblest and best true Christian women.

The children of Dr. and Mrs. Myers are living useful and honorable lives. The two daughters are Mary Alberta, now Mrs. Robert B. Castle of Troy, and Ada E., who is the wife of O. A. Dubach, living on a farm three miles south of Troy. The girls reflect great credit on their parents. The son, Dr. Walter C. Myers, resides in Savannah, Missouri, where he is one of the leading physicians and progressive citizens and a worthy son of his father and mother.

POSTMASTER GEORGE H. BURCKHALTER

Coming to Troy in 1880 He Has Made a Successful Career as a Business Man and Progressive Citizen, and the Owner of a Substantial Business Building on South Main Street—Is Also Troy's Postmaster.

George H. Burckhalter, postmaster of Troy, is one of the town's most enterprising and substantial citizens, and the kind of a man who might appropriately be called a town builder. He is of the rugged, dependable type of our citizenship that came from the German stock, and whose influence for good is felt in almost every phase of social, business and political life.

Our postmaster was born in Taylorville, Muskingum County, Ohio, Oct. 18, 1861. His earliest recollections were of the soldiers coming back to their homes after those years of bloody civil strife and war. While too young at the time to grasp their full significance, these things left impressions on his mind that were to find expression all through his life in his patriotism and love for his country, a deep feeling of sympathy for humanity and a sense of fairness and justice in all his dealings with his fellow men. Growing up in that Ohio community and receiving a practical education in the schools, he early realized the stern realities of life and through experience and observation was taught that great success in anything that is worth while comes only through honest effort.

The West, which was calling many ambitious young men from his community, appealed to him. He came to Kansas at the age of eighteen (in the spring of 1880), locating at Troy. Finding no suitable employment here at the time he went to White Cloud. There he entered the store of H. H. Hines—and this was the move that determined him to follow merchandising as a life occupation. Under the training of Mr. Hines, who was a kindly soul of unimpeachable integrity and withal a practical business man, this Ohio youth received the business experience that equipped him for life as one of our most prosperous tradesmen. While selling merchandise to the farmer folks in those early years he was too occupied to permit himself to become homesick for his native state, and before the novelty of his new situation wore off he found himself one of the most enthusiastic Kansans in that community.

In 1883 young Burckhalter's business ability, his popularity with the customers and his affable manner, won him a higher place in the store of C. F. Van Buskirk in Troy. His new employer was impressed with Burckhalter and within five years made him a partner in the business. The partnership beginning in 1888 the two men, working together in harmony and to no cross purposes, builded up a business that soon made their establishment one of the most popular trading places in northeast Kansas. This partnership was continued with uninterrupted prosperity until the death of Mr. Van Buskirk, Feb. 12, 1888. Then, by purchasing the interest of his late partner, Mr. Burckhalter became sole proprietor.

Mr. Burckhalter had been associated with practical business men who had been prosperous. He had profited by this association, not alone in the buying and selling sides of the business, but in all the intricacies and problems of store management. His ambition was to make the Burckhalter store not merely a place for the people of town and country to buy their necessary supplies, but to make it a potent factor in the life of the community, rather a semi-public community enterprise whose chief function should be to encourage development and to in every honorable way advance the material interests of the people. In this he was successful. He has shown us what a real business man can do for his community, besides giving us a fine example of what a mercantile establishment should be in its right relations to the public.

Mr. Burckhalter's popularity among the people and his success as a business man were the chief qualifications that brought him recognition when he received the appointment as postmaster of Troy on May 1, 1914, by President Woodrow Wilson. He took charge of the office and proceeded to conduct its affairs as he had conducted his own private affairs. Always courteous and obliging to the patrons he gave attention to every detail of the postal business. He studied the schedules of mail trains in and out of Troy and so managed that at no time has there been delay on his account in the forwarding of outgoing mail or in the distribution of incoming mail. He introduced business methods into Uncle Sam's mail handling in Troy and the patrons of the office as well as the postoffice department, have on more than one occasion shown their appreciation of his administration. His one great desire is to please the people whose mail it is his duty to handle, and he has succeeded. He is one of the best postmasters the town ever had.

Mr. Burckhalter is the owner of a fine building on South Main street, in which is located a jewelry store. He has a splendid home and enjoys the highest esteem of all good citizens. His wife was Miss Louisa T. Nelson, to whom he was married Oct. 10, 1910. She was a Doniphan County girl and the daughter of parents who came from the sturdy stock of northern Europe. She is a woman of intelligence and culture, who is a fit companion and helpmeet for a business man and one of the town's best citizens.

The Colored Christian Church, situated in East Troy, donated by Clark Bros.

The Colored Christian Church which stands in the southeast part of Troy, was moved on to the lot where it now stands November 21, 1894. On October 29, 1894, the church board bought tax title from the county for the lot on which it stands and same was recorded on the above date. The building before it was moved was occupied by Stephen Shew, and stood on the property bought by W. L. and W. S. Clark, the millers. When they built the mill, the church board made a proposition to buy the old building with the intention of converting it into a church and the Clark brothers said that they would donate the building to the colored members of the Christian Church if they desired to use it for that purpose. Their liberality was accepted and the church was moved and placed on the lot where it now stands, on November 21, 1894.

Troy Baptist Church

Organized in the Summer of 1858, This Church Has a Record of Services and Preaching Up to 1872—No History of Events From Then Until 1891, When the Congregation Was Reorganized and the Present Baptist Church Built—Dedicated Feb. 14, 1892.

The history of the Troy Baptist Church is an interesting one and goes back to its organization in the summer of 1858. The Baptists of that early time took intense pride in the knowledge that the first preaching of the gospel on Kansas soil was by a Baptist who established a mission among the Shawnees in 1831. This was believed to have been located six miles west of the present site of Kansas City, but all the early evidence of its existence have long since disappeared.

The original organization of the present Baptist Church of Troy was small numerically, but it was maintained for over fourteen years, at times under discouraging conditions. James M. Trant, was a licensed preacher in the first years of the church and he later served as a chaplain in the Union army. Isaac Graves and Mr. Trant were the senior deacons after the organization of the church. Some of the other original members were Mrs. Graves, J. H. Earhart and Paul F. Werner.

On October 3, 1858, the Troy Baptist Church was represented in organizing what is today the Missouri River and Northeast Kansas Baptist Association. The meeting was held in the Atchison Baptist Church and was attended by sixteen messengers from Troy and the other four churches situated in northeast Kansas, besides representatives from the Atchison church.

Troy Baptist Church

Since the organization of the Troy church in 1858, there is a record of services and preaching up to 1872. From that time until 1891 there is no definite data obtainable and the size of the congregation or the identity of the preachers cannot be ascertained. It is believed that services were at infrequent intervals, as many of the people who had been active in the earlier years of the church had scattered to other parts of the country.

During the year 1891 the church was reorganized with nineteen members, most of whom came from the Highland Station Church. This number has grown to the handsome total of 140 members at the present time. The first business of importance transacted by the reorganized body was the calling of Rev. G. W. Wilson to the pastorate on September 11, 1891. He served until May 6, 1892.

While Reverend Mr. Wilson was pastor a movement was set on foot for a new church and the erection of the present house of worship was begun late in the fall of 1891. The building was completed and dedicated February 14, 1892. Reverend Mr. Wilson was succeeded in charge of the congregation the following May, by Rev. J. G. Clark, who served four years, or until May, 1896.

Rev. Carl Matherson of St. Joseph, Mo., followed Mr. Clark as pastor for one year, and Rev. E. W. Miller was next called. He served until February 12, 1898. The next pastor was Rev. T. S. McGill, who preached from May 8, 1898, to October 1, 1899. Rev. B. B. Brink was then called, and he served until January, 1901. During his pastorate on the third Sunday in July, 1899, J. H. Earhart and Paul F. Werner were both ordained as deacons, and they are still living and acting deacons.

On September 7, 1901, Rev. William Richards was called and this call was renewed in October, 1902, but the minister did not accept. April 11, 1903, Rev. M. L. Kemp was called for half time and served as pastor until September 1, 1906, when he resigned. The resignation was accepted by the church, but, on motion of Paul F. Werner the congregation requested him to serve until a pastor could be secured.

Reverend Mr. Kemp agreed to this and served the church until October, 1906, when Reverend Mr. Boyle was called, and served for one year. Novemer 29, 1907, Rev. A. G. Hoffman, of Hiawatha, was called and served as pastor until the following Novemer 29. During the pastorate of Reverend Mr. Hoffman an arrangement was made, through invitation of the Atchison church, whereby the Northeast Baptist Association met in jubilee session with the Missouri River Baptist Association in Atchson on September 1, 2, 3, 4, 1908. The jubilee was held for the special and fitting purpose of celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the joint organization of the Baptist bodies in the Atchison church in 1858.

At the jubilee meeting the Troy Baptist Church reported as follows: "We recall with deep gratitude God's greatest goodness to us; eleven have been added to our number during the year by baptism; we have half time service by Rev. G. A. Hoffman; one death, Brother Horr, converted and baptized at eighty-five, died last November at ninety-nine years of age; forty-seven members of the Missionary Baptist Church have paid $18.90 for the cause of Christ beyond their own doors."

On October 9, 1910, the Troy Baptist church called Rev. Orlo Jeffries, and that minister served until March 1, 1911. On May 7 of that year, Rev. Walter Matherson, a young clergyman from William Jewell College, was called and served the church until February 9, 1913.

In February, 1914, Evangelist James A. Armstrong and wife, and Miss Naoma Fox, all of Leon, Iowa, came to the Troy Baptist Church and conducted a meeting extending over six weeks. The result of this meeting was most gratifying. Sixty persons were added to the church, forty-five by baptism. This substantial addition in membership greatly encouraged the church and a call was issued to Rev. C. E. Sheets, of Sydney, Iowa, who assumed the pastorate on April 10, 1914, and is now a resident citizen of Troy. The new pastor is well liked by his congregation, and it is more than likely he will be retained permanently. The church has a healthy membership and the people are liberal in their religious and every-day lives.

The Troy Baptist Church now enjoys the full time service from the pastor. It has weekly prayer meetings, an active Ladies' Aid Society, a well-organized graded Sunday school and an energetic Baptist Young People's Union.

Samuel A. Conaway

Eminently Respected Citizen of Troy Has Led an Active Life and Prospered—Great Reputation as a Successful Auctioneer, Which Calling He Followed Until a Few Years Ago—Has Engaged in Farming and Also Conducted a Modern Undertaking Establishment—Takes Life Easy Now—Occasionally Calls a Sale.

Samuel A. Conaway is one of the highly respected citizens of Troy who commands the esteem of thousands of friends throughout Doniphan County. His active business career in various capacities has set an example for the younger generation to emulate.

Coming to Kansas in 1867, Mr. Conaway settled in Doniphan County. He was fresh from active participation in the Civil War and, although young in years, he had the grit and stamina of a veteran. His upright personality and genial disposition helped materially in smoothing out the rough spots on the road to success.

Mr. Conaway is a Buckeye, having been born at Zanesville, Muskingum County, Ohio, January 24, 1845. When less than twenty years old he enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Seventy-Eighth volunteer infantry of Ohio, on September 26, 1864. He was mustered into service at Newark, Ohio, and at once sent to the front.

The Civil War was in the last stages of a life and death struggle and from the moment Mr. Conaway donned a uniform he saw plenty of active campaigning, until he was mustered out at Louisville, Kentucky, July 11, 1865. His war record was a good one and his honorable discharge shows that he participated in some lively war doings of the times.

The war having been officially declared over, some time before Mr. Conaway was mustered out, he found time to take a run home for a visit to the old folks at Zanesville, and during his furlough was married to Miss Elizabeth Ann Winn, at Zanesville, on June 20, 1865. Then he went back to camp, and was mustered out with his regiment.

Samuel A. Conaway had his eyes turned toward the West ever since he was a lad and in 1867 came to Doniphan County. He followed the business of auctioneer from the time of his arrival, on November 4, 1867, and cried sales throughout the county with remarkable success until a few years ago. During his career as an auctioneer, Mr. Conaway had practical control of all the business in the eastern half of Doniphan County. A few years ago his undertaking business had expanded to such proportions that he abandoned the sales field in order to devote his time to the other. He felt that the auction business could be safely left in younger hands, but occasionally he is called upon by some of his old patrons to cry a sale, and he never fails to accede to the wishes of his friends. Mr. Conaway likes the business of crying sales, but he desires to avoid exposure in inclement weather.

When he first came to Doniphan County, Mr. Conaway settled on the Goomer place, four miles northeast of Troy, where he lived for twenty years. When he sold the farm to S. R. Horn, he rented the old Thompson place, where John Hautzenrader lives now. Then he bought the old Stout farm, seven miles east of Troy, where he lived twenty years. At the expiration of that time Mr. Conaway came to Troy and engaged in the implement business which he later disposed of to embark in the undertaking business. This he sold out to L. T. Hargis on February 8, 1915.

Mr. Conaway has had an exceptionally happy married life. Mrs. Conaway is an ideal wife, with a most sociable disposition. She is noted as a tactful entertainer and has a wide circle of friends. There were three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Conaway, Ida M. (Mrs. John Verhuel) of Monroe, Iowa, whose husband is engaged in farming; George A., for the past twenty years station agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Bigelow, Missouri, and Ellis J., who has been associated with his father in the undertaking business in Troy, and is one of the best known undertakers in Doniphan County.

Col. S. A. Conaway

There are five grandchildren in the Conaway family, all girls. Rowena A. is the daughter of George A. Conaway. She was born in Bigelow, Missouri, November 12, 1903. The remaining four are daughters of Ellis J. Conaway, and the dates of their birth are as follows: Goldie Marie, born August 8, 1898; Mabel Louise, born August 3, 1900; Mildred Veneta, born October 3, 1903, and Mary Ellis, born March 17, 1907.

James C. Penrod

James C. Penrod, the celebrated millwright of Kansas City, Kan., is a native of Troy. Mr. Penrod was born here Oct. 12, 1866, 374 years after Columbus discovered America. He received his early education in the public schools and remained here until he was twenty-one years of age, when he went to Filley, Page County, Nebraska. On April 5, 1889, he was married to Miss Eugenia Louisa Overt, a prominent and efficient school teacher of Gage County, who was well and favorably known throughout her native state. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Goldsmith, the Methodist Episcopal minister of her church.

Mr. Penrod made a decided success in Filley. During the last administration of President Cleveland, from 1890 to 1894, he served as postmaster, and in these duties he was ably assisted by his wife. He has one sister and three brothers as follows: Mrs. George H. Strong of Kansas City, Mo.; Cyrus Louis, of Altus, Okla.; Charles Edwin, of Horton, Kan., and John Frank Penrod of Baker, Ore. Mr. Penrod left Filley some years ago, when his duties in a larger field of endeavor began to call for extensive travel. He has placed machinery in mills from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast and from the Dominion of Canada to the Gulf of Mexico. His reputation in this field is national. Mr. Penrod at the present time resides at No. 32 South Sixteenth street, Kansas City, Kan.

Fine Record as Sheriff

Joseph Griffin Was Second Democratic Sheriff of Doniphan County in More Than Twenty Years—Served Two Years and Is Conceded to Be One of the Best and Most Capable Officials the County Ever Had—Served Four Years as Deputy Under Former Sheriff Ham D. Kent.

Few public officials ever go out of office with such a general regard from the people at large as has Joseph Griffin, who completed two highly successful terms as sheriff of Doniphan County on January 11, 1915.

This fact is especially noticeable in a Republican stronghold, like Doniphan County, because of the significant fact that Mr. Griffin was the second Democratic sheriff to be elected in more than a score of years.

While in office, Joseph Griffin performed his duty in a fearless manner, and is considered by the tax-payers and voters of Doniphan County to have been one of the best sheriffs the county ever had.

The world knows that one of the essential elements toward being a successful sheriff is to be endowed with a cool head and a judicious mind. In the performance of his duty the sheriff runs up against difficult and dangerous situations very frequently and he must be both resourceful and courageous. Joseph Griffin was all that and a lot more beside.

When Mr. Griffin was elected sheriff in 1910, he did not go into office inexperienced. The previous four years he had every opportunity to get acquainted with the duties and responsibilities of the position as deputy sheriff under Ham D. Kent, as the chief.

Joseph Griffin was born in DeKalb County, Missouri, August 22, 1872, and had the misfortune to lose his father at the age of fourteen years. He was educated at Maysville, Mo., and came to Doniphan County on March 13, 1892, Mr. Griffin settled in Severance, where he was engaged in the livery business, when Sheriff Ham D. Kent appointed him his deputy in January, 1907. It was at the expiration of sheriff Kent's last term of office in 1910 that Mr. Griffin's numerous friends all over the county urged him to make the race for sheriff himself.

Realizing that the county was strongly Republican, Mr. Griffin was rather reluctant to take the nomination at first, but the pressure brought to bear by friends of every political faith finally decided him, and he was elected by a substantial majority. He was re-elected at the expiration of his two-year term, and could probably repeat the performance, but for the fact that the law does not permit the sheriff to have but two consecutive terms in office.

Mr. Griffin was married on October 15, 1901, to Miss Ida Pry at Severance. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. T. Sawyer, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mrs. Griffin is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willet A. Pry. Her mother, Mrs. Jane Pry, still resides in Severance. One child has been born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Griffin. He is named Clarence Norman, and his birthday was March 10, 1904.

Mrs. Nancy Griffin, mother of the former sheriff, is seventy-six years old and resides near Cosby, Missouri, at the present time.

If at any future time Joe should decide to again mix in county politcs, he could be elected to most any office to which he would aspire.

J. TILDEN SAPP

The Pastor of the First Christian Church of Troy Is a Descendant of One of Lord Calvert's Scotch-Irish Emigrants of 1635, a Native of Illinois and a Graduate of Christian University at Canton, Missouri.

The Rev. Mr. J. Tilden Sapp, pastor of the First Christian Church of Troy, although a resident of the city a little less than one year, has won a place among the leading ministers of this part of Kansas because of his leadership in the work for civic righteousness and for the spiritual uplift of his congregation and the community.

The Rev. Mr. Sapp is a native of Illinois, born in the village of Summum, in Fulton County of that state, September 23, 1876. His father was John Nelson Sapp, who was a soldier in the Civil War in the Twenty-eighth Illinois Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, serving four years. The mother of the subject of this sketch was Elizabeth A. Porter, who was married to John Nelson Sapp in the year 1840. She died when the son, J. Tilden Sapp, was only three years old, leaving him in the care of a married sister.

The Rev. Mr. Sapp's aggressive work in the ministry comes in a certain measure from the fact that his ancestors as far back as he can trace their lineage were aggressive in whatever they undertook. Among Lord Calvert's passengers on his second voyage to America in 1635 was John Sapp, of Scotch-Irish parentage, from whom this Troy minister traces his lineage. The Sapps through all their history were not especially educated men but men who made their influence for good count for much, and certainly they were among the strong men of character and intelligence in the Colonial days as they are in the Twentieth Century, at all times employing their efforts for the betterment of society and for that which contributes to the making of Christian citizenship.

One of the essentials of a successful ministerial career is education. From early boyhood even to the present day the subject of this sketch has applied himself diligently to study to better equip himself for the work in which he is engaged. He attended the schools in his native county of Fulton in Illinois, always with a view of pursuing a public career. He preached his first sermon at Kerton Valley, Illinois, August 24, 1902. In November of that year he was ordained as a minister of the Gospel.

On December 6, 1899, the Rev. Mr. Sapp was married to Miss Jennie Athey at Lewiston, Illinois, by the Rev. J. B. Mayfield of the Christian Church of that place. Mrs. Sapp's parents were Mr. and Mrs. Asbury Athey, sturdy pioneer farmer folks of Fulton County, Illinois. She was born in Appanoose County, Iowa, May 8, 1875. Their home was in Fulton County until September, 1904, and Mrs. Sapp was a valuable co-worker with her husband in his work as a minister, as well as in his efforts to gain a thorough education for himself and her encouragement spurred him on to successful endeavor in his work.

In the autumn of 1904 the Rev Mr. Sapp entered Christian University at Canton, Missouri, and from that institution he received his A. B. degree, graduating in the class of 1911. For three years previous to coming to Troy he was pastor of the Christian Church at Langdon, Kansas.

TROY HAD DISASTROUS FIRE

Entire Row of Buildings on the East Side of Main Street, South of the Square, and Two Structures Fronting the Court House, Destroyed the Night of April 15, 1875—Total Loss Never Known, as But One Victim Carried Insurance—Devastated Section Rebuilt Years After.

The most disastrous fire in the history of Troy broke out on the night of April 15, 1875, and destroyed much valable property and a number of small residences.

The blaze was discovered in the rear of an unoccupied building on the east side of Main street, just south of the public square. There were a number of small frame structures along the row on both sides of the burning building and the flames soon communicated to those.

It was shortly before midnight when the flames were first observed and it was almost daylight before the fire had either been put out or burned itself out. The material of which the houses were constructed was dry and inflammable and fell an easy prey to the flames.

The entire row of buildings on the east side of Main street south of the square, and two of those fronting on the court house, were burned to the ground. Among the buildings destroyed were the dwelling of H. A. Wright, the office of Doctor Hoffmeier, the shoe shop of Christian Glaman, the two-story brick of William Wheeler, occupied on the lower floor by M. W. Bell's shoe shop, and above by Joseph Craney. Another two-story brick building, used downstairs as a grocery by D. S. Sergeant, and occupied above by L. Merritt, was badly damaged, but not entirely wiped out.

MRS. FEATHERKYLE DROWNED

Heavy Rains June 27, 1897, Caused Mosquito Creek to Flood Its Banks and Mrs. Featherkyle Was Drowned.

It will be eighteen years the 27th day of June since Mrs. R. M. Featherkyle lost her life at the big bridge over Mosquito Creek, near where W. A. Morgan's house stands today.

Mrs. Featherkyle, with her husband and little daughter Sylvia, were living on Henry F. Goss' place, three miles northwest of Troy, where the husband was employed to do some grubbing.

On the fatal day the little family journeyed to Troy to buy some provisions and a heavy rain came up before they started for home. They had a supply of groceries in the wagon and when the ford was reached the horses refused to cross, but their driver urged them and the animals became unmanagable and plunged into the raging torrent, both horses being drowned.

His wife and Sylvia were swept away in the flood and Mrs. Featherkyle was drowned. Little Sylvia was carried a mile along the crest of the water and was saved by her dress catching in a snag near the residence of the Schaufler family, who came to the rescue on hearing the cries of the father, as did Henry Taylor and Henry F. Goss. Sylvia developed pneumonia and Dr. R. S. Dinsmore treated her successfully.

Henry Boder, Jr.

A Citizen of Doniphan County for More than One-Half Century, an Early-Day Merchant, and for Thirty-Six Years the Leading Banker of the Old Town of Troy, He Wielded a Potent Influence in the Upbuilding of the Agricultural, Commercial and Financial Interests of This Community.

Henry Boder, Jr., was identified with the life of the town of Troy and with the county of Doniphan for more than one-half century, and in all that time he wielded a potent influence for the upbuilding of the town and for the prosperity and the general welfare of the people. He was the town's first banker, and in his long career at the head of the Bank of Troy, not a dollar was lost to either depositor or stockholder. He was in his time an efficient public official, a popular and successful merchant, an able financier, and a broad-minded, liberal and loyal citizen.

It is to such splendid citizens as Henry Boder, Jr., we are indebted for having laid a sure foundation for our prosperous community of today. As previously intimated, he was a very important factor in the progressive movements of many years that have led up to our present system of banking and also to the building up of our educational and civic institutions that have left their impress upon the lives of the people. There is no proper way of estimating the value and influence of a man of such a high type of character and one with such ideals.

The parents of Henry Boder, Jr., were French. His father, Henry Boder, Sr., emigrated to America from Orvin, Switzerland, March 18, 1834, and was married to Louisa Mattoit (a native of France) at Mount Eaton, Wayne County, Ohio, April 18, 1836. Two sons were born to them, Henry, on January 28, 1837. Later he moved his family to St. Joseph, Missouri, in the year 1844, where on August 24, 1848, the youngest son, Louis, was born. Mrs. Boder passed away July 3, 1854. Mr. Boder died January 18, 1887, and their son, Louis Boder, on October 18, 1907. They were laid at rest in Mount Mora Cemetery, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Henry Boder, Jr., came to Troy, Kansas, May 28, 1857, as a deputy county clerk under James R. Whitehead of St. Joseph, Missouri. June 2, 1859, he was elected county clerk. Under the Territorial laws of Kansas, the county clerk was also registrar of deeds and clerk of the probate court. Mr. Boder being required to perform the duties of all three offices. When the first election was held under the State Constitution of Kansas, he was elected clerk of the District Court.

On January 22, 1863, Henry Boder, Jr., was married to Anna E. L. Zimmerman, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Zimmerman, who were among the early settlers of Troy, Kansas. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Boder, Jr., one daughter, Anna L., and one son, Henry L.

Henry Boder, Jr., went into the mercantile business in 1864, in Troy, and was thus engaged for six years. Then he and his brother, Louis, opened the first bank in Troy, February 4, 1870, under the firm of Boder Brothers. The brothers did a banking business for seventeen years and then dissolved partnership. Henry Boder, Jr., took the business and continued to conduct it until the bank was reorganized under the state law as the Bank of Troy, in 1890. He was known everywhere as one of the most careful and prudent business men in the state, never speculating or engaging in doubtful enterprises. During the thirty-six years of his banking business there was not a run on the bank and not one dollar was lost to a depositor or stockholder.

As a successful banker, Henry Boder, Jr., was active in the associations of bankers and was always to be found contending for those laws and regulations that would tend to make banking in Kansas safe and sound, not merely as a guaranty of the money deposited by the patrons, but also in the proper investment of the money entrusted to the banks. He had no sympathy with wildcat banking, like we used to have in the early days, and it was through the influence of such men as Henry Boder, Jr., that our present system of banking in Kansas has been builded up to its present high state of soundness and efficiency, and which takes first rank among the states of the Union.

The accompanying picture of Henry Boder, Jr., shows the oldest banker (now deceased) without exception in this section of the state. His business was always conducted in a manner to inspire confidence in his friends and with those with whom he came in contact. He was a man with whom it was a pleasure to deal. He would listen patiently to the stating of a business proposition and, quickly grasping its full meaning, would give his final answer then and there. He had a genius for financiering and his fellow bankers in Kansas and his neighbor bankers in Missouri regarded him as a peer among them. Mr. Boder retired from the banking business March 6, 1906. He had been a central figure in the commercial and financial life of the town from the time it was founded in the Territorial days, and he desired to rest on his honors. He had been active also in the affairs of his community in many ways and was especially proud to be of service to the people among whom he had spent so many years. He was mayor of Troy several years, his tenure of office being from April 7, 1881, to 1887, and the record of those years of public service meant a great deal for the peace and orderliness of the town and for the advancement of its every material interest.

On Sunday, at noon, January 24, 1909, Henry Boder, Jr., passed away at his home, lacking only four days of reaching his seventy-second birthday. Funeral services were held in the Presbyterian Church by the Rev. A. B. Irwin, who was the Presbyterian minister at Highland, there being no resident minister at that time in Troy. The Troy Masonic Lodge No. 55, A. F. & A. M., of which he had been a member from the fourth day of February, 1867, the day of its organization, attended the funeral in a body, and conducted the Masonic service at the family vault, where the body was laid at rest by the body of his wife and his son in Mount Olive Cemetery near Troy.

Mrs. Henry Boder, Jr., was a member of the Presbyterian Church in Troy for many years. She was always a ready helper for the good of the church and the good of the people. She was born April 30, 1840, in Crigerstown, Maryland. She passed away at her home in Troy, February 5, 1906.

Among the people of Troy from the beginning of the town of the Territorial days there were none more universally respected while they were living, none more sincerely mourned after they had passed away, than were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Boder, Jr.

HENRY L. BODER.

Henry L. Boder, son of Henry Boder, Jr., was born October 29, 1865, in the house that was burned April 25, 1872, where the banking house in Troy was built. He received his education in the schools of Troy, and then was two years in the University of Kansas at Lawrence. He also attended Ritner's Commercial College in St. Joseph, Missouri, taking a commercial course in that business school.

At the age of eighteen years Henry L. Boder was made cashier of the Bank of Troy. He possibly was the youngest Kansan to hold so important a position in a bank. He was the first cashier of the first incorporated bank in Troy. He was well known through the state and county, and he held the friendship and esteem of the people.

On October 10, 1889, Henry L. Boder was married to Etta V. Hutchinson of Marysville, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Hutchinson.

November 1, 1891, Henry L. Boder organized the Wathena State Bank, and later retired from it. He purchased the Clevenger Brothers Bank at Everest, November 1, 1892, and organized the Everest State Bank. May 1, 1893, he retired from the bank at Everest that he might give all of his time to the Bank of Troy.

Henry L. Boder died of pneumonia January 16, 1899. Thus it will be observed he lived and died a banker. He was a member of the Troy Lodge, A. F. and A. M., Troy City Lodge I. O. O. F., and also the Knights of Pythias and the Knights of the Maccabees. The funeral services were held at the Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Frank Everett on January 18, 1899. The District Court was in session at that time and Judge Stuart issued a resolution of respect for Henry L. Boder, and caused court to be suspended during the funeral hour, and a copy of the resolution given to wife and parents. He was laid at rest in the family vault in Mount Olive Cemetery, the Masons holding their beautiful services over the body.

In the death of Henry L. Boder, a brilliant career was cut off at the age of thirty-three years, two months and seventeen days, and the people of Troy and of Doniphan County sincerely mourned with his widow and his parents, his departure from among them.

MRS. ANNA L. STRONG.

Mrs. Anna L. Strong is the sole surviving member of the family of Henry Boder, Jr. She was born in Troy on March 26, 1864, in the house where her father and uncle opened the first bank in Troy, known as Boder Brothers' Bank. Anna L. Boder was married to Louis L. Strong on February 24, 1886, in Troy. To this union five sons were born. The three living are Louis L., Henry D. and Boder Strong. Louis and Henry are twins, born December 6, 1887, in the brick house known as the old home of their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Boder, Jr. It stood one block west of Main Street in Troy.

It was with the pride of a fond mother that Mrs. Strong reared her sons to manhood and to fill their rightful places in the world as useful and honorable citizens. Being the last of an illustrious family that had left its impress for good upon the community, it was her desire that her sons might emulate the fine examples set before them by their grandfather, Henry Boder, Jr., and by their great grandfather, Henry Boder, Sr. The Strong boys, as were the Boders, are active in the Masonic fraternity, and have put into practice in their daily lives those fine teachings of that ancient society. The sons of Mrs. Strong are now among the substantial business men of Doniphan County and are honored as loyal and public-spirited citizens of this grand Kansas community.

They have a real estate and loan office and do business in Troy and throughout Doniphan County. This building, with the corner building, may be remodeled in the near future and made into a business and office building, and one in keeping with the substantial business carried on and the progress of the town.

LOUIS L. STRONG.

Louis L. Strong, Jr., spent his early boyhood days in St. Joseph and attended school there until he came to Troy in 1898. He attended the Troy High School, from school he went to work in the Bank of Troy remaining there until his grandfather sold the bank.

February 25, 1911, Louis L. Strong was married to Miss Vera M. Gordon, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Gordon of St. Joseph, Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Louis L. Strong are the parents of one child, a little daughter, Vera Louise, born in Troy, February 27, 1912.

HENRY D. STRONG.

Henry D. Strong went to school in St. Joseph, Missouri, until when he was eleven years old he came to Troy. Here he attended the high school. He was cashier of Doniphan County State Bank—when it went into litigation he worked as bookkeeper in the Troy State Bank with his brother, Louis. He was married to Miss Veda M. Campbell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Campbell, November 5, 1913, in Troy.

Henry D. and Louis L. Strong are members of Troy Lodge No. 55, A. F. and A. M., and are active in the work. They also are members of Troy Chapter No. 16, R. A. M., Washington Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, Abdallah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Leavenworth. They are popular young men of the town and are respected by all.

BODER STRONG.

Boder Strong was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, January 5, 1892. With his mother and brothers he came to live in Troy in the spring of 1898. His first school days were in the public schools of Troy. Then St. Joseph, Missouri. He is a member of the Alpha Omega fraternity. Later he attended Wentworth Military Academy at Lexington, Missouri.

Boder Strong was married to Miss Florence M. Conlon in Atchison, on May 4, 1912. They are parents of a little daughter, Mary Boder, who was born to them on March 17, 1913. Mrs. Strong is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Conlon.

The Strongs, mother and sons, are worthy survivors of the old and honored family of Boder and are striving to perpetuate the name which in Troy and Doniphan County stands for great achievement and honorable careers in the public service.

Dr. William B. Campbell

A Sketch of the Career of a Young Canadian, a Graduate of Ann Arbor, Who Came Among the People of Troy More Than Thirty-Three Years Ago, Rich in Everything But Money, and Who By Years of Practice Has Endeared Himself to the People as a Physician and Surgeon, and as a Man.

Dr. William B. Campbell, of Troy, is one of the most prominent practicing physicians and surgeons in Doniphan County and one of the members of the profession who enjoys a goodly share of prosperity, as a result of his thirty odd years of untiring efforts to relieve suffering humanity, along with his popularity and the high esteem with which he is held by those who know him.

The subject of this sketch is a member of the American Medical Association; president of the Doniphan County Medical Society, and a member of the State Medical Society. Dr. Campbell belongs to a school of practioneers who seemingly are called by a higher power to the profession in which they are engaged, and whose lives are so consecrated to their professional work that no amount of suffering or sacrifice would deter them in any call to duty. He comes of a family, that, in more than one member other than himself, has distinguished itself in medicine and surgery. It is to the service of such men as Dr. Campbell that Kansas has taken high rank in the professional world.

The subject of this sketch is a native of Ontario, having been born in Elgin County April 21, 1856. He is descended from a long line of men who in Canada and in Scotland were learned men and who led busy useful lives and on taking leave of this old earth left it better by reason of their having lived upon it. In that beautiful and rich and prosperous region round about the north shore of Lake Erie, William B. Campbell was reared to manhood, receiving the education in the schools of Ontario and the parental instruction of one of those old fashioned Canadian homes that so admirably equipped him for a life of service to his fellow men.

Heredity and environment may have had a great deal to do with the making of so fine a type of man as this Canadian youth. With such an ancestry of brilliant men and cultured women, representing the highest types of character and intelligence, with high ideals and lofty purposes in life, much could be expected of William B. Campbell. Then to have grown up in that lovely section of Ontario which had been the contending ground between the French and the Indians a century ago, rich in historic interest and beautiful beyond description, the broad, blue waters of Lake Erie lashing the north shore, its bosom laden with the commerce carriers of the period, the broad rich fields and woodlands around him, were such as to fill the youthful mind with great ideas, tinctured with lively imaginings. Surely no parents could have been prouder of a son than were the parents of William B. Campbell.

Intent upon making the profession of medicine and surgery his life calling, William B. Campbell left the parental home and journeyed to Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he attended the medical department of the University of Michigan, from which he was graduated June 30, 1881. He spent a few months at his old home and then, with a stout heart and an ambition that would not balk at any hardships or trying experience, he turned his face toward the state of Kansas.

Bearing a diploma that was honorably earned as his recommendation the then young Dr. Campbell arrived in Troy June 16, 1882, and began the practice of medicine and surgery which he has continued to pursue for more than thirty-three years. He was without money when he came, but he was rich in those attributes that count more in this world—or did then—than anything money could buy. It was a struggle to obtain a foothold, but close application to his professional work, pleasant and easy-going ways that won him the friendship and confidence of the people, and a spirit of optimism that would not down, soon made this young practitioner a popular member of his profession and one of the true blue and thoroughly dependable men of the town and community.

Dr. William B. Campbell married Miss Mabel Perry. She was born in Troy, a daughter of those old-time citizens, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Perry, and descended from one of the grandest old families known to America—the Perrys. Singularly enough, whether by accident or design we are not informed, the marriage of Dr. Campbell and Miss Perry occurred September 10, 1890, on the seventy-seventh anniversary of that memorable day in history when her gallant relative, Oliver H. Perry, as commander of the United States squadron, sent his famous message to General Harrison, "We have met the enemy and they are ours." Also it is to be noted that that famous Battle of Lake Erie in which we conquered the British squadron was fought almost within sight and sound of the place where Dr. Campbell was born.

Dr. and Mrs. Campbell are the parents of one daugher, Veda M., who was born and reared in the old town of Troy, educated in its schools and who became one of its most accomplished and best respected young women. Veda M. Campbell was married to Henry D. Strong November 5, 1913.

Dr. Campbell is a life member of the University of Michigan Union, an organization of men who have gone forth from that great educational institution to accomplish great things. He has a pride in his alma mater and has never ceased to take an interest in the activities of the university. Recently Dr. Campbell gave $50 to the fund now being raised by the Union of graduates to erect a building to cost $1,000,000.

Dr. William B. Campbell.

It is within the province of the reviewer to say that no man in these parts has wielded a more potent influence in the profession of medicine and surgery for a high order of efficiency, or of professional ethics, than has Dr. William B. Campbell. He has kept abreast of the times in scientific research and has given encouragement to education in his profession, not merely in the sense of giving financial aid, but in exerting an influence that has proved a blessing to many a struggling young doctor.

That Dr. Campbell has been successful in his practice during the more than thirty-three years he has resided in Troy is evidenced by the fact that he is still here and practicing and has never had cause or a desire to seek another field. He has a membership in the societies of medicine and surgery in Kansas as well as in adjoining states, but nowhere is he held in higher esteem as a doctor or as a man than here among the people with whom he has come in daily contact all these years and many of whom are his present or former patients, as well as friends.

Not alone in the practice of his profession here in Troy and Doniphan County has Dr. William B. Campbell proved himself of great value. As a citizen he has been in the forefront of progressive movements and a contender for those things which tend to promote the health and happiness of the people and their peace and prosperity.

Dr. Campbell owns the old Perry farm, which of itself is worth a fortune, and has several thousands of dollars invested here, or loaned to Doniphan County people. He owns one of the best residences in the town and with Mrs. Campbell is enjoying life in Troy, the old town to which he came in the summer of 1882, a young doctor without money but with all the rest that was needed to make for himself an honorable and an eminently successful career.

Dr. William B. Campbell, physician and surgeon, has made the fight and he has won.

Since the foregoing article was put into type our good friend, honored citizen and skilled practitioner, Dr. William B. Campbell, has passed from among us. Thursday February 3, 1916, at 9:55 A. M., he was stricken with heart failure in his office and died before medical aid could be summoned.

Dr. Campbell had been unusually busy that morning. He had driven into the country to Eclipse School Number 59, east and north of Troy, to ascertain whether there was scarlet fever among the pupils. Returning to Troy he apparently was as well as usual. He also performed the service that morning of setting the broken leg of Robert Vigus in Troy.

The sudden death of Dr. Campbell was a great shock to Mrs. Campbell and their daughter. It was a great shock also to the people of Troy, and to the hundreds who knew him in the country round about and in the cities. One of the grandest of our citizens, one of the greatest physicians and surgeons, had been laid low, and at a time seemingly he least could be spared.

The funeral was held Sunday, February 6. A service at the residence in Troy was conducted by the Rev. Walter M. Rodgers of Robinson, former pastor of the M. E. Church of Troy. Several members of the Commandery of Knights Templar at Atchison, to which Dr. Campbell belonged, came to conduct the burial service at the grave in Mount Olive Cemetery, southwest of Troy. The pall bearers were men of Troy who had for years been friends and associates of the doctor. They were: Dr. R. S. Dinsmore, Harry E. Paige, Charles W. Reader, Emil C. Winzer, Way A. Hargis and Arthur C. Bell.

It was a bright day, the air was cold and the ground was covered with snow and ice, but every one who had an automobile was out and hundreds of sorrowing friends, many from neighboring cities and towns, came to pay a loving tribute to their friend and fellow citizen and to see his body consigned to the earth.

Thus did Dr. William B. Campbell pass from among us. He was a brave, noble soul, a tender and loving husband and father, who went among the people healing the sick and binding up their wounds, a good Mason, and a true friend.

The following is a list of Dr. W. B. Campbell's sisters and brothers: James, a doctor in Tottenham, Ontario; Daniel, Margaret, Archibald, Veda and Alexander of St. Thomas; Christopher of Detroit, and Martha of Ontario.

Troy Christian Church

First Congregation Was Organized December 18, 1889, By Rev. Nelson A. Stull—Church Building Erected in 1890, Destroyed By Fire December 27, 1894—Rebuilt the Following Summer—Membership Three Hundred and Ninety—First Pastor Died in Highland, Dec. 10, 1914.

The Christian Church of Troy is one of the strongest religious bodies in Doniphan County. From a small beginning in 1889 the congregation has continued to grow with gratifying regularity until at the present time the membership numbers three hundred and ninety persons.

Away back in the latter 80's the few Christians living in Troy and vicinity felt numerically strong enough to start a congregation of their own. Likewise they were willing to bear the burden of erecting a new church and maintaining a permanent pastor.

Late in the fall of 1889 a series of protracted meetings were arranged for, but the difficulty presented itself of finding a place in which to hold the meetings. Rev. Nelson A. Stull, a hustling young Christian preacher, was engaged to conduct the meetings and arouse interest in the proposed erection of the church.

Bible and several pieces of silver were placed in the cornerstone.

The work of construction was pushed with such vigor that the new church was ready for dedication on Independence Day, July 4, a few weeks after the cornerstone had been laid. The structure was neat and substantial and was amply spacious to accommodate the gradually increasing congregation, until it was destroyed by fire, of a supposed incendiary origin, on December 27, 1894.

After the destruction of the Christian Church, services were held in the court house and in Cyrus Leland's hall until a new church had been built the following summer. This edifice was even more commodious than the original building, and that fact has since been regarded as a wise provision, because of the continued growth of the congregation during the succeeding years.

Rev. Nelson A. Stull, the minister who organized the church, remained as pastor for four years and he then took a trip abroad for a year. On his return he was again engaged as minister and served the congregation for two years more. He died at his home in Highland on December 10, 1914, very much mourned by the members of his old congregation and by the hundreds of friends which he had made among all denominations during his ministerial career. Rev. Mr. Stull was the original "live wire" of the Troy Christian Church, although his pastorate has been filled by others in more recent years.

Rev. Mr. Stull was a man of pleasing personality and his ability as an energetic hustler was quickly demonstrated. The project of building a new house of worship in Troy met with a favorable response on the part of the entire population and the young preacher was given unqualified encouragement from the outset.

Through the personal popularity of Rev. Mr. Stull the use of Cyrus Leland's hall was secured for the meetings, and Mr. Leland helped the good work along by fuel, light and rent free as a donation to commence with. The movement met with every promise of success from the beginning. The meetings were well attended by not only those professing the Christian faith, but by many persons of other denominations.

Finally, after all arrangements had been made to build a church and have a permanent place of worship, the first congregation was formed with the following charter members: Samuel Dittemore, J. A. Etherton, Michael N. Carson, John W. Sandy, Laura Dittemore, Henry F. Goss, Orlena Dittemore, Sarah Walton, Talitha Carson, Maggie Dittemore, Sarah R. Mann, Arrie Etherton, Ella Dittemore, Lucinda Etherton, Carrie Shaw, Lucretia Bowers, Fannie Dittemore and Alcid Bowers.

With eighteen charter members to start with there was considerable life injected into the movement. The congregation was organized on December 18, 1889, and preparations were at once made to start building. A lot was secured on the east side of the court house square where the present church building is situated.

The cornerstone laying was one of the great events of the year in Troy. Fully four-fifths of the population attended the ceremonies which were held on May 2, 1890. They were conducted by Rev. Mr. Stull, assisted by a number of local and visiting clergymen. A copy of The Chief, and of the Troy Times, a list of all the children attending the public schools, a hymn book, a list of the donors to the building fund, and a

During the year 1908 Rev. Jesse Bader, known as the "Boy Preacher of the West," at the age of twenty years, took charge of the Christian Church of Troy, and he undoubtedly injected new life into the work of his pastorate. The continual increase in the membership taxed the church beyond its capacity and Rev. Mr. Bader built an addition adequate for future needs of the congregation. He remained with the Troy Christian Church for three years. After some time spent in missionary work he was given the pastorate of the Atchison, Kansas, Christian Church, which charge he is ably filling at the present time.

Rev. J. M. Delezene assumed the pastorate of the Troy Christian Church on August 3, 1913, and continued to serve until January 3, 1915. He was an indefatigable worker during his stay in Troy and is numbered among the clerical "live wires" which have administered to the congregation in recent years. He was a general favorite with all classes and the citizens in general regretted his departure sincerely.

The present pastor of the Christian Church of Troy is Rev. J. Tilden Sapp, who succeeded Rev. Mr. Delezene, Jan. 17, 1915. He is a young clergyman of many fine qualities and his ambition is to make the Christian Church more popular, if possible, than it is at present. Rev. Mr. Sapp is endowed with that easy dignity which attracts people instantly and his faculty for making and retaining friends is one of his admirable traits of character. He is a strong and able preacher, and withal, a hard worker and a good mixer.

Recently the Christian Church purchased two lots adjoining the building on the north from W. A. Helvey, and it is the intention of the congregation to build additions on this ground as soon as the anticipated increase in the membership will justify it. There are three hundred and ninety members in the congregation at present, but this number is expected to be materially increased in the near future.

Dr. Estella G. Norman

One of the most efficient and popular teachers in Doniphan County, when the new Elwood school house was built, was Miss Estella G. Norman, now a practising physician of Moline, Illinois. Miss Norman, who is a sister of C. V. and John S. Norman of the First National Bank of Troy, was the first teacher in the new high school at Elwood. She was the principal and the other teachers were Miss Margaret Hickman, intermediate, and Miss Irene Gifford, primary.

It was while teaching there that Miss Norman planned to become a physician. She is an exceptionally capable woman and made the opportunity for herself. After graduating from the medical college she went to Moline, Illinois, and is now the lady physician of the Tri-City Sanitarium, one of the best institutions of its kind in either of the tri-states. Miss Norman has many friends in Doniphan County who will be glad to learn of her success.

Elijah N. Hull

Elijah N. Hull is one of the civil war veterans of Doniphan Caunty, and a prosperous farmer, having eighty acres of fine land, all under cultivation. Mr. Hull was born March 1, 1842, in Martinsburg, Knox County, Ohio. When the rebellion broke out he enlisted as a private at Clarksburg, West Virginia, in Company E of the 10th West Virginia Volunteer Infantry. Mr. Hull has the unique distinction of being one of the few living veterans who was with General Grant when General Lee surrendered at Appomattox Court House, April 9, 1865. He was mustered out of the service at Wheeling, West Virginia, two months later. Mr. Hull came to Doniphan County, May 1, 1891, and later purchased the property where he now resides, north and east of Troy. Shortly after the close of the war he married Miss Lydia A. Litvenburd, and to this union two children were born. They are Mrs. Emma Rutter and Albert L. Hull. Since coming here, Mr. Hull has gained the respect of the community in which he lives and has made a creditable success of his farm property. Although seventy-three years old he is still hale and very active.

W. A. Helvey

W. A. Helvey, one of the widely-known residents of Doniphan County, was born at Eburly, Ind., July 3, 1848, and Mrs. Helvey, who was Miss Lizzie Trant, was born in Dale County, Ala., Nov. 8, 1853. They were married at Wathena, Kan., Dec. 2, 1869, and to their union were born six children: Anna M., now Mrs. S. P. Zimmerman, of Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 22, 1870; Alfred A., at Troy, Oct. 10, 1873; Walter A., at Wellington, Dec. 13, 1880; Cyrus A., at Wellington, May 16, 1883; Harold A., at Wellington, Nov. 24, 1887, who died in infancy, and Alta M., at Brookfield, Colo., Aug. 30, 1889; she now resides in Goodland, Kan. The Helveys conducted the Avon Hotel for several years, and were engaged in the grocery and cooper business in Troy for several years.

James H. Baldwin

James Henry Baldwin, a native of this county, and a man who seldom goes out of Doniphan County, is probably the greatest reader in this section of Kansas. His home is his newspapers, and there he loves to sit and go through volume after volume of ponderous literature. Mr. Baldwin was born on May 28, 1856, near Old Columbus, twelve miles northeast of Troy, near Smith Creek. He was one of the first boys born in Doniphan County, and today owns some valuable property, including two residences in Troy and a fine twenty-acre farm northeast of Troy two miles. In addition to his love of good reading matter, Mr. Baldwin is one of the best listeners. During the war he was placed with a family in Troy, after his mother's death, and on account of his father's absence, and it is alleged that on account of cruel treatment, the boy's spine was affected to such an extent that it has impaired his health all through life.

Rev. Nelson A. Stull preached in Leland's Hall last Sunday, Feb. 6, 1890, to a good sized congregation. A subscription was taken up to start the building of a Christian church at Troy, and $500 was raised at this meeting. —Chief.

A Splendid Place to Eat

Lee Broom's Restaurant at 420 Francis Street, St. Joseph, Mo., Is One of the Nicest Places of Its Kind in the Entire Middle West—Lived in Troy When a Boy and Went to School to Charles V. Norman in Climax School House Number Nine.

The city of St. Joseph has a number of good restaurants, but there are none to compare with the establishment of Lee Broom, at 420 Francis street. The service is first class in every respect, and the food is the best that the market affords. Mr. Broom is a clever man, and one who possesses the faculty of entertaining, and a thorough master of every branch of the restaurant business, having served for a number of years as chef and steward in some of the largest hotels, as well as owner of his own places for years.

The subject of this sketch, when a boy at the age of twelve, moved with his father to Doniphan County, Kansas, where the elder Broom was in the employ of Cyrus Leland, Jr. Mr. Broom attended Climax School No. 9, situated two miles south of Troy, and his teacher, during the time he was a student there, was Mr. Charles V. Norman, the present cashier of the First National Bank of Troy, and a friendship was then formed between teacher and pupil which has been lasting and continuous, and they often meet and discuss the old school days.

Mr. Broom has never forgotten the town of Troy, and often visits here, and is always anxious to please our citizens when they visit his place in St. Joseph and recall the old days in the town where he was once a resident.

Christian Church Parsonage

A Magnificent Residence for the Pastor That Has Been Erected in Troy By the Members of the First Christian Church.

The congregation and the members of the First Christian Church of Troy are proud of the fact that, while they have one of the most beautiful church edifices in the county, they also have provided a very handsome parsonage as a residence for their pastor and his family. It is a nine-room house, with six rooms down stairs and three rooms on the second floor, with bath, closets and pantry, and a basement under the entire building, with a garage in the basement.

The new parsonage occupies a beautiful lot fronting west toward the county court house and jail and across the street. The Christian Church is fifty feet south of it, and George Schuler's residence is forty feet to the north of it. The ground was purchased of W. A. Helvey for $1,800.

George Schuler and Joe Griffin, while cutting weeds on the lot around the church, suggested the building of a parsonage there, urging that the rent saved would pay interest on the money invested. The suggestion met with ready acceptance, with the result that the splendid building has been erected there.

Ground was broken August 16, 1915, Mark Edwards being the first to do any work on the grounds. A building committee in charge of the erection of the parsonage consisted of Joe Griffin, Henry Haupt and Aaron Kirby. Mr. J. W. Calvert, who has lived in the county sixty years, and who has erected hundreds of buildings, was the boss carpenter, and Harry Goddin and Tom Lloyd were his assistants on the work. The masonry work was done by William Wilson and Zachariah Knight. The materials for the building were furnished by Cyrus Leland. Erber & Scott were the painters; the walls being painted, instead of papered, the work being beautifully done, and with the light oak woodwork making an interior finish that would do justice to the finest of modern residences. The tinner's work was done by Ben Stannard, in the employ of Winzer Brothers, who furnished the building hardware.

The building was dedicated on October 3, 1915, the same Sunday Governor Arthur Capper spoke at an all-day rally held by the Methodist Episcopal Church at Severance. William Oescher of Cottner University at Bethany, Nebraska, a suburb of Lincoln, officiated. The pastor, the Rev. J. Tilden Sapp, and his wife, moved into the parsonage October 21, being the first to occupy the beautiful home which this progressive church and congregation has provided for its pastor and family.

The building, as it stands is one of which all of the people of Troy feel proud. It is modern in every way and its architectural design gives it a pleasing appearance to the artistic eye, both as to exterior and interior details. The cost of such a building, based on an estimates of competent architects, would be somewhat in excess of $2,000. This cost, however, was materially reduced—to as low as $1,700—by reason of a large portion of the work being donated by members of the congregation and friends of the church, who were glad of the opportunity of being permitted to do something for the church and the pastor and his wife.

A distressing incident of the building of the parsonage was the tragic death of Victor Wilmoth, an active young man and member of the church who resided on a farm five miles south of Troy. He had taken great interest in the building, and was one of those to donate of his time and labor. On September 11, while the work on the building was under way, this estimable young man was kicked to death by a horse while plowing up potatoes on his farm.

The Late Albert Perry

A Representative of a Family Distinguished in Our National History—He Made a Career in Kansas That Distinguished Him as One of Our Foremost Citizens and an Honor to the Name.

Albert Perry was one of the pioneer lawyers who came to Kansas in the territorial days, devoted nearly one-half century to the upbuilding of the Sunflower state and left behind him a record of which his children, his friends and all who knew him are justly proud.

There were three Perry brothers—Benjamin, Edward and Samuel—who came from Wales to the United States in 1683, and it was from these three the Perry stock sprung. Albert Perry's grandfather was a native of New England, had served in the Revolutionary War. To this same family belonged Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, the hero of Lake Erie in the famous naval engagement of our country's early history, and also Commodore Matthew C. Perry, who made a voyage to Japan as commander of an expedition to that country in 1852-54 and to whom credit is due for making a treaty between the United States and the Japanese government.

Albert Perry was a son of Amos and Patience Perry, both natives of New York, the former born in 1795 and the latter in 1798. Albert Perry was born in Livingston County, New York, June 18, 1830. When very young his parents moved from New York to the Western Reserve in Ohio, locating in Ashtabula County. Here Albert attended the district school until he was old enough to enter Chester Academy. Afterward he studied at Oberlin College and finished his education at Cleveland University.

From boyhood it was Albert Perry's ambition to become a lawyer, and all his later education was directed toward the consummation of that ambition. He was a student who applied himself diligently to preparation for his life work, so that when he finished at the Cleveland University he was fully equipped for practice. He passed the examination and was admitted to practice law in the Supreme Court of Ohio. He first followed the profession at Warren, Ohio, where he resided for two years.

Albert Perry's coming to Kansas was in 1857. At that time the name of Kansas was on every tongue and men of blood and iron were coming out to the new territory because of the magnitude of the national issues involved and because of the fact that greater opportunities were offered to ambitious men than were ever before held out to them.

Settling in the then ambitious town of Doniphan where was located the United States land office, Albert Perry began to practice law. Afterward he removed to Troy, where he opened an office and began a successful practice which he retained until the year of his death.

In 1860, Albert Perry was united in marriage to Mildred Leland, a daughter of Cyrus Leland, Sr. and Sarah (Howard) Leland. To them were born three children: Albert L., an attorney and abstracter of Troy and one of the leading citizens of Doniphan County; Warren, who is now a physician at Fairbury, Nebraska; and Mabel, who is the wife of Dr. William B. Campbell of Troy.

These three children of Albert Perry are an honor to their parents and are making careers that are an honor to the illustrious name of Perry, than which there is none more to be revered in our country. Albert L. is probably the best informed man on land titles in northeastern Kansas and he has built up a large clientage in his abstracting business in Doniphan County. He is also active in public affairs and is honored and respected by all who know him. Dr. Warren Perry is an honor to the medical profession and stands high not only in the county of his birth, but also enjoys the highest esteem of the people of Fairbury, Neb., where his activities lie. Mabel, or Mrs. Campbell, occupies a place of honor among the people of Troy and vicinity; and her husband, a Canadian who chose Troy as his place to practice medicine before the ink was dry on his diploma, is a man of exceptionally fine qualities and has built up a good practice.

The Perrys, Albert and Mabel, were prominent in about everything that was going on in this corner of Kansas for a great many years and were held in high esteem by everybody. In the early struggles of Kansas Mr. Perry was associated with Jim Lane, the grim chieftain who occupies a conspicuous place in the history of our state as one of its most aggressive champions of freedom and as a political leader and United States Senator. Albert Perry was one of the first Republicans in Doniphan County and occupied a high place in that party's councils. Later he became affiliated with the Democratic party and remained a Democrat to the close of his life. He was a Democratic Presidential elector for Kansas in 1892. For a number of years he was one of the directors of the Kansas state penitentiary at Lansing, and served with honor to the institution, the state and to himself. Mrs. Perry's death was on April 5, 1903. Albert Perry's long and useful career came to a close with his death on April 13, 1906.

Buried in Troy

Mr. and Mrs. A. Simonson, whose bodies were brought to Troy for burial last June, were among the early settlers of the town. Mr. Simonson came to Kansas in July, 1854, and worked at his trade, carpentering, for many years, or until he became crippled and then assisted his wife at weaving carpets.

Mrs. Simonson was a Miss Malvina Field and was a sister to Mrs. James Baldwin, and she came to Troy with her family in 1857. She was married to Mr. Simonson in 1867 and the couple lived in Troy for over twenty-five years. There were two children, a boy and a girl, born to Mr. and Mrs. Simonson, who were reared and educated in the local schools. The son, Otto Simonson, learned the trade of machinist and stationary engineer, and he is now living in Moscow, Idaho. The girl, Libbie, married a man named York, and is living on a nice little farm near Mena, Ark.

Anton Simonson will be remembered by nearly everyone in Doniphan County. He was born in Kentucky on April 8, 1824, and was 90 years old when he died at Hiawatha, Kan., June 1, 1914, having the distinction of being one of the oldest residents of the county. Mr. Simonson came to Troy in 1855, and was married here on March 24, 1857, to Miss Melvine Field by the Rev. F. E. Sheldon. Mrs. Simonson was born in Danville, Ill., November 11, 1839, and died at Hiawatha, May 29, 1914, her husband following her two days later. His death was caused by grief. Both were buried in Mount Olive Cemetery.

The following is a list of Methodist preachers who have served in the Methodist pulpit since W. C. Elwood came to Troy in 1890: Charles F. Atherton, 1888-1890; J. B. Gibson, 1890-1893; S. C. Lar b, 1893-1894; L. I. McDougle, 1894-1896; C. N. Riggle, 1896-1898; Thomas Campbell, 1898-1899; The Rev. Mr. Hancock, 1899-1900; E. B. Perry, 1900-1901 and a half year extra; William Whitney, Sept. 15, 1901-April 1, 1902; E. L. Butler, 1902-1904; J. B. Vernon, 1904-1906; W. L. Morris, 1906-1909; A. E. Ryan, 1909-1911; Walter M. Rogers, 1911-1915; Rev. C. E. Rose, 1915.

When Lincoln Spoke in Troy

Many of the Old Timers Remember Distinctly When the Beloved Rail-Splitter Visited Doniphan County While Campaigning for the Highest Office in the Land.

It is now fully two generations ago that Abraham Lincoln caused the blood to tingle in the veins of the people of Doniphan County by his wholesouled remarks on the slavery question and the preservation of the Union. He made speeches at Elwood, Troy and Doniphan, December 1, 1859, the day before John Brown and six of his associates were hanged at Harper's Ferry.

Many of the old-timers in Troy and vicinity remember the exact date of the martyred President's visit, and all of those who remember the event concede that it was during the heat of a great national campaign.

Unfortunately the newspapers in this section were antagonistic to Mr. Lincoln's candidacy and few of them make any reference to the subject. However, there are plenty of living witnesses still in Doniphan County who not only heard the "rail-splitter" make a speech, but who had the honor of shaking hands with him.

All the pioneers of the county now living, however, recall very well that Mr. Lincoln was escorted into Troy by Judge J. B. Maynard, Daniel Webster Wilder and his brother Carter H., Henry Boder, Joe Hayton and Frank Kotsch. These worthy gentlemen met the President at St. Joseph and took him across the ferry to Elwood on a remarkably cool evening for that season of the year.

Upon the arrival of the presidential party in Troy the citizens, who had been apprised of Mr. Lincoln's coming, gave them a hearty welcome and, with cheers and cries of "Long live the liberator," made their way to the court house, which stood on the site of the New Tansit Hotel.

It was almost dark when the President concluded his speech and after many handshakes he was hauled to Doniphan by W. H. Nesbitt, where he addressed the citizens. Al Garvin, a well-known and prominent resident of near Troy, remembers distinctly hearing Mr. Nesbitt tell in after years about the trip to Doniphan with Mr. Lincoln and vividly repeated some of the convincing "yarns" the famous "rail-splitter" spun on the way.

Mr. Lincoln went to Atchison, Kansas, from Doniphan, where he spoke December 2, 1859.

WHEN LINCOLN WAS SHOT

News of the Assassination of the President Created the Wildest Excitement in Doniphan County—Slavery Sympathizer Narrowly Escaped Lynching—Old Residents Recall the Most Tragic Event in the History of the United States.

The terrible act of the assassin, John Wilkes Booth, who murdered President Abraham Lincoln, fifty-one years ago, the 14th of last April, aroused the wildest kind of excitement in Doniphan County where the martyred President had been known and loved by the scattered population at the time.

Settled as it was by people who believed in freedom for all, Doniphan County residents at first could not comprehend the possibility of such a revolting crime as the assassination of the champion of liberty. President Lincoln was the nation's idol, and his self-sacrifices to preserve the Union endeared him to all free people.

The most virulent display of feeling over the murder of the President was exhibited in and around Troy, where the citizens rose up in indignation to avenge the cruel murder of the savior of the country. While there were many men with cool heads those days, the horror of the crime worked everybody almost into a frenzy.

The news of the shooting of President Lincoln was late in reaching Troy. There was a telegraph office then in the building where the McClellan & Sherrer store stands now, but the operator was away that day and no news could be obtained over the wire. The absence of the telegrapher did not apparently perturb the residents, but a few of them seemed to have a premonition that some calamity was about to occur.

It was late in the day when Henry Boder, the father of Mrs. Anna Strong of Troy, arrived on horseback with the dreadful intelligence that Abe Lincoln had been shot. Mr. Boder was in St. Joseph, Mo., when the news was first received in that town and he started at once for Troy to convey the sad intelligence of the tragedy. There was no bridge at St. Joseph those days, and Mr. Boder spent some impatient time waiting to cross over on the ferryboat.

Many old residents of Troy remember to this day that Mr. Boder rode madly into town on a horse all covered with foam and almost ready to drop. They could not understand the cause of such a rush, but when he announced that Lincoln had been shot, an ominous silence pervaded the gathering. The calamity to the country was so fearful that the citizens were so stupefied they could not find expression for their feelings.

It was a grief-stricken gathering that recovered from the first shock of the assassination of the President. While the war was over, some of the men were for going at it again, in order to avenge the murder of their idol. An indignation meeting was held and many of those who attended announced that they would force any sympathizers with the act across the river, but if there had been any in Troy, they failed to make known their sentiments.

Early the next morning William White and Mary Zimmerman rode horseback to William McClellan's place, three miles southwest of Troy, where William Dannevik now resides, and when they broke the news to the farmer, one of the hired hands exclaimed, "I'm glad to hear it." McClellan turned to the man angrily, and said, "You leave here." Mr. McClellan then turned to his visitors and begged them not to tell in Troy what the hired man had said, as he did not want a murder committed on his place, because he felt the neighbors would surely avenge the seditious remarks of the farm hand.

William White, one of the real old-timers in Troy, has a distinct recollection of the day Troy received the news of Lincoln's assassination. Some of the other old settlers who were here when Mr. Boder arrived, are Charles Bailey, Rev. H. C. Wykert, Joe Moorehead, Fred Moser, Billy Chapple and George Williamson. There were several other settlers in town that day, but many have since passed the dividing line between here and the great beyond.

Henry Boder, who made such a wild ride to Troy with the news of the murder of the President, organized the Bank of Troy in 1870, the name of which institution was some years ago changed by Charles V. and John S. Norman to that of the First National Bank of Troy.

Mr. William White remembers distinctly that on the evening of the day when Mr. Boder brought the news, a number of free state men held a sure-enough indignation meeting at the court house, which stood on the site of the present New Transit Hotel. Before and after the meeting they had paraded the streets, carrying navy revolvers, on the trail of anybody who might be misguided enough to display his Southern sympathies by commending the assassin who struck down the greatest President the country ever had since the days of Washington.

William Landern Privett, Jr.

A Progressive Farmer Near Troy, Who Is Recognized Among the People as a Leader in Public Affairs and Who Has Been Rewarded By Election to the Office of County Clerk Two Terms and Probably Will Again Be Named By the Republicans for a Third Term Without Opposition.

William Landern Privett, Jr., occupies the position of county clerk of Doniphan County, now serving his second term and probably will be named for a third term by the Republicans. He is one of the popular men of Doniphan County, is a good farmer and has proved himself a capable and efficient public officer.

Mr. Privett is a son of William L. and Margaret Berry Privett. His father was born in Tennessee December 3, 1837, came to Missouri and then came to Doniphan County, in 1856. He settled on the place two miles southwest of Troy, where the subject of this sketch resides. Mrs. Margaret Berry Privett was born

November 1, 1843, in Stone County, Missouri, and came with her parents, Alexander and Phoebe Berry, her mother being a Birchfield and born in Stone County, Missouri, in 1825. The marriage of William L. Privett, Sr., and Margaret Berry occurred November 16, 1860, at the home of Alexander Berry, her father. William L. Privett, Sr., died October 2, 1899. His widow is still living in her home near Troy.

The son of these parents, William L. Privett, Jr., was born February 1, 1873. He received his education, or rather what the country school then afforded, in District Number Twenty. He was reared as a farmer in a practical way, accustomed to hard work, though he was always popular, whether as a boy with his fellows at school, as a young farmer with his neighbors, or as a man of middle age mixing with the people.

On November 4, 1906, William L. Privett, Jr., was married to Mary Alice Goss, a daughter of Henry F. Goss, who was born June 15, 1840, in Goss Port, Indiana, and died at his home one and one-half miles north of Troy, November 30, 1908, and who came to Troy March 4, 1865, and Sarah A. Dittemore Goss, who was born in Buchanan County, Missouri, June 22, 1846, and who is still living in Troy. Mrs. Alice Taylor Privett was first married to Henry Taylor May 5, 1888, who died December 1, 1904. To them were born two sons, Richard Francis and Charles Ernest.

Mr. and Mrs. Privett reside on their beautiful farm of 160 acres two miles southwest of Troy, which he farms successfully. They are both regarded with great favor by the people and recognized as ideal and popular citizens living a model life.

Mr. Privett is a man in whom the public has confidence and is frequently chosen to fill positions of responsibility and trust. He is now administrator of the estate of the late Emel Haas and guardian for the Haas children, and is discharging his duties honestly and faithfully and with due regard to the welfare of those for whom the estate is administered.

In the year 1904 Mr. Privett was appointed to the position of road overseer, the duties of which he performed honorably, giving much attention to the making of improvements and to keeping the roads in his district in good condition for travel. He then was elected trustee of his township, in which position he served two years, was renominated by the Republicans and re-elected for another two years.

In 1912 Mr. Privett was taken up by the Republicans of Doniphan County and nominated for the office of county clerk because of his record as an industrious, intelligent and honored citizen upon whom the people could depend for an honest administration and business management of the affairs of the county. He made a splendid canvas, was a good mixer and a good talker, and won the office handily. In 1914, he was nominated for a second term by his party and was again elected, the people having expressed their satisfaction over his first two years' record. The second term as county clerk of Mr. Privett is but a repetition of his first term, save that added experience in the office has brought him added efficiency, and that is what the people of Doniphan County are demanding of their servants in the public offices.

On the strength of his record in office and of his record as a citizen of exceptional ability and splendid reputation, Mr. Privett is being encouraged to make the race for county clerk for a third term as a candidate on the Republican ticket. While the primary is open to all who present the required number of signers to his nomination papers as a candidate, it appears that no opponent has as yet been brought out against him and the prediction is made that he will receive the nomination without opposition.

Mr. Privett is one of those genial men who are essential to the welfare of a community. By nature an optimist and of cheerful temperament he is a scatterer of good cheer and a good mixer with everybody; which characteristics contribute much to his success as a leader in politics and in public affairs, and wins him the support of the voters at the polls, who are all his friends whose hands he shakes after the election as well as before.

William Landern Privett is a member of the Troy Lodge A. F. and A. M., and is a worthy exponent of the principles of that ancient order. He also is a member of the Anti-Horse Thief Association and as such has had much to do with promoting the welfare of the members as well as of the people of the county by protecting their property against thieves, and preserving the peace of this splendid county.

Mr. and Mrs. Privett are active participants in the affairs of the Troy neighborhood and are deservedly popular with the people as true and loyal citizens of Kansas.

Charles Frank Smith

The junior member of the blacksmithing firm of Smith & Marcum of Troy is well known to the people of the town and country, since he was born in Doniphan County and has spent all of his life here. The place of his birth was the old Gallagher farm, between Sparks and Fanning, and the date was April 19, 1869. He received his education in the Hickory Grove school house in district No. 42, and grew up to manhood with the well merited reputation of being a steady, hard-working young man.

February 4, 1892, Charles Frank Smith married Miss Sarah Edwards. He was a farmer brought up to the business, and with his young wife they went to live on the old Daniel Norman farm north of Troy, where they resided several years. On that farm their two sons were born. Elmer the eldest, was born December 8, 1893, and Harry was born December 6, 1895.

Mr. Smith was married a second time to Nettie Higgins on July 9, 1908, in Troy, by the Rev. M. L. Kemp of the Baptist Church.

Having been engaged in farming all his life, except six years when he worked as a lineman for the telephone company, he decided finally to go into the blacksmithing business in Troy. With John Marcum as his partner he began blacksmithing February 10, 1910, and has since followed that business with the success that is due him as a hard worker.

Mr. Smith is recognized by the patrons of his shop, among whom are many of the most prosperous farmers and stockmen in Doniphan County as an industrious, accommodating mechanic, a good workman and a square dealing citizen of Troy. He and his business partner are both popular with the people as mechanics and blacksmiths, and are receiving a splendid patronage from the people of Troy and the rich country surrounding the town. They do all kinds of general blacksmithing and their workmanship is of the best and their prices reasonable.

W. H. H. CURTIS

A Pioneer of Doniphan County —Was Civil War Veteran and Probate Judge

The name of the late William Henry Harrison Curtis will go down in history as being one of the first settlers in Doniphan County and one of the efficient probate judges. When the eastern part of Doniphan County was practically all timber he came with his parents, June 16, in 1854, and settled on a farm east of Wathena, which is now owned by one of the Grohs. When Fort Sumter was fired upon April 12, 1861, this gallant young man, who was a law student in Atchison at the time enlisted in Company K, First Kansas regiment, May 30, 1861, and served his country faithfully until discharged in June 1864. He afterward engaged in the milling business at Doniphan and later moved to Severance, where he was soon elected mayor. He was a Republican and manifested more than ordinary interest in politics, was twice elected treasurer of Wolf Township and was a delegate to the state conference in 1882; was elected probate judge of Doniphan County in 1902, and served until 1910. He was married in 1872, October, to Miss Fannie Peonhard, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. One son was born, William J. Curtis, October 12, 1873, who is the present general passenger agent for the Atchison, Topeka, Santa Fe railroad company. Mrs. Curtis resides in Topeka. The subject of this sketch died at his home in Troy.

Frederick William Werner

The manager of the Robinson Shoe Company's establishment at 110 South Eighth street, St. Joseph, Missouri, is a well-known Troy man and a native of Doniphan County. He was born August 30, 1883, on a farm three miles northwest of Troy, and is a son of Paul F. Werner and Louisa Graves Werner.

Frederick William Werner was educated in the McGalliard district school No. 49, being reared on a farm in that neighborhood. He formed a particular liking for the mercantile business during his boyhood, which later in life led him into that business.

July 2, 1903, he became connected with the retail shoe business in St. Joseph and he still is so engaged, being now the manager of the St. Joseph house of the Robinson Shoe Company. He has an intimate knowledge of every detail of the trade and is a very valuable man in his particular line.

Mr. Werner was married September 26, 1906, to Miss Hattie F. Schmaltz. They now reside at 421 North Twenty-Eighth street, in St. Joseph, and are the parents of one daughter, Harriet E., who was born February 5, 1909.

Mr. and Mrs. Werner have a large number of friends in and around Troy, and they are popular in the city in which they now have their homes.

Father John B. Stader

The good priest of the St. Charles Catholic Church in Troy is a resident of Atchison. He comes to Troy every two weeks to minister unto his little flock, also having under his pastoral charge of St. James Church at Fanning. Father Stader is greatly admired by hundreds of people aside from those of his parish. He is a genial, whole-souled priest, who always has a bright smile and a cheery word for every one he meets. This quality has made him the favorite of people of all denominations, by whom he is known as a scatterer of sunshine. Father Stader is highly educated, not merely in books, but in the affairs of the world, and of the everyday life. He was formerly priest of the parish church at Purcell. Under his pastoral charge here, the little church of St. Charles is prospering and is doing a great good in Troy and the neighborhood.

Edward S. Yates

Edward S. Yates is another Doniphan County citizen who is transplanted, having been born in Nauvoo, Illinois, on October 25, 1874. He developed good taste and judgment early in life, and came to Troy on October 19, 1890.

He was married to Miss Tessie Edwards on September 29, 1895, the Rev. Anderson, now of Iowa Point, officiating. They have two sons, Cecil Vern and Edward S., Jr.

Most of Mr. Yates' time is devoted to the fruit business, as he owns a fine fruit farm south of Troy. He joined the Christian Church in the early nineties, and has been one of its leaders ever since. There is never a meeting of any kind held by the church that he does not attend, and his life has had considerable influence upon the people of this community. He is a liberal contributor to his church and to various benevolent funds; and such a life is worthy of emulation.

A. D. Jones

On the 13th day of February, 1894, A. D. Jones came to Troy and purchased the establishment of J. B. Byers. Since that time Mr. Jones has been identified with the mercantile business of Troy and has become known throughout the county as an enterprising citizen and a first class man with whom to trade. Mr. Jones carries a full stock of hardware, stoves, tinware, and does a plumbing business. In his house may also be found a complete line of furniture, carpets and house furnishings. He extends a cordial welcome to all of the people to visit his store and they are assured of the best of treatment and a square deal on their purchases. Mr. Jones is a member of the Troy city council.

Monroe-Privett

Mrs. Deliah Berry Monroe and Mrs. Margaret Berry Privett, came to Doniphan County with their father, Alexander Berry, June 4, 1858. The means of transportation at that time was two yoke oxen hitched to a linchpin wagon. These pioneers have lived to see this country develop from its wild untamed state to that of one of the best farming and fruit producing countries in the Middle West. The changes in Doniphan County since that time are perceptible to them. Both of them have reared large and useful families, who are specimens of the finest type of American citizenship.

Statement of Robert Tracy

A Former Doniphan County Newspaper Man and Politician, Relates Many Ludicrous Anecdotes of Pioneer Days—Is a Civil War Veteran—Has a Penchant For Recollecting Names.

Robert Tracy, Civil war veteran, and former Doniphan County treasurer and deputy for sixteen years, who is still living, has some vivid recollections of the early days here which are interesting. He was in the thick of every movement in those times and remembers clearly all of the events—the agitation for railroads, slavery troubles, the war and political battles. Mr. Tracy's reminiscences are given here:

(Contributed by Robert Tracy.)

"There were truly some exciting times in the old days, especially during the campaigns and when the war broke out. I was county treasurer four years and four months; my term began Jan. 1, 1872, and I went out of office in 1876. I succeeded Obe Craig in office. Bob Flickinger was also country treasurer for four years from Jan. 1, 1876 to 1880, and he was followed by Samuel Johnson, who served for sixteen years, but not consecutively. Johnson had been with me for a time and then served with Sam Moyer; and he was a mighty good man for the place given him.

"I have a very vivid recollection of the burning of the court house, March 27, 1867. The building was located on the north side of the square, just east of where the gate is now. The treasurer's office was in the northwest corner and the county clerk's office adjacent. Both offices had a safe. When the fire broke out, these heavy receptacles were rolled end over end to get them in the street and all of the papers they contained were saved. There was a very high wind blowing that day, and the papers of the circuit clerk, the late Frank Brown, and some of the other papers, were a total loss. They were scattered over the prairie from Troy to Geary City by the heavy wind from the northwest. In 1868 a new court house was built, a part of the officials in the meantime using the old Presbyterian Church, although at that time it was a new structure, having been built in 1865.

"The court house was the only building destroyed by the flames, and after the fire a part of the officials moved across the street into a vacant room belonging to the Troy Reporter, which I owned at the time. My office was next to the Higby House, where Colonel Ryan's office stands today. The first telegraph office was in the Higby House. It was opened about the year 1865 or 1866, I don't remember now which is right. Anyway, Abraham Lincoln spoke in St. Joseph and I was working there on The Free Democrat. I had just concluded a brief experience as a steamboat pilot and found the newspaper business more to my liking.

"I also remember the early days in Elwood very well. Andrew Disque, grandfather of Dr. Andrew A. Disque, of St. Joseph, was one of the old-time grocerymen and a justice of the peace, who lived there. He attempted to establish a German paper, but published only a few issues and was forced to discontinue, because of the fact that there were not enough Germans in Elwood. He is now dead, but his widow is still alive and resides in St. Joseph, at 512 North Twelfth street. The Advertiser was the first paper published in Elwood. It was founded about a week after The Chief at White Cloud, and was owned by Fairman and Newman. This was in June, 1857. Mr. Newman was from Alabama and was an ardent pro-slavery advocate. He never missed an opportunity to uphold the cause of the Southern states. Mr. Fairman, as the first part of his name indicates, was a free state man and was from Pennsylvania. How such a strange pair, so at odds ends on the burning issues of the day, ever happened to form a partnership, is beyond my understanding. The Advertiser was of short duration and soon after it suspended publication. The Elwood Free Press started, and I think it was published a year or two. John T. Warburton, who now lives at 1111 No. Second street, in St. Joseph, devoted several years of his life, during the latter part of the 50's to the different publications in Elwood.

"The first house in Elwood was built by a Mr. Rose and the St. Charles was the first hotel established there. It was on the south side of the present town. The third building was that of The Advertiser. It was constructed of boards and the floor had cracks in it about an inch wide, making it exceedingly hazardous to drop anything on it like small coins. The Great Western hotel was erected by James E. Dryden, a brother-in-law of S. S. Allen of St. Joseph. Dryden was killed by a Rock Island train, Dec. 22, 1886, near Troy. All of these structures were put up from timber obtained from trees in the streets of the little town.

"The first sawmill was put up and owned by Thomas Dillon, and it did a thriving business. New settlers were coming in and there was a great demand for lumber of all kinds. It could be reasonably obtained in no other manner but this; for to have hauled it from St. Joseph would have made it cost an almost prohibitive price. A second mill was erected a little later by Ward L. Lewis, and there was room for two, as both were crowded all of the time. Mr. Lewis also owned several planing and lath mills, but he met with a tragic death. He was murdered in Elwood in 1863, about two or three years after getting all of his mills in working order.

"There were a great many slaves in the county at the time, and there was constant friction between the Southern and Northern sympathizers, who were about evenly divided as to strength. A large number of the negroes escaped from their masters, and there were thrilling pursuits to catch and bring them back. Carey B. Whitehead used to own a farm up at Blair. One day a man whose home had been in Oregon, Mo., came to town with a lot of slaves. Whitehead traded his property for them and started for Texas. There he sold as many as he could, but nearly all escaped and returned to their home. I brought one of them back myself from Louisiana, when I was on a steamboat. It was during my short experience as a steamboat pilot. Orange Brown, who is still living, and who is well known in the county, bought some of them and came back on a steamboat. Mr. Whitehead also returned. He was a gentleman through and through, and lived at Doniphan. His sympathies, however, were all with the South. The town of Whitehead, near Bellmont, was named after James Whitehead, a relative, who once owned a big mill at St. Joseph. The entire family were all pro-slavery.

"The foremost abolitionists at the time were Alfred Larzelere, Benjamin H. Brock, Henderson Smallwood, John M. Tracy, Benjamin Harding, A. E. Campbell and John L. Fee. The latter died at his home after returning from a free state convention at Lecompton, in the month of September, on Sunday. The pro-slavery men on one occasion, at about this time, caused the arrest of several of the abolitionists named. The charge preferred against them was treason and all were forced to go before Judge Lecompt. There was a long drawn-out trial and much discussion over all of this section of the country. Finally all of the men were acquitted.

"I recall now one incident that was common at the time in this section. Two negroes escaped from their master and had gone but a short distance when some of the advocates of slavery stepped in their path and told them to halt. As it happened, there were several abolitionists present also, and they told the negroes to go on. For fully half an hour the frightened chattels stood trembling, at a loss to know which course was the best. They were sort of between the devil and the deep blue sea. Finally they decided to go on. Among the abolitionists was a man whose name was Dillon. I cannot recall his first name. He singled out one of the negro men and told him to stop. 'I'll die before I'll go back to mass,' the slave replied, and all of them ran like mad for the woods. The pro-slavery men immediately organized a posse and started after them. The trail led to Petersburg, where the unfortunates were cornered. They were desperate, however, and one of the men drew a knife, which he had obtained from a butcher shop. So effectively did he wield the weapon that one of the white men was killed and one negro also lost his life. The free state men saved the others from slaughter. Later, when informed of the pursuit and the encounter, Mr. Fairman, editor of the Advertiser, stated that whenever there was any occurence of the kind in the future, that he would lock up his office, take his Colts in hand and start after the pro-slavery men.

"One of the other things that I well remember, was the campaign for county treasurer. Although both of us were Republicans, Baal Campbell and I were the candidates. The campaign was rather warm, as all campaigns were in those days. Just before the election, the ladies of the Methodist Church in Troy held a festival. Practically everything good to eat and lots of knick-knacks were on sale. I couldn't be there, having other matters to attend to. Campbell, however, went, thinking of course to make some votes. He made a wonderful splurge. There wasn't a girl there that night who didn't have all the ice cream and cake and candy she could eat. All of the married women came in for their share, too. The girls and ladies all went around and told what a nice man Campbell was, and urged the men folks to vote for him. After spending $25 or $30, Campbell left for home, thinking it an evening well spent. However, when the returns came in the day after election, I was the fortunate candidate, showing perhaps that after all, ice cream and cake are not good for campaigning purposes.

"I was born in New London, Mo., on Oct. 20, 1840, and was in Troy for the first time when I was fourteen years old. I had to go to the court house to leave some papers for my brother John, and then I returned to Platte City, where my parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Tracy, were living. A little later we moved to Elwood, Kan. At that time there was nothing to be seen for miles around Elwood but timber. I was in the neighborhood when the macadamized road, which cost $25,000, was built between Elwood and Wathena. It was constructed by Ebenezer Blackistone. Peter E. Joseph graded the Marysville road between Elwood and Wathena.

"Right here I want to tell a little yarn and then tell who the men were, for they are all known in Doniphan County. When we were living in Platte City, a number of boys came down to our house for some sort of an entertainment. All of us were young. The men I have in mind, who were mere youngsters, walked. When they reached a creek near our town, they stopped, took off their shoes, and after washing their feet, put them back on again and started into town. The first thing they did was to go to a bakery and purchase a big chunk of gingerbread apiece. Suddenly they heard a band and rushing out into the street, all of them yelled, 'Circus.' And so it was, and those boys were Bony Wood, Colonel John Donovan and James Birch.

"Bony Wood later went to California and down on the Isthmus of Panama. While there, it is related he came across a young fellow who had no money. He had been gambling and lost all. He wanted fare to get back home. Bony advised him to go out and get a bootblack's outfit and go to shining shoes. 'You can make $5 before dinner time,' he said. The young man followed instructions and in two or three days had enough to pay his fare back home. While I am speaking of these men, I happened to think of the agitation that spread over Doniphan County, when the St. Joseph, Denver & Marysville Railroad was inaugurated in 1871. General George Hall of St. Joseph, John L. Motter of Wathena, W. B. Craig, Obe Craig and George W. Barr were the promoters.

"James M. Trant was another man well and favorably known in Doniphan County. He went to Kansas from Alabama in 1854. His first stop was at St. Louis, and he intended to take the steamboat to St. Joseph. While in the Mound City, however, he became acquainted with a stranger, who declared that he also was coming to Kansas to look for a location, and suggested that they travel together. This was arranged. When they got ready to start they needed provisions and other things to bring along with them, so Mr. Trant knew he would have to hurry in order to get back to the boat in time.

Mrs. Trant wanted him to stay and help her get the trunks aboard, which were at the landing. Therefore in order to expedite matters and save time, Mr. Trant, who had all the confidence in the world in his new-found friend and traveling companion, took $312—all he had—from his pocket and gave it to the stranger, telling him to get the provisions and hurry back. The man left, but when the captain called 'All aboard,' he had not yet returned. The Trants waited for the next boat, and the next one also, but the stranger never was seen afterwards. Neither was the $312, and in those days it was considerable money.

"After settling near Troy, Trant became a preacher. He was a pleasant man and everyone liked to jolly with him. He loved to come into town and talk politics, religion, the weather, or anything else that anybody would argue with him about. Also he was very forgetful. Generally, he would walk to Troy and then get a ride home with some of his neighbors. One day, however, he came in on horseback. After his usual lengthy arguments he saw a neighbor, who asked him if he wanted a ride. Trant, forgetting his mount under the hotel shed, answered in the affirmative and climbed in. He got all the way home before he remembered his horse. He had to walk all the way back to town to get it.

"I think practically all of my family served during the Civil War with the Union side. I enlisted at Elwood, Kan., on April 12, 1861, in Company A, 1st Kansas Volunteers. Captain Bernard P. Chenoweth was the commanding officer. I was on Grant's staff for more than a year; also on the staff of General Sherman and other of the leaders who came out of that struggle covered with fame. My company was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth on June 16, 1864, and given honorable discharges. My father, Louis Tracy, enlisted at Columbus in the 13th Kansas Volunteers, and later became a major of the 9th Kansas Volunteers. Frank M. Tracy, my brother, enlisted in Company A of the 1st Kansas Volunteers, and was badly wounded at the battle of Wilson Creek. A bullet penetrated his lungs and he died from the effects of it on Feb. 13, 1888, in St. Joseph. He was an old-time newspaper man and many will remember him as Colonel of the 9th Kansas Volunteers, and as postmaster of St. Joseph. I have always been proud of my service in the war, because I was a Union man and saw that Union perpetuated.

"Cyrus Leland, Jr., the veteran politician, was a young man at that time, and we formed a friendship that will never be broken. He has certainly advertised Doniphan County extensively."

Mr. Tracy, who is now living in St. Joseph, has published several maps of Doniphan townships and also a map of the county. He has three children, all of whom are living. They are Halle D. Tracy, now engaged in newspaper work; Mrs. Jessie Buchanan and Lola.

Robert Tracy, the subject of this sketch, has two daughters living in St. Joseph—Lola Mary, Mrs. Hans P. Neilson, who resides at the Metropole Hotel, and Jessie Bell, Mrs. Buchanan, who resides at 636 Powell street. He enjoys the distinction of being great grandfather.

Obe Craig's Experiences

As Treasurer of Doniphan County, a Civil War Veteran and Railroad Promoter—Now Living a Retired Life in St. Joseph—Served as County Treasurer from 1870 to 1872.

Obe Craig, a former treasurer of Doniphan County, and another of the many Civil War veterans, who formerly lived here, has perhaps as accurate a history as could be found, concerning the St. Joseph, Denver & Marysville Railroad. Mr. Craig, who is still living, was born in Franklin, Ohio, Feb. 7, 1842, and came to Kansas on March 10, 1860. When the war broke out he went to Ohio and enlisted in the 1st Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, Company F. His Colonel was Alexander McDow McCook, one of the famous family of fighters. He enlisted when Fort Sumter was fired upon, April 13, 1861, and was mustered out at Dayton, Ohio, in August of 1861. He re-enlisted in Company A, 147 Ohio Volunteers, April 6, 1864, at the same place and was mustered out again Dec. 2, 1864, at Camp Dennison, Cincinnati, Ohio. Then he returned to Wathena, Kan. He was married to Miss Cassie Creal, Oct. 15, 1868, and has one daughter, Anna, now Mrs. Carl Neimer of 2626 Francis street, St. Joseph, Mo.

Obe Craig

Mr. Craig, in his own words, tells some of his memories of the early days of Doniphan County:

"I recall very distinctly the plans for the St. Joe, Denver & Marysville road. It was organized in the spring of 1870 —April, I think it was. General George Hall of St. Joseph, John L. Motter of Wathena, George W. Barr, W. B. Craig and myself were the promoters, and it was a difficult task, I can tell you. The road had many names. It was called "General George Hall," "The Palermo & St. Joseph," and "The Bob-Tail," and also the Palmetto Palermo line. The work was begun May 10, 1870, at Wathena.

"The old charter of the St. Joe & Denver road was such that in some way, the men behind the road, got a lease for a half interest in the line known at that time as the St. Joe, Denver & Marysville. The St. Joe & Denver line had been started in 1859 or 1860, and built as far as Wathena. We began to build from Wathena to Doniphan. We had arrangements to connect with the Atchison & Nebraska road at the latter place, and our line was to be constructed between the two towns along the Missouri River.

"We saw early that the only way to make a success of the venture was to let as few contracts as possible for the construction, and do most of the work ourselves. We hired laborers and teams by the hundred. Although a few contracts were let to parties outside, we practically built the line ourselves. Construction of the tracks between Wathena and Doniphan took only about one year, certainly not over that length of time. It was completed, I recollect, before I went out of office as county treasurer in 1871. I served from 1870 to 1872 as treasurer.

"The line followed the river bank most of the way, going through the bottom land and hugging close to the bluffs. At its completion we had an offer from a New York firm of bankers. The offer was too good to turn down, and we consequently sold it to Tanner & Company of New York City. They leased it to the Burlington, and that corporation ran trains over it for approximately one year. The price received was somewhere in the neighborhood of $150,000. Of course there was an indebtedness on it, but Tanner & Co. took that over. Later the concern failed. The Burlington continued to operate trains for a considerable time, and then gave it up. Time got in its work. There were rains, the road bed washed away and finally the Burlington company took up the tracks and the line passed into history.

"My memories of Doniphan County are very pleasant, and the experiences I had there were varied. Robert Tracy was my deputy when I was county treasurer, and later he succeeded me. In the spring of 1860, my brother and I went to Elwood and engaged in the general merchandise business. The firm was styled "W. B. Craig." I remained only a short time, however, returning to Ohio when the war came. At that time a man named Hunt ran The Advertiser. On November 12, 1860, the telegraph office was moved from St. Joseph over to Elwood, because the business did not justify keeping it on the St. Joseph side of the river. Two of the men from St. Joseph who had money, had gone over to invest it in Elwood, and they said the secession sentiment was the cause."

✓A SURE ENOUGH PIONEER

Mrs. John Kiley Came to Doniphan County a Young Bride in 1854 and Has Lived on the Same Farm Ever Since—Reared a Family of Ten Children, Nine Daughters and One Son.

No mention in this issue of the Chief of personalities and conditions in Doniphan County since the pioneer days, would be complete without including the name of Mrs. John Kiley, who resides about four miles southeast of Troy.

Mrs. Kiley is sure enough one of the landmarks of Doniphan County, having come here on March 24, 1854, when she was a young bride. She had been married less than a year when she made the journey with her husband from the East, and they settled on the farm where Mrs. Kiley now resides.

Mrs. John Kiley and Mrs. Peter K. McKittrick.

The Kiley family was a large one, Mrs. Kiley being the proud mother of nine daughters and one son. All the children received their education in the public schools and are highly esteemed by their friends and acquaintances. All the nine girls are married and have good husbands. The son, William J., resides in Nemaha County, near Centralia.

The members of the Kiley family are as follows: Mary K., Mrs. Pete McKittrick; Sarah E., Mrs. Morgan Powell; Delia D., Mrs. Henry Duffy; Elizabeth A., Mrs. Frank Duncan; Margaret J., Mrs. Ed Jackson; Laura B., Mrs. Fred Rice; Etta, Mrs. Leroy Jackson; Ida I., Mrs. William Medinger, and Lucy V., Mrs. Fred Manahan; and the son, William J.

Mrs. Kiley is an interesting member of the remnant of the old settlers, and is hale and hearty, notwithstanding her sixty-one years of residence in Doniphan County. Her intellect is still clear, and she remembers distinctly many of the important events that transpired during the early days of her residence in the county.

They were married in the old historic town of Harper's Ferry, Virginia, June 10, 1852, where John Brown was hanged, December 2, 1859. After a useful and commendable life of fifty-two years in this county, Mr. Kiley died September 17, 1906.

The city windmill, an old landmark, was torn down and replaced by a gasoline engine pump. The old wind mill was bought and placed over the well by Cyrus Leland about 1885. There are now two wells and the pump is placed in an excavation so as to be out of sight and the pumping can scarcely be heard.

The old Methodist Church building was sold at public auction May 17, 1909. Charles E. Brown bought it paying $925.00.

Theodore Wagner

A Successful Berry and Alfalfa Grower—Has Made Good in Doniphan County.

Theodore Wagner is one of our real, imported German farmers, having been born near Breslau in Germany. Before Theodore was very old, he displayed his exploring disposition, by evincing a desire to see what was on the other side of the big pond, so in 1870 he came to the United States, and finally landed in Doniphan County. Like so many other great men, Mr. Wagner could see no reason for living elsewhere, after he had tried out the climate awhile, so he settled with his father on the Cyrus Saxton farm, two miles southwest of Troy. Theodore was reared on a farm, went to the country schools near Troy, where he proved to be an apt scholar, but he had little opportunity for educational advantages.

Mr. Wagner soon realized that America boasted of as lovely women as the fatherland, so in 1883 he chose Miss Emma Vegely for his bride. Being ever of a consistent turn of mind, Mr. Wagner suggested Thanksgiving Day for the marriage, which was performed by the Reverend Father Timphause, in St. Joseph Church in Wathena. Mrs. Wagner was born in St. Joseph, Mo., and is a good and fit companion for the man, whose biography we offer. After his marriage, Mr. Wagner continued to farm, and, in 1897, purchased the Old Thompson farm, two miles east of Troy. Here he pursued the occupation of farmer in a successful and prosperous way until about two years ago. In common with the majority of the farmers in this vicinity, Mr. Wagner relied mainly on fruit and berries for his income, there being no spot in the world where these crops can be as easily and successfully grown as right here in this fertile section of Kansas.

The wonderful resources of Doniphan County are plainly shown, when one notices that the farmers are nearly always able to retire in early life, as in the case of Mr. Wagner. Two years ago he moved to Troy, having bought the Charley Bailey property on north Main Street.

There are two children of the Wagner-Vegley union; a son, Leo, and a daughter, Chloe M., who is now Mrs. Thomas J. Fisher. The son is thrifty and has been reared to handle the farm as well as his father himself; in fact, such is Mr. Wagner's confidence in his son's ability, that he permits the younger man to run the farm alone, while he lives a life of ease in town. However, when it is necessary, the senior Wagner assists on the farm and never flinches.

Leo has the farm set out in twenty acres of fruit and different kinds of berries, and the balance of the land is in alfalfa and corn. One hundred head of hogs are raised on the farm annually, which adds to the berry proceeds. In 1910, the Wagners sold nearly a thousand dollars worth of strawberries, of the Senator Dunlap variety, from one and three-quarters acres. He also raises the Snyder blackberry and the Kansas and Black Pearl raspberry. Leo stands a good chance to rival his father as a successful farmer. He was married to Lanzel Corcoran, a prominent school teacher of Doniphan County, a few years ago, and to this union one son has been born, Bernard Wagner.

Mr. Wagner, as a member of the school board, has always been identified with the educational progress of Doniphan County. Contrary to most parents, he has always been a champion of the teacher, and has endeavored to promulgate a harmonious relation between child and teacher and between teacher and parents. He was clerk of the school board in District No. 59, the Eclipse School House, and was a faithful and earnest attendant at all meetings.

Theodore Wagner is one of our most public spirited and broad minded citizens. He is possessed of a charming personality and has a host of friends, and never advocates a cause unless he believes it is right. His son-in-law, Thomas J. Fisher, who has clerked in Joe Hagenbuch's store for a dozen years, is a genial fellow, and draws custom for his employer. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher own a nice comfortable home in northwest Troy, and their home is blessed with two boys, Thomas Theodore and Robert.

Mr. Wagner, as a prominent member of the Fruit-Growers Association, was a leading spirit in the movement which resulted in the erection last year of a building for the use of that association. The offices are located therein and all business connected with the association is transacted within its walls.

The Good Roads Movement in Doniphan County

(Contributed by Otto Weinburg, of Center Township.)

There have been a great many ways to attract the attention of the people of the United States to the good roads movement, and while most people favor the building of good roads, when it comes to raising funds for the purpose and actually paying for results in cold cash, enthusiasm wanes.

In Doniphan County we have thus far attained only dirt roads, and succeeded but partially in making them of enduring construction on account of the washy condition of the soil. In the rainy season it is a well-built road that will not cut into ditches and hollows.

Our county road officials and township officials seem to agree on one point regarding good roads, and that is to build cement bridges and culverts as fast as the money can be obtained and appropriated. If finances permitted, wooden bridges would be a thing of the past in a short time. The county commissioners have built numerous cement culverts in the past four or five years. In Center Township the road officials commenced two years ago to discard wood for cement and up to this time we have thirty-two cement crossings and retaining walls.

Naturally the first criticism of the tax payers in regard to cement bridges is the cost. We have not paid less than 40 cents per cubic foot for cement work, and that cost would be increased, providing the material is hauled farther than three miles. A wooden bridge may be built for $6 per lineal foot, at which rate the cement bridge will cost three or four times more than the wooden.

However, it is my personal opinion that the cement bridge is cheaper, even if the price were 50 cents per cubic foot, inasmuch as it is practically indestructible. The first cost, while appalling to the average farmer, seems to minimize when it is taken into consideration that the work is permanent, and the road will not have to be gone over in a year or two.

In this agricultural community, where threshing machines pulled by heavy engines are no uncommon sight in harvest time, a law has been passed requiring machine owners to carry planking to protect the wooden bridges. More than one farmer has been infuriated by a thresherman consuming some two or three hours in crossing a bridge fifty feet long, while if durable cement culverts protected the road, the outfit could have passed on at its regular speed and the road none the worse for the burden.

I predict that in four or five years hence, that on all roads leading from Troy there will be cement bridges for the first several miles, at least. It would then be possible and feasible that the township hire a traction engine, operated by steam or gasoline, to pull its road graders. At the present time it is not practical to harness the iron horse to the road grader on account of the many wooden bridges.

I have endeavored to show what an advantage cement crossings will be to the farmer from a business standpoint, in the way of saving him time and money—and temper. And now it does not seem out of place to mention what a blessing good, smooth roads will be to the automobile owner—good roads that will mean the elimination of bumping and profanity.

Now, finally, it occurs to me that when our cement bridges are built, will we then be prepared to consider paved roads?

PROF. I. B. MORGAN

A Noted Educator—Superintendent of the Continuation Schools of Kansas City, Kansas.

Prof. I. B. Morgan, vice-principal of the Kansas City (Kan.) High School, is one of the most progressive educators, not only in the state of Kansas, but in the broad United States.

Professor Morgan has devoted his life to educational work in Kansas, and it can be said to his credit that he has been eminently successful in his chosen profession.

The first experience of Professor Morgan in public school teaching was in the schools of Brown County. When he taught his home school in the Bryn Pleasant district, he taught not only the common school branches, but also gave instruction in algebra, Latin, geometry and physical geography to advanced students, many of whom came from adjoining districts.

In February of 1887, Professor Morgan was elected superintendent of the Sabetha schools, which position he filled with credit and ability for fourteen years. His long and efficient services in this position placed the Sabetha schools among the foremost in the state.

In 1901 he was elected superintendent of the Troy schools, where he remained three years and was elected for the fourth year when he was called to the Kansas City, Kansas, High School. During his superintendency the schools were raised to a high state of efficiency, a four years high school course was established, and a new high school building erected.

Professor Morgan is a busy man nowadays. He is vice-principal of the Kansas City, Kansas, High School, with an enrollment of 1,200; principal of the continuation schools, with an enrollment of 2,600, and is director of the vocation bureau. Professor Morgan believes that in order to meet with the highest success, the teacher must never cease to study. He is a student of the Kansas University, of the Kansas University summer schools and of the Harvard summer school. He holds a life diploma issued by the state board of education, and the degree of master of arts, conferred upon him by Ottawa University.

His wide experience as superintendent of schools, teacher and conductor of teachers' institutes, together with a liberal amount of common sense, and a spirit of sympathy and helpfulness, enables him to do his work with a maximum degree of efficiency with a minimum degree of waste and friction.

In educational circles he has filled the positions of president of the Northeast Kansas Teachers' Association and treasurer of the Kansas State Teachers' Association. Professor Morgan was honored by the National Congress of Mothers by his election as one of the contributors to "Parents and Their Problems."

On June 29, 1904, Prof. I. B. Morgan was married to Miss Anna Byard Brewster, the accomplished and charming daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Brewster, who for a number of years were esteemed residents of White Cloud. They have two fine boys, Brewster and William, who are the pride and joy of their fond parents. The former was born April 9, 1905, and the latter February 5, 1907.

Mr. Morgan believes that the boy or girl who will be successful in after years, must lay the foundation for success in youth, and he is impressing the same upon his boys minds. However, these children could do no better than to emulate their father.

Timothy Brown, residing in Elwood, started the first stage line between St. Joe and Troy, on Jan. 23, 1860.

Albert L. Perry, the well known abstracter, attorney and Mayor of Troy, is a living testimonial to the truth of the old, old saying that "you can't keep a good man down." He is a native born citizen of Troy and belongs to a family that, as far back as our Nation's history runs, has been noted for great achievements, which in some measure accounts for his success in his undertakings. While this valued citizen has not been called upon to command a fleet of battle ships, or has been commissioned by our government to make treaties with foreign powers, as some of his ancestors were, he has been none the less useful as a citizen. He has helped to make the town in which he was born a good place in which to live, and the state in which he was reared one of the grandest in all the union of states; he has contributed his full share to the public welfare, has been successful in his personal business affairs, and is a live wire in the community which is proud of him.

The date of Albert L. Perry's birth was May 9, 1862, at a time when all through Kansas there was a bustle of activity in organizing companies and regiments and hurrying them off to battle against the Confederate forces. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. Albert Perry, who had settled in Troy some few years before and were then, as for many years, among the leading citizens of the place. As a boy Albert L. Perry attended the schools of Troy as he grew up in the town. When he was a little past fifteen years of age he entered the University of Kansas Lawrence and took a full four years' course, 1877 to 1881, finishing in the University before he was twenty-one years of age.

Returning home from the University this energetic young man did not permit the grass to grow under his feet. He applied for a position as a school teacher and was employed by the board to teach in the Union school in Union Township of Doniphan County. It was his first experience as a teacher. The next year he went to Beattie, Kansas, where he was employed as Superintendent of Schools in 1882 and 1883. Then he went to Lyons, Kansas, and filled the position of superintendent of the city schools for the years 1883, 1884 and 1885.

Mr. Perry had been successful as a school teacher and superintendent and had bright prospect of a fine career as an educator before him, but he decided to take up the profession of law in which his father had been successful. He had made many new friends in and about Lyons and they persuaded him to remain among them. He practiced law there seven years and did well, but he wasn't satisfied with the legal business.

Returning to Troy in 1894 Mr. Perry decided to continue his practice and also engaged in the abstract business. His education and his experience as a lawyer had given him an insight into the land title business. His father, however, discouraged him by saying the young man could not succeed in the abstract business; to which the young man replied that he would make an attempt. Albert L. Perry, however, opened an office, hung out a sign and in an incredibly short time he was doing a fine business. Hie clients recognized his ability, for he brought into the business a legal knowledge that, combined with his technical knowledge of the business, made him an abstractor whose certificate on the last page of an abstract would be accepted anywhere and by the best title experts in the land.

During his abstracting career in Troy Mr. Perry very naturally took a great interest in politics and public affairs. He was elected in Nov., 1897, to the office of County Commissioner of the Second District of Doniphan County composed of Wayne and Center townships, on the Republican ticket. He entered on the duties of that office January 6, 1898, and so successfully did he serve the people that he was continued in office until January 8, 1904.

Mr. Perry had served the Republican party long and faithfully as a member of the county central committee and also as a member of the state and congressional committees. He made a splendid record as a county commissioner, and when the selection of a mayor was at issue in Troy in the spring of 1915, the Republicans nominated him for the office. It was a red-hot campaign in which Mr. Perry came out as winner. He took the office on the Friday following the election of April 4, 1915, and is making a fine record as Mayor of Troy.

One of the noticeable features of Mayor Perry's administration is his strict attention to business. He keeps in close touch with every department of the public service and is giving the people of the city a "run" for their money paid in taxes. He believes in public improvements, in pretty homes and clean streets, and in all of those things that make a town an attractive place in which to live. He is the kind of a public official who will always be popular with the people whose faithful servant he is.

Albert L. Perry was married to Miss Theodore Stenger on July 14, 1914, at Kansas City, Missouri. She is a woman of ability and of fine personality, and is a charming companion for the Mayor of one of the prettiest and most prosperous towns in Kansas.

Has Established Reputation as Salesman in Northeastern Kansas—Is of German Parentage—Represents the Firm of John S. Brittain of St. Joseph, Missouri, Is Active in Politics.

That which is indispensable to a successful salesman is to be a thorough student of psychology, honest and straight in all deals with those with whom he comes in contact. All of these qualifications are possessed by John William Walker of 814 South Sixth street, Atchison, Kansas, who has represented the firm of John S. Brittain since 1890 in northeast Kansas. "Jake," as he is familiarly known by the knights of the grip, is of German parentage and speaks the language of his ancestors as fluently as English.

The subject of this sketch was born near Nazareth, Pennsylvania, Aug. 17, 1857. He was married on June 21, 1884, to Miss Clara A. Rank, who died Jan. 15, 1900. To this union was born one son, Herbert William, on June 4, 1895, who is a graduate from Midland College and is at present engaged with the Atchison Globe as a reporter. Also, Florence Marie, born Aug. 25, 1898, now a student in Midland College, and enjoying the distinction of being one of the brightest young ladies in the school. Mr. Walker was married a second time to Miss Myrta Olive Peak, Aug. 21, 1901. She is an ideal helpmeet and one who is held in high esteem by her acquaintances and friends.

Herbert William could do nothing better than to emulate his father.

A. B. Zimmerman is the senior member of the firm of Zimmerman & Williamson Mercantile Co., of Troy. He owns a fine farm, consisting of 240 acres of fertile fruit and wheat land, two miles southwest of Troy. It is on this farm that the famous Duroc Jersey hogs are bred and raised, in which Mr. Zimmerman takes much pride and which are known the country over. This picture was taken in the Rock Island stock yards just after he and William Anderson had loaded several cars of hogs for shipment to various marts.

A NOTABLE TROY FAMILY

Industrious Local Blacksmith Rears Eleven Children and Sets a Good Example By Strict Economy and Hard Work

In these strenuous days when most people are devoting their time to talking about the "high cost of living," there is one citizen in Troy who can well boast of never having been bothered by such imaginary trifles.

This man is Isaac Scarbrough, the well-known blacksmith, who has established a record by his industry and economy which any head of a family might well strive to emulate. As the proud father of eleven bright and intelligent children, Mr. Scarbrough is a living example of how circumstances can be overcome and difficulties surmounted in making a comfortable living for a large family.

Although employed by others for twenty years Mr. Scarbrough reared and educated this interesting family on the fruits of his daily toil. As a working mechanic he never shirked his duties and being a man of sterling integrity he was destined to succeed in life.

When Mr. Scarbrough engaged in business for himself a few years ago he was helped in the shop by his eldest boy, Mark. That was the first assistance this popular blacksmith had in rearing and educating the family.

Last year Mr. Scarbrough was materially helped by his daughter Bertha, who taught school at the age of eighteen and the family chest will be further strengthened this year by the earnings of his daughter Anna, who is teaching school in the Le Grande. It will not be long now until all the younger children are able to make their way in the world.

The Scarbrough home is a comfortable one for a laboring man, and shows all the evidences of domestic economy and happy family surroundings, Mr. Scarbrough pays little heed to the high cost of living bogey. He long ago realized that provisions and clothing must be provided for a family and he was always willing to pay for these necessities without kicking on the price. The subject of this sketch was born in Andrew County, Missouri and came with his parents to Doniphan County in February, 1862, when only a babe two months old. On April 20, 1890, he was married to Miss Sarah C. Jennings in Troy, and Squire Frank Brown officiated. Mrs. Scarbrough is an industrious woman and an ideal mother and a faithful wife. His children in age order are as follows: Flora E. (now Mrs. Morrow), Mark, Enos, Anna, Bertha M., Ressa M., Bessie D., Sylvia L., Rena D., Sarah D. and Alpheus.

Has one son, James L., who resides in St. Joseph, Missouri. Mr. Wilson served as bailiff in the Doniphan County court for almost a score of years, and is well known to the citizens throughout the county who have attended court the past few years. He owns a good residence property in the south part of Troy.

He enlisted in 3d Massachusetts cavalry in Company A, in November, 1863, and was mustered out at Leavenworth and discharged at Boston, in October, 1865. Came to Kansas in 1866 and settled in Doniphan County, near Troy. He was married in 1872 to Minerva South. He has three daughters: (Lulu Maud) Mrs. W. G. Rose, Lotus and Gladys Macomber, and three sons, as follows: Harry L., Eugene A. and Richard E. Macomber. He resides in Wolf River Township, three miles from Troy, where he purchased his farm thirty years ago

James S. Triplett, Cattle Buyer

Former Doniphan County Boy Draws $6,000.00 a Year Buying and Selling Cattle for Maxwell, Spade & Company, of St. Joseph —First Car Deal Was With Gov. W. J. Bailey—Bought Two Calves of Michael Pfennig—Now Known as One of the Best Stockmen in Middle West.

When the good old stockmen meet in the lobby of the Transit House in South St. Joseph and talk of cattle and cattlemen, they invariably mention the name of a former Doniphan County boy as being one of the best judges of cattle in the Middle West. He is James S. Triplett, who was born and reared on a farm northeast of Troy. From a deal made at the age of eighteen, when he bought two calves from Michael Pfennig, a neighbor, he developed judgment in buying and selling cattle, until now he draws a salary of $6,000 a year as cattle buyer and seller for Maxwell, Spade & Company, St. Joseph live stock speculators.

Mr. Triplett was born March 10, 1873, on a farm five miles northeast of Troy and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Triplett. On account of his parents' large family, he had comparatively little opportunity to attend school—and schools then were not what schools are today—he was an apt student and made the most of his opportunities, and graduated from the typical old country school which stood on the land now owned by Moses F. Cox, which was burned by an incendiary Thursday night, December 27, 1893.

His boyhood was spent on the farm where the conditions then are not to be compared with those of the present day, and improvements made by modern inventions and machinery were not known. Mr. Triplett went through all of the trials of such farm life and likely can recall how he used to wash his face by candlelight after breaking the ice in the basin. Perhaps, too, he has vivid memories of hoeing corn and potatoes under the hot sun, and loading hay, when he would have preferred to play ball or hunt wild turkeys in the bluffs north of Troy, which were clothed with regal splendor.

He knows the back breaking work of bugging potatoes and the arduous labor connected with hoeing water melons, chopping wood and doing chores until ten o'clock at night and rising the following morning at four. When Jim worked on the farm it wasn't from seven in the morning till six in the evening, but from five in the morning till eight at night. When the subject of this sketch is in a retrospective frame of mind, he can relate many ludicrous incidents, which transpired while he was toiling on the farm and which are as vivid to his recollection today as though they had happened yesterday.

However, more than likely the event of his boyhood which stands out above the others, was his first deal in cattle. Live stock had always interested him, even as a little boy, and as he grew up good cattle especially attracted his attention. He felt sure that he could make money by investing in calves, feeding them and selling them when he became a man. Mr. Triplett's father began to share this opinion and, as it happened, when the son was eighteen years of age, Michael Pfennig, a neighbor, now dead, had a couple of "likely" looking calves. Young Triplett had been noticing these calves, and being so confident that he could make some money on them, his father finally allowed him to make the investment on his own responsibility. The lad bought the calves, fed them and the transaction proved profitable for him. From that small deal he continued to develop judgment and foresight in buying and selling cattle until today, as cattle buyer and seller for Maxwell, Spade & Company, he draws one of the largest salaries earned by any former Doniphan county boy.

The first full car of cattle this prominent cattle man bought was a car of calves which Governor Willis J. Bailey ordered him to buy for his farm at Baileyville. When he delivered the calves to the governor at Baileyville, that venerable statesman expressed himself as being well pleased with the young man's judgment in cattle.

Mr. Triplett went to St. Joseph in the course of his career and has been connected with the St. Joseph Stock Yards nearly ever since the yards were established. In addition to being a good judge of cattle, he is a perfect psychology student and is an equitable man with whom to deal. He is business-like, genial, strictly honest and gives all a square deal, so he can conscientiously look every man he has dealt with in the eye.

The subject of this sketch attained his success comparatively early in life and his is the fine example of how work, study and judgment applied to a natural business ability along certain lines, has brought a material reward. Throughout the Middle West his reputation has extended until his judgment on a cow or steer is taken as the last word among prospective buyers and sellers, and by the firm by which he is employed.

Doniphan county people, when in St. Joseph, find Mr. Triplett most pleasant to meet and he always retains a great deal of interest in the affairs of his old home county. Invariably he takes time from his many duties to inquire about the friends of his boyhood, and to chat about the conditions of cattle and crops in his native county. In St. Joseph he has a comfortable home at 801 North Twenty-second street.

Mr. Triplett was married to Miss Alice Josie Moser, March 20, 1895, at the parsonage of the M. E. Church South in Troy by the Rev. Mr. C. W. Thorp, who was the pastor of the church. Mrs. Triplett was one of the popular girls of her neighborhood and is held in high esteem by her schoolmates and her acquaintances in St. Joseph. She was reared in the Moser homestead, four miles north of Troy, and graduated from the country school, District Number 72, known as the Mosquito Creek District. The facilities for gaining an education at that time were not what they are today and she had little opportunity to gratify her great desire for knowledge. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Moser, who still reside on the farm, were Doniphan county pioneers and are among the most respected citizens of the community. They possess the good qualities their daughter inherits. Mrs. Triplett was born on the farm four miles north of Troy, January 20, 1875.

Mr. and Mrs. Triplett are the proud parents of three children. Corrine, born October 4, 1899; James Smiley, Jr., January 3, 1903; and Charles Franklin born November 20, 1904. The children, like their parents, are exceptionally bright and of lovable dispositions. They are receiving their education in St. Joseph and will be assured of a good start in life. If they follow the splendid examples set by their parents when they grow to manhood and womanhood, they will become good citizens in any community wherever they reside.

The subject of this sketch enjoys the distinction of being the only party working at the stock yards who has not taken a vacation for ten years. He is alert at all times and serves his employers so faithfully, which accounts for the munificient salary he is receiving today. Located a mile south of Troy is his beautiful farm of two hundred and forty acres, and also the substantial residence located at 801 North Twenty-second street, St. Joseph, Missouri, which is the amount of his liabilities.

This prosperous and energentic young business man learned early in life that it was close application that counted, therefore he has applied himself. This speculator is destined to be one of the wealthy boys of Doniphan County. He is a lover of home, and every evening after his day's work is completed he may be found at home spending the evening hours with his estimable family.

James S. is leading a model life and his sons could do no better than to emulate their father.

The Rev. Mr. E. F. Holland, a retired minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church now living at Holton, Kansas, is well known in Doniphan County. He was born at Bedford, Indiana, March 10, 1844. Mrs. Holland was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, Sept. 22, 1851. To their union two children were born. The son, Clarence F., born Jan. 29, 1876, died Oct. 22, 1901. ## JUDGE NATHAN PRICE

Endowed With Remarkable Judicial Ability.

One of the most brilliant men who ever resided in Doniphan County was Judge Nathan Price, in whose honor the Wathena G. A. R. post was named. He was born in Chester County, Pennsylvania, near Pottstown, in 1838, and died in Troy on the 8th of March, 1883. While he was growing to the years of manhood, the exciting debates on the Kansas and Nebraska bill by Stephen A. Douglas and others, and the stirring events that followed, were in progress, he became deeply interested and decided to locate in Kansas. In 1860 Mr. Price was elected a member of the territorial council to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of George M. Beebee, made secretary, and was a member of the legislature of 1861.

When the rebellion broke out, he assisted in raising a company intended for the Fourth Kansas, but which in the consolidation, became the Tenth Kansas, and he was made first lieutenant of the company. At the expiration of his term of enlistment, he engaged in the mercantile business at Geary City. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar and began the practice of law in Troy. Had a particular talent for the law and rose rapidly in his profession. In 1868 he was elected judge of the district court which he held almost four years, resigning in 1872. That year he was elected to the state senate and was a member at the time of the York and Pomeroy episode. He was one of the ablest men that ever lived in this county; being possessed of a prodigious memory, great reasoning powers and a legal mind that with proper direction and a due regard for public opinion and his own well-being, would have eventually placed himself in high position.

His widow, Mrs. Price, resides in California. His son, Clarence, is residing in Pittsburg, Kansas, and his daughters, Gussie and Marie Ware, reside in Topeka. The latter is assistant state librarian.

JOHN S. NORMAN

Popular Bank President Was a School Teacher When He Was a Young Man—A Believer in Athletics and Outdoor Sports—How He Saved a Rock Island Train.

John S. Norman, president of the First National Bank of Troy, started on his successful career as teacher of a country school. When he came to Doniphan County, his home was in Troy, and in 1890 when he was teaching in the school at Bendena, six miles southwest, he would walk to the school in the morning and then walk back at night. He needed the exercise, being confined in the school room all day, but he found after he became accustomed to it that walking was one of the most enjoyable of all outdoor exercise.

Mr. Norman usually chose the Rock Island Railway right-of-way as his path to and from school, and it was fortunate for the railway company and a train loaded with passengers that he chose the right-of-way going to school on the morning of January 18, 1890. The mercury was down to fifteen below that morning and he was moving along at a more rapid pace than usual when he discovered that one of the steel rails had been broken by a freight train that had passed but a short time before. It was near a curve in the road and the passenger train was then about due. There was no time to lose. He must save the train. Before him was the picture of an impending wreck.

Heedless of the cold the plucky young school teacher took off his coat and ran toward the curve. He heard the rumbling of the wheels on the frosty rails. A moment more and the engine appeared in view. Then frantically he waved the coat with one hand and his hat with the other until the engineer saw him and succeeded in stopping the train within a few feet of the broken rail.

Mr. Norman doubtless saved the lives of the engineer and many of the passengers. It was reported afterward that the railroad company rewarded him with a life pass over the road, but this is not true.

The reward that came to him through the consciousness of having the presence of mind to do the right thing at the right moment was satisfying. That has been one of the rules of his life and accounts for a good deal of the success that has come to him in business.

"Buffalo" Jones

Famous Wild Animal Catcher in Troy from 1866 to 1872—Brother of John H. Jones of This City—In Nursery Business Here—Built Dr. Elijah Monroe's Home—Traveled Extensively and Had Many Adventures in Africa—Employed by United States to Catch Mountain Sheep for National Park.

A former Troy citizen has a national if not an international reputation as a wild animal catcher. He is Charles Jesse Jones, known all over America as "Buffalo" Jones. This heroic man came to Troy, March 7, 1866, and lived here until May 7, 1872. In that time he was engaged in the nursery business.

"Buffalo" Jones was born in Pazwell county, Ill., Jan. 31, 1844, and was reared in Bloomington, Ill. The same adventuresome spirit which afterward made him famous as a wild animal man, impelled him to desire to conquer the then untamed West. Accordingly he came to Kansas and located in Troy, where he was successful in his nursery business and the years from 1866 to 1872 saw him prosper. Some of the apple trees he sold still stand in the orchard of Mike Forest, who resides south of Troy, the latter's father buying the trees from the man who has given Troy a national reputation.

On Jan. 20, 1869, Charles Jones married Miss Martha J. Walton, a Doniphan County girl, who was one of the county's best known and best hearted women.

While in Troy, the subject of this sketch built the house now occupied by Dr. Elijah Monroe. Restlessness again seized the destined animal hunter and on May 7, 1872, he left Troy and went to Finney County, near Garden City, where he took a claim. He also became owner of a herd of buffalo and for that reason was called "Buffalo" Jones, by which name he is known all over America.

Charles J. invested heavily in Garden City, the metropolis of Finney County, at the beginning of the boom, and his holding increased in value and at one time he could have sold out for $100,000. However, his faith in Garden City and in its people, too, led him to retain his interests there. Then came the collapse of the Garden City boom, the decline of western Kansas in general, and his real estate gradually decreased in value until he experienced quite a loss.

Charles J. Jones

In the meantime the old adventurous spirit was stirring him. He decided to go to Africa and engage in catching wild animals. In this hazardous occupation he experienced many thrilling escapes from death. Another characteristic phase of his interesting career was his hunting mountain sheep. Mr. Jones was employed to do this by the United States government, which wanted the animals for the National Park.

These and other adventures have made the topics in numerous books which have been written relative to his life. His thrilling experiences with wild animals are also the subject of lectures with which he is occupying his declining years. He gives the real facts about himself, and the facts in themselves are stranger and more interesting than any fiction. This lecture he delivered in his former home in Troy at the Cy Leland opera house, June 30, 1915. Although it had been pouring rain all day long and there was considerable rain that evening, the opera house was crowded, attesting to the distinguished gentleman's popularity in his own home town, where he was visiting his brother, John, and brother-in-law, C. E. Walton. The lecture was illustrated with motion pictures showing the daring animal catcher taking his life into his own hands by going after ferocious animals.

Mr. Jones' beloved wife died at Topeka, Oct. 27, 1907, and her demise was sincerely mourned in Doniphan County, where she had been most popular, and in Topeka, where her kindliness had won her many friends.

"Buffalo" Jones' two daughters, his only children, are living. Olive Waltonia Jones was born at Garden City, Aug. 10, 1885, and is now the wife of Charles R. Whitmer, of 324 Topeka avenue, Topeka. Miss Jessie Irma Jones, who possesses literary ability, was born in Garden City, Jan. 28, 1889. She is in the employ of the Topeka Daily State Journal, and is making her home with her sister. Miss Jones has been popular wherever she has lived. Like Mrs. Whitmer, she has been a favorite among her associates and those with whom she comes in contact. Their father's fame has not turned their heads. They are proud of him, of course, but do not let their pride in their father's achievements and reputation affect them in their associations with other people. In Topeka the daughters of "Buffalo" Jones are exceptionally popular. Their charming ways and keen intellect have won them a place in the hearts of the people of the capital city of Kansas. They are fine examples of young Kansas womanhood and are a good reflection upon the characters of their parents and the training the daughters received at their hands.

Miss Olive Brant Walton and Miss Alice Walton.

MISS OLIVE BRANT WALTON AND MISS ALICE WALTON

Twin Daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edward Walton, Who Are Attending the Wathena High School in Their Third Year.

Among the bright students in the junior classes of the Wathena High School are Miss Olive Brandt Walton and Miss Alice Walton, the twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edward Walton, who live on a farm four miles east of Troy. These two young ladies were born August 26, 1896, on their father's farm. They attended the country school at Blair and graduated from that school in 1912. Afterward they entered the Wathena High School and they are now in their third year.

The Misses Walton are among the most estimable young women students in the school and are popular with their fellow students and classmates, although it isn't every one—even those 'knowing them well—who can tell one from the other. They look alike, dress alike most of the time, and their actions are about as nearly similar as it would be possible to find in two persons.

However, it may be observed that the striking similarity in appearance of the Misses Walton rather enhances their popularity among the people, for while to have one such a girl as either of these in the community would be a blessing, to have two such girls is a double blessing. They are studious in school, refined and graceful and of pleasing manners. They also take an interest in Sunday school work and are regularly seen in the Sunday school at Blair. The Misses Walton are an honor to the Wathena High school and to Doniphan County and the people are proud of these twins.

Benjamin Patton Curtis

Benjamin Patton Curtis was born March 27, 1839, in Platte County, Missouri, while his parents were en route from Tennessee to Platte County. He came to Doniphan County April 24, 1854, and settled on a farm between Elwood and Wathena, on the land owned by the Grohs. He enlisted in Company A, First Kansas volunteer infantry at Elwood, April 10, 1861, under Capt. Bernard P. Choneworth; mustered out at Memphis, Tennessee. He was married to Miss Mary Eliza Ashcraft July 23, 1865, at Doniphan, by Reverend Mr. Houts, the Methodist minister. Their children are as follows. Anna Mary, Mrs. Julian Tate, of St. Joseph, Missouri; Mabel, Mrs. William Maynard, of Cologne, South Dakota; Bird, Mrs. Judson F. Thayer, of Stromsburg, Nebraska; Maude, Mrs. Alva W. Toole, of St. Joseph, Missouri; Jessie, Mrs. Clarence H. Allison, of Chicago, Illinois; Frances, Mrs. Ernest A. Williamson, of Troy, Kansas.

Referring to reminiscences of the Civil War, Mr. Curtis said:

"The time that Van Dorn got in our rear to cut off our supplies, they captured Holly Springs and burned up everything; took over $2,000,000 worth of rations and army stores, and that left us without anything to eat, so being a good forager, I was out foraging on my own hook. There was another fellow with me, Alberton Abbey, and we were captured and paroled, and then we traded our uniforms for a couple of rebel uniforms at Rippley, Mississippi, and then beat our way to Corinth, which was ninety miles from Rippley, and gave ourselves up to the Federal army as rebel deserters. At that time they were organizing the First Alabama cavalry, made up of refugees, and I enlisted in that regiment, Company E, under the name of C. F. Barker; served my time out, which was for one year, from the 28th of February, 1863, to the 28th of February, 1864. In February, 1864, I was discharged at Memphis, Tennessee, and came back to Kansas.

Mrs. Martha J. Jones

"I applied for a discharge from the First Kansas, Company A, in 1890, and got it in my real name. I had been mustered out under the assumed name of C. F. Barker. At the time I got my discharge in 1890, I got the $125 bounty that was given to all soldiers who enlisted in 1861, and also got seven months' back pay."

Nate Swiggert

Nate Swiggett was born in Pike County, Illinois, February 6, 1841. Enlisted in Company G, Fifth Illinois cavalry, at New Salem, Pike County, Illinois, January 1, 1861, and was mustered out at Springfield, Illinois, October 27, 1865. He came to Doniphan County in March, 1869, and settled at Lafayette about ten miles northwest of Troy. Was married October 24, 1869, to Mary K. Simpson and to this union three daughters and three sons have been born: Jessie Belle, who died in infancy, and Edna, at the age of five months; Anna Marie, who is now Mrs. William Briggs. The sons are as follows: Harry, Beaver City, Nebraska; Charles A., who is in Columbus, Ohio, engaged in business. James E. died at the age of twenty-six years. Mr. Swiggett was engaged in the livery business for several years in Troy, and later in the restaurant and hotel business, and owns the home where he lives, and the St. Charles Hotel.

James Noel Gibbins, Frontiersman and Pioneer of the Plains of the 1850's—Over the Old Trails to Laramie and Sacramento—Down the Missouri from Montana on a Flat Boat—His Son, John Ritchie Gibbins, and His Daughter, Sarah Emily Gibbins—The Younger Members of the Family.

James Noel Gibbins—born at Perryville, Kentucky, January 16, 1824; died in Highland, Kansas, April 5, 1915; aged 81 years, 2 months and 19 days.

Between the date of his birth and the date of his death James Noel Gibbins had a remarkable career. Reared to the age of nine years in the Kentucky home in the early half of the preceding century, with three years of schooling under a tutor when there were no public schools in that state; then in the year 1843 taken with his parents to the Platte Purchase, afterward Andrew County, Missouri, there was plenty of romance in his early youth for any boy. The development of Kentucky scarcely was begun, and the part of Missouri to which his parents went to live was all "back woods" country. The new country offered little of educational advantages—reading, writing, arithmetic, including the rule of three now called proportion, with spelling, Murray's Grammar and Wilson's Fifth Reader—but there was everything a boy could wish in the way of hard work mixed with adventure. Somehow the educational advantages, or the lack of them, together with the enviornment produced strong men of character and intelligence and bravery, such as we know little of in this day and age.

The memory of that long journey up the Missouri River on a steamboat in 1843 clung to James Noel Gibbins through life. It was in the glorious hey-day of river traffic, when the "Big Muddy" was the great highway to the undeveloped and almost unexplored country between the Mississippi River and the Pacific slope, and when the steamboats were floating palaces, and there was a romanticism about everything such as to cause the pioneer of that period who is now living to sigh and long for a return of those good old days.

That journey of more than five hundred miles by land and water from Kentucky to Western Missouri created in the youthful James Noel Gibbins a desire to travel and to explore other countries, and it is not strange that when he became a young man of twenty he was found driving a team overland from St. Joseph to St. Mary's Mission on the Kansas River above the site of Topeka. It was his first view of the Kansas prairies and he was filled with a love for this beautiful country that never afterward grew cold. In December of that year, 1853, Mr. Gibbins worked for Ben Harding at Wathena. The next year, 1854, he took a claim on Wolf River, and he, with the help of Thornton Chase, erected the first roofed cabin in Brown County.

The life of a pioneer homesteader was too tame for this romantic young man. He went into the business of freighting and made his first trip overland to Laramie in 1855, following the old trail. Returning he engaged his services to a government surveyor's crew and helped to survey parts of Anderson, Woodson, Coffey and Allen counties in Kansas in 1856.

The next year, 1857, was an eventful year in the life of this venturesome young man. With a desire to see the Pacific Ocean and the country lying west of the mountains he drove a team to Sacramento, California. He spent ten years in the West, mining, freighting and trading. Then came the eventful trip of his life, a voyage of more than one thousand miles down the Missouri River on a flat-boat. He left Montana with his party in July of 1866 and floated down as far as Omaha. There they took a steamboat for St. Joseph. It was his last long journey. He had seen pretty much of the world lying between the Alleghenies and the Pacific Ocean and he had had enough of the wild adventurous life to do him.

James Noel Gibbins' next move was a trip to Illinois. There, in 1867, he was married to Mary Eleanor Ritchey, the wedding taking place December 17 of that year. They went to housekeeping in Andrew County, Missouri, and henceforth for nearly fifty years their lives were one. Miss Ritchie was born at Rushville, Illinois, February 14, 1845. She was educated in the schools of that state and taught seven terms of school in Schuyler County.

Mrs. Mary E. Gibbins and Granddaughter, Sophia

The Gibbins family came to Doniphan County in 1872, locating on a farm four miles northeast of Troy where they lived for forty years. Mr. Gibbins was a prominent member of the school board in his district twenty-five years. He was a Mason and a member of the Methodist Church.

Mrs. Gibbins passed away on December 31, 1912, in Troy. Mr. Gibbins died April 5, 1915. They were both honored and admired by the people as among the oldest and best citizens. Funeral services for both were conducted by the Rev. Walter M. Rogers, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Troy of which they were members for many years.

John Ritchie Gibbins, only son of James Noel and Mary Eleanor, was born in Andrew County, Missouri, before the parents came to Kansas to reside. Therefore, he early in life got the Missouri web-foot off by taking on the Kansas red leg. When a boy he hopped the clods on his father's farm in season and went to school in the autumns and winters attending the country school in District No. 23.

The son partook of some of the qualities of his mother in that he inherited a faculty for teaching school and was ambitious to make a success as an educator. He taught first in a country school, and attended Campbell College at Holton where he completed several courses and thus prepared himself for higher educational work. Then followed several years of remarkably successful work at teaching. He taugh at Avalon College from 1892 to 1895; at Clarksville, Missouri, 1895 to 1897; Nebraska Normal College at Wayne, Nebraska, from 1898 to 1902; York College at York, Nebraska, 1902-1903; private school at Savannah, Missouri, 1903-1904; Oak, Nebraska, 1904 to 1906; Robinson, Kansas, 1906-1907; Sumner County High School, Wellington, Kansas, 1907 to 1910; Hanover, Kansas, 1910 to 1912; Highland College 1912 to 1915.

A better testimonial to the high class work of this young man in the schoolroom could not be found than is here shown in the number of high class institutions in which he has labored. He is one of those teachers to whom we are pleased to call natural born educators. He has the faculty of imparting knowledge to his pupils in a way that they can readily comprehend its meaning, and is a pleasant man both in and out of the class room. He loves the work and his heart is in it. Thus it is easy for the reader to understand why he has continued so long in educational work and why he has made a success of it. One of the secrets of his success lies in the fact that he is never content with merely well doing. He is a believer in educational progress, in improvement of our system of education and in making education of more practical use to the students, on the theory that it is of little use to fill the mind of a young man or woman with knowledge that is of no earthly use to them.

Mr. Gibbins, may we also add, is something of a farmer. He learned farming through hard experience on his father's farm, starting into the business when he was a little fellow. There may be teachers in Kansas who have taught more months, and there may be farmers in Kansas who have plowed more corn, but there is no other one teacher living in Kansas today who has taught as long and plowed as many acres of corn as our Mr. Gibbins—and he is still a young man.

Mr. Gibbins spends his vacations on the farm in Doniphan County, and as the vacations usually come along when corn is up and ready for plowing, he can be found about that time of the year following a cultivator in a corn field not far away from Troy. Recently Mr. Gibbins has been devoting much of his time during vacations to the development of a small fruit farm near Troy, in which he finds both recreation and profit.

This young educator married Elizabeth Margaret Thomas on March 1, 1892, who shared his life as a noble wife until her death on August 18, 1909, in Troy. Mrs. Gibbins was born at Cosby, Missouri, August 25, 1873. She was educated in the public schools of Andrew County, Missouri, finishing at Campbell College, Holton. She was a fine example of a cultured wife and mother and a true Christian, one whose influence in her home and in the community is felt today though her earthly career is ended, and her family and her many acquaintances bless her memory.

The three children of Mr. and Mrs. John Ritchie Gibbins are Sophia Eleanor, born July 20, 1895, in Troy; Ivanoel, born in Wayne, Nebraska, June 24, 1901; Anita Ritchey, born at Troy, July 1, 1906.

Miss Sophia Eleanor Gibbins is one of the highly accomplished young women whom Troy people are proud to own. As a girl she attended the Highland High School and graduated in the spring of 1914. She is ambitious to succeed as a teacher and possesses some of the qualities that have made her father one of the most successful teachers in Kansas. She taught last school year in the public schools near Rulo, in Richardson County, Nebraska. Miss Sophia also is an accomplished musician. She has a voice of fine quality and is talented as a pianist.

Ivanoel, who is a student in her sophmore year in the Troy High School, is also talented as a reader and is an honor to her parents and sisters.

Anita Richey, the youngest of the three, is in school and is a very bright pupil. She has shown exceptional talent for one of her age in singing and in public speaking.

Miss Sarah Emily, daughter of James Noel Gibbins, was an honor to her father, the pioneer of the plains whose memory is blessed. She is a native product of Doniphan County to whom great honor is due. She attended the public school in District No. 23 and District No. 60 of Doniphan County, attended the Wayne Normal School at Wayne, Nebraska, and graduated there. Afterward she attended the State Normal School and the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. Miss Gibbins is a specialist in primary department work in school, at present teaching in the schools at Horton, Kansas. She is also a specialist in Sunday school work and is devoting her life to the noble self-sacrificing work of implanting useful knowledge in the minds of the little children and shaping their characters. She is one of the noblest women of her kind.

Grant Dishon

Old Missouri Has Furnished a Prosperous Farmer and Fruit-Grower for Doniphan County — Grant Dishon Began With Nothing Twenty-Eight Years Ago—Now Owns 360 Acres of Productive Land and Home in Troy.

While Doniphan County is famed for its capable and successful farmers and fruit-growers, still in all things, some few excel, and we can say without fear of contradiction, that Mr. Dishon ranks supreme among those who have made farming and fruit-growing a real art.

There is an adaptability about some men, which especially fits them for certain avocations, and the subject of this sketch could have made a success at most anything, but it seems that his vocation was farming and fruit-growing, and he has thus far pursued said industry. Grant received his education in Missouri, in the country schools, and learned all there was to know about "readin', writin' and 'rithmetic"; however, that later and mature education which is acquired only by application and personal perseverance, and is frequently termed experience, he received in the state of Kansas. He started bright and early in the year of 1887, on January 1, to be exact, to turn over a new leaf by coming to Kansas and settling on the same farm which he now owns. He possessed, at that time, worldly goods to the amount of one team of horses, one wagon, a set of harness and skads of energy and ambition. Many pioneers owned the first named requisites for farm life, but few just actually yearned to work, to cultivate the soil and to make apparently barren soil productive, as did the subject of this sketch. Mr. Dishon evidently believes firmly in the adage about trying again and again, for he has never failed in any undertaking, which he has assumed, and least of all, in making fertile any land in his possession.

Not very long after Mr. Dishon settled in Doniphan County, he purchased still another eighty acres in addition to the farm on which he lived, and still later 160 acres. As a word of encouragement to aspiring young farmers, we would say that this hard-working man bought all of his land on credit, which was not hard to obtain, owing to his exemplary conduct, and as he tilled the land and harvested the crops the debt was gradually liquidated. Mr. Dishon's farm is improved in every detail, one of its features being an up-to-date silo, modern in every respect. He also enjoys the distinction of being among the first to advocate spraying of fruit trees in this section, and has the reputation of marketing some of the choicest apples shipped out of Doniphan County. He has fifty acres set out in fruit trees, and, five years ago, he bought Ed Townsend's forty acres, one-half mile north of Troy, which is in small fruits.

Mr. Dishon's wife was Miss E. Adda Waddel of Buchanan County, Missouri, and it is only justice to say of this lady that she must have been a loyal helpmate and co-worker for the family to have attained the success and position which they now enjoy. She has reared a large and happy family, consisting of three girls and five boys. Two of the girls are married—Beulah C., who is now Mrs. L. D. Swiggett, and lives at 1709 Lyndon St., South Pasadena, Cal., and Bessie E., now Mrs. Ed Webster, who lives at Lincoln Center, Kan. Beulah was born in Missouri, and all the other children were born on Kansas soil.

Grant Dishon was born in Buchanan County, Missouri, near the old county seat of Sparta, the 30th of September, 1863. One of the very nicest things we know about Missouri is that it is the birthplace of one of our efficient and highly respected farmers and fruit-growers.

Mr. Dishon's mother is still living in Missouri, near the place of his birth, and it is a source of gratification to her to know that her son is popular at home and has achieved success.

Residence of Grant Dishon in Center Township, five miles northeast of Troy.

THE REVEREND MR. W. J. BYERS

Former Doniphan County Methodist Minister, Now Field Secretary for Bethany Hospital, Kansas City, Kansas, Well Qualified and Making Success.

If a man is a successful preacher, and a true minister of the Gospel, he should be gifted more than the ordinary man. He should be broad-minded with a full understanding of human nature, exemplary in his life and character, sympathetic but firm, unusually self-controlled, energetic, resourceful and prepared to meet emergencies and tactfully to handle delicate situations. These qualities are possessed to a remarkable degree by the Reverend Mr. W. J. Byers, a former Doniphan County Methodist minister, who now occupies the important position of field secretary for Bethany Hospital, Kansas City, Kansas.

His financial ability was recognized by the Methodist conference. This asset is not frequently found in one who devotes his time to preaching the Gospel, and for that reason when large sums of money are to be raised to carry on some branch of the church activities it is a rare gift with which to be endowed, to be able to go out into the world and cause hard-headed and sometimes hard-hearted business men to give of their means to support such a cause. In this capacity the pastor of whom we now speak has a wonderful ability. And the Methodist conference prided itself upon being able to find one so capable of this task.

His work, since his appointment to the place by the last Methodist conference, at Topeka in March, 1915, has been to solicit funds for this institution, and that he is successful in this work, shows that he knows how to approach people, that he is a convincing speaker, and can win wherever he goes.

The Reverend Mr. Byers was born in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, Aug. 21, 1866, and was educated in the Illinois State Normal, at Normal, Ill. Thus did the subject of this sketch preface his life work by a thorough preparation, and he put this training into effect by teaching school for five years. He again demonstrated his ability to deal honorably with people, and especially young people. This fact, no doubt, has in a large measure contributed to his later success in the ministry. His first sermon was preached at Fenton, Illinois, and was a turning point in his life. This acceptance of the work of the church made a profound impression in his young mind and heart, and was the forerunner of many other able and helpful sermons.

His wife was Miss Nettie Hoodler of Albany, Illnois. They were married Aug. 21, 1889, on his twenty-third birthday. To them were born four children, one boy and three girls. LeRoy was born Jan. 30, 1890; Nellie Dee's birthday was Feb. 23, 1892; Alta May was born April 7, 1894, and Erma Irene, June 15, 1901. Together they have formed a happy and contented family.

After coming to Kansas, this able pastor has had charges in Doniphan County in four different places, serving in all fourteen years. He was located at Severance for four years, three years at Wathena, four years at Goffs, and three years at Robinson. Both the minister and his family were well liked wherever they located. They found a place at the heartstone of each family in the vicinity, and were alike sought in social as well as religious affairs. And their home always was open to everyone, be he rich or poor. The hospitality which they showered upon their friends made them general favorites with everyone. Their home is now in Kansas City, Kansas, at Number 4, North Twelfth street, where he is educating his children.

The Reverend Mr. Byers is a most pleasant man to meet, always has a glad hand and is keenly interested in the sorrows and joys of his fellowmen.

WALTER S. JOHNSTON, VETERAN JOURNALIST AND PROMINENT POLITICIAN

It is a source of pride and pleasure to know that Doniphan County has produced some very intellectual people, and not least among these is Walter S. Johnston, now living in Kansas City, Kansas, and employed on the Gazette-Globe, a daily paper of that city. He is well known in the field of journalism, and if practice makes a man perfect, then he has no peer, for he has served long and well at his trade. Farther back than runneth the memory of man, Walt was just a printer's devil, and that isn't as bad as he might have been. Now, behold today the evolution—a finished, well-versed man of literature. Please mark we do not transform him from devil to angel in a trice; nay, we make it a cross between the two, a newspaper man.

Probably the first experience Mr. Johnston ever had in newspaper work was on the old Investigator sheet in Troy, where he learned to set type, and later to compile copy and do reporting. He was putting in his first week at the trade when word was flashed over the wire that Lincoln was assassinated. With nervous, excited fingers he prepared the big, black-typed head to announce the fate of the beloved President. Since then, the tragic deaths of two other Presidents have set the machinery of newspaperdom to throbbing, and Mr. Johnston may have written the version you read. Did you ever stop to think, dear reader, when you read the printed news of a sudden disaster, an unexpected political defeat, or calamity of any nature whatever, that someone has had to be nimble-fingered and quick-witted to get that story to you before it is cold, so to speak. Such a one is the subject of this sketch, with a brain polished to razor edge keeness through constant use. He is recognized as a newspaper man of exceptional ability.

Mr. Johnston also devoted a year or two of his life to work on The Weekly Kansas Chief, and many old-timers will recall him in this capacity. Mrs. Johnston was well and favorably known here also, and was very popular among the townspeople of Troy. Before her marriage she was Miss Eva Wood, the daughter of Bony Wood, well remembered in this locality. She had many friends here who mourned her death, which occurred April 27, 1914. The couple was married in Troy by Reverend Thompson, in 1882, and one son, George, was born to the union. This son is now employed on the Gazette-Globe, the same paper on which his father works. George could not do better than to emulate his worthy father.

Mr. Johnston was born in St. Joseph, Mo., August 6, 1853, but the family moved to Troy in 1860, so his early impressions were formed in the latter place. He went to school in Troy and was as good a pupil as is the average boy of a healthy and inventive turn of mind. We have not interviewed any of his former teachers, as it is not our aim to expose anyone's past, be what it may. He grew to manhood in Troy, and he became interested in the newspaper game; he gradually formed political opinions and was eventually recognized as one of the most able defenders of Democratic principles in the state. He was an authority and leader among local free silver men; he studied political science and his judgment was unerring. He is particularly remembered for his bitter denunciation of the radical faction of the Republican party in county, state and district. He is a forceful speaker, having the art of obtaining and retaining the interest of his hearers, and what he says lingers long in the memory. Today he is one of the most effective speakers on the hustings of the State of Kansas.

Perry Homer Price Dittemore

One of the Promising Young Men of Doniphan County and the Present Principal of the Denton Schools—He Is a Native of the County and the Son of One of Our Old and Honored Families.

Perry Homer Price Dittemore, now principal of the Denton schools, is one of the most promising young men of Doniphan County. Although he is but a little over twenty-three years of age, his rise has been so rapid that he now is occupying a position such as is seldom attained by educators before they have reached the age of thirty years. Professor Dittemore, as properly he should be called, has a bright future before him, and if popularity and good wishes of the people, and patient, studious effort on his part, count for anything he will attain a high position among the educators of the state ere his career reaches its zenith.

The young man of this sketch was born June 5, 1892, on the Dittemore farm in Doniphan County, and his entire life has been spent in the county of his nativity.

The parents of young Dittemore were Wiley E. Dittemore and Elizabeth Dittemore. The father was a native of DeKalb County, Missouri, born December 20, 1869, and the mother, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Price, was born on a farm in the southeast corner of Iowa Township, November 12, 1872. His paternal grandparents were Samuel Perry Dittemore and Orlena C. Dittemore, pioneers of Missouri, while his great grandfather was Price Dittemore, one of the heroes of the revolutionary period of our country.

With such an ancestry much may be expected of Perry Homer Price Dittemore. From his early childhood he evidenced an aptitude for learning which was remarkable. As a little boy he displayed this quality, or faculty, while attending the old McGalliard school in District No. 49, which is three miles northwest of Troy. He applied himself closely to his studies and it is recorded that he stood first in his classes and was the pride of his teachers. When he finished in the district school his parents, solicitous for his future, sent him to Troy where he entered the Troy high school. There, as in the grades, he continued his studies, advancing upward and onward until he graduated with the class of 1912, and with honors deservedly won.

It was the ambition of this studious youth from the beginning to become a teacher. In the high school aud out, during vacation time and at night while school was held, he gave much attention to the business of preparing himself for teaching and, we may add, he was successful in so equipping himself for his choosen work that he found his services were in demand as soon as he could obtain a certificate.

Mr. Dittemore's first school was in the Bellevue district No. 14, which is situated on the south line of Iowa Township, one mile east of the west line of Doniphan County, five miles southeast of Highland and three miles north of Leona. He taught two terms in that district with such success that he was commended by the school officials as well as by the patrons and his pupils. He was popular with the pupils and won their lasting friendship and esteem by entering into all of their school activities and with whole-heartedness directed their minds along the right lines of study, and at the same time shared in the joys of their clean and healthful sports. He was accounted an ideal teacher for a district school in a farming community, because he knew the life of the farmer boy and girl.

At the close of two season's teaching in the Bellevue district young Dittemore's teaching qualities that had made him so popular were noised about. Thus it happened that he was elected by the school board of Denton to the principalship of their school. This was an honor such as he had not looked for so early in his career, though he was in every way qualified to fill the important position. He entered on his work with an intelligent understanding of its full scope and its technical requirements, and by injecting into the school some of the snappiness and the spirit that had characterized his own school days and those of his teaching he had everything going his way in an incredibly short time. He has the hearty co-operation of his assistant teachers and of all of the pupils in the school. He is a believer in practical education and everything is done to interest the pupils in those things that will be of benefit to them in their everyday lives, whether their schooling is to end with the grades or in some institution of higher learning.

Perry Homer Price Dittemore is the eldest of the six children of Mr. and Mrs. Wiley H. Dittemore. The brothers and sisters are: Ethel Clara, born March 4, 1894, on the farm, educated in the McCalliard district and later graudated from the music department of Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, and later graduated from the Kiester College of ladies tailoring; Bertha Lenora, who graduated from the Troy high school in 1915 and who is teaching her first term of school in Eclipse district No. 59, born January 13, 1896, on the farm northwest of Troy; Earl Chapman, born April 14, 1899, will graduate with the class of 1916 in the Troy high school; Edna Margaret, born December 21, 1903, on the farm; John Marvin, born September 9, 1905. These brothers and sisters of the subject of our sketch are all representatives of the Dittemore family and it is predicted that all will uphold the dignity and honor of the name.

Homer's grandfather, Josiah D. Price, was born in Glamorganshire South Wales, on the 8th of April, 1832. Died February 28, 1906. His grandmother, Elizabeth Wilson, was born November 22, 1846, near Glasgow, Scotland. Died January 7, 1885. He came to this country in the twenty-first year of his age, and his wife when eight years old, when she came accompanied by her sister and husband; Robert and Isabell Murdock, who also in after years in the first settling of Kansas in the sixties pre-empted eighty acres just west of the Herzing farm. Mr. and Mrs. Price were the parents of ten daughters, one died in infancy, nine having survived them. Their names are:

Mrs. Agnes Tilden, Topeka, Kansas.

Mrs. Sarah A. Blauser, Troy, Kansas.

Mrs. Mary J. Hopkins, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Mrs. Margaret E. Dittemore, Troy, Kansas.

Mrs. Etta J. Graves, Troy, Kansas.

Mrs. Emma R. Hedrick, Fanning, Kansas.

Miss Daisy B. Price, now of Troy, Kansas.

Mrs. Grace M. Burbridge, Ludwig, Nevada (deceased).

Mrs. Pearl Oleson, Horton, Kansas.

Mr. and Mrs. Price came to Kansas in 1869 and settled on forty acres one mile north of the Wolf River school house, district number fifty-two. Lived there a number of years. Then moved in the year 1883 to the farm now owned by Gustave Koehler, where his wife died and left the family to be reared by the father, who struggled bravely along until they were all reared to womanhood and saw them all married except one. In the year 1893 he was married to Elmina Thomas, she died February 20, 1904. Mr. Price was a man of sterling qualities, known for his honesty and integrity. Always interested in the uplift of the country and his fellowman.

Homer's father has one brother and two sisters living, James Edward of Sterling, Colorado; Margaret Hancock of San Monica, California, and Mrs. Belle McGalliard of Seneca, Nebraska. Samuel Dittemore, grandfather of Homer, died May 4, 1912, and Mrs. Dittemore, his grandmother, died March 4, 1908.

With the completion of the Rock Island Railroad into Troy, in 1886, William E. Reese was appointed first station agent, and he had the honor to sell the first ticket from his little window on November 4, of that year.

Mr. Reese was a native of Doniphan County, having been reared on a farm two miles south of Troy. He held the position of station agent until June 30, 1888, when he was succeeded by W. N. Keran, who is now agent at Nelson, Neb. Among the other agents who officiated at Troy in the years succeeding were C. W. Tanksley, L. M. Coons, M. C. Brown and then came Way Hargis, who has been on the job for the past twenty years, with the exception of several months he was at Holton, and Orley Monroe was agent.

The building of the Rock Island from St. Joseph to Topeka through Doniphan County gave a great impetus to business in the different towns through which the road passed.

The first station on the Rock Island is at Elwood, and next in order along the line are Wathena, Troy, Bendena, Denton and Purcell. Coming in from the east the Rock Island road goes direct to the southwest corner, where it leaves Doniphan County near Ben Reichenburger's elegant farm home. The only excitement created in Troy during the building of the road was the fist encounter between Boss McCormick and Pat Graniger, a laborer.

TAUGHT SCHOOL THIRTY-SIX TERMS

(By F. F. Paige.)

If it can be said of me that I ever did any good for my fellow creatures, the credit would naturally be given to those twenty-eight years spent in teaching school in Doniphan County.

The difficult undertaking of teaching the young idea how to shoot was a labor of love with me the best part of my life. From the time I first engaged in the work, away back in the '60's, I devoted my absolute indispensable time to the honorable profession. In the first place, teaching seemed to be my calling from early years, and I think I may modestly state I qualified satisfactorily, and I always experienced a sense of achievement and pride when one bunch of pupils went through from babyhood up to my school, and finally graduated as informed men and women, ready to take up the burdens of life, either on the farm, in business or advanced education.

I have several times diverted my attention to other avocations, but it invariably happened I would wind up at a school, no matter with what degree of success my other business enterprises would turn out.

New York State was the place of my birth, and I was reared to manhood there. My first school was taught in Schuyler County, that state; I finished eight terms there before coming to Doniphan County in 1871. The prospects in the Empire State were fairly good enough to warrant me remaining, but, on the other hand, there was the constant inducement to go West that was offered in those days to every man of grit and gumption, so I struck out for Kansas in the year 1871, and located six miles southwest of Troy, as it is now, across the road south of what is now known as the Alkire farm.

Of course, I was a stranger in a strange land, and had to arrange a few preliminaries, but without tiring the reader, will state I finally was employed to teach at the Zimmerman school house, District No. 20, four miles southwest of Troy. I taught there five terms, and had many pleasant experiences. Next I was elected as teacher at the Climax District, No. 9, about two miles south of Troy, where I was retained another five terms.

The longest period that I was at one school in Doniphan County was when I went to the old brick school house in District No. 10, four miles southeast of Troy, where I taught seven terms. I had many friends among the parents of my pupils, and remained long enough to establish myself as one of the community. I formed friendships in that district which I treasure to this day. After leaving Number 10 school, the Rock Creek School, seven miles south of Troy, had my services for one term, and an equal length of time was spent in charge of the McGalliard school, District Number 49, four miles northwest of Troy. I also served one term in charge of the Eureka district, five miles southeast of Troy, and taught a part of one term in the Norway District, finishing out the unexpired term of Frances E. Katner, who had received the nomination for county superintendent on the Republican ticket in the fall of 1889.

These one-term schools were very tiresome to me, as it gave me no chance whatever to form any ties of friendship, and I was made very happy indeed when my next promotion made me the principal of the schools in Troy, which position I held for two years, beginning my first term on September 1, 1887.

Upon the expiration of my term as principal, I embarked in the mercantile business at Troy, in conjunction with Elden Perry, the firm occupying the building where Winzer's hardware store is at the present time. After one year, Mr. Perry sold out his interest to G. C. Gray, and the store was run with the new partnership for six months, when the fever for farming caused me to sell out.

In the meantime I had acquired the ownership of the W. A. Alkire farm and the forty acres north to where Henry Foley now lives, four miles south of Troy. I paid cash for this land and traded it for land where Green Taylor lives now, a mile northwest of Troy. When I went into the store at Troy, I had disposed of all this land, but the lure of the land made me repent of my bargain; so when I left the store, I bought the old Toole place, east of Troy, which is in my possession at the present time. It is good land, and I take pride in the ownership of it. The land is fertile and crops are easily produced.

I had no sooner taken over the Toole farm, until a new school district was created one and a half miles east and a half mile north of Troy, and styled the Eclipse District, although the trend of public opinion was that it should have been named in honor of Charles V. Norman, who was superintendent of public instruction in Doniphan County, and who made the organization of the new district possible after the burning of the 60 school house, December 27, 1894.

When the new school house was built, I was urged upon to accept the appointment as teacher, and after debating the question with my wife, I decided to accept.

The building was a substantial one and was erected by the late J. A. Godden and his son, Harry L. After starting the new school out in life, I was engaged in the Blair District for two years. Since the expiration of that time I have not been actively connected with school work. We have a comfortable home in Troy, which has been my residence for twenty years.

Mrs. Paige and I have had a happy wedded life, and the only cloud on our horizon was the death of our son, Grant, in Omaha, on March 24, 1889. We brought the body to Troy for burial. Our daughter, Ellen, is the wife of Dr. G. W. Reneker of Falls City, Neb., and Harry E., our remaining son, lives here in Troy.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH

John W. Marcum Has the Distinction of Being One of the Oldest Blacksmiths in Kansas and is Noted for His Expert Knowledge of Horseshoeing.

Among all her other distinguished personalities and institutions, Doniphan County can boast of having within its confines one of the oldest blacksmiths in Kansas. He is John W. Marcum, who for the past fifty-nine years has been one of the honored residents of Troy.

Mr. Marcum is a product of the Blue Grass State, having been born in Campbell County, Ky., March 27, 1856. The anti-slavery agitation was assuming national proportions at the time and Mr. Marcum's father decided to quit a turbulent locality and take up his residence in the future free state of Kansas. With his family he migrated to Doniphan County, when John W. was less than six months old.

The elder Marcum opened a blacksmith's shop in Troy, where the son afterwards learned his trade in the smithy which stood on the site of the present Baptist Church. John W. early in his career developed a strong liking for his chosen calling and while still a young man was conceded to be the most expert horseshoer in this part of the West. He still works at the business and is regarded by his numerous customers to be a master of his art.

People familiar with John W. Marcum's personal nature are convinced that the immortal poet, Longfellow, made a direct application to him when he wrote the following lines on the "Village Blacksmith:"

"Under the spreading chestnut tree
The village smithy stands;
The smith a mighty man is he,
With large and sinewy hands;

The muscles of his brawny arms
Are strong as iron bands;
His hair is thick and black, and long,
His face is like the tan;

His brow is wet with honest sweat,
He earns whate'er he can—
He looks the whole world in the face
For he owes not any man."

Bluger M. Owens

Bluger M. Owens, a former teacher, will be remembered by many in Doniphan County, who will be pleased to learn that he is now an eminent attorney. He was married to Miss Nellie Reed, June 14, 1894, in the Christian Church at Troy, by the Rev. Mr. Speer. Mr. Owens now lives in Scott City, Ind., and is the county attorney there. He is fulfilling the promises of a great man, which he showed when a young boy.

Methodist Church Organization

At a meeting called for that purpose on the 21st of May, 1866, at the Presbyterian church at Troy, a society was organized under the title of the Methodist Episcopal Church Corporation for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a house or place of worship in the town of Troy for the use of the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal church and also a parsonage or place of residence for the minister of the church. Col. D. M. Johnston, father of Walter S. Johnston, the celebrated newspaper man of Kansas City, Kansas, George H. Mosley, John Rhue, J. Y. McAdams, Josepha A. Wood, Chas. Rappelye, George Loyd, A. B. Burr, John Holden, N. Redd, X. K. Stout, Albert Perry and E. S. Davis, associated themselves together as incorporators, under an act of the legislature approved Feb. 27, 1866, after which they immediately held a meeting and proceeded to the election of officers, resulting in the choice of D. M. Johnston as president and Chas. Rappelye as secretary. A board of trustees was also elected, consisting of D. M. Johnston, Chas. Rappelye, E. S. Davis, Albert Perry, George H. Mosely, John Rhue and A. B. Burr. The corporation then adopted the following resolution, that the trustees be instructed to procure an eligible lot and proceed to erect brick church thereon as soon as practicable, the edifice to be thirty-eight by fifty-two feet, of proper height and if not practicable to make it of brick, then of some material as the trustees might decide. After appointing a committee of three to draw up by-laws for the regulation of the corporation, the meeting adjourned to meet at the call of the president. Monday evening, May 21st, at 8 p. m., the trustees were convened by the president. The committee to select the lot reported that they had chosen lot 6 in block 13. The report was, on a motion, received and adopted, and the committee instructed to purchase said lot for the sum of $50.00.

Troy

Troy is located on Section 17, Town 3, Range 21, in Center Township. Was laid off by A. Payne and T. J. B. Cramer, October 12, 1855. Original townsite consisted of 80 acres, as first surveyed by James F. Forman, Oct. 16, 1855. In 1856 the county records were moved from Bellemont to this point, where they have since remained.

Henry Boder, Jr., was the first express agent in Troy.

E. L. Kleppe

Representative in Troy of the Most Popular of All the High-Class and Serviceable Motor Cars, the Buick—He Conducts an Up-to-Date Garage With Experts to Handle and Repair Cars, and Also Does a Big Livery Business.

The most popular place in Troy today is the garage of E. L. Kleppe on Main Street. There is a reason. Mr. Kleppe is the representative of the Buick Motor Company. Therefore the cars he has for sale are the best and most popular on the market today, offering real luxury of motoring at the most reasonable prices. The fact that Mr. Kleppe has the Buick motor cars also accounts for the crush of patrons for livery service who come to his garage without advertising or solicitation because they want the car that gives the best and most reliable service. Another thing that contributes largely to Mr. Kleppe's business and helps to make it the busiest place in Troy is the fact that he employs experts for repairing cars. Mr. Kleppe's success in the garage business and in the sale of motor cars in Troy has been one of the pleasing things it is our duty to record in this publication.

Mr. Kleppe formerly was engaged in business in Denton and was successful there. He saw the need in Troy of a first class garage, and also the opening of a sales house for the Buick motor cars in Troy. He came to Troy August 1st, 1914, and leased the garage on Main Street, owned by E. A. Sinclair. He proceeded to employ men who were expert automobile mechanics and handlers of automobiles, and from that time to the present he has had a splendid business.

One of the surprising things about the business was the demand on him for livery service. Being himself an expert driver and having also men around him who understand every part of a car, the people soon realized that at his garage they could always get the most dependable livery service and also the safest service.

It is in the handling of the Buick cars, however, that gives the garage popularity and makes it known throughout the northeast section of Kansas and by tourists over the great automobile highways. Mr. Kleppe will tell all about the Buick motor cars—and the Buick motor trucks, too—but all you have got to do is to see the full line of Buicks he carries and make an examination for yourself—and that is just what you should do if you are going to buy a car. You don't have to take somebody's else word for it. See it for yourself.

The Buick Motor Company's plant in Kansas City is the largest manufacturing concern of its kind in the West. It was established there at the border of Kansas in order that it might be accessable to the Kansas trade, along with that of the other states in the turned out at this plant are the most perfect that skilled mechanics can turn out.

The advantages of the Buick motor cars are plain to be understood. If you want real luxury in motoring you will find it in the luxury of power—for power is the essential thing in a motor car. No matter how flashy the body, or how swell it looks, it counts for nothing but sorrow and disappointment if it hasn't the power that can be depended upon to keep it going. The six cylinder Buick motor car is the finest illustration in the world of a high powered car at a cost that is within the reach of any substantial citizen.

Mr. Kleppe will be glad to show you the Buick motor cars in all of their styles and let you see for yourself. The prices of these splendid cars will be an object to you if you contemplate purchasing a car. Don't rush off to the city until you see Mr. Kleppe's line of cars. You will get them here just as cheap.

The subject of this sketch, proprietor of the garage on Main Street, is one of the substantial citizens and boosters of Doniphan County. He was married to Miss Geneva Molinare at Hiawatha, on January 27, 1910, by Judge Ham. Mr. Kleppe was born in Brown County, December 10, 1883, and Mrs. Kleppe was also born in that county. They have one son, Virgil Eckhart, who was born May 3, 1915, in Troy. The Kleppe's formerly resided at Denton and have a large host of friends there. They have resided in Troy since August 1st, 1914. They have established themselves here in Troy and are respected by the people of the town and throughout the county. Mr. Kleppe is of German descent and speaks the language fluently which is of great assistance to any business man. His mother is still living in Brown County.

ROBERT SWINEY

The Celebrated Mule Buyer Is One of the Foremost Negroes in Kansas, a Friend of the Late Booker T. Washington and of Professor W. T. Vernon—His Interest in the Welfare of His Race Is Asserted By His Great Activity in Behalf of Industrial Education for the Colored Man.

Every man, deep down in his heart, has a particular admiration for the man who, through his own will and determination, is able to rise to a place of distinction and honor. There is something grand in such achievement that appeals to our finer sensibilities and calls for expressions of pride. The late Booker T. Washington was one of the men most admired in America, and when he died, November 14, 1915, every newspaper in the country paid a fine tribute to him as an educator and as one of the greatest leaders of his people. Booker T. Washington had a great many warm friends among the negro people of Kansas, among whom were several co-workers with him in the great plan of uplifting the race through industrial education. And among these was Robert Swiney, a resident of Hiawatha, who is known through Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa, as well as throughout the South, as the best expert buyer and judge of mules and horses in this country.

Robert Swiney is a native of Kentucky, born at Sharpsberg, in Bath County, October 20, 1867. He received a little education in his native state when a boy, attending school about twelve months in all. At the age of twenty-one he left the state of Kentucky, going to Audrain County, Missouri, near Mexico. He spent one year there, working on a farm and feeding mules for W. E. Robertson and R. L. Stone. From there he went to Moseby in Clay County, Missouri, working there one year he was recognized as a capable manager and was made foreman in charge of the ranch, a position he held two years.

About this time Mr. Swiney concluded to change in the business of buying mules. In 1890 he bought his first mules from Judge Crowley, in Clay County, paid $170 for a brown mare mule, which sold for $200 at Kansas City, to J. W. Howard, of Columbia, Tennessee. He then worked on a ranch for three years and these men recommended Mr. Swiney to Ben D. Williams, of Highland, who is a big mule buyer. Mr. Swiney was in the employ of Mr. Williams from January 3, 1892, until 1910, buying mules for him in Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa. When he left Mr. William's employ he went to buying for Ben D. Allen, of Highland, and for Sparks & Shonyo, of Highland, and later with Nemby & Jackson, of Plattsburg, Missouri. For two years he bought mules for Montague & Hart, of Hiawatha, and for several others on commission. In this business he has been remarkably successful.

Mr. Swiney was married to Miss Julia Ann Smith at Independence, Missouri, May 9, 1899. To them were born five children: William H., Jessie May, Robert L., Emma and Jennie. He was married again to Sarah Tolbert, of Plattsburg, Missouri, February 24, 1914, at Kansas City, Missouri. He now resides at 202 North Twelfth Street, Hiawatha.

Mr. Swiney is now buying mules and selling them to the same men he dealt with and in whose employ he was twenty years ago, and he is proud of the fact. His interest, however, does not cease with his work as a buyer and seller of mules. He has taken a very active part, along with the foremost men of the race, for the uplift of the negro. He is a believer in industrial education for the youth and his influence counted for a good deal in securing the support of the state of Kansas to the Industrial School which was started at the Western University in Kansas City, Kansas, when Professor William T. Vernon, the noted negro educator and former registrar of the United States treasury, was at the head of that great Kansas school. Mr. Swiney advises the colored men of the cities to go to farming, become independent, upright and honorable citizens.

Buy of Your Home Merchant

Where You Have An Opportunity to Inspect Before Paying—The Hardware and Implement Business as Viewed By One Who Has Had About Fourteen Years' Experience in This Line.

(By E. C. Winzer.)

I can well remember, when a boy, that the happiest days of the year were when my father would inform me that I could go to town with him. This great occasion only happened about twice a year. Our town then was Atchison, Kansas.

Our headquarters were located in a hardware and implement house. As the manager and owner welcomed us and quoted father prices on so many articles without looking at the tags, I thought he was undoubtedly the greatest man I ever knew. It was wonderful that he could remember so much and so well.

The hardware and implement houses came into existence because the customer wants to see the goods before he buys them and likes to come in personal touch with the seller.

The dealer also stands good for defective goods or parts that show flaws in the making of them, and manufacturers most always reimburse the dealer. The consumer has been humored so much, that in a few cases he becomes very unreasonable in asking for parts to be furnished free of cost.

A large percentage of the people do not realize that a merchant must not only supply the customers with the staple goods, but also the articles just newly patented and offered to merchant and farmer, in order to stay and be a progressive power in the community.

There is the danger of selecting a new piece of machinery which is absolutely a failure. This generally results in a great loss to the dealer. This is service for which the dealer cannot charge, but it is worth money to the customer. The dealer and farmer or consumer should get together for their mutual welfare and advancement.

The merchants and customers should work in unison for the betterment of a community, by looking for a higher plane of intellectuality, honesty, humanity and morality.

It is the hardware and implement man's business to devise means for keening the progressive conveniences as they develop; such as are used in modern equipped homes; that the rural homes may have modern lighting systems, water works and up-to-date machinery for the housewife.

Everyone living in a community where such merchants reside will naturally realize that property values must increase in that vicinity.

The real merchant must have high ideals as to methods of doing business. His store and merchandise must be well taken care of and cleanliness must be observed.

Such a business man is progressive, is a benefit to the community, takes interest in the municipal welfare, keeps a watch on every movement with a scrutinizing business eye to see if it is for the best interest of the community. The greatest man in your community is the one that renders the greatest community service. You cannot buy with money a strong arm; you must make it with physical service. You cannot buy a strong brain; you must strengthen it with mental work. You cannot buy character; you must make it with moral service. You can afford to do anything that will strengthen the citizenship of your community, and you cannot afford to do anything that will weaken the character of the citizenship. The best that is in us comes from the day's work.

In the development of local communities, the interest of merchant and customer, or farmer and townsman are mutual; the family which purchases supplies of any sort abroad rather than of the local merchant, to that extent weakens the entire community.

As a usual thing, both farmers and merchants give themselves all credit for success in any business enterprise, and seem to be oblivious of the fact that their wives are co-operating with them at all times by lending encouragement. When we are disheartened, a word of cheer from our wives is beneficial. When Robert Fulton, who invented the steamboat, was ridiculed and hooted at because of his "crazy" scheme and became disheartened, his wife said, "Patience, my Robert;" and by her inspiring words he made and moved the Clearmont. And so it is, the inspiration which our wives give us is of untold benefit to us. I have tried to give you an idea of what a merchant (not a store-keeper), should strive to be, and am glad to say that a number of merchants are rapidly advancing toward this idea.

Court House Burned

On Tuesday noon, about 1:30 o'clock, March 12, 1867, the court house which stood on the east side of the walk, near where the jail stands today, was burned. Fire was first discovered in the roof by Xerxis Kees Stout, who dashed a pail of water on what could be seen of it around the flue, in the ceiling of the court room, and he thought the fire was extinguished, but in a few moments it developed that there was no chance to save the building. The entire town of Troy, including men, women and children, and the farmers who were in town at that time, formed a bucket brigade and rendered valiant service. The records were carried out and on account of the velocity of the wind, many of the papers from the different offices were blown away. The structure was pine, and dry as powder and the conflagration soon destroyed the building. The jail was connected with the court house, and the two prisoners who were at that time locked in the county bastile, were taken out by Sheriff Enoch Crabb and placed under special guard. The sheriff had stored in his office about $2,000 worth of clothing attached for some parties in St. Joseph, which was all carried out and saved. A great many of the loose papers from all the offices were scattered by the wind and in getting them all gathered up they were somewhat mixed. However, the records in books were all saved. The court house was insured for $4,000 in the North American Insurance Company of Philadelphia; the policy having been issued about six weeks previous to the fire. Three stoves, several desks, a few lamps and thirty hymn books belonging to the Methodist Sunday school were burned in the building. The building was put up under the old border ruffian rule, costing the county $15,000, which, it is said, was enough to have erected a better building. The building was cursed enough to be charmed, and was referred to by the people in general as the monstrosity of human architecture. Court was in session at the time the building burned, and Judge R. St. Clair Graham secured the Presbyterian church and continued the term of the district court in that edifice. Immediately after the burning of the court house there were many efforts made by practically all of the towns in the county to secure the county seat. Several of the towns offered several thousand dollars in cash and others offered several thousand dollars worth of property. The most liberal offer came from Buffalo; that town promising thirty corner lots, provided the county seat was moved there and a court house erected. Persons in remote portions of the county did not want the county seat any farther away from them than it was and they objected to moving it to other points. The law established the county seat at Troy, which will be found in the statutes of 1855, page 208, after prescribing the boundaries of the county, reads as follows: "and Thomas J. B. Cramer, A. Payne and M. P. Rively are hereby appointed commissioners to locate the seat of justice of said county of Doniphan, within six miles of the geographical center of said county. Said commissioners shall meet at the house of James R. Whitehead on the 1st day of October next, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and, after being duly sworn, shall proceed to locate said seat of justice in accordance with the provisions of this act, and make a report of their proceedings to the tribunal transacting county business, which report shall be signed by said commissioners, and shall be filed with the tribunal transacting county business; and such location, when made, shall be a permanent seat of justice of said county." An election was held soon after the burning of the court house to determine where the county seat should be located, and Wathena won in the fight. Immediately the building of a court house began on the site where John A. C. Gordan's residence stands today in east Wathena. Several of the influential men in the western part of Doniphan County and in Troy set about to frustrate the plans of the commissioners in building the court house in Wathena. The matter was taken into court and it was not until the supreme court gave a decision in favor of Troy that the matter was settled.

Henry H. Hickman

Henry H. Hickman, born Saline County, Missouri, March 10, 1845. Came to Doniphan County and settled at Highland about August, 1858; enlisted in Company H, 13th Kansas infantry, under Captain McCauley, at Troy, August 12th, and was mustered out at Little Rock, Ark., July 16, 1865, and was discharged at Leavenworth, Kansas. Has a wife and two sons, Claude V. of St. Joseph, Mo., and Hiram, at Norton, Kansas.

SAMUEL N. JOHNSON

Served Eighteen Years in County Treasurer's Office

Samuel N. Johnson, former county treasurer and Civil War veteran, has one unique distinction. He is the only man in Troy owning property which has been transferred but twice; he thinks once from the government to the county, and secondly from the county to him. He has other claims to distinction quite as good, and chief among them is his war record.

Mr. Johnson was born at LaPorte, Indiana, March 6, 1846, and when he was quite young his father moved to Buchanan County, Missouri, where the son attended school until Feb. 1, 1862. Then he enlisted in Captain H. B. Johnson's independent battery of artillery of Missouri, in which he was a sergeant. His service was in that state, much of the time operating against the bushwhackers who were numerous.

In 1867 Mr. Johnson came to Troy, where he worked at his trade as a carpenter. In 1872 he became deputy county treasurer, serving in that capacity until 1880, when he became treasurer, holding the office for four years; then deputy again for two years, and after that treasurer again for four years—making eighteen years of continuous service in the office. Mr. Johnson was married Jan. 1, 1867, to Miss Ellen A. McLin of Lexington, Lafayette County, Missouri. There are two children living, Hubert B., of New York City, and Helen B., who resides with her parents in Troy.

Samuel N. Johnson

Francis Berry

Another of Doniphan County's old soldiers was Francis Berry, who died at Holton, Kan., Feb. 11, 1913, at the age of 70 years. He was born in Stone County, Missouri, July 2, 1842. With his parents he moved to Troy in 1857. He enlisted in the army Jan. 8, 1862, at Kansas City, Mo., under Captain Boyd, and was mustered in as a corporal in Company F, 10th Kansas Volteler infantry, by Lieutenant Butler. He spent three years and six months in the service, taking part in the most important battles, being mustered out at St. Louis, Aug. 30, 1865. He was united in marriage to Miss Nannie E. Bass, Oct. 11, 1868, to which union were born five children, three sons dying in infancy and two daughters, Mrs. Minnie B. Slattery of Mayetta, Kan., and Mrs. Nannie B. Zimmerman, wife of the station agent at Purcell. He moved into Jackson County in 1884, residing ten miles south of Holton until 1891, when he moved to town and lived there until his death. Mrs. Berry resides in Mayetta, where she expects to spend her declining years in peace and happiness.

James Butler

James Butler, colored, born March 10, 1845, at Louisville, Ky. Enlisted at Troy, Kan., April 2, 1863. Mustered out at Camden, Ark., and discharged at Leavenworth, Kan., December 18, 1865. Served in Company K, 83rd United States 2d Kansas volunteer infantry. Came to Doniphan County 1862, Aug. 4. Has three daughters: (Hattie) Mrs. Charles Coleman of St. Joseph, Mo.; (Myrtle) Mrs. Henry Hughes, Falls City, Neb.; (Ada) Mrs. Jim Lytle.

Peter W. Pierson

The most obliging conductor who ever punched a ticket on the Rock Island system is the conductor on the Rock Island train which runs between Troy and Topeka. He is a conductor who takes a personal interest in every passenger, and is genial, and by his pleasant demeanor has made friends for the company all along the line. Peter W. Pierson is the father of Mrs. Charles Adams of Troy, whose husband is in the employ of the Northeast Telephone Company in Doniphan County.

The County Farm

THE DONIPHAN COUNTY INFIRMARY IS SELF-SUSTAINING AND PAYS DIVIDENDS TO COUNTY ANNUALLY

"Over the hills to the poor house" does not strike terror to the hearts of the people who are compelled to live on the bounty of the county in this day and generation. The system of renting some old building, and fitting it up as a place where poor unfortunates are compelled by force of circumstances to spend their last days, as is done in some other counties in Kansas, does not apply to our county as we have a good, comfortable home for the unfortunates.

Doniphan County provides handsomely for those whose circumstances and health do not permit them to earn their own living.

The present county infirmary was erected in 1889.

The grounds surrounding the infirmary comprise two hundred and forty acres of fine farming land, which is under the supervision of a practical farmer, Henry A. Benitz.

The rule which is most strictly enforced here is that of cleanliness. The sleeping rooms are models of neatness and cleanliness. All bedding and clothing are carefully looked after by Mrs. Benitz, and the beds with which the rooms are furnished are good.

All the different departments of the institution are kept in a strictly sanitary condition. The floors of the rooms and corridors are swept or scrubbed daily and there has not been a case of any contagious disease or a case of typhoid fever for years.

The kitchen was inspected by the writer and was found to be as neat and clean as the kitchen of any good housekeeper and the meals served, while you would not call them fancy, are nevertheless wholesome and of wide variety.

The mildly insane of the county are also kept here in the Infirmary, which is also a considerable saving to the county. The older men of the institution are quartered together, which makes their lot more pleasant.

The county poor farm is located four and one-half miles southeast of Troy, near the corner of Center Township, and consists of two hundred and forty acres, as aforesaid, valued at one hundred and fifty ($150.00) dollars per acre.

For years it was the custom of the county commissioners to sell all products of the farm at private sale, but when Billy Gillen, Andy Symns, and Frank Drosselmeier were elected county commissioners, they decided that the best interests of the county would be served by selling everything that the farm produced at public sale. This system has since been followed with success, and at the three sales that have been held, all stock and other products have sold to good advantage and at much higher prices.

While the county infirmary of Doniphan County is not strictly up-to-date in the matter of improvements, none of the inmates suffer. All fare well and are comfortably taken care of.

The commissioners in charge of the farm are Frank H. Drosselmeier of Wathena, Theodore Teufler of Severance, and Charley Kibler of Troy.

Bonds were voted for the purpose of raising money to purchase the poor farm at the election held Nov. 6, 1866, in Doniphan County. The proposition carried by a majority of 916 to 123.

It was two years before the farm was in full operation, with Jesse Brown as the first superintendent. A complete list of names of superintendents, with date of time served, follows: Jesse Brown, 1868-1870; Jacob Larver, 1870-1875; James H. Hall, 1875-1878; M. Stockbarger, 1878-1880; James H. Earhart, 1880-1886; M. C. Morgan, 1886-1889; Albert H. Benitz, 1889-1896; F. W. Rice, 1896-1900; Gustave Phillips, 1900-1905; H. W. McClellan, 1905-1908; George Newman, 1908-1911; George Eberle, 1911-1914; Henry Benitz, 1914-1916.

Henry Albert Benitz was born May 16, 1887, on a farm near the county infirmary. His esteemed wife was Miss Lizzie Cathryn McKittrick, who was born on a farm near Troy, March 8, 1885. They were married at the Lutheran parsonage in Marion Township, on Feb. 28, 1911, by the Rev. Theodore Hoeman. They took possession of the farm owned by the county on March 16, 1914.

Mr. Benitz gives entire satisfaction to his employers, the county commissioners, and is held in high esteem by those who know of his management there. Perhaps it runs in the family, as Mr. Albert H. Benitz, for whom the younger man is a namesake, enjoyed the longest tenure of office in the fifty years of the existence of the farm.

Mr. Benitz is assisted by his able wife. She was a graduate of the Troy high school and for eight years was a popular teacher of the county. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter McKittrick, and a granddaughter of Mrs. John Kiley, one of the pioneer settlers of the county. To this union one child has been born, Milton Leo, December 7, 1914.

Big Apple Crop

In 1897 the forty acre orchard of Ben Davis apples owned by Mordica J. Rhue, made an extraordinary yield. A buyer from Waterloo, Iowa, offered Mr. Rhue $6,000 for the apples on the trees, but the latter refused and his friends thought he was foolish. His wisdom showed itself a few days later, however, when he sold 7,500 barrels at approximately $1.50 a barrel.

George Large

George Large, was born March 27, 1835, in Noble County, Ohio. He enlisted in 98th Illinois regiment, in Company B, August 13, 1862, and was mustered out at Springfield, Ill., July 6, 1865. Came to Kansas in 1884, February 12. He has four daughters, as follows: Myrtle May, Lu Trilla, Zola, and Nellie, and two sons: Frederick Homer and Vernon Hillery. Mr. Large resides six miles northeast of Troy on his 360-acre farm.

Charles Young

Charles Young, born in Taswell County, W. Va., 1832, April 24. Came to Kansas, 1856. October 30, married to Miss Elizabeth Merritt, 1857, Aug. 9th. Enlisted July 18, 1861, in St. Joseph, Mo., Company D, 13th Upper Missouri. Mustered out in St. Joseph Nov. 25th. Has one daughter (Charlotte) Mrs. Ed Clary, and three sons, Ansel Lee, William M., Edward.

JAMES LAWRENCE, PIONEER EVANGELIST

He Came to Kansas Before the War, and Was the First Preacher Ever Heard in Holton, When that City Was Only a Small Village of a Dozen Houses—Still Lives in Kansas.

James Lawrence, a pioneer evangelist of Kansas, was born in New York City, April 13, 1838. Although nearing four score years, he is possessed of all his faculties and lives an outdoor life, communing with nature at his small fruit farm and bee and chicken ranch in the suburbs of Lawrence. He came to Kansas, Sunday morning, May 1, 1857, and located at Leavenworth. Like Peter Cartwright, he was educated "in the brush." He became a preacher and was placed on a circuit in the fall of 1857 as an exhorter and was licensed to preach and admitted to the Kansas conference on trial in March, 1858. He was appointed junior preacher of the Holton circuit and preached the first sermon ever delivered in Holton. About one dozen houses comprised the village at that time. He preached in an uncompleted store building to a small congregation.

This pioneer was married to Miss Felina Smith, daughter of George Smith, who lived in Holton, the ceremony taking place in March, 1864. He has one child now living, James F. Lawrence, who teaches school in Loaog, P. I. The subject of this sketch resides at Lawrence and is retired from the Methodist ministry. In the suburbs, at the corner of Vermont and Twenty-third streets, he lives the life in the open air, surrounded by his bees and his chickens, and under the shade of his fruit trees. He keeps in touch with passing events, and has telephone connection with the city.

The Troy circuit was his field of endeavor for the first time in March, 1864, and he served the members of his congregation faithfully for two years. He was located at other charges for four years, but returned to preach again from 1870 to 1872. One of his pleasant duties was to tie the bonds of matrimony for practically all of the young people of the community. Two Presbyterian ministers, Mr. Shelden and Mr. Chapman, were located in Troy during his time.

Before this pioneer evangelist left Troy he started subscriptions for a church edifice, but it was not completed during his stay. However, he laid the foundation for the improvement by arousing the sentiment in its favor and the minister who followed carried it to full fruition. As far as the Rev. Mr. Lawrence remembers, the Rev. Mr. John Paulson was the builder.

One night in the fall of 1869 the enthusiastic evangelist went to Troy on business and preached that night. The church members were holding a week of prayer and after the meeting he told them he would have to leave the following morning, and would be glad to shake hands with everybody. As the people came forward and crowded around the altar, some of the old folks told him he must stay. He replied that such was then impossible, but they importuned him. He finally consented that after he had gone home he would return and did so the next Monday and conducted a revival of great force and power. After he left the congregation circulated a petition and sent it to the bishop to have him returned to Troy as a regular pastor. In this they were successful and in March, 1870 he was assigned to that charge.

He then went to the Salina district after serving in Troy for two years, and remained there eight years. In 1911 he returned to Troy for the first time in nearly forty years and preached in the morning and also held a night meeting in the park. His subject was divided into three parts, each one dealing with a subject of timely interest and vital importance. He preached on the subjects of "War," "Temperance" and "Religion."

In addition to being a powerful preacher this pioneer is also a veteran of the Civil War. He was residing in Troy when the war broke out and went with the 10th Kansas, under Colonel Frank Tracy, and was appointed chaplain of the regiment and stayed with the soldiers until the war was over.

William J. McKernan

A Doniphan County Young Man Who Became an Expert Horseman and Whose Chief Occupation Is Selling Horses at St. Joseph and South Omaha—His Father an Early Settler and Farmer of This County.

There are few of the farmers of eastern Kansas and Nebraska and and western Missouri and Iowa, patrons of the livestock markets at St. Joseph and South Omaha, who do not not know William J. McKernan, the expert horseman who sells horses in the big stock pavilions.

Mr. McKernan, it should be known to all, is a native of Doniphan County, Kansas, and it was here among our own people he gained the knowledge of horseflesh and the knack of business that has made him one of the best men of his kind on any market in the United States. He has the ability and tact necessary to the success of a salesman of horses. He has an eye that is quick to judge an animal. He has the horse selling business down as nearly to perfection as it is possible to be, and with his recognized integrity of business, his knowledge of human nature, his qualities as a mixer among men, there are no better horsemen anywhere than this Doniphan County native.

William J. McKernan was born on a farm three miles northwest of Troy, April 4, 1880. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick McKernan, who were old settlers of this part of Kansas. The father, after a long and useful life on the farm and in the community, died March 12, 1884. The mother died April 20, 1907, and her funeral was preached in the Catholic church at Fanning by Father John B. Stader, whose text was, "Blessed are those who die in the Lord." The burial was in the cemetery at Fanning beside her husband. These pioneers were respected by the entire people in life and in death their memory is revered. The parents were both natives of Ireland.

The subject of this review, William J. McKernan, possesses a good deal of the wit for which the Irish race is famous. Even as a boy, in the school known as the Hickory Grove school, five miles northwest of Troy, he displayed this quality to a remarkable degree, keeping his teachers and classmates laughing with his sharp wit and his ready repartee. But, boy or man, William J. McKernan has always commanded respect because of his strict honesty and his integrity.

Whether on the farm or in town, however, William J. McKernan has from his early boyhood shown a fondness for horses. On the farm the colts would follow him about and before the rest of the family knew it he would have them broken to the saddle or harness. He studied the horse thoroughly and before he was grown he was recognized as an authority on horses. He was a valuable young man to the community in which he was born and reared and it was predicted by the friends and neighbors that he would some day be recognized as a great horseman.

William J. McKernan married Miss Katharine Delaney on Feb. 6, 1902, in the Cathedral at St. Joseph, the Rev. Father O'Reilly performing the service. This young man from Doniphan County went into business for himself by taking up the business of auctioneering. In this he turned to good account his ready wit and his knowledge of horses and farm animals. He was a successful auctioneer and did a lucrative business, being much in demand in the neighborhoods throughout northeast Kansas.

Three years ago Mr. McKernan began to do business in the line of selling horses at the St. Joseph and Omaha stock yards. In this business he was "at home" from the start. He knew horses when he saw them, knew what they ought to bring at the market, and he found no difficulty in working his way to the front. It was not long before he had about everything coming his way and the sales at the two great Missouri river stock markets made by him went a long ways toward making them recognized by both shippers and buyers as among the best horse markets in the United States. This work, together with the knowledge he brought to it and his large acquaintance with the people whose horses were sent to these markets to be sold, enabled him to command the highest salary paid for such services.

Mr. McKernan conducts horse sales in the pavilion at the St. Joseph market every Friday and on Mondays and Tuesdays of each week he has sales at the yards in South Omaha. He has been doing this for three years and his sales are a fixed business with those two yards. The patrons of these yards make their shipments of horses there to be sold on these sale days, well knowing that they will be sold by a man whose judgment and ability as a salesman is unsurpassed.

Mr. and Mrs. McKernan are parents of six children, as follows: Patrick Edgar, born April 5, 1904; Rose Mary Mildred, born May 27, 1905; Philip Bernard, born Jan. 6, 1908; William James, born Oct. 26, 1910; John Daniel, born Jan. 11, 1912; Louis Francis, born Feb. 22, 1913. These children now growing up are an honor to their parents and possess the Irish wit of their father and mother to a remarkable degree. Whether the sons will become expert horsemen like their father is yet to be determined, but certainly should they choose that profession they will have to be going some to achieve the great success that has come to William J. McKernan.

LEWIS H. GIBSON

A Useful Citizen of the Old Town of Charleston Who, With Few Opportunities for Education, Has Won His Way to Success and Honor—His Work as Postmaster, Assessor and Township Trustee.

Among the men of Doniphan County who have won popularity by reason of their splendid citizenship and their activity in public affairs, is Lewis H. Gibson, farmer, former postmaster of the old town of Bozarth, and now trustee of Center Township.

Mr. Gibson was born in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, November 18, 1867, and came to Doniphan County March 12, 1870, with his parents, Henry and Elizabeth Gibson. The father died March 7, 1872, and the mother was born in Henry County, Indiana, Jan. 19, 1827, and died February 17, 1913. Both were laid to rest in the Courter Cemetery.

The son, Lewis H. Gibson, was an ambitious boy, but he had little opportunity to obtain the kind of education he most desired. He made the best of it, however, by attending the Center School about two months in the year and acquiring what knowledge he could from books that he read and from association with people. He was a hard worker, always busy with something useful, and earned the friendship of everybody in his neighborhood because of his industry. He did well everything he undertook and was never without employment.

The La Grange School House, District No. 30, situated in Center Township, about eight miles northeast of Troy.

On October 2, 1893, Lewis H. Gibson married Miss Irene Jane Bozarth, who was born September 3, 1868, on the place where they live, belonging to one of the oldest families of Doniphan County. This union has been blessed with six children:

Josie Clare, June 28, 1894, who was married March 14, 1915, in the Baptist parsonage in Troy by the Rev. Cecil E. Sheets, to Clarence Franklin King, who was born August 30, 1896, the day the Baptist church at Burr Oak was dedicated.

Mamie S., born April 4, 1896, and married to Cyrus E. King May 12, 1914, by the Rev. Cecil E. Sheets, pastor of the Troy Baptist church at his residence; Robert Allen, born June 13, 1899; Everett Lester, born June 18, 1904; Eugene Alfred, born April 28, 1906; Elsie Irene, born November 4, 1910.

Mrs. Gibson's grandfather, Jacob Bozarth an early pioneer of the county, was postmaster at the historic old town of Charleston in Doniphan County, under President Lincoln's administration, from 1861 to 1865. By a singular circumstance, when the old Charleston postoffice was revived, October 12, 1900, after having been abandoned for several years, Lewis H. Gibson, the husband of Jacob Bozarth's granddaughter, was made postmaster. The name was then changed to Bozarth, in honor of the distinguished founder of the Charleston community and the first postmaster. Mr. Gibson served as postmaster until October 1, 1902, when the postoffice again was discontinued and the territory supplied by mail through rural route out of Troy.

As postmaster of Bozarth Mr. Gibson performed his official duties efficiently and with honor. He served the patrons of that little office with the same fidelity he would have served them had it been an office which paid a fat salary. He has lived an ideal life, open and free, and merits the high esteem in which he is held by the people of that part of the county. Mr. Gibson's interest in politics has made him a host of friends. Always broad-minded and fair, an ardent Republican of the Kansas kind that believes in a square deal, he has made his influence felt throughout the county.

It was his interest in public affairs, however, that induced him to accept a nomination in 1912 from his party for the office of trustee of Center Township. He had during his residence in the township taken a lively interest in its affairs, had become sufficiently informed as to the details of these affairs to know all the ins and outs of the business of the township. Upon his election to the office and his subsequent installation into the office, he gave a good part of his time to the business of his office. His carefulness in the public expenditures and his ability as a manager to make every dollar of the township money bring its full value in service, merchandise, or whatever it went for, caused the people to again make him a candidate in 1914 and to re-elect him November 3, 1914, by a larger majority than that which he received in 1912. This of itself is the highest testimonial to his character and fitness for the position that could be given. He has also served the public in the capacity of assessor and in this, as in every other public work he has performed, he has displayed rare business judgment and has made an enviable record. Mr. Gibson has also taken an interest in his home school district, No. 60, and for eighteen years was a member of the board.

Mr. and Mrs. Gibson and their children are members of the Baptist Church and are active in the religious affairs of their community. They have a neat farm of sixty acres in Center Township, about five miles north and town of Charleston, a quarter of a mile south of the Missouri River in Center Township, about five miles north and one mile east of Troy. It is an ideal neighborhood, the lands rich and productive, and the people—like Mr. and Mrs. Gibson—open-hearted and generous.

The subject of this sketch was elected treasurer of Center Township at the November election in 1908, and re-elected in 1910.

Mrs. Townsend gave a concert in Troy on Tnursday evening, Dec. 20, 1866, consisting of excellent music, both vocal and instrumental; charades, tableaux, etc., were well performed to a delighted audience. Pat Maloy, a youth of Troy at that time, was a prominent figure and the entertainment was a topic of conversation of the Troy people for several years afterward.

La Grange School House

The last school district organized in Doniphan County was LaGrange number 30 which is situated in the northeast corner of Center Township and was organized through the efforts of Miss Edna S. Whitney, Superintendent of Public Instruction and a number of patrons residing in District Numbers 23, 44, 38 and 60.

The school house was erected at a cost of $1,500.00 on one acre of ground bought from John Weidemeier. The boss carpenter was James Brown and he was assisted by Dal M. Sharp, Otto Kiger, John Weidemeier, James Fibert, Henry Bibbs, Samuel Lewis and several other patrons of the district. The above named patrons worked in conjunction with the carpenters and did practically all of the hauling. The material was purchased from John A. C. Gordon Lumber Company, which was located at Blair and is managed by Billy Maag.

The school house was completed on the 15th day of December, 1914, and Miss Anna Scarbrough, of Troy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Scarbrough, was the first teacher, beginning her school on December 12, 1914, and the members of the school board are Samuel Lewis, Dale M. Sharp and John Weidemeier.

The teacher for this year is Miss Emma Meers. There are about forty scholars in the district.

The Days of the Bushwhackers

Mrs. Frances Irene Soper Recounts Some of the Terrorism Which Was Created in Troy and Vicinity in 1861—Rebels Corralled and Given Hours to Leave the Country—Notices to Get Out Left Under Doors During Night.

There are few people in Troy or Doniphan County with a more vivid recollection of the stirring events which took place during the early days of the Civil War than Mrs. Frances Irene Soper.

She came to Doniphan County in 1858, and her memory goes back with remarkable accuracy to the pioneer days. She is a woman gifted with a keen perception of public events and is well qualified to narrate the happenings of the time. This is a little history which Mrs. Soper informs the Chief about:

"In 1861 there was a band of lawless men in Doniphan County. Whether they were bushwhackers, jayhawkers or some other secret organization, we do not know. The Union men of Troy were greatly worried for fear there would be serious trouble here on account of the pro-slavery element.

"One night," Mrs. Soper says, "the Union men secretly went to Joe Haton's barn and organized a company which in a few days surrounded the town. All the rebels were caught and taken to the court house. No violence was intended, but the Southern sympathizers were told that they had just so many hours to leave the state, and if they ever came back, they would be severely dealt with.

"All the slavery men left except one man, and the Union men did not molest him, because he was a good, kind man, and had never made any threats against anything or anybody. The band of men who organized in Troy were not vicious in their dealings with whom they decided were undesirable, but they were surely determined in their course.

"The marauders, or vigilantes, or whatever they might be called, were in the habit, if they had any grudge against any one, to go secretly about their work. They would leave notices in the dead hour of the night under a man's door telling him that he had just so many hours to leave the state.

"One man, Dr. R. H. Payne, from Tennessee, awoke one morning and found a slip of paper under his door stating that he had twenty-four hours in which to leave the state. He left, all right, before the time limit expired. The "organization" could find nothing against the doctor, except that he was a Southern man. He was one of the kindest men that ever lived in Troy.

"Two years ago, Dr. R. H. Payne came back on a visit and went to his old home in North Troy, where Mrs. Jenkins now lives. He had many friends in the early days, but there were very few of them living when he came to pay them a friendly call. However, we were all glad to see him and renew old acquaintance. The doctor called upon all his old-time friends that he could find, and they were happy to see him again, after so many years' absence."

Charles E. Butts, Lawyer

A Native of Illinois, Transplanted to Kansas Soil, Makes Good as a Useful and Loyal Citizen and a Valued Member of the Community.

The law, which is essentially a learned profession, has many representatives in the cities and towns of Kansas who are indispensable as citizens. These learned men contribute much to the well-being of the communities in which they reside and also to the upbuilding of the commonwealth and all of its interests—social, educational, governmental, as well as financial, commercial and industrial. Such men are valuable to every community, and in fact are necessary to the public good.

The city of Troy is not without such honored citizens and lawyers, and in a thousand ways they have helped for the general public good, often rendering valuable service without pay or thought for reward. Among these might be mentioned the subject of this sketch, Charles E. Butts. Although he has resided in the community only seven years, he has become known as one of our staunchest, most loyal and respected citizens. While the practice of law in Doniphan County has not yielded lucrative returns, it goes without saying that Mr. Butts has been and is now getting his share of the legal business and has a large clientage.

Mr. Butts is a native of the state of Illinois, born on a farm in Iroquois County, Sept. 19, 1870. He received his education in the public schools and was graduated from the high school at Hoopeston in the class of 1888. Deciding to make law his life work, he entered Chicago College of Law and was graduated from that school June 1, 1897, being admitted to practice law by the supreme court of Illinois, June 23d of the same year. Not content with this he added to his equipment of learning by taking a post-graduate course at Lake Forest University and received the degree of bachelor of law there, June 1, 1898.

Having thus prepared himself for a career as a lawyer, Mr. Butts lost no time in taking the next important step requisite to a successful career, for on April 19, 1898, just before receiving his well-earned degree and his license to practice, he was married to Miss Louise KaDel, a young woman of many accomplishments and charming personality, of Williamsport, Indiana. In August, 1899, they set up their home in Danville, Ill., and there Mr. Butts engaged in the practice of his profession for a little more than nine years.

In October of the year 1908, Mr. Butts, whose dreams had been of Kansas, moved to Troy and established an office here. Being a man of intelligence and learning with a personality that drew men to him, he soon became one of the best liked and most popular men in the county, and an honored member of the state bar, he having been admitted to practice by the supreme court of Kansas, Jan. 17, 1911.

Mr. Butts has at all times taken a lively interest in all matters affecting the public interest, and particularly the interest of this community, which he regards as the best in the United States, so far as soil productiveness, social and education advantages and right conditions of living are concerned. He is one of the citizens upon whom we can depend at all times to uphold the dignity and honor of Kansas, its laws and institutions, its people and its homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Butts are prominent in social and culture affairs in Troy and Doniphan County. Their only daughter, Helen KaDel Butts, who was born in Danville, Ill., Oct. 1, 1900, is a student in the Troy high school. Although she is only fifteen she has shown exceptional talent for music, and for one of her years is quite accomplished both as a vocalist and instrumentalist. Troy is proud of Helen, as Troy is proud of her parents, and we predict a brilliant future for her and the other members of the family. Charles E. Butts is a man who manifests considerable interest in fraternal orders and is a member of practically every order in Troy.

ONE OF TROY'S OLDEST BARBERS IN POINT OF SERVICE

Robert W. Vigus Also Claims the Distinction of Owning the Finest Shop in the County and One of the Prettiest Little Homes in Kansas.

Robert W. Vigus, who purchased the barber shop and business of George Lair in Troy on Aug. 1, 1915, enjoys the distinction of being the oldest barber in this section in point of service, besides owning the finest barber shop in Doniphan County. Also it may be mentioned he is one of the popular citizens of the county seat and is the owner of a pretty home and as fine a tract of seven acres of land as one could find in a week's travel.

Mr. Vigus was born on a farm in Buchanan County, Missouri, near the city of St. Joseph, Nov. 10, 1867. Three years later, when he was a toddling child, his parents, William T. and Zerildia J. Vigus, came to Doniphan County. They settled on a farm two miles north of Severance. There Robert grew to manhood, receiving his education in the public schools.

At the age of eighteen, Robert started out for himself. He entered a barber shop at Severance and for fifteen years was engaged in business there. Fifteen years ago he decided to go back to the soil and he followed the farming business with success.

Five years ago he purchased of Joseph Hayton, a tract of seven acres of land at Troy, lying directly across the tracks of the St. Joseph & Grand Island railroad south of the company's freight depot. He then built a snug little home, improved the place until now it is one of the choicest little pieces of land one could find in a week's travel. The land is very rich and highly productive and is well worth $400 an acre, although its proud owner, comfortably established there for life, would not think of taking a fortune for it.

Cebron Tate Vigus and Robert W. Vigus, Troy's Popular Barber.

Mr. Vigus is one of the citizens of Troy and Doniphan County of which we are proud, and he enjoys the acquaintance of hundreds of our people throughout the county. He was married May 7, 1900, to Miss Myrtle E. Thomas of near Fanning. To this union was born a son, Cebron Tate Vigus, on Sept. 15, 1905. The boy is a bright, studious youngster who gives promise of growing up to manhood and making for himself a successful career.

Your hair I'll dress in latest style,

He was a probate judge for many terms, and was the father of Mrs. Arthur C. Bell, and died April 22, 1895. Mr. Dickson served the community well and had the respect and esteem of all

First Grand Island Agent at Troy

S. C. Beach was the first Grand Island agent in Troy, and in addition, ran a lumber yard. His assistant was John Fee, who came to Doniphan County, July 4, 1868, and who now lives six miles north of Troy on a small fruit farm. The latter relates many interesting incidents which took place during his residence in Troy in the latter '60's.

The Courthouse Burned — The Records Saved

(From the Troy Reporter.)

On Tuesday afternoon, March 12, about 1:30 o'clock, the court house in Troy was discovered to be on fire in the roof of the building. Mr. Stout dashed a pail of water on what could be seen of it, around the flue in the ceiling of the court room and, though the fire was extinguished, he gave the alarm, and several came running with water. The hatchway was raised, when it was discovered that the whole roof was in flames. All hands, when this was announced, began to carry out and save the records and papers. The wind was blowing very hard, and it was impossible to save the building. The woodwork was all pine, dry as powder, and it burned very rapidly. Two prisoners were in the jail, who were removed and placed under guard. The sheriff had stored in his office about $2,000 worth of clothing, attached for some parties in St. Joseph, which was all saved. A great many of the papers were scattered by the wind, and in gathering them up, they were somewhat "mixed." The books and records of all kinds, together with the safes, are all saved in good order. The court house was insured for $4,000 in the North America of Philadelphia. The policy was issued about six weeks ago. Three stoves, some desks, a few lamps and some thirty singing books belonging to the Methodist Society, were about all the property burned with the building. The building was put up under the old border ruffian rule and cost the county near $15,000—enough to erect a much better building. It has been "cursed" enough to be "charmed," but it seems the charm departed about the time it took fire. The sheriff will secure another room for the district court, which will open next Monday. The district clerk will have his papers all straightened up for court. Our citizens are taking steps for the erection of a new and good court house, which will be built with little or no expense to the county.

Taken from the Kansas Chief, October 29, 1857: White Cloud is situated in Doniphan County, Kansas, on the west bank of the Missouri River, about two miles below the Nebraska line, fifty miles by river from St. Joe and 615 from St. Louis. It was named for Ma-hush-hah or White Cloud, a celebrated Indian chief of the Iowa tribe of Indians, who died a few years since near the Mission in this county. The lands upon which the town is situated extend west some fifteen miles, were held in trust for the Iowas and were sold in June last. The Iowas still have a reservation north and west of here, lying partly in Kansas and partly in Nebraska. Their village is some three or four miles from here. Some fifteen or twenty miles west lies the Sac reservation, occupied by the remnant of the celebrated Black Hawk's tribe. They do a great part of their trading here, and many of the old warriors bear scars of numerous wounds which they probably received while following the lead of Black Hawk.

Doniphan County Slaves

In 1855 there were at least thirty-five slaves in Doniphan County. Cary B. Whitehead traded his farm, on which afterwards was located the town of Blair, once Blair's Station, founded by Judge Joel P. Blair, for a number of slaves which he afterward took to Missouri. When Sol Miller ground out the first issue of the Chief on the old Washington hand press at White Cloud, the press was pulled by a slave whom Mr. Miller hired from his owner for that purpose.

That the farm reared men are the ones who do the world's work is strikingly exemplified in Doniphan County which has furnished St. Joseph with many of her prominent men and philanthropists. It is an astounding fact that our neighboring city has been practically run by the men who were boys on Doniphan County farms, a fact worthy of mention.

In all the professions and business represented in St. Joseph the sons of Doniphan have made a success. Our county has furnished for St. Joseph its city counselor, its postmaster, a few of its millionaires and philanthropists, one of its former newspaper men, several of the city's prominent lawyers, school teachers, policemen with long and good service as well as detectives, and one business woman, and her best mayor.

These people built their success on the foundations of their character acquired while growing up in Doniphan County with the example of the county's pioneers before them. Doniphan County is proud of the career of her former citizens in St. Joseph and that city takes an equal pride in their achievements in the professions and business. The former Doniphan County boys, now grown men, have made a record in St. Joseph which reflects much credit on the county in which they were born and reared. If their work in life is the result of home enviornment, Doniphan County may be regarded as one of the banner counties for rearing children as well as raising crops. The facts are that "dear old St. Joe" would have a sweet time eaking out an existence were it not for Doniphan County.

One of the most prominent ex-Doniphan County men in St. Joseph was Arthur W. Brewster, who was a well-known and widely sought attorney of that city. He was well versed in the most intricate phases of legal procedure and was at the top of his chosen profession. His recognized efficiency in this profession led the people of St. Joseph to believe that he could superintend the handling of their mail equally as well and so he was appointed postmaster of St. Joseph. In this capacity he served well from 1901 to 1909. His methods and results in conducting the complicated business of handling a great city's mail were above criticism. Mr. Brewster now lives in Kansas City, and enjoys a lucrative law practice.

In the spring of 1915, following the election to the mayorality, Elliott Marshall began to look about for a lawyer to fill the responsible position of city counselor. The man chosen from the bar as the one best qualified for the position was Charles L. Faust, who was reared in Doniphan County. In the judgment of the mayor there was no other lawyer in St. Joseph who measured up to the requirements as did this young lawyer from Doniphan County. It is safe to predict that the former Doniphan County lad will be one of the most prominent in his profession and some day will be recognized as one of the leading jurists of the United States. This young man has ever been active in politics and many of his friends in St. Joseph are urging him to make up his mind to run for Congress when his term of office expires. The district is overwhelmingly Democratic but if this ambitious young man who is endowed with rare ability would make the race, it is believed that he could be elected and thus honor the people of that Congressional district.

William White and Pete Dill.

Among the newspaper men of St. Joseph, the name of Robert Tracy, now retired and living at 636 Powell street, St. Joseph, is well known. He was formerly of Doniphan County and, in fact, among the first editors of this county. He edited a paper in Elwood in the later '50's. Afterward he published the Troy Reporter, then was owner of a paper at Wathena. Many years later in the '70's he went to St. Joseph where he became prominent in newspaper work. He was exceptionally clever and versatile, with the fingers of a type-setter, the nose of a news gatherer, the instincts and art of a skillful writer and the courage of a Belgian. He could do anything from washing press rollers to pacifying an angry society leader whose daughter's name had been left out of a party list or bluffing an angry prize fighter who had objected to an account of a boxing match. In addition he was conscientious, got the straight of every story and wrote it as straight as he got it.

Chris Dubach, who is destined to become a millionaire, and who owns considerable land in Doniphan County and in Missouri, was born and reared in Doniphan County. Mr. Dubach, although independent of attorney's fees, practices law for amusement and spending money. He is one of the substantial and progressive men of St. Joseph and Doniphan people are proud of him.

Chris Otten, whose business sense and geniality makes him the successful proprietor of the Otten Hotel in St. Joseph, was formerly from Doniphan County, having gone to St. Joseph February 1, 1891. Mr. Otten was Cy Leland's business manager and bookkeeper for six years before going to St. Joseph and if any one could manage Cy Leland's business successfully—it's the State of Kansas against a national convention that he could manage a hotel successfully.

When J. B. Brady, of the J. B. Brady Carpet and Furniture Company, of St. Joseph, died May 9, 1902, both St. Joseph and Doniphan County felt a great loss. Mr. Brady was a former Doniphan County resident and was engaged in business in the Winzer building in Troy, and when he went to St. Joseph became a successful and popular business man.

Another successful St. Joseph business man and philanthropist, formerly of Doniphan County, was the late C. W. Noyes of the Noyes-Norman Shoe Company in St. Joseph. He was a county official in our county and lived at White Cloud several years. He was one of the best hearted men and a frequent contributor to benevolent and charitable institutions. The hospital which bears his name in St. Joseph will be completed in a few days and will forever stand as a monument to his good work and liberality.

Another man whose loss is much felt by both St. Joseph and Doniphan County is W. B. Craig, who became one of St. Joseph's wholesale men. He died a few years ago. He came to Doniphan County at an early date.

James S. Triplett, who resides at 801 North Twenty-second street, and who is a leading cattle salesman and speculator at the St. Joseph stock yards, was born March 10, 1873, near Troy. Mr. Triplett learned his business at the "grass roots" and has a speaking acquaintance with more thoroughbred Texas steers than any other man in St. Joseph. His employers pay him a salary of $6,000 per year, and he's worth the money.

Education in St. Joseph is efficiently represented by a former Doniphan County man, Professor Robert N. Malone, who has been superintendent of one of the city schools for several years. Likely in the coming years, many St. Joseph people who make a success in life, will look back with grateful remembrance to the training received under this kindly and learned educator.

And woman in the business world of St. Joseph is well represented by a former Doniphan County school ma'am. She is Miss Mary Morrisey, who holds the responsible position of cashier and bookkeeper in the O. K. Store at St. Joseph. To her fingers and head is entrusted the life-blood—the money—of the store where for twelve years she has been one of the factors of its growth.

Doniphan County people will recall with pride the service rendered them by Alcid Bowers, from January 7, 1894, to January, 1896, he was county attorney here, and is now an attorney in St. Joseph, at 515 Corby-Forsee building. He was also an efficient school teacher in Doniphan County at one time.

When St. Joseph needed men to handle its criminals the city had to send for the country boys of Doniphan County to tackle the job. Among those who attained distinction in that risky work is Frank M. Lovejoy of Sparks.

Mr. Lovejoy served on the St. Joseph police force from January 12, 1884, until February 12, 1892, when he resigned his position. In those years roughs, toughs and thugs were more in evidence than now, the aftermath of the border ruffian days, and those fellows valued but little their own life, and less the lives of others. They were desperate characters. The man who got the "drop" on him was the man who won. Mr. Lovejoy was one of those men, fearless and clever, and he is said to have arrested more criminals in St. Joseph than any other man on the force. He is now engaged in arresting the growth of weeds on his farm where he makes a specialty of subduing crops of alfalfa in Doniphan County.

Another Doniphan County man, who had much to do with enforcing the law and order in St. Joseph is George Weber, who received his appointment November 1st, 1891, serving faithfully until ground hog day, February 2, 1914. He now resides at 1109 Powell street, St. Joseph. He enjoys the distinction of having served on the St. Joseph force twenty-four years, from 1885 to 1909, and now lives in St. Joseph. Mr. Weber's efficiency won him promotion from policeman to plain clothes detective in which he won another enviable record.

Also from our county, David M. Duncan went to St. Joseph police force and served there from June 1, 1888, to February 17, 1897, a term of eight years, eight months, and sixteen days. He dealt successfully with a number of criminals and was considered a valuable man for his place. Mr. Duncan now lives five miles east of Troy in Center Township.

Some men are born great, some men achieve greatness and others refuse to have greatness thrust upon them. Such is John Duncan, who has made good on the St. Joseph police force since he was taken on March 17, 1899. He is a brother to David and of course a former Doniphan County boy. John's efficiency has been such that he has been promoted to plain clothes man, and moreover, his skill and cleverness in apprehending criminals became so well known that no other detective than the great John Burns of national reputation offered him a job. And then John Duncan refused the offer. Burns' proposition would have taken him far from St. Joe and Troy. He would not leave because—just because he did not wish to be too far away from his parents who live in Troy. Perhaps there is no more eloquent tribute paid to a mother. John received his appointment St. Patrick's Day in the morning, 1899, from the Mayor Dr. P. J. Kirschner, when Chief Broder had full sway.

When rural free delivery was established out of St. Joseph in 1902, Oscar Weakman one of the former Doniphan County teachers passed a creditable examination and was appointed carrier which position he still holds.

William Shepherd, formerly of Doniphan County, whose administration as mayor of the city of St. Joseph from April 1890 to 1896, is referred to by thousands of St. Joseph citizens as being the most profitable for the city, was a man whose name will be revered for years to come. He faithfully and promptly discharged the duties requested of him in a manner which reflected credit not only upon the individual but upon Doniphan County and the great state of Kansas.

When the Hammond Packing Company of St. Joseph was in need of a competent, painstaking and trustworthy young man of sterling character, it sent for Frank F. Brown of Troy. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Brown and a grandson of the venerable old Squire Frank Brown, who was so well and favorably known throughout Doniphan County. This young man is at the head of the provision sales department at the Hammond Packing Company of St. Joseph and the indications are that he will be promoted to one of the best positions at the head of the company before many years.

One of the courageous men on the police force in St. Joseph is Charles Hamilton Wykert, who was born in Burr Oak bottom, October 28, 1858, and reared in Doniphan County. He enjoys the distinction of having served longer on the police force in St. Joseph than any other Doniphan County man, with the exception of George Weber and John Duncan. He received his appointment June 18, 1900.

He has a penchant for recollecting dates and names and can probably give the exact date of more important events in Doniphan County which have transpired since 1865 than any other living man.

Lee Broom, the popular restaurant man, of 420 Francis, whose cafe is known to every nomad west of the Mississippi River, was partly educated in Doniphan County, and trained horses for Cy Leland during his youthful days. According to the judgment of some witty people, St. Joseph didn't have a swell place to eat in the city until this Doniphan County boy invested his money.

WYETH HARDWARE CO.

It seems a fitting climax to the history of fifty years of growth, to give our friends and patrons a description of our new home, completed and occupied in our anniversary year.

To this end we purchased in September, 1908, a half-block of ground, 240x140, on the east side of Second street, between Jule and Faraon streets, adjoining the harness and saddle factories on the west and the collar factories on the south, which are now connected by tunnels to our main building. The foundation for the new structure was started November 1, 1908, the completed building being occupied July 24, 1909.

The building is 240x130, seven stories and a basement, and contains six and one-half acres of floor space or, with floor space of factories included, ten and one-half acres. The walls are of vitrified brick, laid in cement, all columns and girders of steel, three and one-half-inch wood joists, double hard maple flooring, lined with tar paper. All floors have a pitch of four inches, draining surplus water to the scuppers in case of fire. A fire wall divides the building into two separate risks.

The offices occupy 130x100 feet on the south end of the second floor and are equipped with every modern device for convenience and comfort, including steam heating, Tungsten ceiling lamps, tile prism glass, modern toilets, shower baths and dressing rooms, and telegraph and telephone exchange connecting all departments of the building and factories. The private offices of Huston Wyeth, president, are finished in mahogany and the remainder in quartered oak.

Economy in receiving and shipping being one of the greatest factors in the jobbing business, special attention was given that feature. The grade in the alley permitted the switching of four cars down to the first floor level on our own ground and the unloading of three cars direct from the alley on the second floor over a bridge spanning the lower track, thus enabling us to handle seven cars at a time, delivering a large proportion of our goods in stock without elevator service or drayage charges. All outgoing freight is handled almost as economically, as cars are loaded from the packing room floor and all goods distributed by teams have the advantage of a down-grade to each depot in the city. Five direct connected elevators handle the freight and passenger service, while an automatic device, known as a "Lowerator," delivers goods from every floor to the packing room.

There were used in the construction of the building 900 cars of material, equivalent to 36 trains of 25 cars each; 24 cars of lumber for shelving; 66,000 pounds of white fireproof paint; 574 window frames, 161 in rear fitted with fireproof glass; 91 steel columns running from basement, from 91 base plates, to roof; 42,000 sacks of cement.

In looking back over the past fifty years we cannot but recognize the part our patrons have had in helping us to grow from 1859, when we were in a building 20x70 on Market Square, until today our main building and factories cover a floor space of over eleven acres, and seventy-six men represent us on the road, covering closely all the territory from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Huston Wyeth was born in St. Joseph, Mo., July 8, 1863, the only son of Wm. Maxwell Wyeth, founder of the Wyeth Hardware & Manufacturing Co. Aside from the time given to securing an education, Mr. Wyeth absolutely grew up with the business of the company, and has given it all his time and attention. In recognition of his interest, he was elected a director and vice-president in 1888. Following the death of his father he was elected president of the company April 13, 1901.

Mr. George M. Johnson, born in Morrow County, Ohio, May 1, 1861, moved to St. Joseph in 1883, and at once entered the employ of the Wyeth Hardware & Manufacturing Co. July 30, 1896, he was elected secretary, and April 13, 1901, he was elected vice-president and member of the directorate.

Mr. J. A. Warner was born March 17, 1867, in Centerville, W. Va., came to St. Joseph and entered the employ of the company in 1885. He was elected secretary April 13, 1901.

Mr. Wm. M. Wyeth, son of Mr. Huston Wyeth, was born in St. Joseph, May 12, 1884, and has grown up with the business, as did his father. He was elected second vice-president Feruary 2, 1909.

On Saturday, July 29, 1871, while switching cars at the Junction, and while in the act of coupling them, a brakeman, Mr. John Craycraft, had his right hand and arm crushed nearly to the elbow. Mr. Craycraft was brought to the Troy depot, where he was given treatment by Dr. Reeder to allay the pain until he could reach his home at St. Joseph.

Charles Rappelye

On Monday, April 10, 1871, Chas. Rappelye, husband of Mrs. Rappelye, who resides near Troy, secured permission from the trustees of the Methodist church and opened a select school. Great care was exercised over the manners, deportment and morals of the pupils. The discipline was mild but firm, positive and decided and the school was a success. The tuition was $2.00 per month.

Andrew J. Loyd

On Friday, Jan. 11, 1867, Mr. Andrew J. Loyd and Miss Laura J. Sergeant were married at the bride's home in Troy, the Rev. Mr. F. C. Sheldon performing the ceremony. The house in which they were married is the one owned by Wm. E. Reece of St. Joseph and Ed Reece of Topeka, directly across the street east from the old Methodist church, adjoining Miss Gettie Hanson's residence on the north and the house in which Mrs. Wilson lives.

Mr. Hull resides eight miles northwest of Troy, where he has lived twenty-one years. This soldier has honor of being present at surrender of Robert E. Lee at the Appomattox court house, Virginia.

Miss Gettie Hanson

Miss Gettie Hanson, who resides in Troy, taught the school in District Number 10, four miles southeast of Troy, beginning Sept. 4, 1871. D. W. Brown, county superintendent of public instruction, in making his report for the county newspapers at that time said: "How small and poorly seated. Organization good except a lack of oral exercises. Order excellent; class called and dismissed in fine style, showing careful drill. Instruction good. Windows provided with inside blinds—what extravagance—the county will be busted."

Miss Ada Welton

On Tuesday evening, Oct. 24, 1871, while attending the Mite society at the residence of Elder Alward, in Troy, Miss Ada Welton met with what was though to be a very serious accident, by falling into a cellar. Mr. Alward was having an addition built to his house and the cellar, which had just been excavated, stood open near the door. Miss Welton stepped outside, and in the dark, not knowing the cellar was there, walked into it. She fell across a rail that was in the cellar, striking upon her breast and sustained several bruises. She was carried from the cellar in a semi coma state. However, it proved, within a few days, that none of her injuries were serious.

Cyrus Leland, Jr., was succeeded as assistant U. S. collector of this district by John Normile, Jan. 1, 1867.

Pioneer Settler, Who Is Now Dead, Lived in Dugout Until Home Could Be Built.

Joseph Walker, prominent among the pioneers of Doniphan County, who died near Adrian, Jackson County, Kan., on Jan. 18, 1901, was one of the early settlers who was compelled to live in a dugout until a home could be provided. His widow, Mrs. Harriet Walker, is still living at the age of seventy-eight, on the old farm in Jackson County, and furnished the facts for this history.

Joseph Walker was born in England in 1829, and came to this country when he was scarcely eighteen years old. He was married at Painted Post, New York, in 1852, to Miss Harriet S. Smith, who was born in New Field, N. Y., in 1837. They had four children, Mae Walker, who was born in New York in 1853; Frank Walker, who was born in 1856, in Illinois, and Ida Walker, who was born in Illinois in 1859, and Jennie Walker, who was born in Kansas. She is now Mrs. J. A. Ayers, and lives in Holton.

One year after his marriage, Joseph Walker and his young wife started West, to Illinois, and farmed in that state from 1853 until 1864, when he bought two covered wagons and started for Kansas with his family. They drove thirty cows and sixty head of sheep before them, while six head of horses followed in the rear. This was their capital. Arriving at Troy they settled on a farm two and one-half miles northeast of the city. It was a veritable wilderness and having no money with which to purchase lumber for the erection of a home, they lived in a dugout for nearly a year.

The cows furnished the material for the home. When there was sufficient butter and butter-milk on hand to make the trip worth while, Mr. and Mrs. Walker would haul it to the little town of Charlestown and sell it to the general store at that point. From there it was shipped by steamboat to other river towns. Charlestown, at that time, as a thriving little village with a post-office, a saw-mill and a general store. It was near where John Kotsch's farm is now located, but has long been a town of the past. With the proceeds from the sale of the butter and eggs, a small load of lumber was purchased at the saw-mill and hauled back to their farm. After enough lumber had been procured in this way, the house was erected and it is shown in the picture accompanying this sketch. Nothing remains but a tangled mass of debris, the ravages of time having destroyed it. At the present time it is owned by Mrs. Dr. Phoebe Briggs.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walker reared large families and there are a large number of grandchildren and great grandchildren, today, to gladden the heart of the aged lady who worked so hard for her home here. The Walkers were from old and respected families and were loved by their neighbors, who were loath to see them move away to Jackson County, Kan., in the spring of 1883.

Mae Walker, the first child of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walker, was married to D. A. Olin in Troy in 1873. They had one daughter, Hattie Olin, born in 1876.

Frank Walker was married to Miss Rebecca Wykert in 1875, and their children's names are: Mrs. Thomas Graham, Joseph R. Walker, Mrs. Chloe Little, Travis Walker, Minnie, Hattie and Harry (twins), Blanch and Rebecca.

Ida Walker married William Hukill at Adrain in 1880, and their children are William B., Frank A., Charles H., Jennie Mae, and Maud, who died in 1897. Jennie Mae Walker was born in Troy and married J. A. Ayers, who taught school for several years in Jackson County. He was immensely popular with everyone and was elected register of deeds of that county, serving four years to the satisfaction of everyone. At the present time he is with the Rafter Farm Mortgage Company of Holton, Kan. Mr. and Mrs. Ayers have four children, Edna, Hattie, Wesley, and Aletha Ayers.

How It Turned Out When I Felt Like the Kaiser.

(Contributed by Mark E. Zimmerman.)

When a small boy, living on the old farm east of Troy, my parents sent my brother and I to school in town and, as usual, the town and country boys did not get along very well together. We had many little scraps and difficulties, and had the notion we could lick everybody. One day Clarence Price went back to the water bucket and on returning to his seat, slapped me in the face. After school was out, the first thing in order was to put a face on Price. He was waiting when my brother, Ed, and I came out, and I jumped on him without further delay. He soon had enough and, with Frank Kotsch and Glenn Byers, went on down toward Doctor Dinsmore's office. Near there someone had thrown out a great many rotten onions. When we came up Price threw one of the onions at me, and then and there I undertook to whip the "allies." As soon as I tackled Price, Kotsch jumped on my back and pulled me over, while Byers stood looking on. They scratched every bit of skin off my face, while my brother, Ed, stood and danced up and down. Years afterward Price informed me that Byers had formed the league. The agreement was, if Price and Kotsch could not skin me, he would help. Since then I have stood for peace, and I have never been scratched since.

On July 20, 1861, four negroes belonging to a man named Connet, a slave-holder in Buchanan County, Mo., made their escape to Elwood, and while en route for Troy were captured by some pro-slavery men. Thos. Dillon of Wathena presented a pistol at the head of one of the negroes, commanding him to stop, but he said he would die before he would go back to Massey. A short distance west of Wathena, several persons on horseback joined in the chase, and Mr. Frye and Wm. Evans attacked two of the negroes, when an altercation took place, in which one of the blacks was instantly killed by a ball through the head from a pistol shot from Evans, and Mr. Frye was mortally wounded. He was cut in the side in two or three places by the negro with a butcher knife. Thos. Dillon, who shot at one of the negroes, was arrested on a charge of assault with intent to kill. Two of the negroes escaped, one was killed and one captured.—Elwood Free Press, July 27, 1861.

An Honored Woman of Doniphan County Whose Husband, the Late Moses R. Townsend, Was a Pioneer Who, With Oxen, Hauled Lumber for the Old County Court House in 1858 and Then Saw Hard Service as a Soldier in the Civil War.

Center Township enjoys the distinction of having for a resident one of the capable women of Doniphan County in the person of Mrs. Mary E. Townsend who is one of the honored women of the Troy neighborhood. She is the widow of the late Moses R. Townsend, who was one of the pioneers of the county, a soldier for the cause of the Union in the Civil War, and one of the most valued citizens and farmers this community ever had.

Mrs. Townsend was Mary E. Peugh, a daughter of George Peugh and Euphemia Monroe Peugh, natives of Ohio, the father born there December 8, 1836, and the mother July 12, 1843. It was in Morgan County, Ohio, where Mary E. Peugh, afterward Mrs. Townsend, was born February 25, 1861. Her parents came to Doniphan County October 12, 1865, and it was here in the vicinity of Troy she received her early education. Her father served in the 75th Ohio Volunteer Infantry Company E, enlisting at Bishopville, Ohio, December 7, 1861, and was mustered out December 2, 1864, at Jacksonville, Florida.

The marriage of Mary E. Peugh to Moses R. Townsend was at Winthrop, Missouri, now known as East Atchison, on November 7, 1878, by the Rev. Mr. Fleenor, pastor of the Baptist Church.

Moses R. Townsend was born in Clinton County, Ohio, January 14, 1835. He came West when a young man and located on a farm in Doniphan County near Troy, shortly after the lands of the Territory of Kansas were opened to settlement in 1854. With three yoke of oxen Mr. Townsend hauled lumber for the Doniphan County Court House, which was built in 1858 and destroyed by fire in 1867. When the Civil War broke out he enlisted April 2, 1862, in Company C, 13th Kansas Volunteer Infantry. The regiment was recruited by Cyrus Leland, Sr., in the counties of Atchison, Brown, Doniphan, Marshal and Nemeha, and was composed of the flower of the young men of Northeastern Kansas of that day. The regiment saw a great deal of guerilla warfare in Missouri and Arkansas and bore the brunt of the hard fighting in the engagement at Prairie Grove, Pea Ridge and Cane Hill. It was mustered out at Little Rock, Arkansas, June 26, ceived the degree of Free Masonry in Berkeley Lodge No. 37, at Hodgesville, West Virginia, in his twenty-escond year. He was a member of the Troy Lodge No. 55 since November 11, 1876. He was survived by his wife.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Townsend are, Jessie M., who lives with her mother in Troy, and Robert Edwin, who was born November 22, 1892. Robert Edwin owns a nice farm three-fourths of a mile north of Troy. He married Miss Edith Roberts on August 8, 1914, at Atchison, the Probate Judge performing the ceremony.

Moses Raymond, one of the sons, born July 5, 1887, died Nov. 26, 1891. Charles R., one of Mr. Townsend's sons by his first wife, was nine years old at the time Mr. and Mrs. Townsesd were married and lived with them until he became of age. He is now a practicing physician in Centralia, Kansas.

Moses R. Townsend died July 30, 1900, on his beautiful farm one mile north of Troy, honored and respected by every one. He had the reputation of being one of the best farmers in Doniphan County. He was a staunch Democrat, a Union soldier, and a splendid patriotic citizen. His death was a great loss to Mrs. Townsend who was an ideal wife and mother, to his children, his friends and to the community.

Mrs. Townsend and her daughter, Miss Jessie, and her mother, Mrs. Euphemia Monroe Peugh, now in her seventy-third year, reside in Troy. They are surrounded by all of the comforts that could be desired and in the enoyment of the society of a host of admiring friends. Miss Jessie has grown to a pleasant young woman and is one of the many bright young daughters of Doniphan County. She is pleasing in manner and is a joy and a comfort to her mother.

Mrs. Townsend, while a leader in the society of the Troy community and an active worker in the Christian Church of which she is a member, is something of a business woman and a decided success as a manager.

The farm which Mrs. Townsend owns is situated just north of the city of Troy. It embraces one hundred and fifty acres of the most valuable land in Doniphan County and is in a high state of improvement. It is such a farm as might be classed as one of the richest and most attractive country estates in the Missouri Valley, with its fine fields and meadows and its great orchard, all making a picture that is pleasing to the eye.

Mrs. Townsend's love for the farm is only equalled by her devotion to its interests. She is a good common-sense business woman of fine judgment, and a very capable manager. She takes great pride in her orchard of twenty-five acres, considered by experts to be one of the best apple orchards in the county. From the orchard she receives larger returns than is possible to receive from twenty-five acres put to any other crop. This year she sold the apple crop off the twenty-five acres for the neat sum of $3,000 spot cash.

Mrs. Townsend is a woman who enjoys the friendship of the people of the entire community in which she has spent so many happy years of her life, and the community has been blessed by her sweet influence and her lovely personality.

James D. Williamson

J. D. Williamson died at his home one mile west of Troy, Friday evening, Feb. 13, 1914, of heart trouble. Mr. Williamson was born in Berkeley County, West Virginia, Feb. 19, 1847. He came to Doniphan County in the spring of 1872, and continued to make it his home up to the time of his death. In 1877 he was married to Miss Mary Bromley and soon after purchased the farm one mile west of Troy. He served three terms as township trustee; was elected representative in the legislature in 1888 and re-elected in 1890, and in 1892 was elected state senator for the First senatorial district, comprising Doniphan and Brown counties, which position he held for four years. He was a straight Republican all his life.

COL. D. R. ANTHONY, FREE STATE WAR HORSE

Came to Kansas in 1854 and Was One of the Most Aggressive Leaders of Free State Men

Whenever Doniphan County people, residents of Leavenworth or of Kansas at large, talk of the early days, and especially when they discuss the conflicts of the Free State and Pro-Slavery men along the border, the name of the late Colonel D. R. Anthony, Sr., ex-editor of the Leavenworth Times, is sure to be mentioned. From the time Colonel Anthony first landed in Kansas, in 1854, he was an ardent champion of the Free State party. Many anecdotes are told of his physical and moral courage in this cause, and how he would fight on the slightest provocation. As man, soldier, politician, editor and writer he won the confidence of his friends, and the respect and fear of his enemies. Both in words and deeds he was aggressive, fearless and relentless, undaunted by threats or show of arms. Such men as he were needed in those early days.

While he has been criticised for his extreme vindictiveness, he was conscientious and consistent, sincere in his beliefs and the methods in which he sought to carry out plans for the betterment of Kansas. His son, D. R. Anthony, Jr., is an able editor, and is our representative in Congress from the First district.

Kansas lost one of its most alert leaders when Colonel Anthony died.

A Fortune From Apples

Harry L. Macomber Believes in the Efficacy of Spraying and Is Convinced That No Orchard Can Possibly Become Productive Without the Application of Modern Methods in Cultivating the Trees.

No more able exponent of the productivity of the soil in the vicinity of Troy can be found than Harry L. Macomber, whose farm one mile west of Troy is a potent example of what modern methods of cultivation will accomplish. He is an ardent advocate of the latest ideas as formulated by the scientific experts who give their time and energy to the upbuilding of the rural communities.

Although still a young man, Mr. Macomber has had years of practical experience in the apple industry, and has the distinction of being the first man to adopt the spraying idea in the cultivation of his orchard in this part of the state. Many farmers and orchardists in Doniphan County and the northeastern section of Kansas have deplored their lack of forethought in not following the example set by Harry. Had these men sprayed their trees years ago as he has done from the beginning, their apple yield would have been many times greater and the financial returns would have been highly remunerative.

This marked success of Mr. Macomber is not surprising, as his industry and economy were inherited from his father, Sam Macomber, on whose farm west of Troy, he was born on Washington's birthday, February 22, 1873. Whether this coincidence had anything to do with his frugality and ability to make trees grow, it is difficult to say, but he has been a follower of the "Father of His Country" in his love for the farm, the orchard and outdoor life in general. He has always loved to roam in the large fields and woods on his father's farm, ever since he was a mere boy. The instruction which he received from the elder Macomber in the arts and crafts of nature were valuable lessons to him. And he profited by them to the fullest extent. As a lad Harry was thoroughly imoued with the farming spirit, although the methods of cultivation at that time were primitive and the work laborious. His father still resides on the old place, but early in life Harry evinced a desire to branch out on his own account. In this ambition he was encouraged by his father, and was given all the aid in the way of suggestions and hints that were possible.

While yet a mere lad Harry had so impressed his father, Sam, with his industry and capability that he was given sufficient backing to purchase a 195-acre tract of prairie land one mile west of Troy in 1897. The prospect for immediate success was not alluring, but the grit possessed by the young Macomber more than made up for a lot of the drawbacks. He was not the kind of boy to bemoan his fate, and look at the difficulties, but instead, pictured a vision of a large and growing orchard, which would one day make him independent. With this goal in front of him he set to work and soon the results were apparent.

Aided by a yoke of six oxen, Harry Macomber commenced in 1897, the arduous and seemingly impossible task of breaking the virgin sod of the prairies, and two years later, in 1899, he was enabled to set out sixty-five acres to apples. The early ravages of the rabbits and the ground hogs so decimated the trees, however, that there are now a number sufficient to comfortably grow on a forty-acre tract. The use of the spray was early advocated by Harry Macomber, who soon realized that apple trees, in order to be productive, should be given as much attention and cultivation as corn or any other farm staple.

This modern orchardist sought all the information that was available to help him in his work. He proceeded along scientific lines, by procuring and digesting the bulletins issued from the Kansas State Agricultural College in Mannattan. These he read perseveringly and thoughtfully, and whenever he found a suggestion that seemed adaptable to Doniphan County, he made arrangements to put it into effect. And the results have been remarkable in many instances. Here he learned the latest methods of spraying and treating the trees. He examines his orchard frequently and konws just when to spray. As a result he has never been bothered by the San Jose scale or other orchard pests. He has never found it necessary to use smudge pots, and this fact alone has added largely to the profits of his venture.

The effects of the spray were almost at once perceptible, but as the years rolled around the efficacy of spraying became more and more apparent in the abundance of the harvest. It is a noteworthy fact that the apples from Mr. Macomber's orchard commanded a better price and attracted more buyers since the spraying system of cultivation was inaugurated, than previously. During the entire life of the orchard Mr. Macomber has sold $33,250 worth of fruit, which is considered a fairly good return from what was a strip of prairie pasture not so many years ago.

Another source of information came to the subject of this sketch by making a systematic study of the methods used by the orchardists of North Yakima. This section of the Northwest has been notable for producing the most perfect apple grown in America. Many of the ideas which have gone to make this section famous were adopted by Harry and he has been many times repaid for this added effort.

So well have the Macomber apples become known to the trade that the owner has encountered no difficulty in selling the crop from the tree during the last four harvest seasons. The following figures showing the net proceeds from the crop for the last four consecutive years, need no explanation: In 1912 the yield amounted to $7,000; in 1913 to $5,000; in 1914 to $7,000, and in 1915 to $4,750.

A glance at the above figures tell a convincing story. Looking them over a second time it seems rational enough for Mr. Macomber to advocate the use of the spray. Twenty-three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars in four years from an orchard approximately forty acres in area, seems to be a fairly good return on the original investment. And there is no reason to anticipate either a lower price or a lighter harvest soon.

In addition to having this most productive fruit industry which brings him in his thousands, Mr. Macomber is an extensive breeder of cattle and hogs. As he put all of his energy and thought into the cultivation of his fruits, so he has done with his livestock. There are nowhere to be found any finer cattle or hogs than can be seen on his farm. He has arranged modern and fully equipped barns and has given the industry much careful study.

Poland China swine especially have held his interest, and his herds of cattle have brought in a nice return on the original investment, largely through the exercise of progressive and up-to-date methods. Although the major portion of his time is given over to the extensive cultivation of his fruit trees, Mr. Macomber devotes what is left to his cattle and hogs.

He was one of the first men in Doniphan County to erect a silo. At that time they were a little known and less tried "experiment." After giving the matter thoughtful attention for a time, Mr. Macomber had the foresight and good sound judgment to realize that here was something that would be a great aid to him and accordingly he made the purchase. Its value has been proven conclusively and his judgment sustained through the quality of his cattle.

Residence of Harry L. Macomber, situated one mile northwest of Troy.

Mr. Macomber was married on Jan. 27, 1897, to Miss Eva Kotsch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Kotsch. Mr. Kotsch was a well known veteran of the Civil War and the owner of several handsome business houses in Troy. The marriage has been a most happy one and as Mr. Macomber is intensely of a home-loving disposition he has erected a beautiful residence on his farm. There, at any time after the day's work is finished, he will be found with his family, consisting of his wife and two daughters. His daughters are Mary Maud, born April 19, 1898, and Ruth Etta, born June 10, 1908. Both are being educated in the Troy schools and are general favorites not only with their fellow students, but with an extensive circle of acquaintances as well.

Frederick S. Moser Has a Vivid Recollection of Conditions in Doniphan County in Its Wildest Days—Passed Through Troy on Way to Claim When There Was Nothing But a Few Stakes on the Present Site of the Town—Hauled the Lumber From Flickinger's Saw Mill in Geary City, Which Was Used in Constructing the First Houses in Troy.

Gifted with a remarkable memory, Frederick W. Moser, one of the few living pioneers of Doniphan County who can vividly recall the frontier conditions which prevailed in Doniphan County away back in 1856.

Mr. Moser was not quite seventeen years old when he first put foot on Doniphan County soil. He was born in June, 1839, and his memory goes even farther back than the stirring times he encountered after coming to the territory of Kansas.

In the winter of 1855 Mr. Moser's brother, John, took up a claim two miles north of the present site of Troy, and it was to live in this and help his brother work it that Frederick S. came to Doniphan County.

The Mosers' old home was in Buchanan County, Missouri. Frederick, his brother John and their mother, Mrs. Moser, left their home April 1, 1856, and started for the new country of Kansas. The party crossed the river at a place then and now called Doniphan. There was not much of a town, just a few houses and a steamboat landing.

The ferry was a scant little craft, just large enough for one yoke of oxen at a time. The Moser boys were obliged to run the wagon on by hand and also run it over after crossing the river. There were exciting times getting across the river those days, and many an unfortunate pioneer lost his belongings when the water was high.

Upon reaching the Kansas shore the little party struck an old Indian trail going in a northerly direction, and came to a place which people told them was the townsite for the new county seat. Mr. Moser remembers well today that the only sign of anything on the rough prairie was a few stakes which had been driven where the court house now stands.

Going north about two miles Mrs. Moser and her two sons reached their claim and took shelter in a small pole shanty that a man named Jack Pierce had built the summer before. It was just a temporary shelter, as the Moser boys had made preparations to build a house on the claim without delay.

When the site of Troy was laid out, Frederick Moser and his brother were engaged to haul the lumber for the first two houses from Flickinger's sawmill at Geary City. One of the houses was a dwelling, and it was situated on the site of Chris Jenkinson's present residence, and the other was a combination store and living house, near where Nelson Rogers had his blacksmith shop, and where Nick Theiss' shop now stands. Rogers had been conducting a postoffice and a blacksmith shop a mile out from Troy and when the new county seat had been located he moved the whole works, postoffice and all, into Troy. Consequently Rogers' shop had the honor of being the first building in the town, but its luster was dimmed through having been put up at second hand.

Mr. Moser recalls that there were several sales of lots in Troy during the summer, and that houses and stores went up as if by magic. It was not long until there were a number of stores in operation and saloons were running full blast. New people came trooping in and in a short time the town was the liveliest spot in Doniphan County. There were a number of river towns in a deathgrip struggle for supremacy, but Troy was going along in the even tenor of her way, building up and not bothering about the others.

Mr. Moser tells graphically of how the river towns were booming. He says there was such a craze for towns along the river that one could be found almost every two miles. Each town was trying to beat the other's game at being the biggest city, and the promoters were hustling night and day. Many of those towns have long since disappeared, but Mr. Moser remembers Mount Vernon distinctly, which was located on Joe Hargis' farm. He says that judging by the haste of the others to get started, Mount Vernon was rather late in entering the race for supremacy. After he came to Doniphan County Mr. Moser remembers that there were several houses built in Mount Vernon and a doctor named Bowen was practicing medicine there. A man named Collins had a residence, a law office, a dry goods house and a grocery store. There was also a large warehouse erected, but it was never used for that purpose. Mr. Moser recalls that it was used by the neighbors for a Sunday school conducted by Robert Mansfield, who lived in the hollow near by.

The only person living at the present who resided in Mr. Moser's neighborhood north of Troy in the early days, is Mrs. Hester Ann Schauffler, who still resides on her old homestead. During the winter of 1857 Mr. Moser's brother, John, carried the mail from Bellemont to Falls City, Nebraska, on a mule. That is believed by old-timers, and shown by weather records, to have been the coldest winter ever experienced in Kansas. Mr. Moser has the gratifying pleasure to know that he saw Kansas grow from a wild, unbroken prairie, to its present high state of cultivation and civilization. He has been a close observer of current events all his life and has often regretted that he was deprived of the advantages of a better education in his youthful days. With the family in limited circumstances, he was obliged to work hard in his youth, and believes that if he had the advantages of the boy of today he could not only enlighten the public on past events, but that he could write the history himself. Mr. and Mrs. Moser celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary about six years ago.

FROM BULLWHACKER TO REAL ESTATE DEALER

J. H. Earhart, Barefoot Boy, Develops Into Prosperous Business Man.

The hardships endured in my early childhood are, no doubt, what toughened my physical and moral fibre to achieve any success in later years. Left motherless at the tender age of five, I had scarcely had time to become accustomed to her loss when my father rode away one day on a spirited black horse to join the Seventh Kansas cavalry under Capt. Robert Hayes. As I watched with tear-dimmed eyes, while he cantered down the long ridge toward Wathena, I had a presentiment I would never see him again. And so it happened—he never returned to his family of motherless children. How well I remember how he used to have me run out and climb upon the old-style mounting block, and shout, "Hurrah for Abe Lincoln!" when anyone drove past the house.

Our home at the time of my birth in 1856 was in what was known as Boston Bottom, near where Mrs. Henry Gummig and August Haupt now live. Later we moved out on Smith Creek, close to the German church, on land now owned by George Schuler. I was four years old when Lincoln, then commonly known as the "rail splitter," spoke in Troy, where the New Transit House now stands. After my father went away we children, two boys and two girls, were left poorly provided for, and in the hands of people who cared little or nothing about our happiness or comfort. We were scantily clad, and went barefooted to school in the winter time, and you oldtimers who recollect what the winters were in those days, will agree with me that Washington's troops, that famous winter in Valley Forge, had little on us, who underwent severe privations and discomforts.

My first school teacher was Charles Rappelye, husband of Mrs. Rappelye, who now lives west of Troy, in the district of old Columbus, now all in farm land. As we ran along to school, every now and then we would scare up a flock of prairie chickens from the tall grass. They were as thick in those days as the common snowbird of today. My next teacher was Mrs. Tersah Kincaid, sister of Mrs. Montgomery, the widow of Alexander Kincaid, who was so brutally assassinated at the outbreak of the war by Joseph Tribble, a violent slavery man. When the long, cruel war was over, R. H. Montgomery, who had served his country during the conflict, returned to his former occupation of school teaching, and I received further education under his guidance.

W. M. C. Hill was now appointed guardian of us children by the probate court, and I lived with him until I was thirteen years old, at which time I was induced by an outsider to run away. I went to W. T. Wood, who now lives four miles west of Troy, and stayed there seven years, working for him through the summer and going to school in the winter. My last teacher was Harry Shaner, who recently died in Chicago, and he certainly was a very excellent pedagogue. His school was at Moray, Kansas.

A few years later I attained my majority, and in the fall of 1877, October 11th, I was married to Miss Bessie Charles. All the old people remember locust year; well, it was in that year, 1879, to be exact, I took charge of the Blair farm, which Cyrus Leland, Jr., had bought from the Blair estate. The next year I superintended the poor farm, and, while some considered it a big job for young shoulders, still the county commissioners evidently approved, and I apparently gave satisfaction for the five years I remained there. In 1889 I moved on the Graham-Ashmead eighty, now owned by John B. Kennedy, for which I paid $1,000. Here I squandered some five or six years, running a breaking team of oxen. For the benefit of the younger generation I will describe the obsolete way of clearing and breaking new land. Five or six yoke of oxen were used to a plow and the plow itself consisted of trucks made of the front wheels of wagons fastened close to a twenty-inch plow in front, in such a manner that the brush and saplings would be crushed and completely covered, leaving naught but the bare upturned earth behind.

In the fall of 1887—November 8, election day—my wife died, leaving three sturdy boys, the oldest only eight years old. I was so bewildered by this turn of affairs that I hardly knew how to plan for the future; but I made a temporary arrangement by giving the boys out to different relatives and renting out the farm, while I continued over Doniphan and part of Brown County with my breaking team. Bad luck followed bad luck for awhile. The rattlesnakes, which were a pest to horses and cattle in pioneer days, caused me to lose part of my team. The dry murrain also was responsible for the death of an animal or two. All the long winter and summer I had longed for my children and wanted them near me in the susceptible age of their development, so I could think of no better plan than to choose a good woman for a helpmeet and a mother for my boys. Providence willed

James H. Earhart

I should meet Mrs. Kate Davis, a widow with a six-year-old daughter. We were mutually attracted, and after a brief courtship were married February 17, 1889. We took the children and moved out on the eighty acres I had abandoned. I bought more cattle and continued with my oxen that year with excellent success, as the ground was in good condition from abundant rains.

The next year I leased 160 acres from Charles E. Brown, which I first broke and then farmed for a number of years. I planted a great deal of sod corn the first year, and the following winter fed it to the cattle, which got fat enough to send to market in Kansas City, where I realized 3½ cents on the pound. Today I could get, perhaps, three times that much.

I was a busy man for some time, as I put out fifty acres of orchard on the Brown place and forty acres on my eighty, and did considerable small farming beside. About two years afterward, John Kennedy offered me $4,000 for my eighty, and the temptation was so strong I accepted. For a long time I pitied John on his lack of judgment, but I think I am safe in saying he would not take $12,000 for the same property today, an increase of $1,000 per year in its value.

In the fall of 1897 I bought what was known as the Widow Thompson's sixty acres, two miles east of Troy, for $2,500. We lived there a little over six years, and disposed of it for $4,600 and August 26, 1905, moved to Troy, retiring from active farm life.

For awhile I engaged in the hotel and real estate business, and oftimes, when relating my pioneer experiences to commercial men stopping at my inn, some nervy fellow would call out, "Say, Earhart, do you feed those same breaking oxen to us for steak?"

September 1, 1912, I quit the hotel and have since devoted my time and energy to the real estate business. I own property here in Troy, and while my business has taken me around quite a bit, over the country, I want to say I've always had to take off my hat to my birthplace, Doniphan County, Kansas, where the people are generous, the land rich, water plentiful and the market alert and active.

Big Fourth of July

On Wednesday, July 4, 1866, probably the largest crowd ever assembled to attend a Fourth of July celebration was the one which convened at Benjamin Harding's grove, near Wathena. The Troy brass band furnished the music. Dr. P. H. Sturgis was president of the day and opened with prayer by Rev. John Paulson, the appointed chaplain of the occasion. Hon. W. H. Sherman of St. Joseph, Col. D. M. Johnston and the ladies club of Wathena, Captain Larzelere, Ev. J. Jenkins and several others delivered addresses that day and Johnson & Company's circus performed during the day. The crowd was estimated at 2,000.

On Monday, the 23rd of July, 1866, the president, Major Chew, and the superintendent, Mr. Sawin, of the St. Joseph & Denver railroad, and a surveying party, including Messrs. Cook and Burlingame, efficient engineers, arrived at Troy and pitched their tents at the terminus of the old grade. They went over the proposed route as far as Wolf river, making observations as to the best and most practical location. The engineers then continued the work of surveying to Marysville, Marshall County.

Captain Bell, who was captain of the steamer J. H. Lacy, and an old Missouri river man, died in St. Joseph, about July 20, 1866, after a short illness.

William H. Chapple

Born In Doniphan County Nearly Three Years Before Kansas Became a State, He Has Been Satisfied to Spend All of His Lifetime Here, and Has Amassed a Neat Fortune in His Landed Possessions—A Descendant From a Sturdy, Longlived Old English Family.

William H. Chapple, who lives on a farm of 240 acres two and one-half miles west of Troy in Center Township, is one of the fortunate men of our county. He was fortunate in the fact that he was one of the children who were born in Territorial Kansas at a time when the struggle for the admission of Kansas into the sisterhood of states was at a white heat and attracted the eyes of the people of the civilized world. There are few persons now living who can base a claim to so conspicuous a place in the history of our state and nation as that occupied by Mr. Chapple, by reason of his birth, and well may he feel proud of his nativity.

The parents of the subject of this sketch were William and Elizabeth C. Chapple who had come to Kansas Territory from the old colonial state of Virginia in the year 1857, seeking a home in the new lands that had been opened for settlement by the terms of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill which had passed Congress in 1854 through the efforts of Stephen A. Douglas, known as "the Little Giant of the West." It was that bill which, leaving the people of the territory of Kansas to decide for themselves whether their lands should be slave or free, precipitated the bloody conflict along the border and brought to this land thousands of men of blood and iron from the New England States, the Eastern States, the Middle States, and also from the states below the Mason and Dixon line.

The senior William Chapple, father of he of whom we write, was a man of strong parts, of high principle and of sterling integrity. Back of him was an English ancestry which traced its lineage back to the time of William the Conqueror—men who dared to do the things which they thought was right, and men whose word, in the transactions of life, was as good as a bond, and men to whom America owes much for the high character and stability of the foundation upon which our Republic was builded. This English stock transplanted in America proved true to the country of their adoption and no small part did they take in the conquering of England in the War of the Revolution and the War of 1812.

The farm that was homesteaded in the year 1857 by the father of William H. Chapple was selected with an idea that in future years a city would be builded near it. It was a beautiful rolling tract commanding a fine view of the surrounding country and as good land as could be found. Subsequent developments have shown how wisely the elder Chapple selected his farm, for the city of Troy, with its lines of railroads and all of its advantages to the farming community surrounding is within two and one-half miles of the Chapple farm.

On this farm William H. Chapple, the subject of this sketch, was born July 11, 1858. He was reared by his parents according to the old English idea of development of a strong character and the qualities that go to make a rugged industrious manhood and one who would be capable of making the most of the opportunities presented to him through life.

The farm which this ambitious farmer purchased and which he still owns consists of 240 acres. It lies across the road from his father's old home farm, the place where William H. Chapple was born. It is a splendid farm, with large, well-tilled fields and meadows and fine pasture lands for grazing.

Mr. Chapple has from boyhood taken an interest in live stock, particularly in cattle and hogs, believing as he does that blood counts. His Shorthorn cattle are neat and sleek and when they are sent to market as fat stock for beef they usually top the market. If an animal is sold for breeding purposes it brings a good price, and all cattle experts consider the cattle from the Chapple farm as among the finest of stock of that breed. This farmer doesn't speculate; he uses the right stock for breeding, knowing that with proper care the best quality are produced.

In the same way Mr. Chapple leads in his community in the breeding and raising of hogs. His preference is for the O. I. C. breed and he has been successful in producing as fine quality of hogs as is found on any farm or in any market.

There are a great many things in farming that yield good returns to the farmer from the labor he puts into them. Mr. Chapple is a lover of alfalfa and having made a study of it he knows how to care for his crops so there will be little loss and the fine quality of the hay is preserved.

The improvements on the Chapple farm are substantial, made with the general idea of utility rather than for show, and are always kept in good condition. He has what in New England or in the Eastern states would be called a fine country estate, one that could not be duplicated anywhere else in this country, and well worth $200 an acre. Besides this farm Mr. Chapple is the owner of 800 acres of good wheat and grazing land in Seward County, Kansas. He purchased this land as an investment.

As a public-spirited citizen Mr. Chapple ranks among the best in Doniphan County. His splendid farm and the condition in which it is kept is an indication of this. He has ever since his boyhood days taken a lively interest in the affairs of his neighborhood, favoring those things which tend to help make the lives of his neighbors more attractive and pleasurable, and opposing those things that in his judgment are calculated to do hurt to the people's interests. He is an earnest advocate of good roads as a means of making it easier and less expensive to the farmers in marketing their products; and he is enthusiastic for the betterment of the schools that the children of the community may gain a good education while living at home, although he was only able to secure a meager education in the same schools when he was a boy.

Mr. Chapple is a member of Troy City Lodge No. 38, I. O. O. F., and also of the Knights and Ladies of Security and the Anti-Horse Thief Association. He takes an interest in the doings of these societies and is a staunch upholder of the splendid teachings of each, fraternizing with the members and lending his influence and services to any good cause that arises.

Through all of the years of his success on his Doniphan County farm Mr. Chapple has been aided and encouraged by his wife. She was Eliza Townsend, a daughter of George W. and Ellen Townsend, and was born in Doniphan County one mile north of Troy on November 1, 1861. Their marriage occurred on January 20, 1886, at the Townsend home, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. G. H. Kerns, a a noted preacher in those days in Kansas. She is a woman of pleasing personality and a true representative of the high-bred Kansas women whose influence is felt in the shaping of the affairs of the state and of society.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Chapple are: Ira, born November 17, 1887, and Fayetta, born July 18, 1898. Ira is a young man who, following in the footsteps of his father, promises to make make a success in life. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and is a wideawake citizen, popular with all who know him in country and town. The daughter Fayetta is a young woman of many accomplishments and is receiving a good education. She loves the farm on which she was born and is a popular favorite among the people.

The father of William H. Chapple, who was born June 13, 1824, lived a long and useful life and died at the age of ninety years, on June 15, 1915, at Bowling Green, Mo. The mother also lived to a ripe old age, having been born April 22, 1834, dying July 4, 1902, honored and respected by all. Therefore we may with assurance expect Mr. and Mrs. William H. Chapple to live long and enjoy the fruits of their tireless labors in this prosperous community in Kansas.

William H. Chapple and family.

Charles A. Bembrick

Charles A. Bembrick came to Doniphan County in the year 1856, and resided on the farm which was entered by his brother, Doak Bembrick, three miles northeast of Troy for thirty years, his death occurring June 10, 1886. His wife, who came to the county in 1858, with her parents, was Theresa Jane Litchliter. They were married in 1861, and to their union eight children were born, as follows:

Robert A., Viola E., Anna L., Nora C., C. Edward, William F., Amanda J. and Libbie J.

Of these, three are now dead: Amanda died August 14, 1902. Libbie died in July, 1907, and Edward's death occurred at Lawton, Oklahoma, in March, 1912.

The old Bembrick farm northeast of Troy is one of the good farms in Center Township. Mrs. Bembrick, the widow of Charles, and mother of the children, lives on the old home place. She is attached to the old place where she has spent so many years and where she has reared her sons and daughters. The children, also, are attached to the old place, and from the time of its patent from the government it has never passed out of the hands of the Bembrick family.

William F. bought the west eighty of the farm last year and has biult a new home where he expects to live and rear his family.

Mrs. Trant was born April 8, 1829, and died May 31, 1890. William and John T. are the only two members of the family residing in Doniphan County. James M. was a soldier, serving in the Thirteenth Kansas, Company B.

John W. Chapple

A Representative of the High Class of Farmers Who Came to Kansas From Virginia in the Territorial Days and Helped in the Development of the Sunflwoer State—General Farming and Stock Raising and Shipping His Specialty.

The name of Chapple has been a household word throughout Doniphan County since the territorial days of Kansas, and there is no name that is held in higher esteem by the people. The Chapples were of English origin, coming to Kansas via Virginia, and have left the impress of their personality and their industry upon the entire community.

John W. Chapple, residing on the old original Chapple farm two and one-half miles west of Troy in Center Township, is one of the sons of William and Elizabeth C. Chapple, who came to Doniphan County from Virginia in the fall of 1857. The father of William H. Chapple and grandfather of the subject of this sketch was a native of England and one of the great characters who crossed the Atlantic and landed at Jamestown.

It was in Bottotourt County, Virginia, John W. Chapple was born January 18, 1856. He was a babe of only eighteen months when his parents came west and located on the homestead in Doniphan County which has been known for nearly sixty years as the Chapple farm. The country then was in a wild state, but few of the setlers of the early period having been able (on account of the border troubles which engaged their attention) to make a good start toward the development of the rich lands. William Chapple, the head of the family, however, succeeded in erecting a small home and in the few years before the outbreak of the Civil War succeeded in getting a part of his land under cultivation. He was a good farmer who had learned most of his farming in Virginia and it is a matter of pride to the survivors of this family that he introduced many new ideas of farming and thus laid the foundation for the future success that has come to his sons.

John W. Chapple went to school in the neighborhood west of Troy and received such an education as the schools could then give to the rising generation. On the farm he made himself generally useful as a boy and grew up a strong, manly fellow, a hard worker and the kind of a son in whom his father and mother could have great pride. As a young man he was popular with the people of the community, always courteous and chivalric and keenly interested in what was going on around him.

One of the pleasures of the boys of that period was an occasional trip to St. Joseph, which then was a port of entry for steamboats plying the Missouri River of no mean pretentions, and also the western terminus of the old Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad, the first line built across the state of Missouri. As a boy Mr. Chapple also remembers the famous "Pony Express" of the early period of Kansas history by which the mail and express matter were carried across the plains to the West by swift riders in relays. All these things, with the almost endless trains of prairie schooners taking settlers out to the plains, and the great ox trains of wagons carrying supplies over the old trail to the mountains, were such as to fill the youthful mind with a romanticism such as no other generation will ever be able to see or comprehend, and which supply a fund of reminiscence on which the survivor of those times, like our friend William Chapple, loved to dwell.

This young man of whom we write followed the peaceful avocation of farming on his father's farm and early learned the "trade" in a practical way so that he was able to relieve his father of much of the burden of the work.

On December 15, 1886, John W. Chapple married Miss Emma Haskett, of Holt County, Missouri. She was born in Vinton County, Ohio, February 10, 1862, and had moved to Missouri with her parents when a little girl. She has proven a good and an able helper and co-worker with her husband and a good mother. She takes great pride in her home and children. The happy young couple went to live on the farm and to their union four children were born: James M., born July 4, 1890, now chief wireless operator for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on the Steamship Pennsylvania out of San Francisco; Effie E., born September 3, 1893; W. C. Bryan, born April 22, 1897; J. Emery, born February 27, 1900. The children have all received an education in the public schools of the district and are among the bright young people of that community, possessing many of the traits of character that have made their honored parents among the most popular and best liked people. They are usually found among the central figures in the social activities of the neighborhood and, like others of our Doniphan County young people, they find a world of pleasure in their rural life.

John W. Chapple's father died at Bowling Green, Missouri, at his son George's home, on June 15, 1915, and the remains were shipped to Troy and the funeral was preached by Rev. J. Tilden Sapp and the funeral conducted by the A. F. & A. M. and the G. A. R. Mr. Chapple was born June 13, 1824.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapple are an honor to the community and enjoy the acquaintance of everybody for many miles around, besides having a somewhat extensive acquaintance among the people of Troy and St. Joseph. He is a member of the Knights and Ladies of Security and also a member of the Anti-Horse Thief Association.

DR. CHARLES EDWARD WALLER

One of Troy's Leading Physicians and Surgeons, for Several Years a Rock Island Railway Surgeon, He Stands High in His Profession and Is Also Numbered Among the Progressive Citizens of the Community in Which He Lives.

Among the men who have come to reside among our people in recent years none has won a higher place in the estimation of these people in the short period of a little more than three years than has the subject of this sketch, Dr. Charles Edward Waller, physician and surgeon, with offices in the Calnan building. There are a great many men, to whom popularity and success come by slow degrees and frequently with hard knocks, but Dr. Waller's popularity and success has come to him through his splendid personality, his knack to make and hold friends, and in recognition of his ability as a man who knows his profession thoroughly and is honest and conscientious in his practice of that profession.

Dr. Waller was not born in Kansas, but he was born so close to the state as to be considered really a Kansan. His father was Frances Xovia Waller, who was born in Germany, October 27, 1838, and who came to America with his parents when nine years old, the family settling in Buchanan County, Missouri. His mother was Mary Brossie, who was born in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, August 13, 1843. The parents resided on a farm in Buchanan County, Missouri, for many years, and it was on that farm that Charles Edward Waller was born, December 1, 1879. His father died September 21, 1907, but his mother still resides on the old farm in Buchanan County.

Dr. Waller's boyhood was spent in and around the old Missouri home. He received a common school education in his home district and then went to Chillicothe, Missouri, where he attended the high school from which he graduated in May 1898. With a desire to become a member of the profession he went to St. Joseph after finishing his schooling at Chillicothe and studied medicine under the eminent Dr. Westover. He then matriculated in the Ensworth Medical College in St. Joseph, graduating with a diploma in 1903.

His medical college work, together with his practice in the Ensworth Hospital, were such as would insure for him a high place in the profession in both medicine and surgery. He went to Davis County, Missouri and in Altamont he engaged in practice for eight years, during which time he was surgeon for the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway.

From Altamont, the subject of this sketch, moved to Troy on October 12, 1912, which has since been his home. Here he has, as previously indicated in this article, built up a fine practice and has been successful in every way.

Dr. Waller was married to Mrs. Abigail Kindig Worrell on September 8, 1903 at Gallatin, Missouri, by Elder Kerr of the Christian Church. She had one daughter by her former husband, Miss Allie Lee Worrell, born in Trenton, Missouri.

Dr. and Mrs. Waller reside in the old William McKendre Hammer property in the north part of Troy and are popular in the social circles and activities of Troy.

This young doctor has a well equipped suite of office rooms in the Calnan building and is enjoying a splendid practice among the people of Troy and the surrounding country. His good name and his reputation as a skillful physician and surgeon are known and recognized throughout Troy and Doniphan County, as well as in adjoining counties, also in St. Joseph, and frequently he is called into consultation by practitioners in difficult cases. His hospital experience in St. Joseph and his experience in surgical work for the Rock Island have caused him to be recognized as one of the best surgeons in this part of the country and in this particular, his presence and his services are of inestimable value to the Troy community. As such they are appreciated by our people.

As a citizen of Troy this young physician is taking an active interest in the town and generally he is to be found among the leaders in advanced thought and action in those important matters that have to do with the public welfare. Although a resident of the town and county a few years he has demonstrated his worth to our people in these matters and has shown himself to be a true patriot and one thoroughly dependable. He partakes of the spirit of Kansas, is a close student of civic and political affairs and one who usually is to be found on the right side of public questions.

The people of Troy are pleased to know that Dr. Waller has established himself here among them with a view to making this his permanent home.

Michael Ruddy's Death

It was a fatal Fourth of July for Michael Ruddy in 1908, when the heavy rain which fell in torrents caved in the banks of the creek near Number Six school house.

Mr. Ruddy's place was located six miles northwest of Troy, a short distance from the school house, and it was necessary for him to cross the creek going and coming from town.

On the Fourth he rode to Troy with his horse and buggy, and while he was in town one of the heaviest rains of the season fell. It was said that some friends advised against undertaking the journey home that night, but he believed the bridge across the creek was stout enough to withstand the ravages of the waters.

The flood caved in the banks of the creek so badly that the supports of the bridge were weakened and when Mr. Ruddy attempted to cross with his buggy the mare became frightened and balked at making the crossing.

The animal became unmanageable and backed completely off, injuring Mr. Ruddy so seriously that he died July 6. The place where the fatal accident happened was within half a mile of his home. Mr. Ruddy was well known and his death created deep sympathy.

John L. Berry

John L. Berry Settled Here Fifty-Nine Years Ago and Has Seen the Wild Prairie Converted into Most Productive Farms—Is a Staunch Republican, and Twice the State of Kansas Recognized His Loyalty and Faithful Devotion.

Fifty-nine years of continuous residence in Doniphan County is the proud record of John L. Berry, who came here when a boy in 1856, and settled with his father on the old Berry place one mile southwest of Troy.

The transformations that have taken place in Doniphan during that more than half century, have been varied and many and there are few people in this county who have a more vivid recollection of past occurrences than Mr. Berry. The country was practically "wild and woolly" those days, the settlers being few and widely scattered.

John L. Berry

Tracts of land that were then overrun with brush and wild grass are now producing the most bountiful crops under the most improved methods of cultivation. Mansions have been erected where log cabins were once regarded as castles and substantial farm houses dot the plains and hillsides where wild game held sway over fifty years ago.

Mr. Berry was a sure enough pioneer of Doniphan County, although on account of his youth several years passed before the gradual changes in nature's garden began to be impressed on his juvenile mind. Coyotes and buffalo were plentiful and sometimes a bunch of Indians from the mission would come along just to vary the monotony of the scenery.

Troy was a baby village when John L. came to the country and by the time he grew old enough to form his first lasting impressions he remembers that the town had assumed the dignity of a stout little commercial center. Gradually new settlers began to arrive and although progress and development was slow at first there was a notable addition to the settlers by the time Mr. Berry had been a resident of the county seven years. Farming work was both crude and unwieldly those times and little progress was made in cultivation despite the heart-breaking labors of the early settlers. But John L. Berry had the satisfaction to see all those things change much to the industrial advancement of the people and the general welfare of humanity.

Mr. Berry was born in Stone County, Missouri, early in 1855, and when a year old was taken to Doniphan County by his father, the late Alexander Berry, who settled on the farm where Mr. Berry now resides. The journey was made by ox team and was over a rough country mostly of wild prairie. Mr. Berry's mother was a courageous woman and never flinched at the hardships or privations that had necessarily to be encountered in those early days of pioneer life.

After several years of hard work in which every member of the family did their part the Berry place was eventually gotten under a good state of cultivation and each succeeding year has continued to enhance in value until today it is one of the most substantial farm homes in the county. There were in all five children in the Berry family, all of whom are living. They are: John L. Berry, Mrs. Eugene Brown, Mrs. Elijah Monroe, Mrs. R. M. Steel and Mrs. Privett. All the children still reside in Doniphan County, except Mrs. Steel, who lives in California.

When the Berry family grew to manhood and womanhood, John L. bought out the interests of his sisters in the home place and soon thereafter married Miss Lora Anderson, of Quenimo, Kan., who was then teaching her first term in the Troy schools. Mrs. Berry has always taken a keen interest in the education of the children of Doniphan and is a firm believer in the public school system of the county.

Although Mr. Berry's father died when he was ten years old he was not deprived of the advantages of an early education on that account. By the untiring industry of his mother she gave all her children as good an education in the schools at Troy and at Climax, as conditions would permit. Mrs. Berry died on Jan. 9, 1900, almost thirty-five years after the death of her husband, which occurred the day before the death of President Abraham Lincoln, on April 13, 1865.

Ever since reaching man's estate, John L. Berry has been a conscientious, hard working and public spirited citizen. His elegant farm bears testimony to his thrift and industry and his kindly interest in the welfare of his neighbors demonstrates without question the true goodness of his heart. A clear insight into Mr. Berry's nature may be gained from the fact that a few months ago, when Baker University, of Baldwin City, was badly in need of funds to continue its excellent educational work, Mr. Berry donated $1,000 to the institution in memory of his mother, who was a very devout Methodist and a faithful worker in the church during her entire lifetime.

Mr. Berry has taken quite an active part in the political affairs of the county and state for several years. About twelve years ago he was the backbone of the reform movement to break up the political ring which he thought controlled the affairs of Doniphan County. He never hesitates to express his firm convictions concerning decent political methods and takes a natural delight in fighting for what is right and clean in politics whenever the occasion requires.

He believes that the state and nation can thrive only as clean men are placed in office. In his view this includes national, state, county and township officers, men of the highest integrity, men who stand high in business and social life, men who are real leaders of their community, large or small as the case may be. When the office seeks the man and not the man the office, then Mr. Berry declares will we have the highest efficiency in government in all its forms. This high standard he has maintained in all his poltiical activity. As a reward for his faithful devotion to principles and loyalty to his party, he was chosen as an alternate delegate to both the national conventions which nominated William Howard Taft for the presidency. These conventions were held in 1908 and 1912 in Chicago.

The friends of Mr. Berry have mentioned his name as a candidate for the state senate in the Brown-Doniphan district and should he decide to throw his hat into the ring, many of the best citizens of the district will be justified in supporting him.

JAMES WOODRUFF McCLELLAN

A Hardware Merchant in Troy for Many Years, Now Retired, Who Has Witnessed a Wonderful Development of Kansas Since His Arrival in Doniphan County After the Close of the War—Son of Old Pennsylvania Family.

James Woodruff McClellan, who for many years was a leading hardware and implement dealer in Doniphan County, owning a large establishment in Troy, has been a resident of Doniphan County since 1865, and has witnessed here the transformation of a wild and rugged prairie country into one of the garden spots of the Western world. Mr. McClellan glories in the fact that he has not merely witnessed this development, but he has had no small part in it. He is a native of Pennsylvania, but for fifty years he has been a true blue Kansan.

Mr. McClellan was born March 12, 1840, in Green County, Pennsylvania. When ten years old, in 1850, he moved with his parents to Athens County, Ohio, where he resided for fifteen years. He attended school at Bishopville, Ohio, and taught three years in the school of Athens County.

After the Civil War, Mr. McClellan came to Doniphan County, landing here the day after President Lincoln was shot, April 15, 1865. He remembers well how the soldiers came home to Troy in that summer. How they crossed the Missouri River at St. Joseph on a ferry boat on their way. How the country was pretty well covered with timber for several miles back from the river.

Mr. McClellan first began farming in Doniphan County, and after that he taught school in Doniphan County for five years. He decided then to enter the mercantile business as a permanent occupation, and in 1885 he established himself in the hardware and implement business in Troy. He found this business particularly adapted to his talents and by his energy and his methods of dealing with his patrons he found no difficulty in building up a good trade among the people of the great farming district within a radius of twenty to thirty miles of Troy. Mr. McClellan followed this business continuously for many years, and became known throughout the country as an enterprising and a good man to trade with. He made money at the business and he invested most of it here in the city in which he earned it. He is a business man of fine character and strict integrity, and as such he is known throughout Doniphan County.

A few years ago Mr. McClellan decided he needed a rest. He sold out his business and retired to his neat residence in Troy to enjoy the rest which his many years of unremitting toil had rightfully earned. His substantial two-story building, which he had erected in Troy, has since been leased for the hardware and implement store which formerly he owned.

Mrs. Charles E. Sherrer, Carol Pearle and Marie Clella and J. W. McClellan.

Mr. McClellan is regarded by the people of Troy with favor and is respected as one of the city's oldest merchants and citizens. He takes great interest in the affairs of the city in which he has resided from its infancy. He is an engaging conversationalist, and, having been a close observer all of his life, one finds it a delight to converse with him, or to listen to his recital of his experiences back in the early days of Doniphan County, when Kansas was a youth.

The parents of Mr. McClellan were Alexander McClellan, born in Green County, Pennsylvania, in 1801. His mother, Sarah Hogue McClellan, was born in the same county in 1803. They were intelligent, industrious people and were honored as today their son, James Woodruff McClellan, the subject of this sketch, is honored and respected.

Winzer Brothers, Hardware

Applying the Fine Principles of Business Integrity That Guided the Men of This Family in Germany Long Lears Ago, These Brothers Have the Largest Hardware, Implement, Furniture and Paint Store to Be Seen in Doniphan County—Something of the History of This Time Honored Family.

Winzer Brothers, the leading hardware and implement dealers in the city of Troy, as well as in this part of Kansas, are entitled to credit for having built up a large and constantly growing business by reason of their efforts to put into every-day practice the principles of fair trade; by which is meant giving their customers a square deal in every transaction, and according to each and every one the kind of treatment that should follow the transactions between man and man.

The firm of Winzer Brothers began business in Troy, May 14, 1903. Originally it was Winzer & Klastermeier, the business being then located in the Leland building on the north side of the public square until December 1st. The firm then purchased the old Sol Miller business property on the west side of the public square, where it has continued to do business up to the present time.

Emil C. Winzer.

It is a matter of general knowledge among the people of Troy and of all who come to the county seat from near and far, that the firm of Winzer Brothers keeps the largest stock of general hardware, buggies, wagons, implements and all kinds of farm machinery, the largest line of Majestic Ranges and several other kinds of cook stoves, and a number of other kinds of stoves, to be found in this part of Kansas. On the second floor of the building they keep a full line of paints, oils, varnishes, etc., while on the upper floor one may see a very extensive line of furniture, carpets and especially rugs, such as one ordinarily would not expect to find, except in the large cities. Winzer Brothers, however, are the kind of business men who anticipate the needs of the people of the community in which their patrons reside. They certainly keep on sale about everything one would hope to find in a first-class hardware, implement, paint and furniture store, beside carrying a fine line of harness. They are progressive, energetic, courteous, obliging and are the kind of merchants who are satisfied with a reasonable profit on their sales over and above cost. The business has been founded on these principles which have guided these partners as they guided the members of the Winzer family in Germany.

William F. Winzer

The head of the Winzer family was William F. Winzer, who was born in Saxony, Germany, July 28, 1831. Rosina C. Winzer, his wife, was born in Baden, Germany, January 3, 1838. They were married at Weston, Missouri, May 17, 1856. Coming to Doniphan County in 1875, they settled on the farm in Wayne Township, which has since been known as the Winzer farm and where Edwin G. Winzer now resides. William F. Winzer died in the old home July 5, 1896, and Rosa C. Winzer died there February 28, 1902. Both were buried in the Doniphan Cemetery side by side. They were honored by all the people as among Doniphan County's splendid citizens. To this fine couple were born two daughters and six sons, as follows: Louisa R., now Mrs. E. J. Scholz of Wathena; William F., August W., Charles G., Emil C., Edwin G., Wilhelmina C., now Mrs. J. J. Bullock of Emporia, and Oscar G.

Emil C. Winzer

The eldest of the two members of the firm of Winzer Brothers is Emil C. Winzer, who was born February 3, 1869, in the old river town of Weston, Missouri, and came to Doniphan County with his parents when he was six years of age. He grew up on the old Winzer farm in Wayne township. He had attended school at Weston before coming to Kansas, but the best of his school years were in the little school house in the Spring Grove District Number 54. He early showed a preference for teaching, and his parents, believing in education, encouraged him in his ambition. At the age of nineteen he was employed to teach the school in a joint district which was part in Doniphan and part in Atchison County, the school house being in Doniphan County. He made a success of his first school, so much of a success it was, that he desired to further equip himself for the work. He attended Campbell Normal University at Holton in the summer of 1889 and also in the summer of 1890. He next was employed as teacher in Iola School District Number 41 and taught there two years. After that he attended the University of Kansas in 1891 and 1892.

Oscar G. Winzer.

In the fall of 1892 Emil C. Winzer was elected on the Republican ticket to the office of clerk of the District Court of Doniphan County. He made a good record and was again put forth as his party's nominee in 1894, and was re-elected. After the expiration of his second term, he resumed his teaching in Doniphan County and continued in that work until the year 1901.

In the last named year, 1901, in October, Emil C. Winzer decided to engage in merchandising. He went to Atchison and entered the hardware store of Klastermeier Brothers as a salesman and bookkeeper. He remained with them until April 1, 1903, and on May 14, 1903, he began business in Troy. He has been a member of the firm ever since. From 1907 until 1911, however, he managed another branch store for Winzer & Klastermeier at Highland and when that store was disposed of, they bought Klastermeier's interest in the Troy store and changed the name to Winzer Bros. and he returned to Troy with the firm.

Emil C. Winzer married Miss Ruby Jarrett August 30, 1906, at her home in Atchison, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Hilton, pastor of the Christian Church.

Oscar G. Winzer

The junior member of the firm of Winzer Brothers is Oscar G. Winzer. He was born in Doniphan County, on the old home place in Wayne Township, December 17, 1876. He was educated in the Spring Grove District School, but he had no desire to leave the farm to engage in teaching or any other occupation. He remained on the farm where he was born and where he grew to manhood, an industrious, hard-working young man, and one deservedly holding the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. He became a good farmer, thoroughly practical in his methods and his management, and his work was crowned with success.

On May 14, 1903, however, Oscar G. Winzer decided to give up farming and try his hand at merchandising. He was only a green country farmer's boy with no business experience, whatever, but he had a good deal in him that he was able to apply to the business and which helped a long way toward bringing success to his undertaking. After Emil C. left, in 1904, Oscar G. became the manager of the Troy store, until 1911. It was his first business venture, this hardware business, but he was the kind of a man to learn the business through and through. He applied himself daily to his task and was always punctual in the house. So close was his application to business that he never has taken a vacation or has been away from the business for a longer period than three days since he first started into business in Troy. He has developed into one of the best informed merchants in the county, and, beside, he is the bearer of a name and a reputation of which any man should feel proud.

Oscar C. Winzer was married to Miss Edna L. Mann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson Mann, February 9, 1907, at St. Joseph, Missouri, the Rev. Mr. Davis, pastor of the First Christian Church at St. Joseph, Missouri, pronouncing the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Oscar C. Winzer are parents of one son, Ralph Edwin, who was born in Troy, May 10, 1908. He is a bright youth, who bids fair to follow in the footstens of his father and become some day, when he is a man grown up, a successful hardware merchant.

HARL JACKSON BRIGGS

A Former Doniphan County Boy —Reared and Educated in Troy.

Now and then one makes a brief stay with us and while it is not opportune that they devote a lifetime in Doniphan County, they leave a mark and enough friends here to justify mention as a part of the history of Doniphan County. Such a one is Harl Jackson Briggs who was born in Amazonia Missouri November 18, 1892. His childhood was very much like that of the average child of parents in moderate circumstances and possibly uneventful until 1899 when he moved to Troy. It was February 22, the birthday of that eminent American, George Washington, when Harl Johnson first looked on Kansas as his home and he was immediately placed in the public school where his education progressed very satisfactorily. His last teacher was Miss Ida Bradley, a well-known teacher of this county.

Harl is the son of Stephen A. Briggs and Pearley Walker Briggs. His mother was a native of Cass County, Missouri, where she was born on October 9, 1869. His father first saw the light of day on October 3, 1859, in Ringold County, Iowa, and came to Kansas in 1866. His father and the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was Walker Briggs. Harl J. has three sisters and one brother, Chloe (Mrs. Fred Bailey) Haven, who lives at home and works at the telephone office, Aleene Wauneta, who is in school, and Joseph, who works at Edward A. Sinclair's drug store.

Harl Briggs, from March 27, 1907, until May 15, 1909, worked for the St. Joseph & Grand Island Railroad Company under G. S. Yant. On June 1, 1909, he went to work for the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, with the civil engineer, and stayed with that position until January 1, 1910.

On February 1, 1910, he went to work with the St. Joseph Automobile Company, and worked there until January 19, 1911. It was while with this position that he acquired the love for automobiles, which has induced him to stay with that line of work in some capacity ever since. While in Atchison, he drove six months for Bailie Waggener, the famous Kansas philanthropist, who has made his birthday so well known by his lavish picnics on that day for children.

On October 1, 1911, Harl J. Briggs returned to St. Joseph to take a position as chauffeur for Henry Krug of the German-American Bank. This was an extra good position, but he relinquished it November 1, 1912, and is now in the employ of Mrs. James McCord, 1851 Clay street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

The subject of this sketch is an ambitious young man who is a total abstainer, is courteous and obliging at all times, and will make a success of life. This persevering young man knows the worth of a dollar and saves his money.

MRS. GAYLORD DROWNED

The Sail Boat Struck the Cable and Capsized.

R. S. Gaylord and wife, Mariah H. Gaylord, and their four children, of Riverside, South Dakota, departed from their home on March 20th in a sailboat, constructed by Mr. Gaylord, en route for New Orleans. They made the trip with little mishap and probably much discomfort, until they reached a point in the river at Belmont Ferry. Here the boat struck a cable that had been stretched across the river by James Maloy, owner of the ferryboat which plied the river. The home-made sailboat capsized and its passengers fought for their lives in the chilly waters. J. M. Anderson and Al Estes, who were in charge of the ferry and witnessed the catastrophe, were successful in rescuing the four children and the father, but Mrs. Gaylord perished.

The body was recovered and Dr. R. S. Dinsmore, coroner of Doniphan County, was called and held an inquest. The jury was composed of the following: Jacob Miller, druggist; Benjamin M. Forbes, banker at Wathena; Fidel Garmer, George Manville, merchant in Wathena; Otto C. Jones, hardware dealer; William Erskine, school teacher. After due deliberation, the jury brought in a verdict to the effect that Mrs. Gaylord came to her death by the negligence of J. M. Anderson and Al Estes. The coroner accordingly ordered them taken into custody, and taken before Frank Brown, justice of the peace in Center Township, to answer to the charge of manslaughter. The accident occurred on April 24, 1896, a difference of thirty-one days since the family had left Riverside, S. D.

A. L. Decker, the enterprising Troy grocer, says that it isn't the price so much as it is the quality that counts. Some goods would be dear if you got them for nothing, but what you pay for at his store you receive, both in quantity and quality.

The Troy High School

City Has New $55,000 High School—Built in 1902—Last Addition in 1914—Three Stories With Eighteen Rooms—First Troy Brick School Built in 1866-67 — Cost $4,000 — Modern Building, Up to Date, and Teaching Corps Efficient —Board of Education, John S. Norman, A. B. Zimmerman, George W. Kinkead.

"Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise" said the poet. That was years ago when blissful ignorance was the rule and not the exception. But in a city like Troy ignorance has been reduced to a minimum and wisdom is the jewel sought after. Our school advantages are unexcelled and the percentage of illiteracy here is represented by a cipher.

The compulsory education law is a light yoke in the Troy school because of the fact that the attendance is voluntary. Thousands of children have been educated in our city during the past fifty years and have gone out into the world to become successful men and cultured women. Hundreds of the young men and women have brightened the honor rolls of the Kansas State Agricultural College at Manhatttan, the State University at Lawrence, and the State Normal at Emporia.

The grades of instruction in our splendid public schools lead the pupils by careful, thorough steps to the level, from which they pass the portals of the college into the unequaled opportunities afforded by the above named institutions. If schools may be considered a barometer of progress and culture, as the banks are considered barometers of the commercial conditions of a community, Troy may be regarded as one of the most progressive, up-to-date and cultured communities of Kansas.

The Troy High School, built with its new addition at a total cost of $55,000 is up to date in every respect, and the corps of teachers is most efficient.

The idea apparent behind this interest in education is that the early settlers determined that their children and future generations should enjoy educational advantages denied them. This thought evidently must have been felt at quite an early day as well as now to judge by the records. Even when the first high school building was built in Troy the sentiment in favor of considerable expenditure—considerable for the time and conditions—was in the overwhelming majority.

In the days of the first settlement of Doniphan County, there were very few schools at all. The children of the first settleers were fortunate to receive even an elementary education. In the middle of the '60's as Kansas and the country was emerging from the tribulations of the Civil War, opportunities for education grew a little better. On the land set aside for school purposes rude school houses began to dot the landscape.

Doubtless in Doniphan County no other community was more interested in educational work than the citizens of Troy. Nevertheless they realized that as the town grew there would come the need for a substantial school building, and $4,000 was deemed the least amount that could be expended.

Finally an election was set for Saturday, October 13, 1866, to determine whether or not Troy, or school district No. 21, should issue bonds for $4,000 to erect the proposed school.

Altogether seventy votes were cast and the election was practically in favor of the bonds, there being sixty-five for; and only five against the proposition. The building was erected in the years 1866 and 1867. When the corner-stone was laid William Leonard wanted to leave under it a memento of the time for the future generations to probably discover, or perhaps he hoped that he himself might be living when the cornerstone of the old building should be removed to be used in a new structure. Having this idea in mind, he placed under the stone a fifty cent piece of the year 1867, and noted the number of the coin. His vision of the future proved to be well founded, as he was destined to see his coin again.

With the growth of the town and county the school drew from far and wide. Many of the Doniphan County boys who have made their mark of success attended there. The building answered its purpose for many years but in 1902 the need for a modern building was keenly felt. Room and equipment for teaching the sciences was needed. In fact Troy people realized that keeping up with the times demanded a modern school building. The place where the young people of the town spent the majority of their time must be more attractive, with better facilities for giving them the training to fit them for coping with the world.

The old building was becoming more crowded each year. Then also it was realized that one of the greatest drawing cards of the town and one of its best advertisements and inducements for farmers to move to Troy when their children were of high school age, would be a building which would offer the best opportunities for a little higher education.

Finally talk assumed definite form and the matter was put before the citizens in a concrete way. However, the amount to be expended this time was ten times as much as when the seventy people cast their votes in 1866. Then the $4,000 was considered enough but the Twentieth Century high school called for an expenditure of ten times as much or $40,000. This was in 1902 and bonds were voted for that amount by a good majority. Henry Wagenknecht of Wathena was awarded the contract for the building.

William Leonard recalled how he had laid the 50-cent piece under the cornerstone of the old building thirty-five years before. He predicted that it would be found and gave some of the workmen the number of the coin which he had noted down and had kept all those years. The coin was found and Mr. Leonard placed the old piece under the cornerstone of the new building. Who will bring the fifty cent piece of 1867 to light in the future years, if the present building is torn down, would be difficult to foretell.

As had been predicted, the new high school proved to be one of the best advertisements for the town and one of its attractions. Pupils continued to increase in number until once more the question of another high school arose. Finally it was definitely decided that more room was necessary, but there was considerable difference of opinion as to the best method of taking care of the increase of attendance. Some were of the opinion that another new building should be erected while others were in favor of an addition to the present building. On account of the lack of a suitable site for another high school building the latter plan was adopted and an election to vote $15,000 in bonds for this addition carried in 1914 without much opposition.

J. W. Jones, of St. Joseph, was awarded the contract, and the new addition was built. This was in 1914. Since then, while the enrollment and attendance continues to increase, the present high school with its addition will likely be adequate to take care of its work for several years to come.

The building is three stories and has eighteen rooms. These include well eqipped laboratories for teaching the physical sciences and making experiments incidental to the explanation of such studies. In this as well as in every other respect the building is modern and up-to-date. The high school is the largest in the county and draws from far and wide, students coming for miles to attend. Many families have moved to Troy more because of the splendid school than anything else.

The location is convenient, being situated two blocks southwest of the business section of Troy. The people of district No. 21, do not regret the cost. In many ways the amount expended on the high school may be considered as an investment. The returns will be in the students who fitted for success in life through its splendid equipment and efficient corps of teachers, go out into the world and make good.

Perhaps it may be said that students attending a high school are not merely getting ready to live, but they are living in the real sense of the word. The high school is virtually their home and social center. During the best part of their younger years the studies there pursued, the class parties and the other social features, of school life form all the work they know. If this world be ugly, cramped and unpleasant the student misses just so much of life. If his school environment be cheerful and up-to-date, he will always carry memories that will be among the treasures of life to him. He should have a reason to be proud of his school and in the Troy High School the students who attend will find a cause for pride.

In their teachers they will find an exceptional body of instructors. It is well known that high school teachers come into contact with young people just at the most formative period in their lives. Theirs is the opportunity to put the moulding touches on their characters as well as upon the minds of those who come under their charge. If the high school teachers be men and women of strong characters broad minds and endowed with a kindly sympathetic understanding of the needs of the growing minds, they will be among their students' greatest influences toward success and happiness in life.

If they can earn the respect of students as individuals and give them a broad outlook upon life, if they can inspire their students to keep their ideals high but their minds also in the solid realities, those teachers show the greatest of fitness for their work. It is their opportunity to make the future career a success often times and to lay a foundation for the student's best use of life.

Such teachers form the corps of the present high school. Professor C. S. Hambelton is an able superintendent, having been connected with the schools since 1907 and has grown in efficiency and popularity every year. The other teachers of the high school are well adapted to teaching and have proven their fitness for their calling.

The school board is composed of John S. Norman, A. B. Zimmerman and George W. Kinkead. Mr. Norman is one of Doniphan county's leading bankers and president of the Board of Education. He was formerly a teacher in the Troy schools. Mr. Zimmerman is one of the youngest and most active and successful business men in Doniphan County. He is a member of the firm of Zimmerman & Williamson. He is keen for everything that will go in any way to better the schools and is active in boosting the school system. George W. Kinkead, the other member, was formerly a pedagogue. At various times he was principal of the Wathena, Elwood, Severance and Troy schools. He is now manager of the Kinkead Grain Company of Troy and is one of the men of the Board of Education of whom Troy is justly proud.

She is assistant primary teacher and has endeared herself to the little folks of Troy. Her father, Owen W. Agee, died on the farm, near Troy.

Prof. Walter T. Hunt

The subject of this sketch was born in Labette County, near Parsons, and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Hunt, of Galesburg. He was educated in the country schools of his native county, the State Normal at Emporia, and the State Agricultural College at Manhattan. He taught three successful terms before coming to Troy in 1915, and is making a record in our schools as a manual training and agricultural teacher. He has a life certificate and is therefore exempt from the monotonous examinations.

Charles S. Hambleton

To Nevada, Iowa, belongs the distinction of producing one of the foremost educators of Kansas, Prof. C. S. Hambleton. He was married to Miss Lulu Neal and three very intelligent children have come to them, the Misses Lola, Irma and Ruth. He is a prominent educator in Doniphan County, and known throughout Kansas, on account of his popularity in conducting institutes during his summer vacations. He served as superintendent of schools at White Cloud for nine consecutive years. Has been at the head of the Troy schools since 1907, with the exception of one and a half years during which time he was engaged in the banking business at Oak Hill, Kansas. This gentleman is a believer in close application and devotes all his spare time in reading at home. He is much of a home man. His life is such that it influences greatly all the pupils coming in contact with him.

DR. A. E. CORDONIER

A Well-Known Physician Who Was Born on a Farm in Marion Township, Near the Farm Where His Father Was Born and to Which His Grandfather Came When He Took Up His Residence in Kansas in 1854—The Doctor's Success as a Physician—His Family.

The name of Cordonier has been linked with that of Kansas since the time of the Kansas-Nebraska act which threw open the lands embraced within the territory for public settlement. It was in that year, 1854, that Xovia Cordonier came to Kansas and cast his lot with the new territory and linked his life with its destinies. Xovia Cordonier, who was a Frenchman, took a government claim in Marion Township and with his wife settled there to live and grow up with the country, and rear their children.

One of the sons of Mr. and Mrs. Xovia Cordonier was James A. Cordonier, who was born on the farm in Marion Township, May 31, 1857, and who grew up there and attended school in that district. James Cordonier married Mary J. Collum, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Collum. To these parents were born two sons, A. E. Cordonier and Irving N. Cordonier, and three daughters, Eva May, now Mrs. Louis Richards; Ethel, now Mrs. Thomas Mawson, and Thelma, all living. James Cordonier died February 26, 1913. Mrs. Cordonier is still living at the old home with her son Irving and youngest daughter, Thelma, residing with her.

A. E. Cordonier, who is the subject of this sketch, was the eldest of the five children of Mr. and Mrs. James Cordonier, and was born on the farm in Marion Township, December 28, 1882. He grew up as a farmer's boy and by diligent study in the Cordonier District School Number 35, got a good start toward an education. From the country school he went to Wathena and there attended the high school. He made a record for himself as one of the best pupils in the school and graduated May 18, 1901, under the very excellent administration of Professor George W. Kinkaid. Determined to gain a higher education A. E. Cordonier entered the Medical Department of the University of Missouri at Columbia from which he graduated May 21, 1905. After graduating from the university he was highly honored by appointment as an assistant instructor in pathology in the university, a position which he filled during the years 1905-6 with credit to himself and the institution.

Leaving the university well equipped for life's battles this young man had opportunities to engage in teaching, or in the practice of medicine, which latter he chose, although it is most exacting of all professions, May 28, 1906, Dr. Cordonier came to Troy, eight and one-half miles from the old home place where he was born and began his professional career.

On November 16, 1910, Dr. Cordonier married Miss Lucy L. Kirby, daughter of Haran Kirby and Nancy C. Hargis Kirby, and a granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Hargis. Mrs. Cordonier is a native of Doniphan County and was born September 2, 1885. The doctor and his wife are among the popular young married couples of Troy and have an active part in the social affairs of the town. They have a large circle of acquaintances throughout Doniphan County and are held in high esteem by all.

Dr. Cordonier is proud of Kansas and of the fact that he was born in a state which has far outran many of the older states in the development of her institutions, in the making of her laws, and in producing men and women of great intellect and of high character. He has the same pride in his home county and in his home town, and is numbered among the progressive citizens who are ever and always striving to give the people the best there is.

Dr. Cordonier has achieved a notable success in his profession and in the ten years he has been in Troy he has built up a large practice which would be invied by any one in his profession.

Teachers' Normal Institute

In 1878 the Doniphan County teachers' normal institute was held during the month of August in Troy. Prof. H. D. McCarty was conductor and Prof. J. A. Lane assistant. ## Boy Drowned in Well

On Monday, about 5 o'clock, August 7, 1871, the citizens of Troy were startled with the report that a boy had fallen into a well on M. B. Brown's place. Repairing to that place the report was found to be true. Eddie Gossin, a lad age about fourteen, with other boys, was on Mr. Brown's premises and the hat of one of them fell in the well, which was about forty-five feet deep with six feet of water in it. Eddie Gossin got inside the curbing and pulling one of the buckets (there being two operated with a pulley overhead) up against the pulley, laid down to look in the well, holding on to the rope. While doing so the cross piece above, to which the pulley was fastened, broke, precipitating the lad, head and shoulders first, down into the well. Like most wells in Troy in the early seventies, it was walled up a few feet above the water, but no further, and it is supposed that the boy must have struck the top of the wall in his descent, for his femurs humuros were broken; his neck was also broken. Death must have ensued immediately. Charlie J. Jones, who is familiarly known throughout the United States as "Buffalo" Jones, was the first one to arrive after the alarm was given. He attempted to go down to bring the boy up, letting himself down by the rope while others held it at the top. When but a short distance from the top he ascertained that he could not hold on to the rope and involuntarily was precipitated to the bottom with great velocity, though he managed to keep himself in a perpendicular attitude by the aid of the rope. He was considerably bruised but no bones were broken. Eddie Gossin was buried Tuesday noon, August 8th.

Population of Troy 1500

The population of Troy is now conservatively estimated to be about 1,500 souls, and new people are coming to the town right along. While the town had been almost standing still for a number of years, the remarkable success of the fruit industry has caused an influx of people during the past five years. Many of the close observers in Troy are confident that not less than 500 people have been added to the population since 1910.

The increasing demand for good houses makes Troy a fine field for investment, and although there has been a number of new dwellings erected in the past few years, there is room and need for many more. Scarcely a day passes that some person does not call at the Chief office seeking information regarding vacant houses. This fact would confirm the general belief that at least fifty more new houses would be speedily occupied if some enterprising capitalist would take advantage of the situation and invest money putting up new dwellings.

Troy has all the advantages of good schools and churches possessed by towns twice its size. There are Presbyterian, Christian, Methodist, Baptist, Catholic and two colored churches, an A. M. E. and a Baptist, in the town, and a good colored school building, besides a grammar and high school.

There are many fine residences in Troy which compare in elegance with the homes of millionaires in some of the metropolitan cities of the country. Among them may be mentioned the homes of John S. Norman, Dr. W. B. Campbell, Charles V. Norman, Clarence M. Finley and Mrs. Anna Strong.

Homes From Goss Quarry

The farm of the late Henry F. Goss, now owned by his son, James Goss, one and one-half miles north of Troy, played an important part in the building of the town. The greater part of the stones used for the foundations of the homes, business houses and churches in Troy, as the old settlers will recall, came from the farm mentioned. The stone of which the county jail is built also came from this quarry. The proximity of a quarry was of considerable value to Troy in those days. The newcomers to Troy were usually in a hurry to occupy their homes and the comparative short haul needed to bring the foundation rock was considerable of a time saver.

Mrs. Fisher Rice was born in Morgan County, Missouri, Nov. 25, 1839, and died at her daughter's, Mrs. James Goss, two miles north of Troy, Jan. 18, 1914. Her oldest daughter, Susan, wife of Green B. Taylor, died April 15, 1899, and her husband, Fisher Rice, died at the same place.

Jack Schall, who operated The Chief on a lease for a while, shortly after the death of Sol Miller, and who had been running the Journal at Dodge City for four or five years, sold his plant on Feb. 10, 1914, to C. T. Warren of Pratt.

Edward R. Reynolds, a bachelor who lived three miles north of Troy, died at his home Wednesday evening, May 13, 1914, of pneumonia. The body was taken to Watertown, New York, for burial.

The Doniphan County Teachers' Association met in 1914 and the crowd assembled on the east side of the court house, where the accompanying photograph was taken. Some well-known pedagogues are shown whose faces are not only familiar in Doniphan County, but throughout the State of Kansas.

Horace Wright, one of the pioneers of the early days of Troy, died at his home in this city Wednesday morning, Oct. 14, 1914, from a stroke of apoplexy. He was born in Albany, New York, and was married there on Nov. 17, 1853, coming with his wife to Troy fifty-four years before his death. His wife died June 25, 1914.

He was a brother to the celebrated William and Charles Mayo, of Rochester, Minnesota, who have the reputation of being the best surgeons in the United States.

On Friday, Feb. 13, 1894, A. D. Jones came to Troy and bought the hardware business of J. B. Byers, and in December, 1914, after more than eighteen years in business, moved into a fine new building just one door south of the old location. This moving from the old building into the new store building marked an epoch in the business history of Troy.

The Troy Colored School

The Liberal Spirit of the People of the County Seat Is Reflected in the Splendid School Provided for the Negro Children—A Substantial Brick Structure Erected in Fall of 1899 at a Cost of Over $3,000.

In providing the best buildings, the best equipments and the best teachers, for the education of the youth of Doniphan County, and particularly of the city of Troy, the public school officials have not neglected the Negro children. In fact there has been no discrimination, and the Negro children have received their proportional share of school improvements and school expenditures.

This fact may be ascribed to a belief on the part of our public spirited people that education pays larger dividends in citizenship than any other investment for the public good. The people of Troy believe the Negro children should have an equal chance with the white children in educational advantages and that in no better way can these children be fitted for industrious lives and good citizenship.

The Troy Colored School Building, Situated in East Troy.

Accordingly the school authorities of Troy have pursued a policy of liberality, as before indicated, in the making of school improvements. The school building erected for the colored children is evidence of this. It is a brick structure, neatly and substantially built and of good appearance. It is in East Troy and occupies a space 26x40 feet and two stories in height. It is equipped with all of those conveniences which are to be found in any modern school building and which aid in the carrying on of the educational work prescribed by our admirable system of schools in Kansas. To say that the colored people of the city are proud of their school is only putting it mildly. They send their children to it to be educated according to the high standards, for these colored people of Troy are as firm believers in education as are any of our citizens.

The members of the board under which this building was erected were John S. Norman, president of the First National Bank; John J. Baker, lawyer, and Albert R. Graves, now of Selma, California, all progressive citizens and interested in the welfare of the children growing up in Troy.

There is an enrollment of thirty-eight pupils of this colored school, and they are receiving instruction under the best corps of Negro teachers the board can employ. Since the school was opened there have been five teachers employed there, as follows:

1900-1905—Lillie M. Schumache.
1905-1907—Martha Johnson.
1907-1908—Cleota Holland.
1908-1912—Lulu Butcher.
1912-1916—Elsie E. Lair.

In any mention of the school building and equipment in Troy for the Negro children, a word should be said about the colored families of our city. The majority of them are of the class of people in whom there is a desire for knowledge; rather it is just as strong a desire among them as it is among the white people, and it stands to reason that their children should have the same advantages and opportunities for the gratification of these ambitious desires.

Not only do the Negro parents realize it, but it is the common belief of the colored children of Troy that they need the assistance of an education in their daily work that they may rise to the opportunities for bettering their condition and for becoming the kind of men and women who reflect credit on the community in which they live.

Thus it is with no small degree of pride that we give mention to this school for colored children in Troy, and we bespeak for the board the best efforts they can put forth to give these children the kind of education that will fit them for useful and honorable careers.

DANIEL B. MANSFIELD

Industrious, Hard Working Doniphan County Farmer Who Moved With Family to Colorado, Is Prominent in New Home.

Daniel B. Mansfield will be recalled by many who are now residents of Doniphan County, as an industrious, steady worker, who carved his own way to his present success, through the exercise of his God-given talents. He was born at Forbes Station, Mo., and had none of the opportunities afforded other boys of the times. His parents, while highly respected and esteemed in the community, were unable to give him the education he desired, and the young man was forced to go to work on a farm in order to earn his living. All of his early education, meager as it was, came from the old-fashioned country school house district No. 60, and when scarcely more than fifteen years of age he had to shift for himself.

While in Doniphan County, during his boyhood days, he made a reputation for honesty, integrity and hard work. He was an ardent worker for every propaganda that went to make up a better town in which to live, when he got married; and as a farmer in Colorado he has always been progressive, seeking to improve the soil which he occupies instead of destroying it, after getting all that it will yield. A few years ago, after a long life of hard toil and struggle, he succeeded in obtaining what is now one of the finest pieces of land in Cheyenne County, Kansas, and moved to a farm near the state line, not very far from St. Francis, Kan., where all of his mail is received.

Mr. Mansfield was married in Burlington, Colo., and in his wife has a devoted help-meet who has been at his side during their long and happy life. To them have been born the following children, near Hale in Yuma, Colo.: Jessie May, June 16, 1890; Mary Frances, April 5, 1892; Vernis Alice, May 28, 1894; Richard Shelton, June 16, 1895; Lula Vernie, Jan. 24, 1898; Charles Elbridge, May 24, 1900; Nola Grace, June 25, 1902; Jasper Glen, Nov. 7, 1906; Eliza Jane, March 7, 1909; Anna Florence, April 5, 1911. Mr. Mansfield can say of himself that he is a self-made man and one of whom Teddy Roosevelt can truly say, honors the community in which he lives. There will be no race suicide in the Mansfield family if his posterity emulates their sire.

Troy narrowly escaped being destroyed by fire on Monday, April 13, 1885. Flames were discovered in the N. B. Woods building, between Boder's Bank and Van Buskirk's store shortly after noon. They were extinguished after a hard fight. The fire was supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

Memories of an Old School Teacher

Pedagogue of 1864 in the Old Petersburg District Gives Reminiscences of Early Days in the Crude Schoolhouse Made of Rough Lumber—Seats for the Pupils Were Made From the First Slab Cut From the Log, and Had No Backs—Desks Were Placed Against the Side of the House With the Scholars Facing the Wall—No Ceiling and No Plaster—Huge Stove Was Largest Piece of Furniture in the Room.

The difference between present school accommodations and those of the early days of Doniphan County, are so pronounced that it is doubtful if modern children would learn anything if they were compelled to undergo the discomforts suffered by their parents. Nowadays school children must have steam heat and varnished desks, polished chairs, and all manner of toilet incidentals. The wonder is what they would do in the old log school house with rough slabs of logs for seats, no ceiling to the room, and the walls all unplastered. I shall endeavor to give a description of old-time school conditions in Doniphan County and other places where I taught. My first Kansas experience was in the old Petersburg school, fourteen miles southeast of Troy, and in other Doniphan County schools afterward.

My very first experience in teaching was in the state of Ohio. I received the paltry sum of $20 per month for twenty-two days, and that was considered the average price those days. The next year, a board whose members were noted for their liberality, paid me $24 per month, or $1 per day—munificent sum, indeed. After teaching three years in Ohio, I decided to go West and follow the advice of Horace Greeley, then commonly quoted by every school boy: "Young man, go West, and grow up with the country."

On August 20, 1864, I arrived at St. Joseph, which was then merely a struggling trading post, and crossed the river in a ferryboat, landing in Elwood, very much of a town at that time, and far ahead of her Missouri sister, St. Joseph. It did not take long to get to Petersburg in Doniphan County, about eight or ten miles southwest of St. Joseph. I have lived in this county ever since. That was my first visit to Kansas, and I can vividly recall the strangeness of the scene and the difference in those times and modern days.

After the necessary preliminaries were over, such as making myself known to influential people and putting in my application and stating my qualifications, I was eventually hired to teach in the Petersburg district. The school board engaged me to teach for the term, agreeing to pay me $40 per month. The wages were fair enough for the time, but in order to appreciate the surroundings, I will fully describe my school. The Petersburg school was a new house, about 20x26 feet in dimensions. It was constructed of cottonwood and sycamore lumber, fresh from the sawmill in Petersburg. The shingles were of cottonwood, made with a fro. The floor was of sycamore planks. The seats were made of the first slab cut from the log, and had holes bored in them, where legs, or rather supports, were stuck in. They had no backs. The writing desks were just as crude, being fastened permanently against the side of the house, so that when the scholar was writing, his back was toward the teacher.

The stove was an old-time box affair, with a large round drum on it. It was the most pretenious piece of furniture in the room, and looked very much like the stove in Henry Kotch's wagon shop today. It would take in a four-foot cordwood stick without cutting it in two, and it is opportune to say in this connection that the boys were expected to prepare the wood for use, and there was always a neat woodpile near the stove. Then there was the inevitable wooden bucket of water with a tin dipper handy, and it was alarming the amount of water some of those children consumed. They maneuvered for any excuse to leave their seats. Some of the restless boys even welcomed a chance to stand with their face in a corner, it seemed to me.

The walls of the building were weather-boarded with native cottonwood lumber, but there was no plaster anywhere. The school house was situated between two bluffs, one on the east, and the other on the west, both covered with a dense growth of large forest timber. This fact made it appear as though the sun set unusually early in the evening, and on cloudy days I would have to dismiss school very early as, of course, we were not furnished with lighting facilities of any kind.

I lost no time in starting, and everything was soon running smoothly. At the end of two weeks, I had enrolled 125 pupils of all sizes and ages, from five to twenty-one years old. We had all kinds of text-books. Some had been used in different states, and one or two had even come from a foreign country. Imagine a modern teacher's chagrin at such a predicament! After I had been employed two weeks, I notified the school board to come on Monday morning and look over the school and see how I was progressing. They were on hand very early. Some of the board members thought I had been having trouble with some of the older scholars, but such was not the case. Evereything was very pleasant, but the school board, unable to believe their own eyes, stayed until after recess anyhow. They had never been called upon before, except in case of trouble. I simply wanted them to see that the children were learning, and that relations between myself and my pupils were harmonious. The board was evidently satisfied, as they increased my pay from $40 to $65 per mouth. Then I hired a young man to assist me for the balance of the term. His name was John Searcy.

Capt. Joseph Randolph was one of the directors. Many of the old settlers will remember him. John Hays was one of my scholars. Several of the Curtis family, brothers and sisters of Ben Curtis, were among my pupils. John Curtis, Jr., was one of my pupils. Many Doniphan County residents are well acquainted with him, as he still lives and is in excellent health. I will say for John, Jr., that he learned geography and grammar the quickest of any scholar I had in school. His memory was phenomenal. He was an expert in geography, if ever there was one, and he always retained a lesson once learned. His mind was remarkably quick and retentive and whenever he got anything in his head, it was sure to stay there.

We had in the school a full set of outline maps, about eight or ten feet square, that reached around two sides of the house, and we taught by singing. This peculiar stipulation was a clause in my contract with the school board, and such a time as we had with those singing lessons! The old camp-meeting singing and shouting was not to be compared with the noise we made when we fairly got warmed up, singing "Uncle Sam."

The song called "Uncle Sam" was invariably sung at the wind-up of each lesson. Many of the present-day people have heard and sung this song, but for the benefit of the younger generation, I quote herewith one verse and the chorus:

"Of all the mighty nations in the East
or in the West,
The glorious Yankee nation is the wisest and the best.
We have room for all creation, and our banners are unfurled
With a general invitation to the people of the world.

Chorus:
"Then come along, come along, make no delay;
Come from every nation, come from every way.
Our lands they are broad enough,
don't you have alarm,
For Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm."

In my contract with the school board, I was to give thirteen of these lessons extra at night, but the crowds which came practically smothered us for room. They would come from all directions, many of them old folks, who wanted to take in the rousing song, so I was obliged to change the program to every Friday afternoon. I want to say this about singing geography: A child that learns in that way hardly ever forgets. It has been my experience that a person taught by this method can point the subject out on the map and repeat it for years afterward without refreshing the memory.

Two years after that I went back and taught another term in the Petersburg district. The school board did not see their way clear to pay me $65 a month this time, as the school was not more than half as large as during my first term there. Many of the families had moved away, and a great many children had grown to manhood and womanhood, so I accepted the school at the reduced figure of $50 per month.

In the winter of 1866-1867, I taught one term in the Climax District, south of Troy, and also two terms in the Klipple District. My last school was taught when D. D. Rose was superintendent.

My school-teaching days are all pleasant memories to me now, and I spend many pleasant hours in meditation over the past. I extend to all present-day teachers wishes for much success and pleasure in their teaching.

John P. Kent Killed

On Tuesday, Jan. 29, 1895, John P. Kent, son of Joseph Kent, and a brother of Ham D. Kent, was accidentally killed. He was on horseback, when the horse which he was riding fell, and the pommel of the saddle pierced his abdomen. His injuries were so serious that he died almost instantly. Mr. Kent was one of the good young farmers in Doniphan County, and was driving cattle at the time he met his untimely death.

William F. Horn

William F. Horn was born "'way back East" in Green County, Pennsylvania, on September 17, 1870. He emigrated to Doniphan County, Kansas, at the tender age of ten years, so naturally, his early impressions and education were received at the last named place. He was taught the rudiments of culture in the country schools, and completed his education at Campbell University, Holton, Kansas, where he qualified himself for a school teacher. The efficiency of his service and the esteem in which he was held is demonstrated by the fact that he taught in Doniphan and Jackson counties for eleven years consecutively. These years of experience equipped him with extraordinary executive ability, and a keen perception of human nature, which later reaped a reward in high offices which he held. For two years he held the position of deputy street commissioner of Topeka, where his careful and painstaking work gained the approval of the people. During the the administration of Gov. W. E. Stanley, he served as clerk at the state hospital in Topeka, and his refined and delightful manner gained him warm friends. A little later he represented the United Press of New Zealand, and in this position his worth was recognized to the extent that he was appointed American representative of the New Zealand government. Mr. Horn is a man of sterling character and a most desirable citizen. His family consists of a good wife and four children, as follows: May Blanch, Norman E., Gordon A. and Dorothy.

Clarence N. Price

As proof that Troy boys are making good in every line of endeavor, there is Clarence N. Price, a most successful salesman for the Inter-City Grocery Co., of Kansas City, Mo. He was born in Troy, June 7, 1868, and attended the public schools here, taking a course in the high schools. In 1898 he went to Pittsburgh, and as evidence of the fact that he succeeded there, we cite the record that he was its mayor from 1901 to 1905, and was elected clerk of the district court in 1906. In this position, Mr. Price gave such general satisfaction and was so courteous in his treatment to all who came in contact with him that he served two terms. Another honor that was showered upon him was his selection as chairman of the Third Congressional District, a place he has held successfully for the last twelve years. On Feb. 25, 1896, Mr. Price was married to Miss Henrietta Geis. She was born in Warren, Pa., Oct. 6, 1876. Mr. Price's mother is now living in Long Beach, Cal. His sister, Mrs. Paul Hudson, is in the City of Mexico, and another sister, Mrs. T. G. Wear, is in Topeka. She is the reference librarian of the Kansas State Library.

The two horse daily mail began running between Troy and Oregon on Wednesday, Sept. 23, 1857.

Why Troy Is a Desirable Place in Which to Live

Its Citizenship Is of the Highest Class—Its School System Ideal—Its Moral Influence Good.

Troy, the county seat of Doniphan County, is one of Kansas' most progressive towns, and, as a residence city, possesses many attractions and advantages. Elsewhere in this issue we have enumerated many of the features that characterize Troy, having devoted considerable space to a general description, giving special attention to its schools, churches, mercantile establishments, residences, railroad facilities, and its vantage point as a distributing center for a large, prosperous and growing section of Kansas.

However, we cannot refrain from further emphasis of the fact that, as a residence town, Troy is entitled to consideration for several reasons.

It rejoices in a climate that is unsurpassed—a climate that constantly reminds us of the joy of living; a climate that makes the maturing of abundant crops an unfailing annual event, assuring prosperity to the grower and the success of all commercial endeavor; a climate that preserves good health and restores this same priceless possession to those who have lost it in other less favored regions; withal, a climate that makes life a comfort and achievement doubly gratifying.

While not a city of large population, it is nevertheless as progressive as possesses, with few exceptions, all the modern conveniences that tend to make our worldly existence more pleasant and profitable.

Its twenty-four hour lighting system, which is furnished by Atchison, is adequate in every way, and enables the perfect illumination of business houses, residences and streets.

Every section of the town is reached by cement sidewalks, which in all amount to several miles. Its streets are well surfaced, and afford easy and comfortable travel at all times. They are attractively laid out and are maintained in excellent condition.

Of its schools, we have treated at length in another article, but further brief discussion is not unwarranted, for the reason that the Doniphan County school system merits wide and special comment, inasmuch as it is undoubtedly one of the most admirably planned, most complete and most efficient in the entire country, comprising every branch of education and instruction from the single-grade rural school, to a high school that is little short of the college, affording, as it does, not only the training characterizing the ordinary high school, but maintaining branches that prepare young men and women for immediate participation in life's work, whether of the trades, in scientific and profitable farming, in the arts and crafts or other occupations. A visit to the domestic science department of the Troy high school, which is in charge of Miss Canfield, will convince the most skeptical that the school is well equipped for that line of work. Furthermore, the school is for the whole county, contemplating not only the education of our boys and girls, but also the needs of those who have left their school days far behind. It extends its services to everyone desiring them, and undertakes, through its various departments, to aid in the advancement of the county's commercial, industrial and social success. Were nothing else offered, those who have boys and girls to educate would find the advantages and benefits of the schools sufficient to make residenceship in Troy profitable and gratifying.

Nearly every church denomination has a representation in Troy, and some of the church edifices are among the most handsome and completely appointed in the state. The town has never neglected the welfare of the church, and the church has never neglected the welfare of the town.

Its citizenship is of the highest class. Many of its citizens were among the pioneers of the state and have beheld and aided in the transformation of the raw prairie land, not a great many years since the home of the Indian and tramping ground of the buffalo, into the present scenes, marked by peace and plenty. Charley J. Jones, the celebrated buffalo hunter, who is known the world over as "Buffalo Jones," formerly resided in Troy, and is probably the only living person today who killed the bison in Doniphan County.

The younger generation is of the same hardy, loyal and determined stock, and where their fathers conquered the Red Men, the isolation of the prairie and the obstacles that confronted the settlement of a new land, they are conquering other less dangerous but just as important conditions.

Troy is a moral town—not temporarily or as a result of a spasdomic reform wave, but because it was so at its inception and its people have continued to maintain its unusual high standard. Any influence that threatened corruption or stain was immediately eliminated. It was one of the first towns in the state to dispose of the saloon, immediately after the election of John P. St. John as governor, and, notwithstanding the smug arguments of the liquor interests, has prospered continually, and is today the center of more wealth and a larger and more profitable volume of business than any other town in the state, considering population. The fruit business alone amounts to several hundred thousand dollars per year.

The environment for the rearing of children is exceptionally ideal, and all things considered, Troy is a splendid town in which to live, work and play.

Edwin Guion

A New Yorker Who Came to Kansas Sixty Years Ago and Won Success at Farming—His Death Resulted From a Fall—A Victim of Several Accidents.

Among the pioneers of territorial Kansas there are few whose coming ante-dates that of Edwin Guion, who was a native of New York state. When a young man of twenty-three he came out into the wild and untamed region that is now the finest farming section to be found in the Missouri valley, landing in Doniphan County in the year 1855. In 1867 he became the owner of 160 acres of land one and one-half miles northeast of Troy on which he resided until his death, July 5, 1905.

Mr. Guion was a good neighbor, kind-hearted and generous. He was a good farmer and his quarter section was one of the best in the country. He kept it in splendid condition at all times and in this particular he made his influence felt by his neighbors, and they respected him for it. He was successful in everything he undertook and he was free with his advice to others, for he was desirous of seeing others succeed as well as himself, a quality which is too rarely found in the successful men of this modern workaday world.

Mr. Guion was the victim of a series of calamities which caused him great suffering in the last years of his life. Feb. 14, 1902, after he had reached the age of sixty-nine, he was gored by a young bull, but not dangerously injured. A second time, on Nov. 23, 1904, he was gored, but after several months was able to walk around his farm. At last on June 29, 1905, he fell down a cellar stairway and was injured so seriously he died July 5 of that year. His attendants in those days were his hired men, Ren Monroe and Charles Neeland, who bestowed upon him every needed care.

Mr. Guion was a valuable citizen in the community and his death was sincerely mourned.

Dr. R. S. Dinsmore and Dr. W. B. Campbell administered the necessary treatment, but despite their efforts, he could not be relieved of his injuries. He was the father of two sons and three daughters; James, of St. Joseph; William, who resides on a part of the old home; Laura, now Mrs. Rudebaugh of Denton; Mary, now Mrs. W. S. Nicholson who occupies the old home and Bertha, now Mrs. Goodale of New York.

Early Troy Schools

William Morehead Gives Some Interesting Data of First Institutions of Learning.

(By William S. Morehead.)

I have been asked to give some reminiscences of the early schools of Troy. Although it is now a half century or more since the first institution of learning was established here, I was a pupil and it does not seem so very long ago. The early schools, however, were so much different than those of today. We had no physics, physiology, civics, political economy or domestic science in those days. In fact I doubt very much if anyone knew what they were. The principal subjects were the three "R's": Readin' 'ritin' and 'rithmetic. Once a boy or girl mastered those elementary branches and he or she was considered almost perfectly educated. Nothing further was needed. In fact, a half century ago, not more than one boy or girl out of fifty ever fully completed the common ordinary graded course. Also school did not extend over a period of nine months as it does now. It generally began sometime in November, after the harvest was finished and was dismissed sometime in March or April. Thus again the boy or girl of today has a great advantage over his predecessors of an earlier generation.

I came to Troy in 1857, when I was only four years old. The first school was taught by Mrs. Fannie L. Soper in her home at the north end of the block where her present residence is located. If I am correct, and I believe I am, Mrs. John Zimmerman and I are the only ones in Troy at this time who were her pupils. While this was classed as a public school it was not properly such, as it was more in the nature of a private institution. What might be termed the first real public school was in a building near James Butler's residence in southeast Troy.

I cannot remember who the teacher was, but it was a typical "deestrick" hall of learning. There were low wooden benches that cramped the knees and legs of the older boys and girls and the usual raised rostrum and desk behind which sat the instructor. In our present highly systemized schools, the pupils undergo few if any hardships. Then the teacher was a firm and frequent believer in that old maxim, spare the rod and spoil the child—and very few children were spoiled. They did not whip on the flat of the hand either, but used a birch switch where it was most effective then and doubtless would be now, but it has long since gone out of usage.

The third school was established in Leland's building down where Um Lyons now has a boarding house, one block north of the postoffice. The fourth was near Edward Doughty's home and the fifth on the corner where George H. Burkhalter has his home now. The sixth school was established on the present location of Edward A. Sinclair's drug store and the seventh was out where John C. Devereaux lives.

The eighth was the first school house built by the city and was constructed in 1868. I cannot remember the name of this first school teacher, but I know it was a man. He was considered to be a hard master, too. It was built of pine boards and hastily put together with the result that in the winter, most of the pupils were concerned primarily with keeping warm and not with getting their lessons. The building stood on the site where Samuel Blauser now has his home. There were no desks, but long rows of benches and a little above them a sort of a bar on which the books were placed. The pupils recited from their seats and only four subjects were taught—reading, writing, arithmetic and spelling. There were frequent spelling bees in those days.

The ninth school, whose history is interwoven with the present building, was erected on the site where the high school now stands, and was somewhat more modern. I believe it had the first blackboards in this section of the country. Pencil and paper, however, were almost unheard of and slates were in general use. I can remember how I used to carry mine under my arm to and from my parents' home and doubtless many others here in Troy have the same recollection.

This is as far as I can go with the history of the local schools, and it has not been so very complete. I want to insert a word, however, in connection with the present system. There is no earthly reason why any young boy or girl cannot obtain a fine education today. Look at the opportunities they have. There are fine, modern buildings and the best of instructors. The county educational officials take care of that. In the old days, some of the teachers did not know much more than the pupils, except in knowledge of using the birch bark. I believe our present system is efficient. It may have some faults, but when we look back fifty years and compare the schools of then with those of today, we have every reason to congratulate ourselves on the remarkable progress we have made along educational lines.

Frank I. Hargis

Frank I. Hargis, who was born in Kansas, near the Doniphan County line, November 14, 1855, has been a resident of Doniphan County since a small boy. His wife, Mrs. Sarah E. Kirby Hargis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kirby, was born on the farm south of Troy, June 1, 1857.

Troy Catholic Church

The lot on which the Troy Catholic church now stands, was deeded on April 8, 1882, to Louis M. Fink, then bishop, by John Frank Kotsch and Mary A. Kotsch. Joseph F. Hampson, who was register of deeds at that time, recorded the sale.

Mrs. Fannie Soper Tells of the First Church in Troy.

The members of the Congregational faith were the first sect of any kind to organize a church in Troy. The exact date cannot be ascertained, but it is known to be in the late '50s, some time before the breaking out of the Civil War.

The missionary preacher who was instrumental in organizing the church was Rev. J. C. Johnson, who is at present living in Washington, D. C. Reverend Mr. Johnson was also the first pastor.

The church was not a success as a religious institution, because of the fact that the Southern residents of Troy at the time were bitterly opposed to the Congregationalists on account of the firm stand taken by that denomination against slavery.

It has often been disputed whether the leading element in Troy at the time of the organization of the church were slave-holders, or just plain Southern sympathizers. But the fact remains that they refused financial support to the church, and although it ran along for a while the project was abandoned and a Presbyterian church organized.

Edward A. Sinclair

A Pioneer Druggist of Troy Who Came From Michigan to Doniphan County in the Early Days and Established a Business That Is Now Conducted By His Son, Edwin A. Sinclair, One of Our Best Citizens and Most Prosperous Business Men.

As the pioneer farmers came out to Kansas, settled on the lands and devoted years of patient labor to lay a sure foundation for their sons, so it is with many of our mercantile establishments—the pioneers, or founders, devoting years of patient effort toward building up a substantial trade their sons who were to follow in their footsteps. Among such pioneers of business we find no more striking illustration than that of D. C. Sinclair, who was the founder of the old and established drug store in Troy that is now conducted by his son, Edwin A. Sinclair, Jr.

The pioneer D. C. Sinclair was a native of Michigan, born in the fine old educational town of Adrian on May 25, 1849. His wife, who was Miss Sarah Elizabeth Holloway before their marriage in that place, also was born in Adrian. They came out to Kansas in the year 1872, with high hopes and great expectations, and located in Troy, here to establish a home for the rest of their lives.

Mr. Sinclair had received a fine education in his native town and was in every way fitted for the profession of a druggist and dispenser of medicines. He started a drug store in Troy in 1872, and by his close application to business and his reliability and fine character, he built up a substantial trade among our people. He conducted this store up to the time of his death, which occurred January 8, 1911. Mrs. Sinclair died May 24, 1895. They were both honored as among our fine people, leaving behind them a record of noble service and good deeds.

Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair were the parents of a son, Edward A. Sinclair, and Lulu B. Sinclair, now the wife of A. B. Zimmerman.

The son, Edward A. Sinclair, was born in Troy November 4, 1881. He was educated in the public schools of Troy, graduating in 1900. Desiring to succeed his father in business, this young man entered the School of Pharmacy at the University of Kansas in the fall of 1900. He spent two years there on his course in pharmacy, and at the close of his second college year he entered his father's drug store in Troy. He was thoroughly qualified for his profession and was recognized by the medical profession, and the people as well, as a most reliable and dependable man to fill prescriptions or compound medicines. He continued in the store, and when his father died he became sole owner of the store and an established trade of which any druggist could feel proud. Moreover, he had by hard study and close application to business, so qualified himself for so responsible a position that he might feel himself worthy to take up the lifework of his father.

Edward A. Sinclair now owns the best drug store in northeastern Kansas. He owns the building and also the adjoining building on the south, which he recently remodeled, putting in a new front which is the finest in Troy. His drug store is beautifully furnished and his large stock of drugs, medicines and all that goes with a first class store of its kind, are neatly and attractively arranged, making it an inviting place and one of the most popular stores in Troy. Mr. Sinclair is proud of the people of Troy and vicinity, and he is proud of the confidence they have in him, for he has retained the many old customers who traded there in the many years it was owned and conducted by his father. His ability recognized, and his popularity established, he is constantly adding new customers.

There are few men in the community who are more universally respected than Edward A. Sinclair, the Troy druggist, and the people are proud to own him as one of their citizens.

Sinclair is a believer in Kansas, as his honored father believed in the state. He stands for the high ideals established by the founders of the state and continued by succeeding generations down to the present time—the things that are keeping Kansas in the forefront in so many things that help to make it the best state in the Union in which to live, and in which to prosper and be happy. There are no better citizens of Kansas than Edward A. Sinclair, Troy's leading druggist.

DONIPHAN COUNTY COURT HOUSE

Present Structure in Troy Cost $50,000—Cy Leland Found Way for Its Erection Without Increasing County's Bonded Indebtedness, Which Was $480,000.00—When Early Court House Burned More Votes Than Voters at County Seat Election—Won By Wathena, but Troy Favored in Contest Under Old Act—County Records Safe.

Unusual and interesting features are connected with the seat of justice in Doniphan County from the time court was held in the rude structure of the early 50's to the time the present $50,000 court house was erected in Troy during the years 1905 and 1906. An election, to settle its relocation in one of the several towns offering inducements after the early building was burned in Troy in 1867, was won by Wathena. However, Troy contested the result and it was discovered that the number of votes cast were more than equal to the number of voters in the country. The controvery also developed the fact that the site for the court house could not be changed to another town, as a special act of May 20, 1824, under the Monroe administration every county in the states and territories of the United States was given a tract 300 feet square for a court house. Troy was given the location by the supreme court after a long drawn out legal conflict.

The first court house of Doniphan County was built on the north side of the court house square. Part of the building was later used as a hotel which was known as the Higby House. The court house erected in 1858 was built on the east side of the walk which leads to the present court house. It was known as "the monstrosity of human architecture."

This building burned on March 12, 1867. Hardly were the ashes of the burned court house cold, before other towns in the county began to make an effort to secure its re-location. These other places offered inducements of lots, building sites and bonuses, as the citizens realized the advantage of living in the county seat. Wathena was especially active in this matter Finally a general county election was called to settle the affair and Wathena won.

Troy contested and it was discovered that more votes had been cast in the election than there were voters in the county.

A long drawn out legal battle ensued and after several months the supreme court decided that the court house should be located in Troy. Meanwhile another structure was built during the yeras 1867-1868 on the site of the present building. James Dryden, a brother-in-law to S. S. Allen, the groceryman of St. Joseph, who owned a farm where D. M. Blevins now lives, two miles east of Troy, did the work. When the county seat questions were settled the rival towns forgot their animosities and the storm-charged atmosphere cleared.

The building erected by Mr. Dryden was substantial, but small, but answereed the purpose for many years. During the passing of time the county grew. From the East settlers came to Doniphan County, and from England and from sunny France. Farms were bought and sold by the score, lots in the different towns changed hands. Every year hundreds of dollars of taxes were paid in. People multiplied and prospered

Of course all transfers of properties and payment of taxes were recorded in the county books, as well as other data. The loss of this data would have been almost irreparable, and this thought was often on the minds of those who recorded property transfers, deeds, etc. Doniphan County people, many of them remembered that the other court house had burned. They did not feel that those records were safe. Some of the vaults then were not considered fireproof, and some offices had no vaults.

As the years went by at almost any gathering of men came talk of the need for a new court house. On the other hand a burden had fastened itself on the county like the old man of the sea fastened himself to the shoulders of Sinbad the sailor of the Arabian Nights tales. This burden was the county's bonded indebtedness of $481,000, incurred by securing the railroads through the county in the early days. In those times, old settlers will recall how eagerly inducements were offered railroads. The county needed iron roads for upbuilding of its communities. There was not much hesitancy then in voting bonds.

Thus when a new court house was needed, and its necessity was generally felt, the public was haunted by the fear of losing the records by fire and also the weight of additional county debt. Perhaps no one realized the difficulty of the situation more than Cy Leland. Mr. Leland was one of the best known politicians and legislature members in Kansas. He was national committeeman from Kansas for sixteen years. He has always been intensely interested in all the affairs of his constituents, and the court house problem was an important one. Mr. Leland goes after difficult problems and works out the solutions with the zeal of a dog digging up a bone. He has had considerable experience in legislative matters and he ferreted out the key to the best method of handling the situation.

This pioneer was a member of the Kansas legislature in 1904. After considerable effort and persistence he secured the passage of an act enabling the commissioners of Doniphan County to make a special levy of three mills for the proposed new court house. The levy was to be paid in equal installments in three years. It required only a comparatively small addition to the taxes. Within the three years the levy was raised and the farmers did not feel the extra taxes and are glad that such a measure was taken.

As a result Doniphan County has a court house which is one of the best in the state of Kansas. The building cost $50,000, but is considered equal to many court houses costing nearly twice that sum. The old building was sold to Joe Hayton and R. M. Steel for $150, and, according to conditions, they removed it within a certain time.

As soon as the legislature empowered the county commissioners to take the action described, bids for the contracts began to pour in from all over the state. Many estimates differed only a few dollars.

Finally the contract was awarded to J. H. Wagonknecht of Wathena, whose bid was $42,000. The amount was considered fair to all concerned, and Mr. Wagonknecht hoped to make a reasonable profit from the undertaking. However, the work required a longer time than he had expected, and he lost money, so the county saved considerable by employment a home man. All Doniphan County people are proud of the handsome building.

The court house is four stories. The best of brick and stone was used. The workmanship of the building is thorough. Although Mr. Wagonknecht may not have made money on it, the building is a monument to him, and in a practical way the erection has benefited him in the advertisement it has been to him as a contractor.

Nearly a year was required for its completion. As the winter of 1906 passed, it neared completion. By spring much of the interior carpenter work was finished and as the weeks passed plans were made for its dedication on July 4 of that year. This plan was carried out.

The Fourth of July, 1906, will be long remembered by those who were in Troy on that occasion. One of the largest crowds ever at a Fourth of July celebration were present, and with impressive and appropriate addresses the new court house was dedicated.

The next day, July 5, the officials moved in, and the regular routines of law and equity began in the new building. Wills were probated, marriage certificates were issued, divorces were granted, persons were sued, criminals tried and convicted, and the registration of deeds and taxes made.

Now, no one need to lose sleep for fear of these records being destroyed by fire. The building is modern throughout and the vaults in which the big books of the county clerk and register of deeds and other invaluable documents are kept, are absolutely fireproof. The court rooms, and the rooms used by the county officials are large enough for comfort and are nicely furnished.

In the perfect safety assured public records by the expenditure for the new court house, the people of Doniphan County feel more than repaid for the extra taxes during the three years that the levy was made, and are grateful to Mr. Leland for his ingenuity in solving the problem. The county officials holding office when the new building was dedicated were as follows: District judge, William I. Stuart; county attorney, S. M. Brewster; county clerk Leonard Roberts; district clerk, George W. Stranahan; sheriff, Henry W. Ramsey; register of deeds, Will D. Kiehnoff; treasurer, R. H. Larzelere; probate judge, W. H. H. Curtis; surveyor, Frank P. Marsh; coroner, R. S. Dinsmore; county commissioners. first district Nick L. Nelson, second district A. B. Symms, third district Frank H. Drosselmeier.

Professor Charles Marble

The Well Known Educator and Teacher in the Troy High School —A Teacher in Doniphan County for Twenty-Three Years and Manager of Fruit-Growers' Association at Blair.

Prof. Charles Marble, who holds the position of instructor in the Troy High school, and also secretary and manager of the Blair Fruit-Growers' Association, is a valued and useful citizen who would be an honor to any community. His work as an educator, which has placed him among the best school men of the state, has influenced the lives of the youth of Troy and vicinity and has counted for higher standards of intelligence and citizenship; while, in the position of secretary and manager of fruit-growers' associations, he has accomplished great things in systematizing the growing and marketing of fruit, and in this way has helped to make that industry profitable to the members of the association employing him. Mr. Marble's career in Doniphan County shows us that a man who is a great success as a school teacher, may also be equally as successful as a practical business man and community booster, if he applies himself to his work and possesses the quality of "pep" that makes things move according to his will.

This versatile man is a son of the late Charles Marble, Sr., and was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, December 14, 1871. The Marble family, of good old German stock, moved to Doniphan County when the educator of today was a boy of tender years, and from the day of their arrival to the present the Marbles have been a power for good in the county. Charles Marble, Jr., went to school in Troy with others of our boys, and girls, who are now numbered among our substantial citizens, and graduated from the Troy school. He was a boy who was not afraid of work. All the while he was in school and during his vacation seasons he was busy at some kind of employment. Thus, while storing his mind with those things which counted most in book learning, Charles Marble, Jr., was being educated to be industrious and self-reliant, and that is the kind of education which produces self-made men and makes of them our best and most useful citizens.

The ambition of young Marble to become an educator was in part realized when, after leaving the Troy high school, he obtained a certificate and began teaching in the graded schools of Doniphan County. He was a successful teacher from the start, but he wasn't satisfied; he wanted to keep on advancing; he studied early and late during the time he was teaching and during vacation times, while he was engaged in other work. All this helped to qualify him for higher educational work. Then, without losing time from his teaching, this sterling young educator took a course in Highland College, where he received a degree of bachelor of pedagogy. Later he entered Campbell College at Holton during the summer, and won his A. B. degree June 2, 1914. He has nothing but words of commendation for these institutions, and believes they are entitled to a liberal patronage.

Charles Marble, Jr., whom we are accustomed to call Professor Marble, has been teaching school in Doniphan County twenty-three years, and of this time seven years have been in the schools of Troy. In the high school work, as in his grade school work, he has become recognized as an educator of exceptional ability. He is one of the popular school men of northeastern Kansas. Right now he is being solicited by his friends to become a candidate for the Republican nomination for county superintendent of public instruction in the coming year, 1916, but on account of other matters, we doubt if he will yield.

His popularity, however, did not all come from his school work. During his summer and fall work outside of his school, he had taken an interest in horticulture, studying not only the growing of fruit, but the selling and marketing of fruit as well. This knowledge, combined with his business qualifications, brought recognition to him as a leader, and when the Troy Fruit-Growers' Association was organized in 1908, he was made secretary and manager. His work for the association was of such value that it contributed materially to the prosperity of the fruit-growers who were members of the organization, and he was continued in that position until last year, when he accepted a similar position with the Blair Fruit-Growers' Association at an increased salary.

The subject of this sketch was married to Miss Minnie Dittimore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Dittimore of Troy, on April 12, 1901, at her home, near Troy, by the Rev. Perry of M. E. Church. Three children have been born to them, Charles Alexander, February 2, 1902; Guita F., September 11, 1905; Geneva L., August 25, 1912. The children are exceptionally bright, inheriting much of the brightness of their parents. Charles Alexander, who is now in his thirteenth year, is the youngest boy in the Troy high school. He and his sister, Guita, have made excellent grades since they entered school and are among the best pupils.

Mrs. Marble, who was brought up on the home farm near Troy, is a woman of intelligence and business capacity, and an active force in the religious and social life of Troy. She is economical and by her untiring efforts in the household has greatly assisted her husband in accumulating a competency for the future. Her pride is in her lovable children and her home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Marble are members and active workers in the Christian Church of Troy.

Charles' father, Charles Marble, Sr., who had been a citizen of Doniphan County many years, died August 17, 1912, at the home of his daughter (Maggie), Mrs. William Keckler, in Abilene. The mother of Professor Marble died February 14, 1886, when the son, who has brought honor to her name, was little more than twelve years of age.

Gasper Turpin

Some of our substantial farmers in Doniphan County, who have made a success of life, can look back to the days when they first settled in the county and recall many ludicrous incidents. Men like Gasper Turpin, for instance, who owns one of the best farms in Center Township. Worked for Lewis Zimmerman the first year he was in Kansas for $6.00 per month and drew $4.00 the first year, of his wages. He is industrious and a man of good business judgment and has practiced economy all through life. This accounts for his prosperity.

Harry Morehead

On Thursday, October 21, 1915, a fatal accident occurred, resulting in the death of a Troy boy at Beattie—Harry Morehead, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Morehead. This estimable young man had been for some months employed as a baker in Beattie, Kansas. He, in company with four other young people, had been attending a party at a farm home near Beattie and were returning in an automobile. On overtaking some boys on bicycles who were also leaving the same party for home, Harry, who was driving, seemed to have lost control of the car, when it skidded and turned completely over, throwing out all of the occupants and resulting in bad bruises for all, and death for Harry, who lived for about six hours. His remains were brought home to Troy for burial and buried Saturday, October 23, 1915.

Dr. Walter Myers

One of the Young Men of Troy of Whom the People Are Proud and One Who, By His Own Efforts, Is Making His Way to the Front Ranks of the Medical Profession—A Son of Dr. J. C. Myers, Dentist, of Troy, and One of the Oldest in the State of Kansas.

No other profession is of such ancient dignity as is that of medicine and it invites to its service men of learning and ability, often returning but few rewards in material things for the preparation and self sacrifice it demands, and not always bestowing the honors fairly won. Nevertheless, the call to this profession is insistent and it seems, sometimes, as if the call might be an inherited one, for in many families other and more promising careers are presented only to be turned aside by several generations for that of the healing art. Of such ancestry is Dr. Walter C. Myers, an eminent physician and surgeon of Savannah, whose medical knowledge and achievements reflect credit upon his ancestors.

Walter C. Myers was born January 26, 1876, at Uhrichsville, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, and is a son of J. C. and Martha A. (Campbell) Meyers, the latter of whom was born at Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, and died at Troy, Kansas, in 1910. The father of Doctor Myers was born at Uhrichsville, Ohio, and is now a leading practitioner of dentistry at Troy, Kansas. He began the study of his profession with Doctor McKinley, who was a resident of Uhrichsville, and an uncle of the late President William McKinley, and after completed his course at Columbus, Ohio. His brother, Dr. James Myers, is a retired physician of Hutchinson, Kansas, and his uncle, Dr. John Myers, was an eminent early physician and surgeon near New Philadelphia, Ohio. He married into a medical family, four of his wife's brothers being physicians, two of whom Doctor William and Dr. O. B. Campbell, resided in St. Joseph, Missouri, but the latter is now deceased. Of the three children born to his parents, Walter C. is the only son. He has two sisters, Mary Elberta, who is the wife of R. B. Castle, of Kansas City; and Adaline E., who is the wife of Oscar Dubach, of Troy, Kansas.

Walter C. Myers was two years old when his parents, in 1878, moved to Highland, Kansas, two years later settling permanently at Troy, where he passed his boyhood and educational training, completing the high school course. From childhood he believed that his mission was to become a physician, this impression being so strong that his boyish comrades dubbed him "doctor" in their play. He was happy in having a tender, devoted and ambitious mother, and it was at her knee he learned his first lessons in anatomy and physiology, and through her encouragement decided to become a medical student under his uncle, Dr. O. B. Campbell, at St. Joseph, Missouri, and in 1898, was graduated from the Central College of that city, and for ten years was engaged in a general practice at Rea, Andrew County, Missouri, during that time continuing his studies and scientific investigations and taking post graduate courses as opportunity offered. In 1906 he spent the summer in special laboratory work in Chicago, and after he came to Savannah, took a regular post graduate course in the New York Post Graduate College in 1908, also took a clinical course under Doctors Mayo, at Rochester, Minnesota, subsequently taking a special course on tuberculosis, at Chicago, under Doctor McMichael. In fact, whenever friends miss him or patients clamor for him during certain portions of the summer, when many of both think of recreation in some chosen restful place, they may easily guess that he is hard at work in some famous distant clinic or, in their interest, spending days and nights in study with his test tubes and microscopes. The effect of this constant investigation and close study at first hand has given him qualifactions that have proven far reaching in his ministrations to the sick of Savannah and probably Andrew County has never had a more competent health officer. He has served one term also as county coroner, elected on the Republican ticket, and county health officer, but has never been active in the political field.

Doctor Myers was untied in marriage in September, 1913, to Miss Georgia Newman, who was born at Savannah, Missouri, and is a daughter of William Newman. Doctor and Mrs. Myers have one son, Victor Campbell Myers. Doctor Myers is a valued member of the Buchanan County, the Missouri State and the American Medical associations. A man of cultivated tastes he enjoys congenial companionship in many circles and has the pleasing personality that wins friends. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons, the Odd Fellows, at Savannah, and the Elks at St. Joseph.

BURTON ALVIE BYERS

A Native of Troy, Good Citizen—In Barber Business Twenty Years—Breeder of Greyhounds.

One of Troy's popular barbers, and also a leader in athletics, is Burton Alvie Byers, who was born in South Troy, and was educated in the public schools of his native city. His father, Jacob B. Byers, was born February 21, 1830, and died January 6, 1909. His mother, Caroline M. Byers, was born June 12, 1840, and died March 21, 1895.

The subject of this sketch finished his education in the schools of Troy in 1890, with Alcid Bowers as his teacher. He has won popularity among the citizens of Troy and enjoys a splendid trade, numbering among his patrons many of the leading men of the town and surrounding country.

Mr. Byers is an advocate of athletics both as a recreation and as a means of developing the physical manhood. He is something of a baseball "fan" and has played the game himself a good deal. His shop is headquarters for baseball information and he is an authority on the game.

It is also one of Mr. Byers' delights to attend coursing meets. For twenty years he has been a breeder of greyhounds and some of the fleetest hounds in this part of the state have come from his kennels.

Burton Alvie Byers married Miss Nevada Brown, a popular school teacher, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James C. Brown, the ceremony being performed in St. Joseph, by the Rev. Mr. Chilton, pastor of the Christian Church, on July 18, 1909. Mrs. Byers' father died February 5, 1911, at Nevada, Missouri. Her mother is still living in Troy.

Walter P. Tracy

The Vice-President and Treasurer of The Fruit-Grower Publishing Company Is a Doniphan County Product, and as an Experienced Publisher Is Rendering Valuable Service to the Fruit-Growers at Large.

Doniphan County fruit-growers are proud of The Fruit-Grower, which has been one of their greatest aids in the development of the extensive fruit growing industry, for which Doniphan County is becoming famous, and they are also proud to claim as their own the Vice-President and Treasurer of The Fruit-Grower Publishing Company, Walter P. Tracy, of St. Joseph, Missouri.

Mr. Tracy was born in the old town of Wathena and is the son of Andrew

W. P. Tracy.

W. Tracy and Mary Catherine Tracy, who were for many years residents of this county, and were among its honored citizens. The father died April 22, 1908, and the death of his mother occurred February 6, 1901.

Walter P. Tracy resided in Troy from 1873 until 1882, and the foundation for his education was laid in the old Troy school building, which was torn down in 1902. He went from here to St. Joseph and there entered the office of the St. Joseph Herald, which was edited by his uncle, Frank M. Tracy. Walter P. early in life had displayed talent for newspaper work and while engaged in the business on the Herald he developed into an all-round newspaper man.

The subject of this sketch was married to Miss Grace Hollenbeck, one of the popular young ladies of Creston, Iowa, on September 12, 1905. This union has been blessed with one son, Walter Campbell Tracy, who was born October 6, 1907, and is the pride of his parents. The Tracys reside in a comfortable home at 2314 Jule Street.

Eleven years ago this former Doniphan County school boy became connected with the publication of The Fruit-Grower, the national fruit magazine, at St. Joseph, and he is now Vice-President and Treasurer of The Fruit-Grower Publishing Company, owners of the publication. His newspaper experience has been of great value to him and he has contributed no small share to the building up of a high class paper which now has a circulation of 130,000 copies, and is acknowledged to be the leading publication of its kind in the United States. Its departments are conducted by men and women who are experts in their various lines and it is most ably and carefully edited. It is particularly valuable on account of the expert advice it gives on all topics relating to horticulture, and many of the most successful Doniphan County's fruit-growers will tell you they have been wonderfully aided in their industry by reading The Fruit-Grower. The Doniphan County growers are among the best friends of The Fruit-Grower, and they unhesitatingly say they have found the money paid for subscriptions returned to them multiplied many times by the help it has given them. They are all proud of the fact that one of the enterprising publishers is a Doniphan County man, Walter P. Tracy.

GEORGE W. STRAHAN

The Clerk of the District Court in Doniphan County Is Now Serving His Eighth Term in That Important Office, Which Means That He Is About to Enter Upon His Sixteenth Consecutive Year, a Reward for His Efficiency in Office.

George W. Strahan, who is now serving his eighth consecutive term as clerk of the district court at Troy, is one of the popular men of Doniphan County, and also one of the most efficient and obliging officials doing business in the court house. Moreover, he has a military career telling of service to his country of which any American citizen would feel proud to claim.

Kelley Township, in Union County, Pennsylvania, is the place of George W. Strahan's birth, the date being April 27, 1844. He received a common school education in his home town and then had one term of schooling in the Union Seminary at New Berlin. His boyhood in that Pennsylvonia community was uneventful, but it seems his young manhood was crowded with events such as no young man of his generation can comprehend.

It was at the outbreak of the Civil War. Thousands of the flower of the young men of the Nation were rushing into the ranks in both North and South. George W. Strahan hurried away from the Seminary, with his diploma half won, and entered the service with the boys of the blue. He enlisted in Company A, 131st Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry in June, 1862, serving until April, 1863, when he received his honoroable discharge. He then migrated to Ohio, where on December 30, 1963, he enlisted in Company A, United States Signal Corps, serving in that company until discharged.

After the war was over Mr. Strahan came west and located at Highland, Doniphan County, July 17, 1868. He was a carpenter and for several years he worked at his trade. Many of the houses in and about the town as one sees it today were bulit wholly or in part by him.

Later he was engaged in the grain business at Leona, where he resided for several years, and was quite successful, handling a large volume of grain. While there he became interested in public affairs through his election as Treasurer of the school district No. 45. He also served as trustee of Wolf River Township, performing his official duties well and honorably.

Mr. Strahan was in the grain business at Leona in 1900, when he was nominated for clerk of the District Court and was elected. He entered upon his work with enthusiasm and with a determination to make a public record that would do credit to the county and to the people who elected him. He soon became recognized by the judge and by both lawyers and litigants as a thoroughly capable and efficient officer. This, in the judgment of the people, was sufficient to justify a continuance of their confidence in him and at each subsequent election—in 1902, 1904, 1906, 1908, 1910, 1912, 1914,—he was re-elected. He is now about to enter on the last of his eighth term and the sixteenth consecutive year of his service to the public. That is a record made by few public officers, and but for his efficiency and his popularity, such a thing would not be possible in Kansas, where honest and faithful service constitute the qualifications for office.

Mr. Strahan's official duties brought him to Troy to reside, and in addition to his public service he has served in the city council.

On May 22, 1881, Mr. Strahan was married to Miss Marry Cullinan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Cullinan of Atchison County. They have two sons, Robert G., born July 21, 1883, and now agent for the St. Joseph and Grand Island railroad at Blair, and William H., born July 26, 1887, now a justice of the peace of Center Township, Doniphan County. The sons are well-to-do citizens of the county and like their father are popular. They are an honor to their parents and to the county and state in which they were born.

Mr. and Mrs. Strahan are among the substantial people of Troy and have a pride in the city as the county seat of the best county in the best state in the best Nation on earth. They are leaders in thought and action and are at all times to be found on the right side of every question wherein the public welfare is concerned, and are honored by the people of the city and of the entire county for their true worth as citizens.

Mr. Strahan, as before stated, is rounding out his eighth term as clerk of the District Court. Whether he will be a candidate for a ninth term when the next campaign comes, he has not announced. But certain it is that here in Doniphan County, where efficiency and honorable service count, it truthfully can be said the people are with him.

George W. Strahan.

THE S. L. K LODGE OF TROY

Secret Order, Organized By Young Women Thirty-Seven Years Ago and Composed of Women, Has Kept Its Name a Secret All These Years—Social and Educational Advancement Aim of Lodge—Mrs. R. S. Dinsmore of Troy Only Charter Member Now Connected With the Society—Organized in Troy School House February 7, 1879.

A proof that women can keep a secret, the old saying not to the contrary, is given by the members of the S. L. K. lodge in Troy. The order was organized February, 7, 1879, by eight young school girls in the Troy school house after school hours and has always been composed of single and married women. Nevertheless, despite the proverb that a woman can not keep a secret no one except the members of the order know its full name. The meaning of the letters "S L. K." to mere men and women outsiders is as deep a mystery as the identy of the man who hit Billy Patterson, or who killed Cock Robin, or where the flame of a lamp goes when the light is blown out, or the idenity of the Bibical Cain's wife. This mystery is as deep as a bass singer's voice.

Various guesses are made as to the meaning of the mystic letters. Some think that "S. L. K." stands for "Some Lady Knockers." Others hazard an opinion that the letters are initials for the words: "Sweet Lady Kickers," or "Soft Leather Kid." Others declare that "S. L. K." means nothing else but "So Let's Kiss." A few with more material minds believe the name of the lodge is "Some Large Kitchen," while one or two guess that the members being most intelligent and progressive choose "Seeking Light and Knowledge," as the name by which the order is known to the inner circle.

However, whatever be the name, shrouded in mystery as dark as a Kansas rain cloud and guarded as closely as the life of the Czar of Russia, it is an open secret that the members of the lodge have in view the social and educational advancement of its members. Like the majority of the women of Troy the people of the "S. L. K." are unusually alert and progressive, well read and up-to-date.

The order must have prospered as in 1903 the lodge bought its own home, one-half block off of main street. The lodge also owns an excellent library. The books thereof include the best of fiction, history, and selections from the world's best literature. This is not to mention standard magazines and publications which are to be found on the library table.

When the eight young ladies organized this lodge thirty-four years ago, "Bony" Wood, a lawyer, presented them with a table. This is still part of their furniture. The lodge hall is well equipped with comfortable chairs and is one of the most pleasant gathering places in the town. It is a popular institution and the young women are as desirous of becoming members as the boys are to belong to the famous Troy ball team.

Some frivolous minded people resenting the fact that the proceedings of the lodge are kept a secret from them, say that the women discuss such topics as "How to Spank Babies Without Pain." "Should Water Be Boiled or Merely Scorched?" "How is Face Powder Best Applied?" "Do Light or Dark Men Become Better Husbands?" However, to judge from the characters of the women who compose the society, it is quite likely that the meetings are devoted to subjects of real interest to women and to matters of general interest.

It is a fact that the ladies have stood for the town's best interests, socially, morally and along the broadest educational and religious lines. Such institutions reflect credit on any town and are worthy of the interest and encouragement afforded them.

The following is a list of charter members:

Mrs. Dinsmore is now the only member who is still with the society, and has never been delinquent.

ARCHIE L. DECKER

The Leading Grocer in Troy

The Owner of an $8,000 Up-to-Date Grocery Stock in Troy—Began the Business as a Clerk in a General Merchandise Store During Vacation and On Saturdays—Now Has the Best Grocery Store in Troy.

I am Your Grocer

And it matters not whether you eat and drink amid splendor of wealth, your mahogany table adorned with gold and silver plate, with many servants in attendance; or whether you sit at a humble pine-board with naught but a bowl of thin soup and crackers—I am the one from whom your food came, and I am represented at your table when no one else is there.

If you are devout, doubtless you bow your head and whisper a few grateful words of thanksgiving. Perchance, if you are honest with yourself, you feel thankful for a generous grocer who, out of the kindness of his heart, supplied you with food when you had not the means with which to buy—yet when pay day came around you forgot to divide with me as I divided with you.

A. L. Decker, propietor of the thoroughly up-to-date grocery store in the Cy Leland building at the northwest corner of the public square, in which Mr. Leland conducted a successful general merchandise business for forty years, is a young man who has worked hard to win the success that deservedly is his. Mr. Decker is a son of D. C. and Susie Decker, and was born in Morgan County, Missouri, December 21, 1876. All the education he received was in the common schools of Missouri, and he had little opportunity to attend more than a few months in the year. He grew up in that Missouri community determined, even as a boy, to make the very best of his opportunities. At the age of seventeen he began his mercantile career by selling goods at Syracuse in Morgan County, Missouri, and he has been engaged in the business ever since.

Mr. Decker was married December 22, 1897, to Miss Fannie B. Snapp, at Amazonia, Missouri. She was born July 28, 1876, in Holt County, Missouri, and is the daughter of Milton and Mary E. Snapp, of Holt County, Missouri. The marriage of Mr. Decker and Miss Snapp took place at St. Joseph, Missouri. To this union four children have been born, three boys, Floyd Archie, December 15, 1898, at Amazonia, Missouri; Ray Lemuel, November 7, 1900, near Oregon, Missouri; Earl Leo, October 11, 1906, at Forbes Station, Missouri, and one daughter, who died in infancy. All three of the boys take to the grocery business and are handy at assisting their father in the store in Troy during vacations and on Saturdays, and it is freely predicted that they will develop into ideal merchants. They are bright, affable young fellows, the kind of young men it is good to know.

Mr. Decker has not long been a resident of Troy and of Doniphan County. He came to Troy a perfect stranger March 10, 1911, and opened a store in J. W. McClellan's building on March 21, 1911. He remained in that building until January 18, 1915, when he leased Cy. Leland's building in which he is now located and enjoying a large and successful trade. It is a popular corner and is conveniently located so that more persons pass the store than any other. It also has historic interest from the fact that it was there Cy. Leland conducted a general store for forty years. When the old building burned down a few years ago Mr. Leland replaced it with a substantial brick building, and in fact, the best brick building in Troy. The building as it now is occupied by Mr. Decker, possesses every feature of attractiveness and is an ideal place for conducting a first class store.

The grocery store which Mr. Decker started in Troy was something of an innovation in country town stores. First the big store room was fitted out with neat and substantial fixtures in keeping with the quality and dignity of the place. Then the store was stocked with everything fresh and new. Mr. Decker's purpose was to make it the one big thoroughly up-to-date store in Troy and he has certainly succeeded in his undertaking, for go where you will in cities large and small, in country towns and villages, you will not find another grocery store that will surpass Mr. Decker's, not in one particular, but in many.

Mr. Decker has simply brought to the people of Troy the advantage of a high class grocery of the city. His first idea is quality and whatever he brings into his store to sell must be strictly A-I in quality. Another aim of Mr. Decker is to give the people what they want—not something "just as good," but the real thing itself. In selecting his line of teas and coffee it was with the idea of providing for his patrons goods that he could recommend as dependable, something that would be of the same degree of strength and richness tomorrow or next week or next month as it was when first the patron tested it at his own table. The same care was exercised by Mr. Decker in choosing the brands of canned goods, for be it known to the uninitiated, there is as much difference in the quality of different brands of canned goods as there is between a Jonathan apple and a Ben Davis apple, although the difference in price to the consumer is practically imperceptible. It has been that way all through this model grocery store—quality first.

In coming to Troy as a stranger Mr. Decker did not wait long to get acquainted with our people. His methods of doing business, offering high quality goods at reasonable prices, and his square open dealing with everybody, soon made his place popular and was the best introduction that could have been given.

Mr. Decker and his very estimable family are a splendid addition to the citizenship of Troy. He is thoroughly wide-awake and is one of the kind of boosters it is good for a town to have.

TROY CITY OFFICIALS

Good Citizens Who Devote Their Time and Talents to the Affairs of Their City, Working Together for the Public Welfare and for the Upbuilding of This Splendid Little City.

The people of Troy are fortunate in having a municipal government that is free from partisan politics and free from petty factionalism—men of different political faiths in state and national politics, but men who place such a high estimate on the government of their home city that they lay aside those political differences which separate men into parties, and all pull together as citizens like a family of big brothers. The personnel of the Troy city administration at this time follows:

Mayor—Albert L. Perry, attorney and abstractor.

Councilmen—George W. Smith, retired farmer; A. D. Jones, hardware merchant; C. V. Norman, cashier First National Bank; W. A. Hargis, station agent Rock Island; L. L. Strong, farm loans.

City Clerk—Norman G. Steanson, bookkeeper First National Bank.

City Treasurer—Charles Marble, instructor in high school.

With this corps of public officials, Troy may be said to have a thoroughly progressive municipal government. The officials devote their time to their official duties and have as much interest in the success of their city as they have for their own private affairs. Efficiency is the watchword with Troy officials and under their able business management the city receives full value for every dollar of money expended. With such splendid management as is given the affairs of the city of Troy, there is no need of abandoning the councilmanic form of government, for it is here demonstrated that it is the kind of men a city has for its public officials, rather than the mere form of government, that makes for progressiveness and efficiency and economy in public administration.

A brief sketch of each of the men who compose this city government is timely in this connection.

Albert L. Perry, mayor, was born in Troy, and is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Perry, who were among our early and honored pioneers. He is an attorney and abstractor and is serving his second term as mayor, devoting as much of his energy and his talent to the duties of his office as he devotes to his business, in which he has been eminently successful.

George W. Smith, councilman, is a veteran of the Civil War, a successful farmer now retired, and one of the splendid patriotic citizens of Troy. He practiced economy all his life and used good business judgment in his transactions. In public office—he is now serving his third term—he has made a record that he can point to with pride, having adhered to his sound business principles in all of his official transactions.

A. D. Jones, councilman, is a hardware merchant, a very successful one, indeed, and is, because of his mercantile experience, a valuable man in his position as a public servant. He is a native of Doniphan County, born at Wathena and a son of Doniphan County pioneers. He has spent his entire life in this county and has been engaged in the mercantile trade during all his business life.

C. V. Norman, councilman, has been in Doniphan County since the year 1887, and in all those twenty-nine years, he has been a public spirited citizen and one whom the people honor. He taught school several years and was for twelve years county superintendent of public instruction. He was receiver of the Highland Bank. In 1906 he became cashier of the First National Bank of Troy, which position he now holds. He is serving his first term as a councilman.

W. A. Hargis, councilman, was born on a farm near Brenner, and was educated at Brenner and Troy. He has been station agent for the Rock Island twenty years, and is popular and well liked by all. He is methodical in everything he undertakes, and this same quality has distinguished his official work as a member of the Troy city council.

L. L. Strong, councilman, is the youngest member of that body, and is making for himself and the city a splendid record for efficiency and for a fair and square administration. He was born in Troy, and considers it a privilege to serve the old home town. He is engaged in the farm loan business and is a fine representative of one of the old families of Troy.

Norman G. Steanson, city clerk, is the only unmarried member of the present city administration. His parents were among the Norwegian pioneers of this section, they having located in Wolf River Township, where the city clerk was reared. He is a graduate of Midland College, Atchison, and is now bookkeeper in the First National bank. He is serving his first term as city clerk.

Charles Marble, city treasurer, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and came to Kansas when a boy. He was reared and educated in Troy. He has an A. B. degree from Highland College, and also from Campbell College at Holton. He has been a school teacher all of his life since leaving school and is now one of the instructors in the Troy high School. He is making a fine record as a public official.

Goldberg Murdered

An atrocious crime was committed in St. Joseph, Missouri, in December, 1915, when Aaron Goldberg was beaten over the head with the butt of a revolver by a robber who was rifling the jewelry store of Mr. Goldberg. His skull was fractured and he died from the injury a few days later. His son, A. D. Goldberg, is a prominent business man of Highland in this county, where the elder Goldberg often visited and was well known also.

Mrs. Jeff Claytor

Vittie Miller Claytor, wife of Jeff Claytor, came to Doniphan County with her parents when Troy contained but a few houses and has resided near here ever since. She can relate many thrilling stories of pioneer days and is glad to know that the wild country which she settled in during her youth has developed into one of the best farming countries in the Middle West. Mr. and Mrs. Claytor are the parents of two living children, Mrs. J. Albright and Odley.

Frank Brown

A School Teacher in Platte County, Missouri, Before the Civil War Who Came to Doniphan County Later and Lived Here Fifty Years—Served as District Clerk Six Successive Terms—A Long Life of Public Service.

The late Frank Brown of Troy, grandfather of the present Probate Judge, whose death occurred on March 8, 1915, spent the greater part of his more than eighty-six years in the public service as school teacher, clerk of the district court, deputy sheriff, register of deeds, treasurer, probate judge, county clerk, member of the board of education and justice of the peace.

There are men who, by some inherent quality that cannot be defined, are natural born public officials, and certainly the subject of our sketch was one of these. He was at all times courteous and obliging and he had the faculty of instantly grasping the business at hand and with a keen insight into the details of official business, to dispose of it quickly, neatly and accurately. There are some public officials who will potter and fidget around for an hour looking up some little detail of official business which the late Frank Brown would have disposed of in five minutes. That is why people who went to the Doniphan County Court House like to transact their business through the old Squire Frank Brown—and that explains why he was so long in the court house.

Frank Brown was a native of Missouri, born in Richmond, that state, December 18, 1828. He was the youngest of nine children. His father died when he was a small boy and in 1841, when he was thirteen years old, the widowed mother took her children to a farm near Parkville in Platte County, Missouri. There he succeeded in fitting himself by education for teaching in the public schools, thus making himself a great help to his mother in her struggles to bring up her children in the right way.

For several years prior to the breaking out of the Civil War Frank Brown taught in the schools of Platte County. He gave general satisfaction and was on the highway to a successful career as an educator when he was pressed into the office of County Assessor of Platte County, which he held until the spring of 1862. He made an excellent public official and his experience in examining into the values of taxable property in Platte County was of itself an education that was to be of great value to him in after life. It firmly fixed in his mind the idea of carefulness, even of the smallest detail of official business, and made him efficient in everything he undertook to do.

In the spring of 1865 Mr. Brown moved to Doniphan County, Kansas, locating in the Burr Oak Bottoms. He taught school in that vicinity for one year and became popular with the people of that locality. His popularity and his fitness for the public service was recognized by the people and he was put forth as a candidate for district clerk of Doniphan County, to which office he was elected.

This took Frank Brown to Troy, which became his home for almost one-half century. His election also was the beginning of a remarkable career as a faithful and efficient public official which is a shining mark in the history of Doniphan County. Mr. Brown filled the office of district clerk six successive terms by election, which of itself is a fine testimonial to his efficiency as a public officer. He retired from the office in 1879 and was for many years employed in various public offices in all of which he was a valuable servant. At different times he held the office of deputy sheriff and as an employee in the office of county treasurer, register of deeds, probate judge, county clerk and in the office of the clerk of the district court.

Mr. Brown's public career in Troy, however, was not entirely confined to official work in the county court house. He taught in the Troy schools several terms, disclosing a talent for educational work that was truly remarkable when considered in connection with his efficient work as a public officer. He was interested in educational affairs to the extent of serving on the board of education for several years, doing this as a patriotic duty, for the office is without salary or emoluments. He was Justice of the Peace of Center Township twenty-eight years and filled the office with dignity and honor, although having little to do in a county where people were too busy with other things to sue and be sued and where there was a minimum of crime under our well organized state of society.

In the year 1853 Frank Brown married Miss Mary Jane Brown, who was born in Platte County, Missouri, near Platte City. They had one son and one daughter. The son, Eugene, was born in Platte County, Missouri. The daughter, Viola, who is now Mrs. James Revelle, was also born in Platte County, Missouri. The grandsons are Frank F. and Edwin Brown. There is also a granddaughter, Mrs. Ernest, and a great-great-grandson, James Shirley.

Mrs. Brown, the wife and mother of his children, his faithful companion and helpmate through many long years, died in Troy, March 12, 1888. The death of Frank Brown occurred at his home in Troy, March 8, 1915, at the age of 86 years, 2 months and 18 days.

The death of a man of such broad acquaintance and of such long experience as a faithful public official and valued citizen was a loss to the entire county. He had served an ordinary lifetime in a public capacity, and his value could not be estimated. He was honored by all who knew him, and that meant practically everybody in the county. He was a charter member of the Troy I. O. O. F. lodge and of the Rebekah lodge. His grandson, the young judge, Edwin Brown, could do not better than to emulate his illustrous grandfather.

JUDGE EDWIN BROWN

The Present Probate Judge of Doniphan County Who Made Troy a Gretna Green for Love-Sick Swains of St. Joseph—Justice Mixed With Good Sense and Fair Play Made Him Popular With the People.

Troy has become the Gretna Green for love sick swains of St. Joseph and neighboring cities and towns, a fact which may be ascribed in part at least to the popularity of Edwin Brown, Probate Judge of Doniphan County, who has earned the title of "the Marrying Judge of Northeast Kansas," for be it known to all lovers who contemplate matrimony that Judge Brown of Troy is a genial, good looking and kindly spoken magistrate who ties the knot tighter, surer and with more solemnity than any other. Marrying lovers, however, is not Judge Brown's only official function. His duties are many and he performs them well, so well indeed that everybody is satisfied to have such a man in office.

The Venerable Old Squire and His Grandson, the Young Judge.

Edwin Brown was born in the town of Troy, October 11, 1889, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Brown. The boy Edwin grew up in his native town and was educated in the Troy schools. He was a leader among the boys in almost everything, as he is today, and no boy was more popular among his fellows, or among people of the town and country than the subject of our sketch. He furnished a good part of the life of the town.

After completing his course in the Troy schools Edwin Brown began reading law, for he had settled it in his mind that he was going to be a lawyer, perhaps a judge. He went into study with the same thoroughness that had characterized him as a student in school, determined to master it without any fooling. During this period, however, the would-be lawyer and judge did a good business making loans on real estate. In this he was successful, for as an observer who never lets anything get by he had learned a good deal about real estate and values in Troy and Doniphan County. Also he had a lot of good sound business sagacity which he mixed with his business. He made a success of the loan business that encouraged him to greater endeavor.

In the campaign of 1912 the boys nominated young Edwin Brown for Justice of the Peace of Center Township, and they say he ran like a scared cat, passing everything in sight and landing into the office by a good majority. As Justice of the Peace this ambitious young native of Doniphan County injected into his office a good deal of his own personality, particularly that spirit of fair play and impartiality which had made his so well liked by the boys with whom he played on the town lots. That was what the people desired. They talked about young Justice Brown and his methods and his docket was filled with cases, many of them brought to him from the remote parts of the county on change of venue; they all wanted Justice Brown to try their cases because they knew he was fair and they would get a square deal. There wasn't any foolishness about his court—it wasn't conducted like a kangaroo court as some courts in the cities are conducted.

The campaign of 1914 was a memorable one for Edwin Brown. His popularity had traveled to every section of Doniphan County, and the Republicans made him their candidate for Probate Judge of Doniphan County. He went out into the campaign and made speeches in every part of the county. His speeches pleased the people and whenever there was any speaking to do he was first to be called upon and he never disappointed his hearers by making a dull speech or shocked them with unseemly language. He was clean and outspoken. Everybody understood him. Everybody admired him. His election was a foregone conclusion long before the day the votes were deposited in the ballot boxes.

In the office of Probate Judge this rising young man has shown the same capacity for dealing with the affairs of the office as he displayed in the office of Justice of the Peace. He looks into the matter of wills and estates with the eye of one who sees clearly and the heart of one who desires that everything be done fairly. If there is one row that is more difficult to settle than any other it is a row arising over the distribution of property among heirs to an estate, but such things do not fret Judge Brown; he smoothes out all these troubles by measuring out justice by the Golden Rule. His administration is so popular that it is doubtful if the opposition puts up a man against him for a second term in the campaign of 1916.

The marriage of Edwin Brown and Miss Opal Carpenter, which occurred April 24, 1912, was a happy union of two of Doniphan County's brightest young people. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Carpenter of Wayne township, and was born September 16, 1890, educated in the schools of Troy and graduating from the high school in 1910. She taught two successive terms of school. She is a woman of fine intelligence and charming manner, and is popular with all who know her. As evidence of her popularity it is of record that the vote of Wayne township for her husband in the last election in which the women voted was eight for Edwin Brown to 1 for his opponent.

The Probate Judge is a member of the Odd Fellows and has filled all the chairs of the local lodge. His grandfather, Frank Brown, was a public official and school teacher, a servant of the people, who died March 8, 1915, at a ripe old age. His grandfather, Alexander Berry (father of the mother of Edwin Brown) fought in the Thirteenth Kansas Infantry in the Civil War, dying after the close of the war from wounds received in battle. On both sides of the Brown family the men were Republicans, all honored as useful citizens and upholders of high moral standards.

A Successful School Teacher

John P. Corcoran Has Life Certificate to Teach From the State Normal School and Has Also Won Two Literary Degrees From the Kansas State University—A Native of Doniphan County.

Success in one's chosen career never is attained without a persistent effort to gain the desired end. No matter what avocation a man chooses to follow, he must have both application and energy in order to become a factor of importance in this age of progress and development.

Such was the object forcibly kept in mind by John P. Corcoran, ever since he started out to fight the battle of life. Born on a farm four miles northeast of Troy, Mr. Corcoron had as much and no more educational advantages than the average country boy. His early schooling was obtained in the schools of Doniphan and at the Troy High School.

Desiring to become a school teacher, John P. had sufficient grit to go through the State Normal School at Emporia, from which institution he received a life certificate to teach in Kansas. He also took a course at the Kansas State University, where the degrees of A. B. and A. M. were conferred upon him.

For several years Mr. Corcoran taught in the public schools of Doniphan County, and was regarded as one of the best qualified instructors among the many able educators in the employ of the county. Later he taught in the Troy High School, where his ability and personal high qualities endeared him to his superiors and the pupils alike. It was after leaving the Troy High School that Mr. Corcoran took the course in the state university which equipped him for a position in any of the higher educational institutions of the country.

In August, 1912, Mr. Corcoran was married to Miss Blanche K. Henry of Osborne, Kansas, and one child, Theresa, has been born to this union.

He makes his home with his mother in Lawrence. Mrs. Corcoran is an ideal wife for a college professor, and her counsel and encouragement is of invaluable assistance to him in his educational work.

The other members of the Corcoran family are a brother, Thomas, who is engaged as a bookkeeper in a large wholesale house in Lawrence and resides with his mother and brother, John P.; Lanzel, Mrs. Leo Wagner, who resides near Troy; Ella, Mrs. Jesse, also of Doniphan County, and Miss Mamie, a student in the State University, who also makes her home with her mother and brothers in Lawrence.

QUIT TEACHING FOR INSURANCE

William White McColgan Was Considered One of the Best Teachers at the Climax School When He Quit to Engage in the Insurance Business in St. Joseph—Now Is District Agent for the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, With Offices in the Ballinger Building.

Although teaching was his chosen profession, William White McColgan abandoned it for the most lucrative work of selling life insurance over twenty years ago.

Mr. McColgan had been a resident of Doniphan County and taught at Climax School, two miles south of Troy, as long ago as 1891. Then he moved to St. Joseph and is now district agent for the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, with headquarters in the Ballinger Building.

William White McColgan was born in Ashridge, Ohio, December 26, 1864, and on April 17, 1889, he was married to Miss Maud Helen Fletcher. Two daughters were born to this union, Edith Caroline and Margaret Alice.

Although the McColgan family liked their surroundings while residing in Doniphan County, and had hundreds of friends, Mr. McColgan decided that school teaching had its drawbacks for a man who had a family to maintain. So he quit to take up insurance, and he has been eminently successful at that calling from the very start. He is a relative to the Fentons, in Union Township.

RAILROAD TOOK ERSKIN'S LAND

Frank Kotsch, Arthur C. Bell, I. D. Parker Were Employes.

When the Rock Island Railroad was being built through Doniphan County in 1886 no obstacles were considered in surveying the route just as the officials of the corporation desired it should go.

At that time Lee H. Erskin, now of Sharon Springs, Kan., and his brother, William Erskin, now a well known grocer and meat market man at Wathena, had been operating a dryer in Troy.

Their establishment was located in the southern portion of the town, about where the Rock Island yards are situated at the present time. In making their survey the engineers of the road laid their line right through the Erskin building and compelled the brothers to move it away.

The railroad officials would brook no delay so the dryer had to be taken away before the company got ready to demolish it. The Erskins hired Albert Perry, one of the leading lawyers of Troy, to fight the case, and he brought a suit for heavy damages against the railroad company.

Mr. Perry won a verdict in the district court, but the company appealed the judgment to the Supreme Court, where the decision was again favorable to the Erskins. The railroad company paid the judgment, but when the attorney fees and all expenses of litigation had been paid the Erskins had only $669.20 for their damage and their loss of business.

WILLIAM H. DELONG

A Doniphan County Young Man Who Performed Gallant Service in the Philippine Islands for Uncle Sam—His Father a Soldier in the Civil War Who Performed Like Service.

Doniphan County furnished a number of her brave young men for Uncle Sam's army in the Spanish-American War and also for service in the Philippine Islands. Like all Doniphan County men who go away from home, these boys of ours made good, performing with bravery and soldierly skill and on being discharged with honor laid down their weapons and followed the pursuits of peace.

William H. DeLong was such a young man of Doniphan County, thirty-four years of age, when he went from his home in Troy and enlisted, June 3, 1899, at St. Joseph in Company H, 17th United States infantry, his captain being J. J. Carr. His regiment went to the Philippines where our Doniphan County hero fought in three battles, four engagements, two attacks and three skirmishes. He was discharged with excellent character and military recommendations June 2, 1902. He was in the service three years, two years in the Philippines and one year in California.

William H. DeLong rendered a great service to his country as a true and loyal soldier, and saw many experiences in that far-off country, yet it is regretable that the service impaired his health, and now he is unable to work, receiving a pension of $17 a month. His home now is at Coldwater, Kansas, where he resides with his wife to whom he was married at Randolph, Kansas, Dec. 27 1903, and four children, having lost his youngest boy in March, 1914.

William E. DeLong, the father of William H. DeLong, also was a soldier in Uncle Sam's army. He enlisted in Iowa in 1862 in Company I, 35th Iowa volunteer infantry, and fought in many battles and skirmishes with that famous regiment. This regiment pursued the enemy far to the South and in the battle of Vicksburg, William E. DeLong received a dangerous wound. He was honorably discharged in the latter part of 1864, and returned to his home in Iowa.

The DeLongs have been residents of Doniphan County many years and have contributed their share to the development of the county and the prosperity which we enjoy today.

Isaac A. Scarbrough

Blacksmithing and Repair Work Horseshoeing

The idea in the old adage "In time of peace, prepare for war," applies as well to the farmer as it does to nations. But worded to suit the farmer it would read something like this: "This winter is the time to get your farm implements in shape for next spring's work." Have your plow shares sharpened and ready. If your hay rake has broken parts, bring it to us, we will fix it up. Your cultivators need sharpening and you need a new wagon bed. There are dozens of little things that ought to be attended to while farm work is slack.

Our shop is fitted for doing all kinds of repair work and we will be pleased to have your patronage and will guarantee to please you.

Mr. Coons still longs for his Troy friends and hopes to visit old acquaintances some time in the future.

Jones Killed Three Deer

On Dec. 25, 1871, John Jones, who resides in Troy, brother of the celebrated Buffalo Jones, and Altan Ensign, took advantage of the eighteen inch snow which had fallen the day before, and went on a hunting excursion to the forks of Wolf river, and on their return brought in three deer as trophies of the chase. The largest deer weighed 167 pounds.

Alcid Bowers

A Native of the Buckeye State Coming to Kansas in 1878, He Began His Career as a Useful Citizen By Teaching School, Later Became a Lawyer and Was Honored By Election as County Attorney—Now Residing in St. Joseph.

The state of Ohio, which has produced several Presidents of the United States who served the nation with honor, also has turned out many lawyers, and generally good lawyers, too. Among these we mention our former townsman, Alcid Bowers, who now is a resident of St. Joseph, Missouri, and who besides being a successful practitioner, has exerted a mighty influence toward raising the standard of the legal profession in northeastern Kansas and northwestern Missouri.

What any community, and the public at large, owes to such a man as Alcid Bowers, cannot be told or explained in words. In a great many ways the lawyer, although he serves his clients and their interests for pay, often proves his usefulness as a citizen by serving the public in an unofficial capacity. He gives sound legal advice on this and that question of general concern, often appearing in court with the people as his client, and without any other reward for his services than the good wishes of those citizens who know him, have confidence in him and appreciate his service, as well as his worth as a citizen. A good lawyer is an indispensable citizen, and an honest lawyer, one who lends himself and his talents and learning to the public welfare is worth his weight in gold.

Alcid Bowers of whom we write, was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, Aug. 10, 1860, just on the eve of the Civil War and at a time when the Buckeye state was undergoing a remarkable development, which, however, was soon checked for a time by the succession of events that followed. He was too young to take notice of the events of the '60's or to form impressions, but as he grew up in that Ohio community he heard the stories first hand from the boys in blue that inspired in him a patriotic devotion to the flag and counted much for true manhood and true citizenship.

Mr. Bowers came to Kansas when he was eighteen years old, arriving March 8, 1878, and locating in Doniphan County. He taught here for thirteen years and during that time was accounted a good teacher by his pupils and patrons. His pupils at all times held him in high esteem, and among his pleasantest recollections are of those thirteen years of school teaching in which he came into contact with hundreds of our boys and girls who received from him the kind of education that deals with the practical things of life, for in his time of teaching there was little fol-de-rol taught in the public schools. Many men and women of this country who were pupils of Alcid Bowers in those thirteen years remember him kindly and feel that he had a great deal to do with their getting a good start in life. And a school teacher who is thus remembered by his former pupils of years ago is the kind of a man whom we are apt to call a very good fellow—and certainly he was a good teacher.

During his teaching, and especially during the last years of his service to the public in that capacity, he devoted a good deal of his attention to reading law. He was ambitious to be a lawyer and build up a practice of that profession in his home town. His long experience as a school teacher had been of great value to him, for he had firmly established himself in the acquaintance of the people, many of whom became his clients and all of whom rejoiced at his success.

Alcid Bowers, upon his arrival in Doniphan County, found the prohibition movement under headway. Being himself a temperance man and a firm advocate for prohibition he soon found himself in the thickest of the fight. He was then as now a good speaker, clear and convincing, and it can be said to his credit he let his voice loose and it counted for much in the campaign which ended with a glorious triumph for prohibition in the election. So when he looks about him and sees the splendid fruits of prohibition in Kansas, he recalls with pride his speeches urging the men of Kansas to vote for the adoption of the amendment. Mr. Bowers is still an advocate of prohibition, having observed the beneficial effects of prohibition in Kansas, and in the city of St. Joseph he takes a hand in the fight to make Missouri a dry state.

Mr. Bowers' popularity and the loyalty of his friends won him election to the office of county attorney of Doniphan County on the Republican ticket, and he filled the office for the term, January, 1893, to January, 1895, with honor. He proved to be a most efficient public officer and one whose record was clean.

Alcid Bowers married Lucretia Harrington of Palermo, May 16, 1881, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. M. M. Good of the Christian church. To this union was born six children: Edith, now Mrs. Eugene Lancaster, on Oct. 6, 1882; Nora, now Mrs. Carl Winkler, of Des Moines, on June 21, 1885; Edgar A., born May 27, 1890; Nellie, born Dec. 27, 1891; Alcid, Jr., born Jan. 6, 1898; Delinda, born Feb. 8, 1900. The children are unusually intelligent and promise to be a credit to their parents.

The family now resides in St. Joseph, Missouri, where Mr. Bowers is engaged in practicing law, having an office in the Corby-Forsee building. The younger children are attending the public schools of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Bowers are members of the Christian church in St. Joseph, Mr. Bowers always taking a particularly active part in religious activities of the church and city. He was a charter member of the Christian church when it was organized in Troy in 1889.

LESTER O. HATHAWAY

Brown County Man Is Making Good as a Printer in the Office of the Chief—Started in at the Age of Eleven Years.

The best assets of any newspaper are thorough and practical printers; for, after all, it is the printers who really make the paper. The editor and his reporters may do the writing, but when it comes to the art of newspaper making, we all have to give it to the printers. However, there are printers who are printers, and the Weekly Kansas Chief is fortunate in having in its office one of these in the person of Lester O. Hathaway, for whom the editor and every one connected with the publication has the highest personal regard.

Lester Hathaway is a Kansas boy through and through. He was born in Brown County eight miles west of Powhattan, March 9, 1886, where his mother, Mrs. Armilda Ann Hathaway, resided for several years. From the time Lester was old enough to climb on a high stool and look into the little compartments of a printer's case in which the type are kept, each letter or character to its own self, he had a desire to become a printer. He was a good boy, but he would play hookey any day to spend an hour in a print shop.

One day when this competent young man was eleven years old, he dropped into the office of the Powhattan Post to stay. Henry J. Calnan, the present editor of the Weekly Kansas Chief, was then editor and publisher of the Powhattan Post. Mr. Calnan took a liking to Lester and gave the boy a job. It was one of the best acts the editor ever performed in his life, for it started a bright, honest lad on a career of usefulness and honor.

Since that eventful time Lester Hathaway has been working at the printer's trade. He was quick to learn when a boy and it did not take him a long time to become proficient as a typesetter. Gradually he acquired the mastery of the little intricacies of printing until now there isn't a printer on any weekly newspaper in Kansas that can put up a better piece of work than Lester Hathaway, whether it be straight composition, job compositon, ad-setting or make-up.

What is more to the point, Lester Hathaway and the present editor of The Chief are practically inseparable.

Lester O. Hathaway

Lester has been with The Chief ever since he left the Powhattan Post, except one winter that he worked in Axtell on the Anchor, and one year he spent with the Hiawatha Democrat when Robert Patton and Walter Allen were publishing that paper. He came to Troy, March 30, 1906, and has been connected with The Chief from that date to the present.

Men like Lester O. Hathaway are among our noblest and best citizens. He don't get out on the streets and let everybody know he is in town. He works silently with steady hand and brain and makes for himself a record of faithful and efficient service in a position of higher responsibility than any other we know of. He is considered one of the best expert machine operators in Kansas and if close application counts, and Ben Franklin said it did, the subject of this sketch will be a success in life.

CHESTER WOODS

Industrious Young Newspaper Man With Exceptional Ability —Is Pleasant Man to Meet.

Chester Woods is one of the young men who execute the mechanical work on The Chief. His capacity is that of job and advertisement printer. He is a Missourian, being the son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Woods of Gallatin, Mo., and was born in St. Louis in 1895. At the age of twelve he was taken sick with a fever which developed into spinal meningitis and as a result he lost his hearing, but by careful and constant practice he has managed to retain his ability to speak distinctly and to the casual observer he does not appear to be deaf at all. During the year following his sickness he attended school with the hearing children, but later entered the Montana School for the Deaf. His parents removing to Missouri the following year, he was enrolled in the Missouri institution, at Fulton, from which he graduated in 1910.

At school, the preliminary kinks of the printing craft had been straightened out in his mind and he started out to master the trade, and that he has done so is attested by his work on The Chief. He has been in Troy slightly over two years and has a wide circle of friends. He is a young man of good habits, persevering and energetic, and practices economy. He has a savings account and a judicious mind and in a few years will have a competency sufficient to carry him through life on the flowery beds of ease.

Charles Calnan

Herewith is a picture of Charles Calnan, the sixteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Calnan, of Troy. He is now in the Troy High School from which he expects to graduate in two years, after which he will attend the

Charles Calnan.

Kansas University. At K. U. he will take the law course and a course in journalism which will fit him to succeed his father as editor of The Chief. He has received practical training in The Chief office and is quite expert on the linotype machine and in other branches of the business.

Mrs. Mary Miller, wife of Sol Miller, founder of the Chief, died in Kansas City, at her home August 17, 1907. She married Mr. Sol Miller in 1855, and two years later came to Kansas with him and located at White Cloud where he began the publication of the Chief.

Robert Tracy moved the Troy Reporter to Wathena and his first issue in Wathena appeared Thursday, April 11, 1867. He gave as his reason for leaving Troy that the court house had burned and that the county seat would probably be moved to Wathena.

The Fruit Growers State Bank at Wathena is the first of its kind in Kansas.

The Troy Commercial Club

New Organization of Public Spirited Citizens Recently Formed for Advancement of the City's Commercial and Industrial Interests and for Boosting for the Public Welfare.

The city of Troy is fortunate in having among its civic organizations a live Commercial Club, recently formed, which promises to become a power for the promotion not only of the commercial and industrial interests of the city, but also for the upbuilding of the moral, material and educational welfare of this community.

The first meeting preliminary to the formation of this club was held on Friday night, January 7, 1916, in the office of Ham D. Kent, the lumber dealer, in South Troy. It was there decided by the thirty-five live citizens and business and professional men who were present that the time had come when Troy should have an organization of its citizens to work together for the accomplishment of great things for their city. The suggestion met with unanimous approval, and it was decided that steps be taken at once for the organization of a commercial club. At the next meeting, held February 9, 1916, in Judge Edwin Brown's office in the northeast corner of the court house, thirty-five citizens signed the membership roll and a committee was appointed to draw up rules and by-laws for the government of the club. The committee performed its work well and expeditiously and at a subsequent meeting, held on February 16, 1916, with forty present, the report of the committee was received and the rules and by-laws were adopted.

This was the consummation of a movement which had been under consideration by our leading men for many months, and it may go down into history as a red-letter day for Troy. What it is to mean to the city and those who are fortunate enough to claim Troy as their home will be determined by the degree of enthusiasm of its members in the future toward the carrying out of the aims and purposes of the organization.

On February 27, 1916, another meeting was held in the Doniphan County court house, upstairs in the court room at which this organization, already well under way, was perfected by the election of its first officers and directors as follows: Emil C. Winzer, president; Louis L. Strong, vice-president; George W. Kinkead, second vice-president; Harry L. Macomber, treasurer; Albert L. Perry, Frank W. Kotsch, Charles E. Butts (secretary), directors. This accomplished, the members present voted that the club's first introduction, or rather its "coming out," should be at a banquet to be held Wednesday evening, March 15, 1916, at which addresses would be made by prominent speakers, its membership by this time having reached a total of 198.

While the organization has adopted as its title the Troy Commercial Club, it must not be inferred that its functions are to be of a purely commercial nature. Certainly it has to do with the commercial side of life in the city—the making of Troy the best and most inviting trading center, and all that—but its activities are to be so broad in their scope as to permit the club to get behind any and every movement that has for its purpose the advancement of the interests of Troy as an industrial, social, political, educational and religious center. Likewise, it is here to stand up for the city and its constituent territory and to protect it from discrimination or the imposition of injustice of any kind whatsoever and from any source. It is within the power of the Troy Commercial Club effectively to work for and accomplish great things for this city and community that could not be accomplished by individual effort. Among those things for which it shall direct its energies may be mentioned a few.

The encouragement of our mercantile interests, that the city may become a better trading center for Troy and surrounding territory.

A presentation of Troy's advantages as a shipping point, in order that our shipping trade may be enhanced, better facilities be provided by the railroads, and better rates and regulations granted.

Encouragement extended toward the location of factories, elevators, storage houses, that Troy's advantages as an industrial center may be recognized.

To advocate home banking, so that Kansas money may be kept in Kansas to the advantage of the Kansas people and for the building up of a sound rural credit system that will make this community financially independent, and at the same time make the depositors prosperous and free from loss through bad foreign investments.

To promote the agricultural interests of the Troy neighborhood, or all of Doniphan County, by friendly relations with the farmers and fruitgrowers.

To encourage our educational system in every way possible, that the youth of Troy and the community may receive here at home the education necessary to fit them for life's duties.

To promote movements for the beautification and for the improvement of Troy, that it become an ideal place in which to reside and in which to rear boys and girls to splendid manhood and womanhood.

While strictly a non-political organization, to promote economy in the administration of public affairs and efficiency in the public service, that the burdens of taxation be lessened and that the taxpayers receive just returns from the money they pay into the public treasury.

To boost for good roads and good streets, needed public improvements, better railway accommodations, and for all things that are for the general good.

These are some of the many things with which the Troy Commercial Club will have to deal, and which the club hopes to accomplish. The club is composed of live, patriotic, public spirited citizens of this city, and they are all working together for Troy and its constituent community. ## Isaac B. Clary

Isaac B. Clary, who died at his residence at Troy Junction, July 5, 1915, was one of the pioneers of Doniphan County who served his country in the Civil War, having enlisted in the Fourth Iowa at Des Moines, where he was a gallant soldier until, on March 7, 1862, he was wounded and later discharged, May 1, 1862. After recovering from his injury he again enlisted in Company A, Thirteenth Kansas, serving until the close of the war. He was married to Hattie Clary in 1865, and reared one daughter, Mrs. Ed Young and four sons, Edward, Roy, Curtis and John. On October 17, 1885, he was again married to Lizzie Miller Mallows. To this union two daughters, Ollie, now Mrs. George C. Wykert, and Bessie, Mrs. James Shelton, and three sons, Lon, Hobert and Herbert were reared. The deceased was a member of the G. A. R. and manifested an unusual interest in that organization at all times.

DORY EMERY HALE

A Native of Indiana, Coming to Doniphan County With His Parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Hale When Less Than a Year Old.

Situated on the west side of the Mosquito Creek road, one mile north of Troy, on the old Isaac Graves farm, stands the beautiful residence of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Hale, who are among the progressive people of Doniphan County. The substantial buildings and the appearance in general of the farm would be taken as prima facie evidence by the casual observer, passing by, that the proprietor of this valuable ninety acres of land was a methodical farmer. Mr. Hale is a successful farmer as well as a fruit-grower. During the past few years he has kept his orchard in good condition and the net receipts from this twelve acres of fruit exemplifies the fact that a good orchard pays.

The subject of this sketch was born in Gossport, Indiana, September 28, 1865, and came to this county with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Hale, when less than a year old, in 1866. Here he was reared and educated in the country schools. On January 17, 1894, he was married to Miss Ella Olive Graves, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Graves, who were among Doniphan County's best citizens. The officiating clergyman was Rev. J. G. Clark, pastor of the Baptist Church of Troy.

DR. EDGAR O. HENSCHALL

Former School Teacher of Doniphan County Makes Good in Medical Profession.

Edgar O. Henschall is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Henschall, and by birth is a Southerner, his father having been born in Richmond, Virginia, on December 30, 1832, and his mother in Baltimore, Maryland, June 1, 1834. His parents have both passed to their reward. His father died in Kansas City, Kansas, January 13, 1911, and the mother June 21, 1890, at the same place.

Edgar O. made his entry in this world of joy October 12, 1858, three hundred sixty-six years after Columbus discovered America, in Council Bluffs, Iowa. On May 1, 1886, he was wedded to Miss Emma Silverwood, who is an ideal wife.

The subject of this sketch taught school in Doniphan County for several years, and then proceeded to educate himself for a doctor. After completing his medical education, he practiced medicine at Portis, Osborne County, Kansas, a few years, and then moved to Osborne. They have one son living, James E. Henschall, born April 4, 1887; daughters were Ethel Silverwood, born July 17, 1890, killed in an auto accident in the fall of 1910, and Miss Lizzie Irene, born February 25, 1895. This estimable family is happy and contented in Osborne, where they enjoy all the comforts of this life to be had in a country town.

Henry Rosecrans Wykert

H. R. Wykert, who was reared on the old William Wykert farm, where Albert Kasselhut lives, two miles north and east of Troy, is now one of the successful business men of Council Bluffs, Iowa, having engaged in the tent and awning business several years ago. He was married to Miss Lena Wolf, and they have one son, Leland, named in honor of the veteran politician, who is being educated in Omaha. Rosecrans was educated in the old sixty school house, which stood northeast of Troy.

The subject of this sketch secured a patent on a folding cot which many of our Chautauqua campers have found to their convenience.

The National Game at Troy

Baseball Teams of Today and Other Days—The "Topelians" of '67 That Played on the Old "Turtle Back"—The Troy Team of '95 That Won the Pennant in the Kansas State League—The Crack Club of 1914 That Played on the Ball Park Built by John S. Norman—Ty Cobbs of Troy of Yesteryears—The Fans Fans of the Good Old Times.

A backward glance at the pastimes of other days and other years recalls to a few of the old time fans who are with us yet that your modern baseball clubs with their Ty Cobbs and Walter Johnsons haven't anything worth mentioning on the Topelians of Troy away back in the year 1867 when the national game was then in its infancy and when the pitcher pitched the ball, 'stead of throwin' it, and when the "hay pounders" would knock flies so high you'd think the ball was a speck of dust up against the sky. Ask any one of these old time players round about Troy what kind of a "nine" we had then. Players like Samuel A. Macomber, or Len D. Noyes whose boys Ed and Robert played on the 1914 nine—and they will tell you there's no use talking, the boys of today may be good players and all that, but they aren't in it with the boys of the old "Topelians."

Troy has had baseball ever since the game was invented back in the 1850's and played on the Boston Commons, though there appear to have been three different epochs in the history of Troy when the town boasted of having ball clubs that were real ball clubs; and in natural course of events Troy has had some mighty good baseball players, and a few of them are still left around here as most any team would discover if it dropped into town for a game.

The "Topelian" baseball club was organized in Troy, April 12, 1867, and it flourished for three years. The club was composed of young men of the town. James Reville and Manna C. Reville, brothers, had played baseball in the East and they helped organize the club and were among the players. Samuel A. Macomber and Harvey Macomber, Leonard D. Noyes, John H. Jones, Calvin Morehead, Charley Finch, Dr. E. H. LeDuce, Chal Chatman, Eugene Brown, all played on the team. The games were played where Dr. H. H. Sandy, V. S., now has a berry patch in east Troy. The ground, or diamond, was nicknamed "Turtle Back" because of its surface. The admission price was twenty-five cents and everybody went to the games. They played the clubs of several cities and towns on the home grounds and won a majority of the games. At the end of the season they made the trip to Lawrence in a big wagon drawn by four mules, to play the championship game and lost.

That is nearly fifty years ago, but there are some of the players and fans of that period left to tell of the "Topelians" and their playing. Samuel Macomber, who was a soldier before he was a ball player, lives west of Troy on his farm. Len D. Noyes is a traveling grocery salesman and still resides in Troy. John H. Jones, who was a soldier in the Thirty-seventh Illinois and was mustered out at Houston, Texas, February 9, 1856, resides in Troy. Richard Macomber is living in Idaho. Cal Morehead reresides at Steele City, Nebraska. Eugene Brown lives in Troy. The whereabouts of Charley Finch is not known, as far as we can learn, by any in Troy. Dr. LeDuce and James Reville are dead. The residence of Chal Chatman and Manna C. Reville, if living, is not known here.

The baseball club of 1895 was composed of strong players and heavy hitters and it was in that year they pounded out the championship and won the pennant in the Kansas State League, when Leavenworth, Topeka, Emporia, Holton and Whiting with Troy composed the league. William B. Devereaux, now in New Zealand, was manager of the club. Harry Connors was pitcher. Guy Wilson, a brother of Sheriff Wilson, now of Troy, was a pitcher and was called "Fustie." Len Noyes whose father had played on the old "Topelian" club, was a fielder and was called "Little Hound" for his fleet-footedness in running after flies. He is now a traveling salesman for a St. Joseph house and resides in Troy. Wood Sturgis, called "Rabbit" was a fielder and is now running a show in Texas. Charley Brewster, short-stop, was called "Albooze." "Whitie" Harry Whiting was a pitcher. Jim Faulkner, "Shorty," was catcher. John Redmond, pitcher, was known to the fans as "Red." William Neely, first-base, was called "Kid." Bert Wakefield, the second baseman, is our colored barber in Troy, running a shop of his own.

The third epoch in the baseball history of Troy came with the building of a fine ball park in 1914, by John S. Norman, a former school teacher, former merchant and now president of the First National Bank. Mr. Norman is an athlete and is a lover of good clean, manly sports. To encourage such he equipped a fine park on three acres of land leased of Everett McGalliard on the north side of Troy, adjoining the properties of Mrs. Mary Townsend and G. Foster Kent. A ten-foot fence was built around the three acres and an admission of twenty-five cents was charged.

The Troy Bastball Club was organized by Mr. Norman, B. A. Byers and five others interested in the game, and a strong team of players was brought together. These players were: Robert Noyes, third-base; Edward Noyes, catcher; Harry Briggs, pitcher; Robert Dinsmore, first base; John Misse, short-stop; Mud Misse, second-base; Paul Brown, centerfield; Everett McGalliard, right-field; Warren Kibber, left-field.

The games played by this club were worth seeing and the crowds in the park numbered 150 to 300. The club showed fine playing in the field and at the bat, and of the last twenty games played it won nineteen. The club was continued in 1915 with good success and the people of Troy witnessed some fine baseball. The club received the hearty support and were encouraged to play good ball by the enthusiastic fans of Troy who generally turned out en masse. Among these baseball enthusiasts may be mentioned B. A. Byers, Tom Caldwell, Dave Elder, George Larson, W. L. Privett, John Jones, Will S. Clark, Clark Norman, Frank Kotch and many others.

THOMAS GARTLAND

A Former Resident of Doniphan County, Now Engaged in the Employment Business in St. Joseph.

If you want to buy a pair of shoes, you go to a shoe store, or if it is clothing you want, you go to a clothing store; so if you want to employ some person you naturally should go to an employment agent who understands the kind of person you desire to employ, and who is in position to find that person for you. Thomas Gartland, who has been in the employment business in St. Joseph for fifteen years, is an expert in his line. He has given a great deal of study to the problem of finding the right man for the right place, and he has been so successful that hundreds of his patrons are dependent upon him for their help on farms, on railroad and construction work and in factories and all lines of employment.

Mr. Gartland came to Doniphan County in 1865, and lived in Wolf River Township with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Gartland. After the death of his father he moved to St. Joseph with his mother, where she died. Mr. Gartland is single and was born in Amboy, Illinois.

The Gartland Labor Agency is at 1206 South Sixth street in St. Joseph. While Mr. Gartland supplies all positions with help, his most extensive business is in supplying labor for the railroads. He makes a specialty in placing foreign laborers in these positions, and his charge is $1 for securing a job for each applicant.

His old friends who reside in the St. Benedict neighborhood are his best customers. He is a public spirited man and keeps posted on current events. Make Thomas Gartland's place your headquarters while in St. Joseph.

ELROY C. CUMMINGS

One of the Prosperous and Progressive Farmers of Doniphan County, and a Valued Citizen.

The state of Iowa has contributed some of Doniphan County's most progressive and prosperous farmers, of whom Elroy C. Cummings is a splendid representative. Mr. Cummings is a native of Clinton County in the Hawkeye state, born at Toronto, January 7, 1861. After spending his boyhood in the old home he went to Colorado, where he was married November 21, 1879, to Maggie Irvine, the wedding taking place at the Beaver Hotel in Akron, Colorado.

Mr. Cummings resided at Washington, Colorado, on a farm until 1890, when he came to Troy and settled on the old Joseph Walker farm, three miles northeast of Troy in Center Township. He lived there ten years, then moved to Burr Oak Township in the Gladden Bottom. He resided there until a few years ago, when he bought the old Christopher place in Center Township, six miles east and north of Troy.

Mr. and Mrs. Cummings have two daughters. Fern is now Mrs. Walter Schuler of near Wathena, and Mae is a prominent school teacher in Doniphan County. Their two sons are Robert and Myron, both living at home with the parents.

Mr. Cummings owns 240 acres of good Doniphan County land, and is considered as among the leading and successful farmers of Center Township, up to date in his methods, and one who is capable of producing abundant crops from his acres. He says that of all the places in which he has resided, and where he has farmed, he likes Doniphan County the best. He is one of the good citizens of the county upon whom the people can depend in any movement for the upbuilding of society and the community in which he resides.

FRED MEIDINGER

A German Pioneer Who Lived an Honorable Life.

One of the energetic, hard-working men who came to Doniphan County in 1856 was Fred Meidinger, who settled in Marion Township and saw the southeast corner of Doniphan County develop from its wild and untamed state to one of the best berry sections in the Middle West.

The subject of this sketch was born February 2, 1845, in Germany, and died January 22, 1913. He was married to Miss Kate Frank, who was born September 17, 1849, and died August 5, 1912. Of this union eight children are living — William Albert, George Frederick, Edward Julius, Louis, Otto, Henry Lawrence and Edward. These children are living honorable lives to bless the memory of their parents.

Benjamin Wrigley, a lawyer of Troy, was a delegate in the Wyandotte Constitutional convention in 1859, and it was he who proposed placing the western boundary of Kansas on the twenty-third meridian (Hill City and Fort Dodge). He was opposed to including the short grass country as a part of Kansas.

Do not fail to read the one-page sketch of A. L. Perry the expert abstractor of Troy.

James W. Baldwin

A Native of England, Whose Father Was a Victim of the Battle of Waterloo, Spent Twelve Years at Sea on Merchant Vessels and a Man-of-War, Then Came to America, Founded a Home in Kansas, Fought in the Civil War and Died at the Age of Eighty-Seven, Leaving His Sons and Daughter to Bless His Memory.

The late James W. Baldwin was a man who had seen more of the world than any other man in Kansas, perhaps, and his experiences, if put into writing, would make a volume more interesting and more true than anything which could be invented by writers of fiction.

James W. Baldwin was born in the village of Lutchmoreth, Hartfordshire, England, fifteen miles from London, on April 25, 1828. His parents were James and Martha Baldwin. His father fought as a British soldier and was wounded in the Battle of Waterloo, famous in European history, and died as a result of the wound.

When James W. Baldwin was nine years of age he went to sea, and for twelve years he sailed the oceans wide and far. He was on merchant vessels a part of the time. The other part he was on a man-of-war—the American or United States brig "Perry." During the twelve years he was at sea James W. Baldwin visited every port in the world open to navigation at that period.

The subject of this sketch, a hint of whose remarkable experiences on the water has just been related, quit the service when he was but a young man of twenty-one. He then settled in the United States, the home of the brave and the free. He was glad to claim it as his adopted country. He lived in West Virginia a while. In 1856 he moved to Doniphan County, and settled on a claim which he preempted, 160 acres in what is now Center Township. Subsequently he sold eighty acres of this tract of Mordica J. Rhue, but retained the other eighty, besides a comfortable home in Troy. He conducted his farming operations successfully until 1898, when he retired from active life and moved to Troy.

In the dark days of the Civil War James W. Baldwin proved his devotion to the country of his adoption by enlisting his services in defense of the Stars and Stripes, and fought to maintain their honor. It was in 1861, as a member of Co. F., Tenth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, that he entered the army under the command of Colonel William Weir and served faithfully for three years. He took part in nearly all of the actions in which his regiment was engaged.

James W. Baldwin was twice married. His first wife, whose maiden name was Melissa Ann Brookover, died in 1862. By this union he had one son, James H. Baldwin. In 1863 Mr. Baldwin married Miss Matilda Field, a daughter of William and Sarah Graham Field. Mrs. Matilda Baldwin died October 1, 1906, at the age of 81 years. She was born in Scioto County, Ohio, December 17, 1824, and moved to Doniphan County in 1859. By his second wife Mr. Baldwin had two sons, William A. and Artie S.

James W. Baldwin died February 14, 1915. He was a member of Kennedy Post, No. 292, G. A. R. He was an honored citizen and a patriot, and the people honored him while living as now they honor his memory. His sons are living in and near Troy.

William is a carpenter and one of the largest contractors in this section. He is an expert in his line. He owns three houses which he rents, besides his nice residence in East Troy. He was married to Miss Viola Eugenia Bembrick, June 16, 1891. They have four daughters and two sons, and are giving them a good education. Their names are as follows: Charles Franklin, Anna May, Blanch Irene, Effie Pearl, Robert Vernon and Grace Imogene. James H. owns two houses in Troy beside twenty acres of the home place. Artie S. has charge of the farming operations and owns sixty acres of the home place.

Residence of Charles Herzing, situated eight miles northwest of Troy.

School House Bonds

The election to vote bonds to build the three-story brick school house, which was removed in 1902, when the present structure was built, was held Saturday, Oct. 13, 1866, at the court house in Troy. The election passed off quietly, seventy votes being cast, sixty-five of which favored the proposition and five against. The election was to vote $4,000 bonds. At the time this election passed off, Mr. Townsend opened a school house for girls in the building which was occupied by Davis & Wicker as a store, and D. W. Brown opened a school for boys in the old school house.

RURAL DELIVERY ROUTES

Doniphan County Has Twenty-One — First Routes Began August 1, 1901, in Troy.

One of the most appreciated blessings that has been bestowed upon Doniphan County is the free delivery of mail to rural patrons. This accommodation, which Uncle Sam provided for his farmer folk throughout the United States generally, has not only made it possible for the people in the country to get their mail from loved ones daily or weekly, as the case may be, but it provides a means of trade which they lacked most woefully in days gone by.

Today in all Doniphan County there are twenty-one rural mail routes, reaching out to every nook and corner of the county, which is positive evidence of the prosperity of the country. The postoffices from which these routes have their source are as follows: Troy, six routes; Doniphan, one route; Severance, two routes; Leona, one route; White Cloud, two routes; Highland, one route; Wathena, five routes; Sparks, two routes; Denton, one route.

With rural free delivery to their farm gates and the parcel post system recently added, the people of rural Doniphan County have an advantage, the value of which cannot be estimated. The farmers and the farmers' wives, in their busy season, and in the cold of winter, often find it difficult to get to town to shop, and the rural delivery has solved the problem for them. The farmer when in urgent need of small hardware, either 'phones or writes to the city, and in a few days' time has the article in his possession, and nothing has been neglected and no time lost while he purchases same. It is the same with my lady of the farm. She has her parcels come out from town to her very door without any exertion on her part. On the other hand, the country people are sending their products to the city by mail. Butter and eggs are commodities that the rural carrier deals with daily, and occasionally other products, sometimes of a humorous nature, are packed and sealed for rural free delivery.

Troy

The first rural free delivery service inaugurated in Doniphan County was out of Troy on August 1, 1901. Three routes were laid out by Maj. H. J. Ormsby, who was rural route inspector for the postoffice department. The carriers appointed were John A. Brandt, Charles G. Bailey and Edward Monroe. The latter two are still in the service. These three original routes sufficed for a time, but gradually the need became apparent for more extended service, and three additional routes were established, making six rural routes radiating from Troy and covering practically all of the country contiguous thereto. The farmers of sixty years ago, who drove to Doniphan County with an ox team and linch-pin wagon, had never dreamed of having their mail delivered daily at their gates.

The routes that have their beginning at the Troy office are today handled by the following carriers: Number 1, Edward Monroe; Number 2, Elmer Trant; Number 3, Charles G. Bailey; Number 4, Robert Culp; Number 5, Marion O. Briggs, and Number 6, William Briggs. These men are all well-known citizens of Troy and are equally as well liked. It is very seldom that any of them misses a day's drive, and when this does occasionally happen, a substitute is always supplied.

Doniphan

The Doniphan route is handled very capably by Frank Brenner, who has an excellent record among his patrons. He belongs to the celebrated family of pioneers who made Doniphan famous. The postmaster is William Cooper, who is always on the job

Severance

The two Severance routes were established on April 1st and June 15th of 1902, with John Wesley Ware as carrier on Number 1 and Charles E. Hargis on Number 2. The present incumbents are R. W. Tomilson on Number 1 and Horace E. Coy on Number 2. The postmaster is Thomas J. Lyons.

Leona

Leona's one route is taken care of at present by S. J. A. Gardiner. Mr. Gardiner was born in Springfield, Ohio, and while he is proud of the fact, he is still prouder that he is a rural mail carrier of Doniphan County. The present postmaster is William A. Bodwell, but when the route was established by Judge W. D. Gilbert, route inspector, May 1, 1902, Link Weidensaul was postmaster. Mr. Gardiner was married to Laura A. Lamberton, April 11, 1885. They have one son, Earl S.

White Cloud

The two routes which emanate from White Cloud were laid out August 30, 1902, by Judge W. D. Gilbert of Atchison, and service was begun on both routes November 1, 1902. Henry Connelly served as carrier on Route Number 1 up to the time of his death, which occurred in February, 1903. Substitute W. B. Sloan served the route for six months, when Otis Williams was appointed and served until November 1, 1913. Williams resigned and was succeeded by Roy M. Green, who is the present carrier. M. M. Dutton served as carrier on Route No. 2 for eighteen months, when he resigned, and was succeeded by Joseph White, who has served this route continuously since Mr. Dutton's resignation, and in point of service is the oldest carrier out of White Cloud. James P. Kelly is the very efficient postmaster at White Cloud, and he is ably assisted by Miss Agnes Kent.

Highland

Highland has but one route and this was established December 1, 1911, under the inspection of C. P. Johnson. Alva Jackson of Sparks was the first carrier. The present carrier is Mr. Hill and Arch Bruner is the active postmaster.

Wathena

Wathena, with five rural routes, ranks next to Troy in importance. Route No. 1 was established July 1, 1902, with James Parkhurst, carrier, and Ray Gilbert, substitute. Mr. Parkhurst carried about one month, when Robert S. Guy took the route. Route No. 2 was established July 1, 1902, with E. V. Wakeman as carrier and substitute Valentine Brokar. Route Number 3 was established November 1, 1904, and Lawrence Poirer was the carrier and Mrs. E. A. Poirer the substitute.

Route Number 4 was established October 16, 1905, with William A. and Henry Meidinger, carrier and substitute, respectively. Number 5 was established October 16, 1905, with Frank T. Winn, carrier, and H. N. Winn, substitute. What is now Route Number 4 was formerly Number 2. At the time the present Route Number 2 was established, the numbers were transposed as they now are. William Redman Martin is postmaster at Wathena, Harold Spencer Winn is assistant postmaster, and Miss Gertrude Brazleton is general delivery clerk. The present carriers are as follows: Number 1, Ernest L. Edge, Number 2, William Meidinger, Number 3 Lawrence A. Poirer, Number 4 Frank T. Winn, Number 5, Charles B. Amsden.

Sparks

Mr. Reynolds is the only rural carrier out of Sparks, but he takes care of the route in so satisfactory a manner that Uncle Sam has not seen fit to increase the service to date. This route was established about the time other routes in the county were.

Denton

The rural route from Denton was established in April, 1903, and was laid out by Judge Gilbert of Atchison, as were the majority of the rural routes in Doniphan County. Mr. Thomas A. Wrighton was the first carrier of the route and has continued to hld the position up to the present time. Mr. Charles Murray was the first substitute and George Cox is the present substitute. Kyle Murray was the postmaster when the rural route was established, and the present incumbent is Mr. Clarence Isaacs.

These carriers on all the routes listed above are faithful servants of Uncle Sam, and the weather is never too inclement for them, and it is rarely that one of the mmisses a day for sickness. The farmers of Doniphan County certainly appreciate the service and are already utilizing it for their profit.

Mount Olive Cemetery

This old burial ground adjoining the old James B. Maynard farm in which so many of the people of forty and fifty years ago lie sleeping, was named for two loved ones who sleep beneath the sod. These were Olive Zimmerman, oldest daughter of Jacob and Louisa Zimmerman, and Olive Maynard, daughter of Judge and Mrs. James B. Maynard. The two beautiful daughters died in the year 1862, and they were the first to be buried in Mount Olive Cemeterey. Judge Maynard gave five acres of land from his 160-acre farm for burial purposes.

The biggest grocery house Troy ever had is owned by A. L. Decker.

Farming Beats Railroading

Marion F. Earhart Quits Locomotive for the More Alluring Occupation of Raising Crops on Doniphan County Farm.

Farming is surely getting inviting and prosperous when a young man quits a lucrative job as a locomotive fireman and extra engineer in order to devote his life to the less exciting avocation of a tiller of the soil. A few people seem skeptical of the ultimate result of the change, but Marion F. Earhart has sufficient confidence in the fertility of the soil of Doniphan County to figure out for himself a grand and glorious future.

Mr. Earhart is still a young man in the prime of life, having been born October 22, 1878, near Tiffin, St. Clair County, Mo. Coming to Doniphan County with his parents, when he was but a year old, his youthful days were spent along the prairies which have since been developed into the most valuable farms and orchards. Early in life he evinced an aptitude for crying sales, and is considered a good auctioneer, but abandoned this prospect for a job as fireman on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, where he worked diligently for three years until he was promoted to the more responsible position of extra locomotive switch engineer.

For seven years, Mr. Earhart was connected with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and ran out of Pueblo, but eventually gave up that post in order to engage in farming on the old Ritter place of ninety acres, seven miles northeast of Troy, which he bought last year. Mr. Earhart is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen at Pueblo, and also is a member of the Troy Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Number 38.

On September 22, 1902, Mr. Earhart was married to Miss Ada M. Mann, one of the most charming girls of Doniphan County, and a member of one of the best known families in the vicinity of Troy, being a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson Mann. They have four children: Harold Mann, born April 20, 1904; Veva Irene, born December 7, 1905; Esther Lillian, born August 20, 1908, and Grace Elizabeth, born August 16, 1911. Both Mr. and Mrs. Earhart are proud of their children and will make an effort to philosophically educate them.

We give a view of a portion of the fine archaeological collection of Dr. R. S. Dinsmore, of Troy, Kansas, accompanied by the likeness of the genial Doctor himself. Doctor Dinsmore's collection is tastily displayed in his office on the main street in Troy, where it is admiringly viewed by many visitors. The collection, which consists largely of local specimens, mostly gathered in his home county (Doniphan, on the Missouri River, in the northeastern corner of the state), is one of the very best private collections in Kansas. It abounds in perfect specimens, for some of which the Doctor has refused very fancy offers. Doctor Dinsmore is one of the most enthusiastic and intelligent archaeologists in Kansas, and is a member of the International Society of Archaeologists. As a field worker he has made some interesting developments in his home county. There are few men in northeastern Kansas who are more versatile or better known than Doctor Dinsmore. He is a skilled physician and has been a surgeon for the Rock Island Railway for nearly thirty years. For an equal number of years he was coroner of his county. For a long time he was the champion rifle and pistol shot of the Missouri Valley, and was in many contests with Buffalo Bill, Annie Oakley, Doctor Carver and other noted shots. He was also one of the best shotgun trap shooters in the state. He is the only Kansas member of the American Rifle Club. He is an enthusiastic sportsman and has taken many big hunting trips in various parts of the country. He resides in town, but owns a fine farm just outside the city limits, where he is actively interested in horticulture, agriculture and stock-raising. Doctor Dinsmore is sixty years of age, and is a native of Washington, Iowa. He has lived in Doniphan County, Kansas, for forty-four years.—The Philatelic West, published at Superior, Nebraska.

William Mitchell Killed

Troy was the scene of a brutal tragedy on Monday night, June 2, 1905. Shortly after 4 o'clock on Tuesday morning, June 13, Mrs. William Mitchell pounded at the door of William Young's home and upon being admitted, staggered into the room with a bullet wound in her head and bleeding profusely. She stated that she and her husband had quarreled and that he had shot her and then turned the weapon upon himself effectively, dying instantly.

Upon investigation, Mitchell was found dead in his bed, and when Drs. Dinsmore and Campbell, who had been summoned, arrived, Mrs. Mitchell had become unconscious and fainted. Subsequently she was arrested and held for the murder of her husband, but was acquitted when tried, in the next term of the district court. There were various rumors circulated as to the cause of the murder or suicide, and opinion was pretty well formed. No evidence, however, has been found, and to this day there is no record of law explaining the crime, but every one drew their own conclusion at the time.

Charlestown

Charlestown was located on the Missouri River, on Section 22, Town 2, Range 21, in Center Township. Was located by a town company in the winter of 1856-57, under pre-emption certificate No. 612, at the Kickapoo land district.

This was a thriving steamboat town for a few years and hundreds of tons of merchandise were unloaded at the wharf. A postoffice was established March 14, 1857, two days before the postoffice was established at Troy. Michael Byrd was named as the first postmaster and served until Aug. 17, 1859, at which time James M. Miller, father of Jake Miller, who resides in the Charlestown neighborhood, was appointed. Mr. Miller served as postmaster from Aug. 17, 1859, to Dec. 17, 1859, when the Department reappointed Michael Byrd and the latter served as postmaster until July 3, 1860, at which time the postoffice was discontinued. During the war there was no postoffice at Charlestown, but in 1866 the country was more thickly populated and the residents demanded a postofifce, and October 16 of the same year the postoffice was restablished, the name having been changed to Charleston, and Jacob Bozarth was appointed postmaster, serving until November 1, 1867, at which time Mr. Bozarth made complaint to the department that the receipts of the office would not justify his devoting his time to attending to the office, and on November 1, 1867, the office was discontinued. About thirty-four years after said office had been discontinued the citizens petitioned Hon. Charles Curtis, Congressman from the First District of Kansas, to intercede for them in having a postoffice established, and on June 10, 1901, the postoffice was re-established as Bozarth, named in honor of its former postmaster, and Lewis H. Gibson was made postmaster, who served until Oct. 14, 1903, when the rural route was established and the office was again discontinued.

John and Frank Kotsch own the old townsite of Charleston. James M. Miller, father of Jacob, William, Davis, Jarret and James, was one of the leading merchants of the town at one time. Lorenza D. Stocking, uncle of C. I. Stocking of Hiawatha, established a jewelry store there and Atillis Highley, who owns the place where Vachel Lewis now resides, was engaged in a general merchandise business.

Oscar Sanders

Oscar Sanders is the popular and genial salesman for the Doniphan Candy Co. of St. Joseph, who comes up this way often to mingle pleasure with business. Mr. Sanders is one of the best candy salesmen in Kansas. You can go to any part of the eastern part of the state and find the brands manufactured by the company he represents. He has a way of breezing into a place of business, greeting the proprietor with a handshake and hearty smile and before the business man hardly knows it himself, he has placed a large order. Of course it requires good goods in order to sell them, but Mr. Sanders' friends here believe he could sell pennies for ten cents.

Troy Lodge, No. 55, A. F. & A. M.

Organized February 4, 1867, This Lodge Has Labored Uninterruptedly in Our Midst for More Than Forty-Nine Years and Has Wrought a Grand Work—A History of the Organization, With the Pro Tem Officers at Its Institution, Officers and Members of Today.

Troy Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, is not the oldest Masonic Lodge in Kansas, but there is no more loyal membership in any secret society within the state, and certainly none that have wrought more for the welfare of the state and for society, than those whose privilege it is and has been to claim membership in this splendid body. A history of Troy Lodge discloses the mere changes in officers, perhaps a reference now and then to its members, or maybe the mention of some particular function. No history of a Masonic Lodge can tell the good that is done in the name of free masonry, the charity dispensed without ostentation that one never hears of, the wrongs righted, and all of those beautiful teachings of the order exemplified in the lives of members and in their acts one toward another.

A special dispensation for the organization of Troy Lodge, A. F. & A. M., was issued by the Most Excellent Grand Master of Kansas, M. S. Adams, bearing date of January 24, 1867. That dispensation was issued to R. S. Nesbut, P. S. Soper, Isaac M. Lee and others to form and open a lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. The first meeting was held in Troy, February 4, 1867. It was called to order by Isaac Smallwood of Lodge No. 31, Arcania, he having been authorized by the Most Worshipful Grand Master to organize said lodge and set its members to work. The Worshipful Master appointed Cyrus C. Camp senior warden pro tem; Henry Boder, Jr., grandfather of brothers L. L. and H. D. Strong, junior warden pro tem; E. W. Stratton, senior deacon pro tem; W. M. Battis, Jr., junior deacon pro tem; Pliney S. Soper, secretary pro tem; Sidney Tennent, treasurer pro-tem; George H. Mosely, tyler pro tem.

Present that night at the first meeting of Troy Lodge were: Charles Highley, Leonard Smith, William M. Monroe, Daniel Bursk, J. B. Wheeler, R. T. Nesbit, I. M. Lee, J. B. Maynard; visiting brothers, W. H. Nesbit, E. W. Stratton, William J. Orem of Arcania Lodge No. 31, of Doniphan; Brother Dr. Archer of Ohio, Brother William Battis of Illinois.

The lodge was opened in due form on third degree masonry. The following brothers filed their demits: Brother Daniel Bursk of Sharonville Lodge No. 204, Ohio; George H. Mosely of Gentryville Lodge No. 125, Missouri; Brother J. B. Wheeler of Tuscan Lodge No. 143, Indiana; Brother William M. Monroe of Valley Lodge No. 145, Ohio; Brothers Sidney Tennant C. C. Camp, R. T. Nesbit, Henry Boder, Jr., P. S. Soper, Charles Highley, Leonard Smith and Isaac M. Lee of Arcania Lodge No. 31.

On motion a committee of three consisting of Brothers C. C. Camp, an uncle of H. D. and L. L. Strong, P. S. Soper and Sidney Tennant were appointed to draft suitable by-laws for the government of the lodge. This committee on by-laws reported and recommended the adoption of the by-laws of Arcania Lodge No. 31, except as to the time of holding their communications.

The first officers: The warrant of dispensation having appointed Brother R. T. Nesbit W. M.; C. C. Camp, S. W.; Henry Boder, Jr., J. W.; J. B. Wheeler, S. D.; Charles Highley, J. D.; Daniel Bursk, treasurer; P. S. Soper, secretary; George H. Mosely, tyler.

The officers for 1916: Loren T. Hargis, W. M.; Henry D. Strong, J. W.; Herman Widman, tyler; George H. Burckhalter, secretary; Warren Allison, S. W.; Ed A. Sinclair, treasurer; Emil E. Elder, steward; Ira Chapple, steward; L. L. Strong, S. D.; Marion O. Briggs, J. D.

It would be a task well nigh impossible to give here a list of the men who have been members of Troy Lodge since its birth, those who have gone from us and those who are still among the living. However, it may be said that the membership rolls from the time of organization to this date have contained the names of many of the men who have been foremost in the affairs of our community for these forty-nine years.

The members who have been connected with Troy Lodge longest are Al Garvin, who took his first degree December 6, 1873; Francis F. Paige, who was taken in October 19, 1874; W. T. Wood, who joined May 17, 1875; and Cyrus Leland, Jr., who was initiated January 20, 1875.

During its life, Troy Lodge No. 55 has met in different lodge halls in Troy. The present hall is on the third floor of the Leland Opera House building.

This lodge has continued its labors uninterruptedly from its inception to the present time, a period of more than forty-nine years, and while not the oldest, it is one of the strongest outside the lodges in the large cities, and has made a record in the community which, if those who have been touched by its activities or have been blesseed by its ministrations could speak out, would be a revelation to even its present membership. Its membership rolls show that during its existence several hundred Master Masons at one time or another have been among its members and have attended its communications.

It would be impossible for one to measure the value and influence of such a lodge, organized for high purposes, on the community, or even to estimate its influence upon the lives of its members. Certain it is, however, that Troy Lodge No. 55, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, has wrought a grand work here in our midst, and many there be of our citizens here, or those who have gone out to other parts of this world, those that have gone down to the grave, who could ask no greater thing to be said of them than, "He was a good Mason."

FRANK WEBBER

One of the Swiss Citizens Who Is Making a Success of Small Farming and Fruit Growing.

Frank Webber, whose pretty eighty-acre farm is six miles north and east of Troy, was born in Switzerland July 16, 1864, and possesses the characteristics of that hardy, industrious and thrifty race of people. He came to America in 1885, landing at New York on December 17 of that year, and took the first train to St. Joseph, Missouri. There he remained until January 16, 1886, when he came to Doniphan County. Here he went to work for Chris Bauers in Marion Township at 50 cents a day. He next worked for August Kiehnhoff for one year at $10 a month. Meanwhile this young Swiss, eager to become a full-fledged American citizen, learned the English language and generally familiarized himself with the customs of American citizens. His industry and his studiousness, his good citizenship, won him many friends, and he was successful from the start, though it was by slow degrees that he builded for himself and established himself in comfortable circumstances as a farmer and fruit-grower.

On October 4, 1901, the subject of this sketch was married to Elizabeth Leimbach at the Marion Township Lutheran Church, by the Reverend Mr. Wagner in the parsonage. Four daughters and one son have blessed their union. Katie Josephine, born July 22, 1903; Frank, born February 18, 1909; Margaret Emma, born August 7, 1912; Louise Anna, born January 12, 1913; Hazel Elizabeth, born February 17, 1914.

Mr. and Mrs. Webber and their children reside on the eighty-acre farm six miles north and east of Troy, which the parents have by hard labor made one of the best small farms in the county. Mr. Webber has a few berries on the farm. He has 300 bearing apple trees and a new orchard of 300 trees, he set out in 1915.

The subject of this sketch is pubuc-spirited and manifests considerable interest in Number 60 school, where he is a member of the school board.

OLD MILL BURNED

Old Mill Was Scene of Great Conflagration.

On Saturday night, December 22, 1883, the P. D. Toby Mills in the south part of town was discovered to be on fire. When first seen and the alarm was given the flames were bursting through and had already spread over such space in the interior that any attempt to save the building would have been useless. All efforts were directed to saving the loose material on the lower floor. The books were got out and several wagon loads of flour; but a large quantity of flour and wheat were burned. The fire commenced in the second story at the north end of the mill, near the engine room. The origin is not known, but is believed to have been accidental. The mill was shut down at six o'clock and all was then safe. Some think it may have been from heat generated in the purifiers, or a spark may have lodged in some part of the mill during working hours. Mr. Tobie purchased this mill in the spring paying $10,000 for it. During the summer the building was overhauled and repaired and new machinery was put in. It was in good running order. There were several thousand dollars worth of flour and wneat in the mill running the amount of stock and building up to about $20,000. The mill was originally built by Tracy & Parker.

Charles Avery Hines

A good farmer and respected citizen is Charles Avery Hines, who resides on the old Vachol Clary farm five miles northeast of Troy. Mr. Hines was born near Lafayette, Stark County, Illinois, October 6, 1874. He first came to Doniphan County when he was twenty-one years old. Here he was married January 3, 1900, to Miss Belle Keckler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mose Keckler, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Aubrey Hancock of the M. E. church near Brenner, at the bride's home. Mrs. Hines was born near Carlisle, Pennsylvania, December 5, 1878, and came to Kansas with her parents in March, 1886. After their marriage they returned to Illinois and resided there eleven years, returning to Doniphan County in February, 1911. To this union five children were born: Katie Louise, October 5, 1900; Marion, July 10, 1903; Lorene Emma, September 6, 1907; Marjorie Bernice, July 12, 1910, all born at Lafayette, Illinois, and Evelyn Mae, January 23, 1915, in Doniphan County. Mr. and Mrs. Hines are members of the Methodist church and are actively interested in religious work. The subject of this sketch is a member of the school board of District No. 23, known as the "Aberle" district, named for John Aberle, a pioneer settler, owns a good farm five miles northeast of Troy, known as the old Vachel Clary place, is a good citizen and neighbor, and takes great pride in his children.

O. E. Kennedy

The subject of this sketch was born and reared in Troy and educated in the public schools of this city. At a very tender age he was given a position by Cyrus Leland, Jr., in the pension office at Topeka, and held same until the department at Washington discontinued the Topeka office and saw fit to take Mr. Kennedy and place him in a more lucrative position at Washington, D. C.

His father was a soldier and was held in the highest esteem by all who knew him prior to the time of his death. This gallant soldier was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and Kennedy Post Number 292 was so named in memory and in honor of his past services.

The little son of Mr. John Tyler, living near Sabetha, Nemaha County, was thrown from a horse Sunday night, June 16, 1872, and instantly killed.

The papers of the Troy Cemetery Association were placed in the probate judge's office on the 18th day of February, 1867, where the capital stock of the said cemetery was subscribed.

On November 27, 1858, the first Doniphan County Medical Society was organized in Troy, but no list of the officers could be found.—Chief.

Kansas the Best State

Prominent Veterinary Surgeon Gets a Good Taste of Prosperity, Both in Doniphan County and Other Parts of the State—Now a Wealthy Land Owner and He Recommends the Soil and Climate of Kansas as the Best for the Man of Small Means—Came to Doniphan County Thirty-five Years Ago.

J. E. Garvin, V. S. and D. V. D., of Plainville, Rooks County, is one of the most enthusiastic residents of Kansas in extolling the great possibilities of the soil and climate for the new-comer.

Coming to Doniphan County thirty-five years ago, Mr. Garvin has since accumulated a substantial competency that surpasses his most sanguine expectations of his first years of residence.

The doctor is firmly convinced that there is no place like Kansas for a man who has a little energy and get-up about him. He does not hold himself up as an example of what a man not afflicted with the "spring fever" can accomplish, but he does believe that any man with a spark of industrious activity does not have to live two lives in order to become independent.

When John E. came to Doniphan County, all his worldly possessions were packed in a box car. He was married to Miss Mary D. Ellis of Wyanet, Illinois, October 1, 1879, and their advent into Kansas was much more pretentious than those who hauled their belongings with ox team or mules.

At the time Mr. Garvin arrived in Doniphan County he had, besides his household goods, three horses, one cow and two pigs. Today he owns 320 acres of the best improved farm land in Paradise Township, Rooks County, and is interested in a full half section with his son, Charley, in Trego County. He has a bunch of twenty-five horses, a fine herd of cattle, and an immense pen of hogs.

At the present time Mr. Garvin has a flourishing business as a veterinary surgeon and equine dentist. His land holdings are immensely valuable, and he feels that an active life is not the worst thing after all. He lived in Doniphan County for thirteen years, and it was here that he laid the foundation of his present fortune. About twenty-two years ago he went to Rooks County, and through his own grit and energy has become an extensive property owner.

Whenever he discusses the great possibilities for an industrious and thrifty man in Kansas, Mr. Garvin cogently points out how the battle of life can be won without a sacrifice of either personality or integrity. He, himself, reached the goal of success through simple and undiluted steadfastness of purpose and perseverance. The doctor very concisely expresses the formula for prosperity in this manner:

It takes three G's to get ahead in this world; they signify Gumption, Grit and Get-there. The Doctor is, no doubt, on the right trail. If more of the dreamers and castle builders of today would apply that motto to their daily operations, there would be more prosperous places like Doniphan County on the map of the world.

The Doctor is undoubtedly right. All people know that no town, city or even a country community ever amounted to a hill of beans that was not settled with live, energetic and thrifty men and women. Like Mr. Garvin, this is the class of people whose instinctive vision penertates ahead. They see what should be done in order to be a factor in the hive of human endeavor, and they go ahead and do it. It is a waste of energy to look behind and see what little has been accomplished. The thing to do is shove a shoulder under the wheel and overcome all obstacles.

Mr. Garvin is confident that there is just as good a chance for getting a home and a bank account in Kansas now as there was thirty-five years ago. Many close observers are of the opinion that the chances are materially better, as the present generation has not lost the stamina that was instilled into them by their pioneer parents who blazed the trail to success in the early days.

The Garvin home in Plainville is a commodious residence and the family is a happy one. There were eight children, one of whom died in infancy, and Edna, who died while she was a small girl. The others are Gertrude, Charles, now married; Edith, now Mrs. W. F. Hughes; Maggie May, Ralph and John Leslie. Charles Garvin has two children, Ruth and Harold, and Mrs. Hughes has two, Everett Clarence and Lawrence. The children go to the old home frequently and they are a source of much joy to their doting grandparents.

AL. GARVIN

A Pioneer Carpenter and Farmer of Doniphan County—Veteran of the Civil War and Authority on All Masonic Matters.

As an efficient carpenter, and a hard worker of the best possible kind that can be found in all of Doniphan County, Al. Garvin qualities. He is a man who knows no discouragement and who has worked at the profession to which he does honor today from the first minute that he was able to grasp the handle of a saw. Some of the finest homes in Center township have been erected by his hands and direction, and no one who ever had Mr. Garvin work for him can say that he did not do a good day's work for the renumeration he received.

Mr. Garvin was born in Jackson County, Ohio, on June 15, 1846. He was placed in a position similar to that of thousands of other young boys of those days, in that he had little opportunity for education. There were few, if any, schools of account and such chances for learning as they afforded were lean. The subject of this sketch always had a desire to go through college, but it was not to be his good fortune. Subsequent events have shown that perhaps it is just as well, for he has obtained a degree of success which is accorded to only a few men.

He was but little more than a boy when the war of the Rebellion broke out and his age deterred him from enlisting when the first gun was fired on Fort Sumpter, April 12, 1861. However, he did not become discouraged. He was ambitious to serve his country and after he became old enough to enlist he answered to the first call and on Aug. 30, 1864, at Wayanet, Illinois, he enlisted in Company H. of the 146th regiment Illinois volunteers. Of his war record Mr. Garvin talks but little, preferring to allow the outcome and the facts serve as their own best witness. However, it is beyond any question of a doubt that he served with a cheerfulness and efficiency that has since characterized his life. On July 7, 1865, he was mustered out at Springfield, Illinois, with all honors, and then he returned to the place of his nativity.

On March 3, 1870, Mr. Garvin came to Kansas, and it was a lucky day for Doniphan County when he settled here. He was married to Miss Mary C. Jones on Oct. 3, 1882, at Fillmore, Missouri, and to this union have been born four children: Ethel, now Mrs. John M. Mix, whose husband is a carpenter, and assists his father-in-law; Lois, now Mrs. Earnest H. Euler, whose husband is engaged in the manufacture of cement, tile and other work in Troy. There are two sons, E. C., who is now located at Baker City, Oregon, and Carey A., who remains with his parents near Troy on the farm, and who will stay with them during their declining years.

Farm residence of John E. Garvin, situated near Plainville in Rooks County.

Mrs. Garvin has indeed been a true helpmeet to her husband. In chronicling these events transcribed, due credit must be given her for the success her husband has attained. She was a mother, first last and always. Whatever vicissitudes of fortune her husband passed through, she was always at his side encouraging him and helping him onward to the best of her ability. Nothing that she could do was ever left undone. Mr. and Mrs. Garvin are charter members of the Eastern Star. She has always manifested a great deal of interest in that order and has been a regular attendant at the meetings. Mr. Garvin is a Knight Templar, being a member of Washington commandery No. 2, Atchison. He is an authority throughout Doniphan County on all matters pertaining to Freemasonry. For a great many years during his life Mr. Garvin has given deep study to this fraternity and is one of its most able exponents in the country. For a period of more than forty years he has been a faithful member of the Blue Lodge at Troy, and with the exception of the last three or four years, he was a constant attendant at all meetings. He has been a true fraternity man in every instance and as previously stated above, is a recognized authority on all Masonic matters.

General Grant's Relative

A relative of General U. S. Grant sleeps beneath the sod of Doniphan County. He was John Valmore Hudson, who died Dec. 12, 1899, and was the general's first cousin. He had seen trouble and his life had been full of adventure, having served in the Mexican War from which he went to the gold fields of California in 1848. Finding no fortune awaiting him there he wended his way eastward and settled in Kansas. He was extremely modest in speaking of his early experiences, but occasionally when in good humor would give glowing accounts of his adventures. He was present at the capture of Santa Anna and was one of the men who kicked that poor old warrior up out of the grass where he had been hiding. Although nearly blind from the effects of a wound received in battle, he was an enthusiastic reader; but he was not especially proud of his illustrious relative because of some trouble between the two. Hudson lies in a neglected grave at Moray with only a wooden slab at his head, but those who knew him as "Old Uncle Johnny" will long remember him as a fine, conscientious and honest man.

Floater Found

Monday, June 7, 1915, about 4 o'clock, a floater was found in the Missouri river about one mile south of the St. Joseph bridge, with no marks of identification on body or clothing. He was a man of fifty-five or sixty years, 5 feet, 8 inches tall, weight 155 or 160 pounds, white hair, white stub mustache, upper teeth broken off, lower teeth fairly good. He wore a black crush hat, size 7¼, No. 8½ shoes, newly half-soled, and rubber heels; winter underwear; black and white shirt, size 15½; low celluloid collar, size 15½; blue cravat necktie, new black socks, gray striped trousers and leather belt with patent fastener, mixed gray coat and vest. He had in his pocket a pair of gold-rim spectacles, stag handle knife, $1.25 in money. He wore a plain gold ring on one finger and gold cuff and collar buttons in shirt. Coroner L. T. Hargis viewed the body and had it sent to the L. T. Hargis Undertaking Co.'s parlor in Wathena, and prepared it for burial in Bellemont cemetery.

The coroner held an inquest at Elwood and the jury, consisting of S. L. Hagerty, Earl Chaney, I. M. Stiles, F. Armstrong, B. F. McMillan and Earl D. Choettlin, rendered a verdict that "the said unknown man came to his death by drowning."

The First Postoffice

There was one postoffice established in the state of Kansas before the postoffice at Doniphan; that of Marysville, in Marshall County, on Nov. 11, 1854. The first postmaster was Frank J. Marshall, a pioneer of Weston, Missouri, who went to Marshall County in 1849 to establish a ferry across the Blue river, near Marysville. Marshall County was named in his honor and the town was named after his beloved wife. The postoffice at Marysville was the first postoffice established after Kansas became a territory. However, the first postoffice established on what is Kansas soil today was that at Fort Leavenworth, on May 28, 1828.

Burning of School Houses

Feeling Ran High in Different Districts in Early '90's, and Fires Were Incendiary.

In all of Doniphan County's unique and absorbing history there was nothing that was of more moment to the people at the time than the school district troubles of 1892-93-94. The differences which at the time seemed impossible of amicable settlement have long since been dead issues and the county school system now presents a solid front, but then there was so much dissension and so high ran the feeling that the events which transpired have a peculiar interest. In all, three school houses and the Christian Church in Troy were burned and the perpetrators of the arson were never discovered.

The Aberle School House, District No. 23, situated about five miles northeast of Troy in Union township. Miss Mae Cummings, teacher. Members of school board: Charles A. Heimes, director; Charles A. Euler, treas.; Henry A. Weber, clerk.

The first trouble to break out was in the Mosquito Creek School District some time in 1892. The school house was about three miles north of Troy and stood on the Moser-Hargis road. There had been growing differences in the community for some time and the differences had reached a fever heat when on the night of Dec. 23, 1892, the school house was burned, which frustrated the teachers' plans relative to the Christmas program. Miss Ruth Sharp was the teacher at the time and boarded at the home of Fred Moser, whose sons discovered the flames soon after they broke out, but were powerless to do anything upon their arrival at the conflagration.

The second fire of incendiary origin was in District No. 23—the Abarle school — situated about five miles northeast of Troy. There had been a dispute in this section over teachers, the school house, the school board, and about everything else, with the result that there were more than two factions, each of which believed itself to be in the right. On the night of Feb. 7, 1893, this school house met the same fate as its predecessor. The torch was applied when everyone was supposed to be asleep. The flames were not discovered until the building was lost beyond any shadow of hope. Arthur Gilbert was the teacher at the time.

The third and last to be burned, and the most daring of all, was the No. 60 school house, which stood three and one-half miles north and east of Troy. This district was six miles long and the school house was within one and one-half miles of the south end. Naturally there was discontent. Some wanted two school houses, and others wanted but one in the exact center of the district, and others wished the district divided. At the time of the trouble, Miss Nellie Monroe, now Mrs. W. L. Clark of Troy, was the teacher, and although placed in a difficult position —somewhat between the factions—she managed to preserve a strict neutrality and was loved and esteemed by all.

Mrs. Clark, however, was fortunate. Miss Anna Reville, who had been a teacher in the public schools, announced her engagement to John Shriver Earnest on Jan. 5, 1895, and was married on that date, Miss Monroe, now Mrs. Clark, taking her position.

With the factions, however, it was different. Matters had gone so far there was an intense feeling. On the night of Dec. 29, 1894, there had been a singing school in the school house, taught by Professor Martin Edge, who now resides near Wathena. Among those present after the fire were John T. Trant, who lives three and one-half miles northeast of Troy; W. D. Baldwin, the well-known carpenter; Mrs. Frank (Carrie) Nixon of Troy; Mrs. Nora T. Q. Stiles, Mrs. Madison R. (Maggie) Throckmorton, John Mix, Fred Bezona, William Trant, Walter B. Montgomery and W. H. Montgomery, and John Garvin, now of Plainville, Kan. Green B. Taylor, who resides near Troy, witnessed the fire from his home, where Ross Linville now resides.

Professor Edge had just dismissed the school and those present had left, when it was said a man ran out from an adjacent corn field, where he had been hiding, hurled a can of oil over the front of the building and then applied a torch, after which he fled and disappeared. John T. Trant, W. D. Baldwin, Dora Mix and Mrs. Frank Nixon, were first to look back on account of the illumination; the others had gone but a short distance when their eyes were almost blinded by a flash and turning they saw the school in flames. These four turned and were the first to reach the structure. The outside was all in flames, but inside there was not a vestige of fire. William Baldwin discovered this, and went inside to throw out some of the seats. With the strength of a Samson he tore several seats to pieces in an effort to save the furniture, and made his exit through the window, exclaiming that the seats could not be saved. Later, Mr. Baldwin and Mr. Trant threw two buckets of water on the fire, which the latter carried from his home, in an effort to extinguish the flames, but it was futile. The flames illuminated the neighborhood for quite an area, and many farmers arose from their beds to gaze at the spectacle. The fact that the building was burning only on the outside and within ten minutes after the class had been dismissed, shows beyond any doubt that the fire was of incendiary origin.

William D. Baldwin, Madison Throckmorton, Carry Benzona (now Mrs. Frank Nixon), and Dora Mix were the first persons to return to the school house after the fire started.

As a result of the fire, C. V. Norman, who was then county superintendent of public instruction, and who now is cashier of the First National Bank, divided the district, the other school being known as Eclipse No. 59. In order to effect this division, portions were taken from the Klipple District, No. 23 District and No. 21 District, to make up No. 59.

A meeting was held at the home of Jacob Hale on April 19, 1895, to organize and vote bonds for the school house. There was a long discussion before a name was decided on, but finally, Charles E. Brown made the suggestion and Mordecai J. Rhue made the motion, that the district be known as Eclipse, No. 59. The majority wanted to honor Superintendent Norman by naming it after him, but in a moment of forgetfulness, the name Eclipse was adopted. Since that time the residents of the district have often regretted that they did not bestow the honor upon Mr. Norman, who on account of the diplomatic methods used in adjusting the differences of the two factions, was deserving of it. The Eclipse school was built by A. J. Goddin, father of Harry L. Goddin, now so well known in Troy, and the school board was composed of Lloyd Bailey, who died June 8, 1903; Mordecai J. Rhue, who died Oct. 21, 1907, and Robert H. Montgomery, who died May 6, 1913.

The same year No. 60 school house was built in the north part of the old district on Mike Pfennig's land.

Frank F. Page, who now lives in Troy, and who for thirty-five years was a teacher, was the first instructor in the new school house and Miss Edna Parker, now Mrs. J. W. Dana of Kansas City, Kan., was the second teacher. With the establishment of the two schools and the division of the one district, the old trouble disappeared and has never been resurrected. Looking back over the situation now, however, with the vantage point of time, it hardly seems probable that the schools were set afire by any one in the districts, as it only would have deprived their children of a chance to obtain an education. That they were of incendiary origin, however, is positive.

The fourth and last building to be burned was the Christian Church in Troy. Some time in late November, nineteen or twenty young men had been arrested in that edifice after trying to break up religious services. They were brought to trial on Dec. 29, 1894, and on the evening of that day while the jury was locked in the jury room, deliberating, the church was burned to the ground despite bucket brigades, which worked valiantly. The perpetrators of this crime were never discovered. After this house of worship had been burned, all manner of theories were advanced. Some believed they had smelled smoke in that vicinity for three days previous to the fire. The church which was burned was organized by Rev. Nelson A. Stull.

Reminiscences

(By A. R. Graves.)

Hearing that The Chief is planning a special Historical Edition, to be devoted solely to Doniphan County, and being a native and for a number of years a resident there, I thought, perhaps, a few events which I can recall might be of interest. There is especially the "burrs" of the old mill found a few years ago on the Abe Sutton farm, five miles north of Troy, and which were unearthed by a heavy rain. I do not think much was ever said about the old mill until after the ruins were discovered, although I can remember clearly, conversations between my father and Joseph Robidoux, Jr., son of the founder of St. Joseph, Mo., who was married to an Indian woman and lived most of the time on the Indian reservation near White Cloud.

Mosquito Creek School House, District No. 72, situated three miles north of Troy. Miss Mary Trant, teacher. Members of the school board: Madison R. Throckmorton, George Meers and Jess Ayres.

My father went to Kansas, Nov. 6, 1854, selected his claim, built his cabin and, on March 4, 1855, moved his family to the new home. Shortly after I was born, on July 23, 1856, he sold the claim to the Mount Vernon Town Company for $200 and bought the claim of E. Van B. Rogers and Sarah Purkett Urgehart, one mile south, for the same money. He lived there until 1887, when he sold that farm to John Jones and moved to Washington County, Kan. But to get back to my story of the old mill. Robidoux and my father were friends, and they talked frequently about the old mill, but I do not recall that I ever heard either of them say when it was built; but it undoubtedly was erected in 1838, by the Rev. Samuel M. Irvin, who had established the Indian Mission east of Highland in 1837. It was along what is known now as Mosquito Creek, but was called Mill Creek then, both by the Indians and whites. I heard Robidoux say to my father that several years prior to the opening of Kansas and Nebraska territories to settlement, the Indians heard of the government's intention and in the year 1841, burned it to prevent the whites from getting it.

My personal recollections of the mill are vivid. I saw many logs and pieces, all scarred from the fire. They were walnut and had been a part of the old wheel frame, forebay and the wheels. All were imbedded in the mud and some of them remained in the bank of the creek for more than half a century. When taken out, I understand that they had withstood the ravages of time and were in excellent condition. The name Mosquito Creek was given to the stream on which the old mill stood, by the early immigrants who crossed the plains, because their lives were made miserable by the little pests at the old camp ground near the ford of the creek. This camp ground was situated on my father's place—the northeast quarter of Section 31, Range 2, Township 21, while the old mill was on the northeast quarter of Section 30, Range 2, Township 21, which was my father's first homestead on pre-emption claims and where I was born. Much of my information concerning the mill also was obtained from Pryor Plank, a fine old gentleman and a historian, who was always to be found in a retrospective frame of mind. I have talked to him hour after hour. He apparently, however, knew as little about the mill as I did.

Of the early instances of a historical nature in Doniphan County there were a few that fall within my personal recollection or of which I have learned from others. A man whose name I cannot remember and who lived a short distance east of the old river town of Lafayette, murdered his wife about the time white people began to settle in the county. He induced her to go with him to hunt squirrels; and while they were sitting on a log resting in the woods, he managed to bring the muzzle of his rifle, which he held across his lap, in range with his wife and shot her just below the arm pit. He left her body where he had killed her, believing the wild animals that infested the neighborhood would destroy the body. Reaching his home, he found a neighbor who had called, and told him that his wife had gone to her father's home just across the river. Someone from the opposite side, however, said she was not at her father's place, and supposing the small rowboat in which she crossed the stream frequently, had upset, the neighbors instituted a search. Upon examination it developed that the boat had been sunk by having a large hole driven in the bottom. This aroused suspicion, and further search led to the discovery of the body, which, instead of having been destroyed, as the husband had hoped, was found where the woman had fallen. A small dog, pet of the wife, had guarded the body for two days and nights and was almost famished from hunger. The husband was arrested, confessed and would have been lynched, but for the pleading of his father-in-law, who asked that he be given a trial. He later escaped and was never captured.

The killing of Parker Hooper by John Cummings in April, 1861, occurred northeast of Severance and was the result of a neighborhood quarrel, with a little family trouble mixed in. Cummings, I am certain, was Hooper's son-in-law and claimed Hooper had interfered in his home.

A man whose name was Schultz was murdered for his money by William Dunn in Burr Oak Township sometime in 1861.

The shooting of Grandison R. Wilson by a squad of Union soldiers, was a dastardly and cowardly act. It occurred the morning of Sept. 2, 1862. Wilson and his young daughter, Emily, had gone to the fields to do some plowing. He took with him a scythe for use in cutting out weeds that had become imbedded in the ground. The daughter was by his side as he used this implement, and suddenly both heard a shot. Looking up they saw a squad of soldiers riding toward them. Coming to within fifty feet of the man, they halted and without warning, his daughter, who was present says, opened fire. Wilson was instantly killed. His daughter screamed with terror and was heard by her mother, who immediately ran to the field and found her husband dead. The girl was sent to seek help from Josephus Utt, a school teacher, who had been an intimate friend of the murdered man, and who was on Wolf River. At the stream, she found her father's murderers under a tree partaking of lunch. They arose and fled as she approached, too cowardly to face her. The soldiers' excuse for killing Wilson was that the latter was a Southern sympathizer.

Nixon at about the same time, shot and wounded Howard Fulton, but the latter escaped with a slight injury to his wrist. Afterward he joined the Union army and served through the remainder of the war. The only record I ever heard of Hixon making was reported by Isaac Ogen, upon the return of the Doniphan County militia from Kansas City, where they had been called to assist in repelling Price's raid up the Missouri River in the fall of 1864. It seems that someone had written home that Captain Nixon had taken to his heels when the first firing began and Isaac Ogen's father, an ardent Northern sympathizer, asked his son if this was true.

"Yes," said Isaac, "he ran."

"Well," queried the father, "what did you do when you saw your captain do that?"

"Oh, I just outran him a little," was the answer.

The drowning of Henry Cox, while bathing in the Missouri River east of Lafayette, was a sad affair. I also recall the drowning of James Coates, near Lafayette, July 28, 1868; and also the accidental death of John Meers on New Year's day, 1874. Meers was a young man, and, in company with his cousin, W. P. Taylor, was hunting among the hills along the Missouri, north of his home, and about five miles north of Troy. In some way his gun was accidentally discharged, the bullet entering just above the right eye. He lived about twelve hours and then died. Meers was an unusually fine young man, loved by all who knew him, and his untimely death cast a gloom over the entire community. The killing of Alexander Kincaid by Joseph Tribble on Sept. 8, 1861, near the Burr Oak school house was a brutal and premeditated murder. Kincaid was an ardent Union sympathizer and was recruiting agent for the 13th Kansas volunteers, while Tribble was a pro-slavery man, later enlisted in Price's band of Missouri raiders. Twenty-nine years after the killing he was tried in Troy and acquitted. Another murder was that of George Dockhorn by Charles Carroll in April of 1890, near Elwood.

Of the quaint characters I knew in my childhood, some of them, I think, deserve especial mention. One, Mr. Knowles, an itinerant cobbler who went from house to house making or mending the footwear of the family, was a very striking man. He was about six feet, two inches tall, and had a soldier's bearing; he seldom talked much, but to my childish fancy he talked very queerly. I remember that he always wore a claw-hammer or scissor-tailed coat, in the tail pockets of which he carried many of the implements used in plying his trade, such as thread, awls, etc. One cold night after a hearty supper at our home, he prepared in his usual decorous manner, to seat himself before the big fire-place. An awl or some other pointed instrument interfered with his plans and in about the hundredth part of a second the distance between him and that chair increased from about two inches to six feet. I will never forget the peculiar expression on my dear mother's face when she told me that if I had forgotten all my manners I had better retire to the kitchen (I had tittered). When I arrived in the kitchen I found my four sisters, all older than myself, convulsed with laughter.

Another character I can never forget was a Mr. Schwartz. Besides being a peddler he constituted himself a kind of medical adviser to the settlers, and claimed to have a positive specific for the cure of ague, which was a very prevalent disease in the early history of Doniphan County. The prescription, I think, was composed of Peruvian bark, quassia, cayenne pepper and enough whiskey to make one quart. It was about as palatable as molten lead flavored with ox gall, and the directions for taking it were a teaspoonful before each meal and at bed time. It is needless to say it was a great grub saver, for no human being could take a teaspoonful of that dope and eat during the next six or seven hours—then there was another dose due. During the period between bed time and breakfast I could just about manage to get my mouth cooled down to the sizzling point, when I had to begin all over again. Did it cure the chills? I'll be hanged if I know, for after taking a few doses no one could get sufficiently cooled off to tell whether or not he had a chill.

I remember very distinctly seeing the immigrants passing our home on their way westward. The old California trail that went westward out of St. Joseph, passed through my father's farm, and many hours I spent on our front doorstep watching the long trains of wagons passing. Most of this emigration was to Colorado just after the Pike's Peak gold excitement. Some were freight teams hauling goods across the plains.

The big camp meetings that were held in the walnut grove on my father's farm, furnished some incidents which made a lasting impression with me. One in particular that I remember well, occurred while I was attending the meeting with my mother one day. In the absence of chairs or benches, the settlers had hauled together logs of various sizes, upon which the people sat during the services. One of these logs had a group of roots extending about three feet from the ground. This struck me as being just the place to hide and get a full view, as I was too small to see over the heads of the grown-ups. I had just gotten comfortably settled when two women, a Mrs. Sharp and Mrs. Holton, began shouting. I could not imagine what the row was all about (being only five years old). I stuck to my place, however, and after all the yelling had subsided somewhat, I saw them leading the two women to their tents and neither of them could boast of any more wearing apparel than a Hottentot chick in full dress. On my way home I asked my mother what was the matter with the women. She said they had got religion. I wanted to know if it was catching; and would sulphur ointment cure it like it would the itch, from a well-developed case of which I had just recovered. My mother closed the case by saying I was too young to understand such things, and for me not to ask any more foolish questions. That was too much for me, and although the frost of time is quite perceptible about my temples, I am still too young to understand why people call such performances religion.

These are about all of the things of interest I recall at the present time, but I have a warm spot in my heart for Doniphan County, and will continue to have as long as I live. Its people are the finest on earth. Although I have made many friends here in Ricardo, California, where I am living, I often wish I was back again in God's country.

James Reville

Mr. James Reville died at his home in Troy, Thursday, July 23, 1914, from a cancerous growth of his throat. He was a printer, and was employed in The Chief office for twenty-seven years. Mr. Reville severed his connection with The Chief about nine years before his death, when the linotype was installed. He was about sixty-four years of age and a member of the Masonic lodge.

He was married to Miss Viola E. Brown, of Troy, Sunday, March 24, 1872, by the Rev. Mr. Jas. Lawrence, who was pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Troy. The officiating clergyman is now a resident of the town which bears his name, where the Kansas State University is located, on the Kaw river between Kansas City and Topeka—Lawrence.

E. B. Dolly, Former Postmaster

Mr. E. B. Dolly, who was postmaster of Troy under the second administration of President Cleveland, is now living with his daughter, Mrs. Al. Wynkoop at Highland. Mr. Dolly is now eighty-four years old and is enjoying excellent health. For many years he was a leading citizen of Troy and he and his daughters have a host of friends here.

We notice that our friend, A. G. Ege, Jr., has associated with Mr. Jos. Thompson in the publication of the Troy Democrat.—The Elwood Press, Jan. 1, 1859.

Eugene Lancaster

Popular Doniphan County Man and Son of a Pioneer Who Fitted Himself for a High Place in the Legal Profession and Then, After Making a Good Start as a Lawyer, He Gave Up Law and, Without Regret, Went Back to the Farm, to Become One of the Prosperous Farmers of Doniphan County.

The back to the soil movement has no more enthusiastic advocate, or no more shining example of the wisdom of such a course, than in Eugene Lancaster, who lives on a 400-acre farm in Wayne Township, four miles southwest of Troy. Eugene Lancaster was born in Doniphan County, July 11, 1878, and was reared on a farm. Upon growing to young manhood he had an ambition to become a lawyer, and he fitted himself for the profession, after attending the Commercial College in St. Joseph, by reading law with Alcid Bowers in his office in Troy two years, 1899-1901. He was admitted to the bar September 4, 1901. He practiced with Mr. Bowers seven years, until he was married to Miss Edith Bowers, a daughter of his partner and preceptor. Then came a longing to return to the farm, and without regret he gave up the professional career, which had been the dream of his youth and the ambition of his young manhood and, with his bride, went to live on the farm in Wayne Township.

Eugene Lancaster's father was John H. Lancaster, who was born in St. Louis, Missouri, February 10, 1844, and who died on the farm where the son now resides, July 23, 1911. His mother was Ermindia McDaniel, born in Muskingum County, Ohio, May 1, 1849. She still resides on the farm in Wayne Township.

John H. Lancaster, father of Eugene, came to Doniphan County in 1858 and settled on Independence Creek, where Julius Furman resides. He was a Republican and became prominent in Doniphan County politics. After Fort Sumter was fired upon, April 12, 1861, John H. Lancaster was one of the men who enlisted in Company K, Thirteenth Kansas volunteer infantry, and after four years of service in the Civil War he was mustered out June 26, 1865, at Little Rock Arkansas.

Miss Ermindia McDaniel, mother of Eugene Lancaster, had taught school in Ohio one year before coming to Kansas. Here in Doniphan County she taught in the Oakland district, Mosquito Creek district, Climax district, Hickory Grove district and the Independence district prior to her marriage to John H. Lancaster, which occurred December 27, 1869.

Eugene Lancaster, the son of these parents, was educated in the Brenner school while growing up on the farm on which he was born and to which his parents moved in the spring of 1877. His parents consented to his taking a three years' course at the Commercial College in St. Joseph, giving him the privilege of taking up a profession or entering business, according to his inclinations. At the close of his three years' course, Eugene went to Troy to live, and there he took up the study of law with Alcid Bowers, putting in the years 1899 to 1901 in the office of that young lawyer. He had fitted himself well for a professional career and when admitted to the bar, September 4, 1901, he at once began practicing with Mr. Bowers as his partner. The two became fast friends and the partnership that lasted until his marriage on February 4, 1901, to Miss Edith M. Bowers, daughter of his partner at law, was like that of father and son.

The bride of Eugene Lancaster was one of Troy's most accomplished young women. She was born October 6, 1888, in Troy, was reared in the town, and from girlhood had been a popular favorite with the good people of the town. She had been educated in the Troy schools and her fond parents had given her every advantage that would be a help to her in making her the bright, intelligent and accomplished daughter in whom their joys and hopes were centered.

Following their marriage, these young people resolved to give up the life of the town, with all of its social successes and its attractions, and go to the Lancaster farm in Wayne Township to set up their home. Here they have since resided and have been happy and successful.

To Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lancaster two daughters have been born: Gladys L., September 11, 1902, and Erma R. December 2, 1910. They are growing up fine girls and are the pride of their parents, who will give them a good education, such as will fit them for splendid Kansas womanhood.

Mr. Lancaster is one of the progressive farmers of Wayne Township and farms 400 acres of good land intelligently and upon business methods. He is regarded as one of the prosperous men of the county, and has from boyhood taken a lively interest in the affairs of his community and of the county. He is interested in educational affairs and has shown his deep interest in the education of the youth of his district by serving on the school board. He is one of those good citizens who believe in progress, and his name is coupled with all forward movements for community betterment, for improved roads and for whatever is best for the public welfare. He is a member of the Central Protective Association and is active in its councils, rendering assistance to his fellow members in the work of protection given by that splendid organization for the protection of life and property. Mr. Lancaster also is an active member of the Knights and Ladies of Security and of the Modern Woodmen.

Mr. and Mrs. Lancaster and children are well and favorably known, and there are none more popular in their community than they.

MAMIE TUCKER-QUICK

Champion Lady Apple-Picker of the County—Married to Guinn Quick on May 28, 1915.

The subject of this sketch is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ellry Tucker, who resided in Doniphan County for more than a score of years. Mamie was born February 8, 1897, while the family resided near Old Lafayette, and is a granddaughter of Mrs. Kunkel. When the young lady attended the Troy High School, she was classed as one of the brightest pupils on the roster, but her parents moved away before she graduated.

On October 4, 1912, when the Troy High School girls went out on an apple-picking expedition, she was awarded the $3 cash prize for picking the most apples in the Montgomery orchard, two miles northeast of Troy. Her record was seventy-nine bushels in one day, more than lots of husky men have been able to pick. This energetic and business-like young lady was married to Guinn Quick on May 28, 1915, in St. Joseph, by Probate Judge Albert B. Duncan. They reside on a farm near Forest City, Missouri.

ROBERT NEWTON MALONE

Eminent Educator From Dugout in Western Kansas to a Good School Position in St. Joseph Has Been the Somewhat Remarkable Achievement of This Ambitious Man.

Among the prominent educators of Missouri whose name is familiar to the teachers of Doniphan County, is Robert N. Malone, who first saw the light of day in Lancaster, Schuyler County, Missouri, February 17, 1867. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Jasper Malone, now of California.

When this prominent educator was six years old his parents moved to Mitchell County, Kansas, settling on a farm near Beloit, where the young man had little opportunity to gratify his great desire for knowledge.

Schools were few and far between and for several years he attended a district school taught in a dugout, and his first years spent in the new country were in a dugout on a farm near Beloit.

Here this persevering and energetic school boy grew to manhood, and made the best of his environments. When in the latter part of his teens he entered the Saline Normal University, and upon his return home was successful in receiving a teachers' certificate, and taught his first school in Mitchell County. Later he came to Doniphan County and taught school in Burr Oak Bottom during the year of 1896. After attending the State Normal at Maryville, Missouri, he completed his education at Kansas State University, which is situated in Lawrence. In 1896 he was employed as principal of the McKinley School in St. Joseph, which position he filled, discharging the duties required of him faithfully and promptly, and in a manner satisfactory to both patrons and pupils for nine years, at which time a promotion was tendered him and he accepted a position with the Neely School, in which capacity he has served for eleven years.

His father was one of the gallant soldiers who fought faithfully for the preservation of the Union, in the Twenty-First Missouri, having enlisted soon after the firing upon Fort Sumter, and served until the close of the war. On December 22, 1897, two years after this educator moved to St. Joseph, Mo., he was married to Miss Eugenia Conwell of Atchison. Of this union they have two daughters, Genevieve, who was born May 15, 1901, and Ezrelda, born December 2, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Malone are enjoying life in their comfortable home, which is located at 819 South Fourteenth street.

Philippine Soldiers

The following is a list of some of the young men who volunteered their services during the Philippine War in 1897 and 1898: Arthur Hargis, Fred Carpenter, Ed Confer, Frank Byers, Lorne T. Hargis, Robert Wilson, Fred J. Marble, John Mix, John Graves, Carl White, John Young, Fred Byers, Frank Scarrett, Charles James, Ed Scarrett, Claude Zimmerman, Vachel Lewis and William Goacher.

Charles Allen Kibler

Member of the Board of County Commissioners and a Candidate for His Third Term—He Is a Native of Missouri, But Has Resided in Doniphan County Thirty-Four Years and Has Been a Successful Farmer and Good Citizen.

Charles Allen Kibler, member of the Board of County Commissioners of Doniphan County, has made a splendid record during his residence of thirty-four years in Doniphan County, as a citizen, farmer and as a public official. Mr. Kibler is a native of Missouri, born in Nodaway County, February 27, 1874, and came to Troy with his parents, July 12, 1882. He received his education in the Troy schools and in the Rock School, six miles south of Troy in Wayne Township. He has farmed all of his life and has made a success of it. The Kiblers, generations back, were plain farmers and substantial citizens who bore the respect of their neighbors and their acquaintances.

The father of Charles Allen Kibler was Lower M. Kibler, who was born in Hancock County, Ohio, August 5, 1850. His father was George Kibler, born in Wayne County, Ohio, and his mother was Maria Walters who was born in Fairfield County, Ohio. Lower M. Kibler married Margaret Jane Allen on August 13, 1871, in Nodaway County, Missouri. She was born in Macon County, Missouri, February 1, 1853. This union was blessed with five children, three sons and two daughters. Charles Allen, the subject of this sketch, Oscar Walter, and Cora Alice, (now Mrs. William Anderson of near Troy), were born in Nodaway County, Missouri. The other brother, Elmer Clifton, was born in Ottawa County, Kansas. The other sister, Louisa (now Mrs. W. H. H. Colley of near Troy) was born in Troy.

Charles Allen Kibler was only eight years old when in 1882 his parents moved to Doniphan County and his earliest recollections are of the trip from Missouri to Kansas. He was reared here like most other Doniphan County boys, given the best education our schools could afford, with no thought other than preparing himself for the duties of citizenship and for working out a successful career as a farmer. He was married January 17, 1900, to Miss Mary Alice Seely, by the Rev. Grimes, pastor of the M. E. Church, Atchison. She was a daughter of Horace D. Seeley, who was born January 24, 1833, in Tioga County, Pennsylvania, and came to this county in 1857. He died August 20, 1897. Mrs. Kibler's mother was Elizabeth L. Seeley, born near St. Joseph in Buchanan County, Missouri, February 11, 1840, and died March 31, 1886.

Mrs. Kibler has eight brothers and sisters as follows: Emmett Seeley, who resides on a farm south of Troy; Harriett Elizabeth, now Mrs. V. E. McDaniel of La Crosse, Kansas; Miss Kate Seeley, who resides south of Troy; George Seeley of La Crosse, Kansas; Frank Seeley of Colorado Springs; Ruby Evelyn, now Mrs. J. M. Jacks of Leavenworth; Mattie, now Mrs. J. H. Etherton of near Troy; Horace Seeley, Jr., who lives on a farm south of Troy; Mrs. Nellie Franklin died December 11, 1906.

This young man is the owner of a fine farm of 175 acres one-half mile south of Troy on which he resides. He is a progressive farmer and one who believes in keeping up his farm and the imprevements. He has during his residence on the farm been one of the leaders in his neighborhood for road improvements and for the advancement of those movements which are for the community interest. Mr. Kibler's interest in public affairs led to his appointment to fill a vacancy on the board of county commissioners on October 3, 1914, as he was regarded as the right man to fill such a responsible official position. This opinion was verified by the record of his service for the unexpired term for which he was appointed. He was taken up by the people of his district, nominated for a full term and was elected in 1914. He is now being urged to again be a candidate for the office.

Mr. Kibler's knowledge of public affairs and his practical business methods have made him a valuable man for the entire county on the board, since it is with every department of the county's affairs the board has to deal. The board of county commissioners has jurisdiction over all public improvements of whatsoever nature made by the county, the establishment of roads and their improvement, the building of bridges and culverts. It passes on all claims against the county, has direct control over the public expenditures, appoints all appointive officers of the county, fixes the annual levy of taxes for county purposes, canvasses election returns, and performs a multiplicity of duties too numerous ti undertake to print in a sketch of so short a length as this. For all this a great amount of patient labor and constant attention is exacted from the commissioner who does his duty, and for which there is little pay.

Mr. Kibler's public spiritedness is shown by the great attention he has bestowed on the details of the work of the commissioners, his close watch over public expenditures and his endeavor to see that for every dollar of county money expended the county received a dollar's worth of service in return. He is an active member of the Central Protective Association.

EDNA GRAVES McDONALD

Is Graduate Nurse and Registered Pharmacist—A Native of Doniphan County With Residence at Alliance, Nebraska.

Edna Graves McDonald is the daughter of Thomas L and Celia Peden Graves, and granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Graves. This remarkable young lady, who cut out an unusual career for a woman and made a success of it, was born in Center Township, Doniphan County, four miles northeast of Troy on the farm where W. F. Arnold resides. Her childhood days were spent in this county, and somewhat later she lived for a few years in Oklahoma. This self-reliant young lady attended school for awhile in Washington County, Kansas, and completed her education at the Wathena High School, while Professor George W. Kinkead was superintendent.

After graduating from high school, she took a nurse's course at a St. Joseph hospital and also took instruction at an Omaha institution and received a certificate giving her the right to practice pharmacy. She devotes considerable time to reading and is one of those who can reflect intelligently upon any subject. Miss Graves was married to John McDonald, a conductor on the Burlington road, in October, 1910, and their present home is at Alliance, Neb., where they enjoy the blessings of this life.

JOHN B. KENNEDY

Has Enviable Record as a Business Man.

If loyalty has its golden rewards, then surely there must be an enormous one coming to this man, who has been so faithful as to hold fast to the bonds of the man who gave him his first position and who so trusted the entire management of his store to him at the age of twenty-one, and that is just what John B. Kennedy has done; for up until the time that fire destroyed the store of Cyrus Leland, he was head bookkeeper and manager of that concern.

He was educated in the public schools of Troy, and his desire for greater knowledge caused him to go to St. Joseph and attend business college. Mr. Kennedy is still in the service of his first employer a part of his time, and is also manager of the Troy Fruit-Growers' Association. Business men, such as the subject of this sketch are born, not made.

KINKEAD GRAIN COMPANY

Controlling Interest Owned by Prof. George W. Kinkead, Former Supt. of Schools—Other Member Prof. C. S. Hambleton.

The manager of the Kinkead Grain Company in Troy is, perhaps, one of the most widely known men in the county. He is none other than Professor George W. Kinkead. He was born and reared in Marion Township in this county, and upon reaching maturity taught school for twenty-five years in the spot of his nativity. He was always a judicious and tactful superintendent of schools, and his popularity is evidenced by the fact that he retained his position for so long.

After a quarter of a century as a pedagogue, Mr. Kinkead decided to engage in the grain business, and on account of his excellent habits and many friends, he has built up a splendid business. Mr. Kinkead and Professor C. S. Hambleton, present principal of the Troy High School own one of the most productive orchards in the county, one and one-half miles north of Troy. The former's connection with the Wathena Fruit-Growers' Association as secretary and manager for several years, gave him an opportunity to specialize in the fruit business, which he did not overlook, and today he is a recognized authority on that subject.

HATTIE E. CASTLE

Born on a Farm and Reared in Center Township Is the Story of the Persevering School Ma'am Who Has Made a Perceptible Progress.

Miss Hattie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Castle, born in Missouri and reared in Doniphan County, and educated in the public schools of Troy and the State Normal at Emporia, Kansas.

Her rise has been very rapid and her career has a wonderful future in store for her, and with her knowledge of affairs of today and her great precept for the future, it would be well to keep a watchful eye on this little lady and to note her doings at the customs office in Kansas City, Missouri, where she has been employed for a number of years.

For several years she was considered one of the most successful teachers of this county, and made a record with her pupils, who are now following business lives and reflecting credit upon their former teacher, who implanted the principles of loyalty and heroism in their minds.

D. P. DELANEY

Native of Doniphan County and One Who Possesses the Usual Irish Wit.

Born and reared in the grandest county in Kansas is recommendation enough for any one, but to have served that county in the capacity as district clerk for years is doubly a recommendation, and D. P. Delaney, as well as being one of the most competent men of his time, is a man held in highest esteem by every one.

His position in the eyes of the people has not changed, nor their regard for him either, inasmuch as he left the state for the benefit of business interests and has engaged himself in the banking business in Salisaw, Okla. He has a host of friends in Doniphan County who wish him success in his banking career.

Some Horticultural Observations

Advocates More Care in the Planting and Development of Apple Orchards—Claims Trees Should Be at Least Thirty-Six Feet Apart.

(Contributed by O. S. Condit.)

By request of Walter Montgomery, I will give the readers of your paper a few of the mistakes and successes of fruit-growing, as I have seen it in the last few years.

We will begin with the apple; the fruit that caused a world of trouble in the beginning, but has proven one of man's greatest blessings ever since.

Few realize that the orchards of this county are decreasing at an alarming rate, as we have over 50,000 less bearing trees than we had in 1908, and if that rate keeps up, we will be buying apples in a few years. I believe the worst mistake we have made is in buying trees, as most of our orchards will show a number of varieties that are nearly worthless in this locality, as you can find Greenings, Fall Rambo, Iowa Blush and a number of others that do not do well here. The remedy is to buy your trees from a reliable grower, and buy only what you know will do well here, and will sell well on the market.

Mistake No. 2: I find most of our old orchards are planted entirely too close in the rows, as some are as close as sixteen to twenty feet apart, when they should be at least thirty-six feet apart each way, and I would prefer them forty feet. I want to say a few words here in regard to a plan for planting trees that has proved very successful, i. e., prepare the ground in the fall by plowing and harrowing it well, and then mark off the rows each way with a plow as deep as possible, and dig the holes in the cross about twice as large and deep as would be necessary for the tree, so they will catch all the snow and moisture possible during the winter. It is surprising the growth the trees will make the first season. The next great mistake is in cultivation, as I notice most old orchards have been cultivated for a few years by planting and throwing the dirt to the trees one way, making a ridge for the trees at least a foot higher than the middle of the row and then seeding it to bluegrass or timothy. What is the result? The trees die for lack of moisture when they should be at their best. I was in an orchard a few years ago, where a number of the trees had died. The owner asked me the cause. I informed him it was lack of moisture. He replied that I must be wrong, as it had been raining hard for nearly a week. I went near a tree and removed a piece of sod and threw up a handful of dust. He was convinced, and plowed the ridges down that fall and now has one of the best orchards in Ray County, Missouri.

I will take up the subject of pruning, or rather non-pruning: I have seen trees in this county, with branches so thick that a jaybird would need life insurance before trying to fly through them. I believe in pruning annually for several years after the trees are put out. If done by hand when sprouts are young, it is a short job, and you have a better formed tree, and one that is likely to live much longer than one cut and slashed with an ax or not trimmed at all; but caring for the trees alone is not all in making a profitable orchard. The ground must be worked to keep it from packing. A crop of red clover is the best method, I find, to let it grow two or three years and plow under and disk to keep down weeds one season, and re-seed to clover.

I believe every man that owns an orchard in this county is convinced, by this time, that he must take care of his orchard by cultivation, trimming and cutting weeds with the same care he would give his corn field, and above all, he must learn to spray his trees and do it well, to make a success of fruit raising. Most of your readers know that spraying has been practiced some for several years, but with poor success, until five or six years ago, when some of our fruit-growers adopted modern methods and proved that spraying pays and pays well.

HARDSHIPS ENDURED BY A PIONEER OF DONIPHAN COUNTY

One of Those "Fleizig Deutschers."

(Contributed by Paul F. Werner.)

I was born in Bitterfeld, Province of Saxony, Prussia, Germany, October 15, 1855. As I read of the horrible struggle across the waters, it brings to mind what an awful significance the name of my birthplace bears. Bitter indeed are the days over there in these times, when peasant must shoot peasant, and could not, for his life, tell you what it is all about. It is only a natural sequence that I always meditate with love and pride on the place where I first opened my eyes, but it is a source of equal pride to me that today I am a citizen of the United States of America and my people are the inhabitants thereof.

My parents had permitted two of my sisters to come to America about 1860, and so full of promise and hope were their letters that in the spring of 1864, the balance of the family, consisting of the old folks and four girls and two boys, joined them. We first lived in Albany, New York, where my sisters resided; however, we remained there but one year, and in 1865 moved westward, finally locating in Lafayette County, Missouri, near Centralia. Those were stirring times, for it was during the unsettled condition just following the great internal war, when outlaws and robbers harassed honest people almost to a frenzy. We witnessed the James boys and Quantrell raids in Centralia, where about thirty men were killed by the guerrillas. I can distinctly recall one guerrilla, in particular—Dave Pool, one of the leaders—who surrendered, and was later pardoned by the government. The affair made quite an impression on my youthful mind.

I saw General Price's long wagon train as it passed through that part of Missouri. I also met Gen. Joe Shelby, one of the most courteous gentlemen I ever saw. His gentleness and obliging nature extended to the most ordinary laborer. Mr. A. F. Brand, who married one of my sisters while working for my father, joined farms with the General.

It was about the year 1868 that we pulled stakes and came to Doniphan County, Kansas, and lived in and near Palermo until 1870 or 1871. We then moved four miles northwest of Troy, where the family remained until the spring of 1876. At this time we moved back to Lafayette County, Missouri, where I worked as a farm hand for two years. During these two years, I learned some very valuable pointers about farming in general, which profited me in the years that followed, as farming has been my lifework.

My parents were in meager circumstances, and knew little of the country they had come to as strangers, and strict economy was a necessity. In the fall of 1878 I returned to Doniphan County, and from then on made my own way.

On November 27 of the same year, I was married to Miss Louisa Anna Graves, by Esquire P. L. Soper of Troy. We started the voyage of life together with about $150 in cash, a span of little mules, harness and wagon, a few plows, a cow and contentment. We settled on the old home place and have not moved since. Eight children were born to us, and all welcome. Six boys and one girl have grown to maturity on this place, and as our responsibility increased, the more we cared for them, and thought of their spiritual and temporal welfare to the exclusion of everything else, when necessary. Their names follow: John Francis, Wilhelmina, now Mrs. James E. Brown, Clarence Paul (deceased), Louisa Anna (deceased), Fred, Arthur Winfred, Hugh Ernest, Oliver Emery, Charles Homer.

When we were first married, we rented sixty-seven acres for a term of five years from my father, twenty acres of which were in cultivation. Before the five years were up, I had the land bought and paid for. Land was cheap in those days, but so was labor, and it took an effort to buy a home and pay for it, even as it does today. Although it takes self-denial and perseverance, still the fellow who seeks comfort and pleasure will obtain it in the end.

For eighteen or twenty years I rented land for corn one mile and a half from home. During that time I always ate a cold snack for my noon meal during the corn planting and corn tending season. I raised wheat on the home place. After my sons grew to manhood, they followed farming, the same as I had, and did about the same work. In 1890, fifty and one-half acres were added on the west and 117 acres on the east of the home place.

I have always felt thankful that my lot was cast in Doniphan County, the best county in the great state of Kansas. I attribute my success to Him who cares for all who put their trust in Him. In the darkest days of my life, when I was left with a family of little children, it was His providence that provided for us and the dear ones who were born to us.

Spanish-American War Soldier

Vachel Lewis, a soldier in the service of Uncle Sam during the Spanish-American War, was born north of Troy on April 11, 1873. He enlisted in the Fourth Missouri United States Volunteer Infantry, April 27, 1898, at St. Joseph, and served under Capt. Charles F. Kellar. He was mustered out at Camp Witherall, February 10, 1899. It is worthy to note that on his discharge sheet appear the words, "Honest and faithful." November 4, 1909, Mr. Lewis was married to Miss Lena Loutrilla Large, and they live seven miles northeast of Troy. To this union have been born Chester V., Sept. 15, 1910; Ada Rachel, Sept. 28, 1912, and Harry V., April 18, 1914.

Peter Dill, formerly of Troy.

The earliest wheat harvest in Doniphan County in the recollection of the old-timers, was when Joe Hayton began cutting wheat near Troy the first of June, 1874.

About the 1st of August, 1857, a house located on Marion F. Wilburn's farm situated eight miles southwest of Troy, was struck by lightning and the owner and his comrade, Richard S. Parker, were burned to death.

On January 21, 1867, the Methodists of Troy changed their place of worship from the church to the court house. The first services at the court house were held on Saturday, February 3. Preaching by Rev. J. Paulson.

Henry Clark Wykert

A Native of West Virginia and the Son of One of the Early German Settlers in the Allegheny Mountains—He Came to Doniphan County in the Early Days, Farmed on Week Days and Preached on Sundays for Thirty Years—Read the Bible Through Twenty-Eight Times—He Was One of Nineteen Children.

The Rev. Henry Clark Wykert, whose home is in Center Township, is one of the early citizens of Doniphan County, having spent sixty years here and having made a record as a farmer, citizen and minister of the Gospel that commends him to the people as one of the best and most useful men in this part of Kansas. Mr. Wykert is proud of his work here in our midst and he is proud of the fact that he comes of a large family of men and women whose lives of industry and frugality and right living have had an influence in making this world better. A reference to that family is in order, that the reader may know something of the sturdy manhood and womanhood of its members.

Francis Wykert, grandfather of Henry Clark Wykert, was born in Germany on the River Rhine, June 2, 1737. He came to America in 1756, when he was nineteen years of age, bringing with him a diploma that was signed by the ruler of the country. This diploma, in German and Latin, gave a full account of the family history of the Wykerts, and called for 17,000 pounds sterling. His wife, Elizabeth, who was born in Germany in 1746, died August 24, 1815, at the age of 69 years. Francis Wykert died May 9, 1825, at the age of 88 years and 24 days.

Francis and Elizabeth Wykert, this pioneer German family, were parents of four daughters and three sons. The daughters were Elizabeth, Mariah, Fannie and Lydia. The sons were Frank, Henry and Nicholas Wykert, the latter being the father of Henry Clark Wykert, the subject of this sketch.

Nicholas Wykert, father of Henry Clark Wykert, was born in Berks County, Pennsylvania, where his parents settled on coming to America, the date of his birth being October 19, 1795. He moved to Washington County, Pennsylvania, and lived there a few years. Then he went to Marshall County, West Virginia, where he lived until October 10, 1855, he came to Doniphan County, Kansas.

Nicholas Wykert, father of the subject of this sketch, was married four times, while living in Marshall County, West Virginia, and was the father of nineteen children, his being one of the largest families in that region. His first wife was Mary MacMahn of Glasgow, Scotland, to whom he was married May 18, 1823. To this union the following named children were born:

Richard, born May 25, 1824; Susan, born July 20, 1825; John B., born February 1, 1827; Samuel M., born November 12, 1828; Frances, born September 11, 1830; Henry Clark, born August 9, 1832; William, born April 7, 1835.

The mother of these seven children died July 30, 1836.

The second wife of Nicholas Wykert was Catharine Potter, and their marriage occurred December 3, 1837. To them were born these three children:

Gooly, a daughter, born September 19, 1838, and died April 3, 1840, aged one year, six months and 15 days; Thomas Benton, born March 23, 1840; Thompson, born December 4, 1841.

Mrs. Catharine Potter Wykert died February 4, 1846.

The third wife of Nicholas Wykert was Chloe Freeland, whom he married February 15, 1848. No children were born to their union. She died about two years after their marriage.

Nicholas Wykert's fourth wife was Mary Jane Miller. They were married January 24, 1854. She died in St. Joseph, Missouri, June 10, 1905. To this union nine children were born:

Alexander, born April 13, 1855, in Virginia, was killed by a horse in Burr Oak Bottom, Friday, August 31, 1877.

Charles Hamilton, now a policeman in St. Joseph, born March 30, 1857, in Burr Oak Bottom, he being the first child born after the family came to Doniphan County.

Elizabeth Emeline, born November 30, 1859, now Mrs. Greer, resides 2828 Seneca Street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Sabina Issibelah, born February 7, 1862, died December 9, 1869.

Frances M., born September 7, 1864, now Mrs. Dixon A. Porter, and resides 2202 Jule Street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Roberto, born May 22, 1867, now Mrs. Sitton of Twenty-sixth and Cedar streets, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Noah Albert, born November 13, 1869, resides 2319 South Eighteenth Street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Sarah Louisa, April 10, 1872, died December 20, 1914.

Nicholas Lawrence, Jr., born September 27, 1874, died August 1875.

The subject of this sketch, Henry Clark Wykert, whose career in Doniphan County we are now to review, was the sixth child of Nicholas Wykert and at the time his father came to Doniphan County from Marshall County, West Virginia, where he was born in 1832, he was a young man of nearly twenty-three years of age. He left his native state July 1, 1856, and landed in Doniphan County on Friday, July 18 of that year. He has always regarded Friday as his lucky day and most of his important business transactions have been on that day.

Henry Clark Wykert was married to Margaret Jane Mansfield, who was born January 4, 1842, the date of their marriage being April 15, 1861, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. David Stockings at Glen Sampson's home in the north part of Center Township. Mrs. Wykert died November 14, 1903. Born to this union were four sons and six daughters.

The second wife of Henry Clark Wykert was Mrs. Sarah Jane Hammond. They were married at Diller, Nebraska, July 17, 1910, and she is an agreeable companion.

Henry Clark Wykert has had a remarkably active career here in Doniphan County which has been his home sixty years. After coming to this county he purchased his farm from John R. Plummer in 1867, and moved on to it the same year. He had received a good education in his old home in West Virginia, and had taught school there two terms in the days of the goose quills used for pens. Here in Doniphan County he devoted his attention to farming and at the same time gave much time to study. He attended the great Bur Oak Bottom camp meeting of 1870 and was one of the converts to Christianity. After that he began preaching as a country preacher, being ordained June 12, 1871, on Mosquito Creek, when the Rev. Mr. Ruth preached there. From that he served as a preacher thirty years, also conducting his farm. During his life he has been a great reader of the scriptures, having read the bible through twenty-eight times. He was a preacher of force and a power for good in the community. He retired from the ministry sixteen years ago, but by no means has his interest in religious work abated.

Now in the eighty-fourth year of his long and useful life Henry Clark Wykert looks back with satisfaction on his work and is proud of his record. He has reared a large family of children and has twenty-six grand children, and also is proud of the fact that he is one of the nineteen children of his father, Nicholas Wykert.

EDNEY ASA JACKSON

A Native of Iowa Township—Resides on Farm His Father Entered.

The subject of this sketch belongs to one of the pioneer families of Iowa Township, in which he was born and reared. His first recollections were the grasshoppers in 1875, when only a small boy. His father was Charles Jackson and his mother Eliza Jane Miner Jackson. Edney Asa Jackson was born March 15, 1870, and educated in the country schools. On September 3, 1896, he was married to Miss Margaret Jane Kiley, who is a native of Center Township and enjoys the distinction of being one of the nine daughters of Mrs. John Kiley, who is the oldest settler in Doniphan County, having settled on their farm three miles southeast of Troy in Center Township, March 24, 1864. Edney A. owns the 160 acres of land which his father homesteaded. He is one of the good citizens of Iowa Township and an industrious and painstaking man.

SIDNEY M. LUCAS

Noted Stock Breeder and Farmer in Iowa Township.

Sidney M. Lucas was born August 25, 1859, in Mornow County, Ohio, and came to Doniphan County with his parents, Levi and Mary Lucas, in the spring of 1869 when he was nine years old. His school days were spent much like other boys of his age, in the public schools in the country.

On October 9, 1881, he married Miss Elizabeth Penney, daughter of William and Nancy Penney. Mrs. Lucas was born in Doniphan County on May 17, 1864. They have seven children living and one dead. Annie E., born July 9, 1882, now wife of Roy O. Parker of Iowa Township; Otto E., born October 27, 1883; Daisy E., born September 9, 1890, now wife of Earl Miller of Iowa Township; Velma L., born May 14, 1893, now wife of Fred Bryant of Iowa Township; Edna L., born October 2, 1894; Wm. I., born March 8, 1897; Margaret S., born October 16, 1899; Jesse E., born November 22, 1886, and died February 23, 1904.

Mr. Lucas owns 120 acres of farm land, and, including his own land, farms 440 acres. In addition to general farming, he raises fine stock, especially road horses, jacks and draft horses.

James H. Maller

James H. Maller, one of Troy's business men, who came here from Madison County, Iowa, on June 19, 1908, and has been engaged in the poultry business ever since, has the reputation of being one of the foremost authorities on the poultry subject in the state of Kansas.

He is a very aggressive business person, and that time worn motto, "Honesty is the best policy," has always been his closest associate in both business and personal life and he attributes his success to that motto.

Mr. Maller and his wife are both active workers in the Methodist Episcopal Church and have a host of friends in that congregation.

Prior to Mr. Maller's coming to Troy there had never been anyone who had given their whole time to the poultry business, hence the advent of the poultry specialist who has been a benefactor owing to the highest market prices which he has been able to pay to producers in the surrounding community as it has caused trade to come to Troy which otherwise would have gone elsewhere. This business has been and is considered now to be such a very valuable adjunct to the other classes of business houses that it has been recognized as being one of the most valuable enterprises in the town.

The man who is best informed on abstracts and titles in Doniphan County is A. L. Perry of Troy.

Oldest Troy Church

Was Rendezvous for Celebrities During the '60's—Presbyterian Edifice Was Erected in 1865 By Early Citizens of Doniphan County—Rock for Foundation Was Hauled By John Moorehead and His Son, William S., Who Are Residents of Troy—When Court House Burned, Mar. 12, 1867, Judge Graham Held Court in This Church—Frank Kinsey Has Old Deed—Mary Elizabeth Ann Zimmerman Has Old Church Records.

There is romance, history and practically everything that would appeal to the follower of the Christian religion, in the old Presbyterian Church of Troy. It stands today as a monument to the earliest settlers of Doniphan County. Its doors were closed for ten or twelve years and only occasionally were they thrown open to those who would worship within its walls. Now, once again, it is in a period of usefulness; the congregation, during the year 1915 engaging the services of the Rev. W. H. Sellheim, so, with a return of the old activities, interest in the old building really grows greater, for it has a wonderful history that is connected with the leading men and women of the early days in Troy.

The structure was erected in the year 1865. During the fall of 1864, John Morehead, who still resides in Troy and who is now 92 years old, began the hauling of rock, assisted by his son, William S., from the quarry situated on the Henry F. Goss farm, now the James Goss place, about two miles north of Troy. Three yoke oxen were used to carry the stone to the site of the edifice. It was a most tedious and difficult task but Mr. Morehead and those who were associated with him worked faithfully until it was completed.

The moving spirit behind the church and the man who was responsible for it more than any other was Judge James B. Maynard, one of Doniphan County's best citizens. Judge Maynard donated and hauled most of the lumber for the building. He was the father of Mrs. Mary E. A. Zimmerman, who now resides in South Troy, and who still is a member of the historic old church. Lewis Zimmerman, another old-time resident, also assisted in hauling the lumber. He was the father of A. B. Zimmerman, of the firm of Zimmerman & Williamson, who own a general merchandise store, and for many years was one of the guiding spirits in the destinies of the church.

The lot on which the structure stands was purchased from F. E. Sheldon and his wife, who were at one time residents of Andrew County, Missouri. In this connection there is a point in the history that is of exceptional interest. Frank Kinsey, who is of the Presbyterian faith and one of the leading members of the church at the present time, has in his possession the deed to the property and the articles of incorporation. They were given to the committee and Mr. Kinsey has kept them together with a list of the charter members. The articles of incorporation and the deed are given here in full because it is believed they will be of unusual interest.

"This certificate of incorporation of 'The First New School Presbyterian Church' of Troy, Doniphan County, Kansas, made in accordance with the general statutes of the state of Kansas, approved February 29th, 1868, this 28th day of April, 1869, sets forth as follows:

The Presbyterian Church, built in Troy in 1865.

Duncan McIntosh was Register of Deeds for Doniphan County at that time and to the articles he appended his signature as a witness. The name of Thomas Moonlight as Secretary of State also was signed. The deed of the property was filed for record at noon, February 21, 1865. It follows:

"This deed made and entered into this 20th day of February, A. D. 1865, by and between Franklin E. Sheldon and Katherine Sheldon, his wife, of the county of Andrew, state of Missouri, of the first part and James B. Maynard, Cyrus C. Camp, James Louis Zimmerman, John C. Zimmerman, trustees of the Troy New School Presbyterian Church, of the second part, witnesseth: that the said parties of the first part for and in consideration of the sum of fifty-five dollars ($55) to them in hand paid by the said parties of the second part, receipt whereof is hereby confessed and acknowledged, have given, granted, bargained, sold and conveyed and by these presents do give, grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said parties of the second part and to their successors as such trustees forever, the following real estate lying in the city of Troy, in the county of Doniphan and state of Kansas to wit: The east one half of Block twenty-eight in said city according to the plat of the same on file in the Recorder's office for the said county. To have and to hold the said premises together with all the rights, privileges and appurtenances therewith belong or in any wise appertaining unto them, the said parties as trustees of the second part, their successors as such trustees forever. The said parties of the first part hereby agree to these provisions. In testimony whereof the said parties of the first part have hereunto set their hand and seals on the day and year first herein written. F. E. Sheldon, Katherine Sheldon. In the presence of E. A. Carson."

The church stands about six feet above the street on the south side of the thoroughfare fronting north and it is located on the Ocean to Ocean highway which passes through Doniphan County. The first pastor was the Rev. F. E. Sheldon, and in the early days a parsonage was built. It is now the home of Charles W. Reeder, the County Attorney. It was sold several years after its construction and another never was erected. The only church wedding that can be recalled now by some of the older Doniphan County citizens was that of Dr. and Mrs. R. S. Dinsmore on November 21, 1883. There are quite a large number of Troy residents who remember when the edifice was going up.

"I can remember very distinctly when the structure was in progress," said William Morehead. "There was quite a bit of excitement because Troy was little more than a handful of houses then. Lots of people helped to erect the structure and many just came to watch. I think I was about 15 years old but I know I was an interested spectator."

William White, now a Troy resident, is another who has a distant recollection of the progress on the building. It was early in the spring of 1865 when he came with his family, and Mr. White and several other boys played marbles in the half finished edifice Sunday March 4th. Just what punishment was meted out to the lads for thus defiling the sacred portals of the church is not stated, but it probably was very severe.

The building served not only as a house of worship but as a temple of justice as well. When the old court house burned on March 12, 1867, there was no place to bring offenders against the law; and there were plenty of them in those days, for Kansas had not adopted its prohibition amendment and Troy was not without the evil of the saloon. Consequently there was need of immediate action to obtain a place in which to dispense justice as meted out according to the laws of man. Judge Graham who was then presiding over the District Court, made arrangements with the Rev. Sheldon and the official board to use the church building as a court room. The trustees were also consulted and gave their consent. About two nights after the church was secured for a temporary court house there was trouble in one of the city's booze dispensaries. One Henry Smith got into an altercation with one Sam Jackson. During the free-for-all fight which always follows such brawls, Samuel booted Henry in the abdominal developments and it resulted later in the death of Smith. There were several versions of the affair. Some witnesses stating that Smith was to blame, he having started the affair, but at any rate the trial was held in the church and it resulted in an acquittal for the defendant. Perhaps the jurors felt that as they were in the Lord's house they should remember more than ever to temper justice with mercy. In any event, it probably is the first, last and only time in the history of Kansas that a church has been used for a murder trial.

Tommy Taylor and his dog, Rover.

It so happened that it was an extra long session of the court and the murder trial was not all that came up for disposition. There were several divorce suits. In two cases they were granted, and in others they were thrown out. At this date it has been impossible to find any old citizens of Doniphan county who served on the jury, but it is known that Henry Johnson was clerk of the court at that time and Enoch Crab was the sheriff. Both men have long since passed away. George W. Strahan, the present district clerk of the county, was living here at the time and has the old journal in his possession in his vaults. There is one man in the county, however, who was present during the murder trial. He is George Williamson and he is still a member of the church. Mr. Williamson is now eighty-four years of age and came to Doniphan County in 1855. He is still very active and says he remembers well when the first session of the court was held. Contrary to general expectation, he states that the innovation caused little excitement at the time because people were all very busy with their work.

A picnic scene in Troy, taken by W. C. Elwood.

The Zimmermans, as a family, were very active in the church's affairs. There was a large settlement of them to the south and west of Troy and they gave not only of their time but their money as well to help erect a place for the worship of the Almighty. The younger generation, all of whom still reside in the county, are still active members of the congregation. All, however, was not smooth sailing for the old church. During the perid between 1866 and 1890, it was well attended and on Sunday it was hard to obtain a pew. Gradually, however, new churches began to be established in Troy and as the new ones appeared each took its quota from the congregation of the old Presbyterian. It gradually took on a serious aspect and ten or twelve years ago it was found that there were not enough members to support a minister and regular services were discontinued.

Occasionally Park College at Parkville, Missouri, would send a man to fill the pulpit, but it was not at any regular time. The gallant old structure stood like a Rock of Ages, deserted and alone in the middle of the sea. On September 12, 1915, however, a new impetus was given to the movement for a minister and the Rev. Mr. W. H. Sellheim, a young minister from Colorado, was called for a year. The congregation is increasing every Sunday and there are now about forty members of the church, all of whom are among the leading citizens of Troy. There are services twice daily on Sunday, prayer meetings during the week and there is a plan under way at the present writing to obtain the services of a strong evangelist. Through his aid it is believed the membership of the church will be increased and its present congregation roused to a greater effort to perpetuate the old "First School Presbyterian Church."

At the residence of Judge Maynard on the 26th day of January, 1863, the following persons being so assembled by previous agreement, to wit: Rev. Franklin E. Sheldon, James B. Maynard, John C. Zimmerman, Lewis Zimmerman and Jacob Zimmerman. The meeting was called to order by the Rev. Mr. F. E. Sheldon, who by consent acted as chairman of said meeting. At said meeting it was resolved and determined to organize a Presbyterian Church, to be called "The New School Presbyterian Church of Troy.

The above named persons, having been heretofore members of the the Church of Christ, were duly organized as a church with the above name, by the Rev. F. E. Sheldon. John P. Zimmerman, who was known to all of the above-named persons as having been heretofore a Ruling Elder in the Presbyterian church previous to his removal to this vicinity, was duly elected Ruling Elder in said church and he having previously signified his willingness to act as such, he was declared a Ruling Elder in said church.

The above-named persons being assembled at the time and place, as above stated, determined to erect a church edifice, in the City of Troy, for themselves and organized themselves into a building committee, for the purpose aforesaid, of whom the following were appointed to the respective positions, to wit: Reverend F. E. Sheldon, chairman protem, Judge James B. Maynard, treasurer, and Jacob Zimmerman, secretary.

At a subsequent meeting of this church, called on the 17th day of April, 1866, the following persons were delegated trustees of the church: Judge James B. Maynard, John C. Zimmerman, Lewis Zimmerman and C. C. Camp and said trustees so elected were constituted a building committee for the erection of a church edifice.

It is here a matter of record, that at the first meeting of which an account is here given, a subscription to build a church as contemplated, was prepared for such purpose, on which and for which the following persons subscribed fifty dollars ($50.00) to wit: F. E. Sheldon, Judge J. B. Maynard, John P. Zimmerman, by his sons, Lewis Zimmerman, John C. Zimmerman and Jacob Zimmerman.

This subscription was afterward increased to the amount of thirteen hundred dollars ($1,300.00) by the members of the congregation. Eight hundred dollars was afterward raised by the agency and solicitation of the Rev. Mr. Sheldon, and four hundred dollars was obtained from the church erection fund of the Presbyterian Church, for the payment of which sum, the trustees executed a mortgage on the church building according to the stipulation of said church erection committee. The cost of the lot of land for the church and for the building thereon, amounted to twenty-eight hundred dollars, including the cost of the bell, which was one hundred and fifty dollars.

There was contributed in gifts, in labor, in procuring stone from the Henry F. Goss quarry, and material for the church, three hundred dollars in addition to the above several amounts, so that the church when dedicated, cost twenty-eight hundred dollars ($2,800.00) to January 14, 1866. The following costs of the church accrued afterward, to wit: Seating, enclosing ground pulpit, carpeting and repainting, making the whole amount for completing the church three thousand dollars ($3,000.00) when finished.

The members met at the church now completed on the 17th day of April, 1866, and the first named trustees were re-elected, to wit: Judge J. B. Maynard, John C. Zimmerman, Lewis Zimmerman, C. C. Camp and X. K. Stout. A notice of said meeting and election was recorded duly according to law in the clerk's office in Troy.

Some two years elapsed from the commencement of the building of the church to its completion. This was owing mostly to the war and the troubled state of the country, during which the church was built, and was not finally completed and dedicated until the 14th day of January, 1866.

On the 14th day of January, 1866, the church building, being completed and ready for use, was dedicated on said day. The dedicatory sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. B. B. Parsons, of St. Joseph, Mo., from Mathew 18-18. Dr. Parson preached at the request of the Rev. Mr. Sheldon.

And on this day the following persons were received into the church on certificate: James Toner and Margaret Toner, his wife, and Mrs. Catherine Sheldon; the following persons were received as members of said church on profession: George Zimmerman, and Mrs. Ann Zimmerman, his wife, Martin Zimmerman, Martha Stout, Catherine Maynard, Daniel Snyder, Mrs. Ellen Camp, Mrs. Ann Border, William Johnston, Mrs. Jane Daw, Mrs. F. Maylar, Mrs. John Patterson Zimmerman, George Wicker, Mrs. F. Wicker, his wife, and Mrs. Judge Maynard.

On the 20th day of January, 1866, the following persons appeared before the session and were received as members of this church to wit: G. D. Baker, by letter; Xerxis Kees Stout, Miss Mary Morrison, Mrs. Louisa Zimmerman, Mrs. Ann Maylor, Mrs. Eliza Saxie, Mrs. Elizabeth Saxie, on profession, and on the following Sabbath were publicly received as members of this church.

On the 21st day of January, 1866, the first communion, by the celebration of the Lord's Supper, was had by this church.

On the 27th day of January, 1866, the following persons were received by the session, to wit: Charles Maynard, David Loyd, Harriet L. Loyd, E. A. Watkins, Clarissa Watkins, Laura Seargeant, Mary I. Cromick, E. A. Sergeant, Sarah Murry, Scott M. Zimmerman, John M. Toner, Emma A. Toner, the Misses Sergeant, Mary E. A Maynard, Mary Zimmerman, William Richardson, William Snow and Milton Zimmerman.

On the 10th day of February, 1866, the following members were received into the church, to wit: John Morehead, Mary A. Morehead, Mary Newman, Sarah Fields, Miss Sergeant, Madison Newman and America Newman (the last two freed persons).

On May 12, 1866, William Warner and Martha Warner, his wife, were received into the church.

On May 27, 1866, John C. and Sarah A. Power, his wife; Mr. C. P. Cunningham and Annie Cunningham, his wife, were received as members of the church by letter.

On August 11, 1866, at a meeting called for the purpose, a new Ruling Elder was elected. John C. Power was unanimously elected for said office, having been a Ruling Elder before coming to this church. Home mission collection taken amounting to thirty dollars.

On November 10, 1866, Duncan McIntosh was received into this church by letter from the church of Highland, Old School. On the same day, James M. A. Trent and Mrs. Hampson were received into the church on profession.

On February 9, 1867, at a regular meeting called for the occasion previous notice having been given to elect another Ruling Elder of the church, Duncan McIntosh was unanimously elected to the said office, having been a Ruling Elder in the Presbyterian Church at Highland. On the same day, the following persons were received as members of this church by letter: Dr. E. H. DeLuc and Mrs. DeLuc, his wife; Mrs. Fanny Zimmerman, all of the Presbyterian Church of Lawrence; Miss Matilda Blair of the church of St. Joseph, Missouri., Miss Eliza Ann Tillitson of the Baptist Church, Cherry Grove, Iowa. The following persons were received by profession: William A. Helvy, Lizzie Saxey, Alfred Saxey, Mrs. Rolerson and Richard Thompson, her son, a mute; John L. Lelars and Martha Lelars his wife; Mrs. Perry and Mrs. Martha Bowen.

On February 16, 1867, the following persons were received into the church on profession: James Saxton, Jefferson Hulse, Eva Hulse, Wilson Ogan, and Susan Ogan, his wife; William Trent, Mattie Stout, Fillmore Ogan, Henry C. Gage, John E. Mailer, Katie Mailer, Oliver W. Higby, Rebecca Trent, Elizabeth Trent, Morgan Lee and Mrs. Annie Lee, his wife, by letter; Lillie Sheldon and Ella Gossen.

On February 23, 1867, the following persons were received into the church on profession: E. Pickett, Electa Ann Hayton, John Landers, Dr. B. S. Cash and Hannah L. Cash, his wife, and Mrs. Mary E. Cash, by letter.

On February 24, 1867, the following persons were received into the church by profession: Alect I. Walton, Mrs. Mary I. Pickett and Mrs. Narcissa Pickett, now Mrs. Joseph Hill of Beloit, her daughter.

Pioneer Killed

In the fall of 1859, Dan Fox was shot and killed in the cabin on his claim in the Raw Hide vicinity by a concealed man. It is believed that his assassin was a pro-slavery man.

Oliver Edwards

Oliver Edwards, who died the day after the election in November, 1888, was a prominent man in Doniphan County, and manifested a great deal of interest in educational work. Albert R. Graves was appointed to fill out his vacancy, November 19, 1888, and served to November 5, 1889, at which time Miss Frances E. Katner was elected to fill the unexpired term.

Murder—Carr-Hamilton

In 1863, at old Charlestown, which was located at the mouth of Gibson Creek on the Missouri River, in Center Township, James Carr shot and killed Charley Hamilton at the store in Charlestown. The former was a merchant and the latter a blacksmith. A dispute arose over the price of a plug of tobacco, which caused the men to become obstreperous. After an acrimonious discussion for several minutes, Carr shot Hamilton. The latter grabbed Carr and a free-for-all ensued, when James M. Miller, postmaster, pulled the said Hamilton off. At this juncture, Carr shot Hamilton again in the head. Bert Gibson owns the place on which the affray occurred.

Mrs. Mamie Mitchell was tried for the murder of her husband, Wm. Mitchell, in Troy, September 7, 1905, and was acquitted.

Troy's Lovers' Lane

Old Long Bridge Across the Draw Between the Catholic Church and J. S. Norman's House Was a Favorite Meeting Place for Young Folks to Do Their Spooning in Years Past—Ardent Turtle Doves Were Very Much Grieved When the Span Was Torn Down During the Incumbency of Mayor Henry J. Calnan.

Ed Sinclair, Jess Thompson, Roy Van Bibber, E. L. Kleppe, Steve Long, Ivy Stiles and John Aberle, Should Have Been in Business.

Numbers of the present generation in Troy recall with smiles of amusement the days when Lovers' Lane was in the height of its popularity—those days of youth and puppy love. There's no use for anyone who ever attended school in Troy to deny recollections of this old-time spooning spot, for the writer is guilty himself, and could mention a few names, if he were so disposed.

The lane used to be a lovely spot on fine evenings and it was regularly patronized by young couples, who could not resist the lure of the moonlight and the whispering breezes, so they would snuggle side by each on the bridge, leaning against or sitting on the rail, the lady properly supported. Many of Troy's most promising young men allowed their opportunities to go go to "waist" under the spell of Lovers' Lane. They would hold hands and giggle, and whisper foolish, soft things to each other in the gloom—things that they wouldn't own up to in the broad light of the sun.

It was no uncommon sight to see both rails of the bridge crowded with high school girls and boys, getting all the happiness out of life, and now and then singing snatches of popular love ditties of the day. The rail was eventually worn as smooth as Harry Godden ever could have planed it and finished it off if he had bought out the stock of planes and and emery paper of Winzer Bros., Ed Sinclair, A. D. Jones and Roy Van Bibber combined.

The long bridge was located on the north side of the street, east of the J. F. Kotsch home, and formed a connecting link with the sidewalk extending from the postoffice to the Catholic church. It was about 100 feet in length across the depression, which occasionally became a water-course after a rain-fall. Nearby was the home of J. S. Norman, now cashier of the First National Bank, the present home of Mose Keckler. There was a substantial and convenient railing on each side, which formed the resting place for dozens of lovelorn lads and lasses after they were tired of promenading back and forth; and when the rail became crowded, the couple longest there was supposed to be polite enough to observe the rules of the game and get up and give Cupid a shot at somebody else. The little god's arrows flew thick and fast, and it is said as a matter of fact that certain romances which had their beginning on the bridge in the evening proved very satisfactorily and happily for some of the couples, inasmuch as they culminated in weddings.

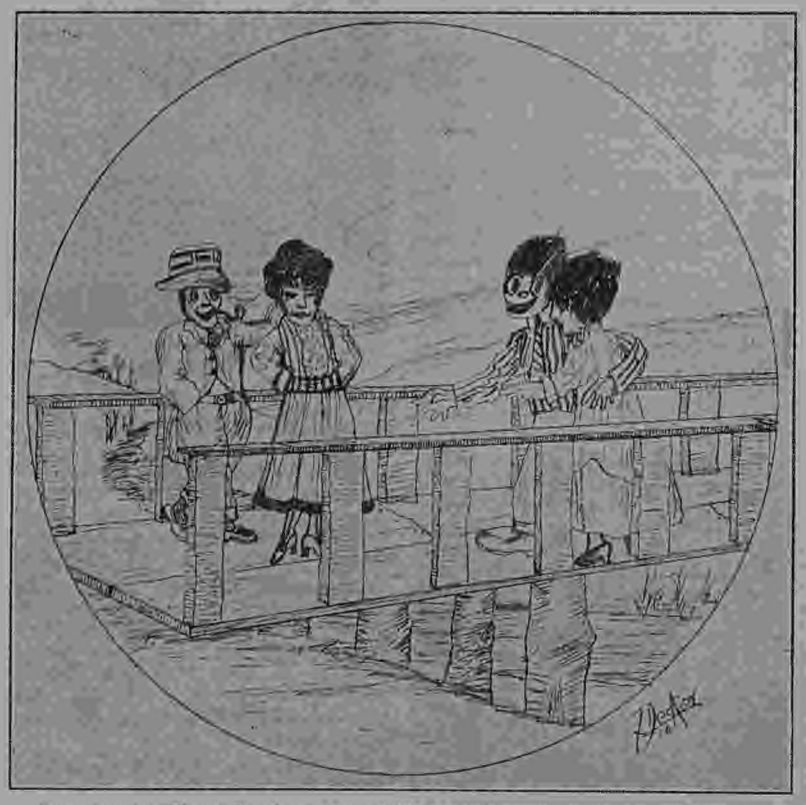
In fact, the popularity of the bridge was frequently so overtaxed that ordinary pedestrians had to squeeze through in single file in order to gain a passage at all and not disturb the equilibrium and meditations of the couples so engrossed in one another. And be it said now to the everlasting credit of passersby that they nearly always respected the blind condition of the devotees of the bridge and stepped along as carefully as possible, so as not to interrupt the feast of happiness and the flow of soul.

The sweet songs that those beardless youths and tender maidens indulged in were enjoyed. Youth thinks it knows it all, and doubtless, as they quoted from love poems and joined hands, they felt they had tasted of life to their fill, and naught else really mattered.

One evening, as Maud Berry and Fred Kirby passed through the narrow pathway formed by the lovers on this historical bridge, Fred nudged Maud, and with a smile that indicated sincerity, ejaculated, "Ain't this swell!" and Maud replied, scornfully, "Why, no; it's just a lovers' lane." And so the lane received its name, which was considered an appropriate one.

The night the lane received its sobriquet, Miss Berry and Mr. Kirby were returning that way from the postoffice. It was a Sunday evening, and the bridge was well patronized by those who had paused to discuss the sermon at church and incidentally study astronomy. The couple above mentioned said they overheard a couple at the extreme end of the bridge, who were in the shades of the retreat, talking like this: "Does 'oo like me, love?" and she replied, as she cracked her chewing gum, "Tourse I does." And then the boy, "What would you do, love, if I should die?" Then the soul-stirring climax, as the fair-haired maiden choked over the feeling in her voice, "Why, I'd be so lonely that I never would visit this rendervous again. Oh, horrors! don't think of dying, but—I know we could live happily together."

Sketch by C. E. Walton, who resides four miles east of Troy.



Drawing by Floyd Decker, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Decker, of Troy.

When the bridge was torn down under the administration of Mr. H. J. Calnan, as mayor, there was mourning among the habitues of the line. Practically all of them were students at the high school at one time or another. As soon as one class of youthful hearts had graduated from the high school, they were supposed to have graduated also from further sessions along Lovers' Lane. The younger element then succeeded to the coveted privilege of courting on the bridge. However, there were a few selfish beaux who could not relinquish so choice an opportunity, and they persisted in attending through several summers, despite the frowns and protests of the young boys, who didn't stand a show, while the seasoned and experienced love-makers were on the job. Among the most proficient of the last named class were these popular young men, Orley Monroe and Boyd Ellis.

During favorable weather, the school boys and girls deemed it just as important to attend the seances on the bridge as the sessions at school. Prof. Alcid Bowers, now an attorney in St. Joseph, Mo., who resides at 104 North Twelfth street, was principal of the high school when the "lane" was named, those days, and his crop of students never neglected their prerogative of taking in the lane. It was one of his pupils who described love as a tickling of the heart that can't be scratched. Profs. B. F. Miller and U. S. Busch also have reason to remember the lane, as their pupils frequently gave evidence in class of having given too strict attention to lessons learned in Lovers' Lane. However, Professor Busch says that his school work in Troy was pleasant, and that he will ever have a kind word for the people of Troy and his scholars.

The laughter and love songs perpetrated there during fine evenings were frequently disturbing factors to the peace of mind of many adults who had outlived the time for such nonsense. J. S. Norman, president of the First National Bank, lived sufficiently near to know something about the antics and sayings of the lovesick swains and maidens, but it has been handed down as a matter of record that Mr. Norman was lenient in his judgment; doubtless he was not oblivious of the fact that he had been young and cut similar capers himself, so he never regretted the sleep he lost on account of the noise on the bridge. The Normans lived then where Mose Keckler lives now, and the steady patter of feet along the bridge and the interminable billing and cooing was plainly audible to them. Mr. Norman crossed the bridge in Lovers' Lane many a time when he walked eight miles night and morning to Bendena, where he taught school, and upon his return he was so fatigued that the noise had little effect upon his slumbers.

Many of the young folks who patronized Lovers' Lane in those good old days are married long since, and the rest contemplate it, we are fain to admit. Occasionally, however, when passing along the spot where the bridge formerly stood, they take a retrospective view of the old familiar surroundings, and with a smile recall the memories of other days. There are fathers and mothers in Troy today who spent their youths here, and the slightest reference to the old trysting place, causes their faces to broaden in an amused smile, and sometimes a little blush crops up behind their ears.

Those were happy days for the high school folks, and they undoubtedly availed themselves of the inspirations of youth, as developed every evening along Lovers' Lane. It is only a pity that some of the good merchants who sell such delicious confections in the way of bonbons and chocolates did not operate stores then, as they could have tempted the boys to spend all their pocket money on candy for their sweethearts. It would have been a harvest for Ed Sinclair, Ivy Stilse, Jess Thompson, Steve Long or Roy Van Bibber, as any of them have an excellent line of toothsome dainties for man and maid alike. And, say, it just comes to my mind—automobiles, too, would have been very popular, and would have thinned out the crowd on the bridge. Carl Earhart should have been in business then, and sold a few Maxwells, or E. L. Kleppe could have wheedled them into buying a Buick or two, and John Aberle might have sold a Ford; or a Ford might have sold itself.

Leonard Smith

Leonard Smith, who was one of the rioneers of Doniphan County, and operated the first hotel in Troy, which stood on the same spot where Jeff Clater's house stands today, was also proprietor of the Bellemont house and on Tuesday evening, Dec. 25, 1866, he gave a cotillion party in the hotel and a couple of dozen from Troy attended.

Highland Mission

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions offered the Mission buildings, farms and lands which were situated one and a half miles east of Highland, for sale to the highest bidder on December 27, 1866. Before offering the foregoing buildings for sale, an attempt was made to have the legislature pass a bill, making an agricultural college out of the Mission buildings, but it died in the committee room.—The Troy Reporter, Dec. 27, 1866.

Rev. W. M. Bishop

On Friday night, February 22d, the friends of Rev. Wm. Bishop turned out en masse, took possession of his house in Highland, presented him with twenty greenbacks and other useful things too numerous to mention, as an appreciation of their love and esteem for him.—Troy Weekly Reporter, February, 1867.

Pioneer Physicians

On Aug. 10, 1872, the Chief printed a list of the physicians in Troy, which were as follows: J. B. Wheeler, B. S. Cash, F. C. Hoffmeyer, LeDuc & Reeder and T. L. Holland. It is not known just how long this number of doctors subsisted, but certainly only a few months.

John E. Ricklefs

Born in Doniphan County, March 9, 1867—Life of Hard Work Made Him Among Most Prosperous in County—Farms 440 Acres—Home South of Troy Model Farm Home—Independent, But Ambition Still Makes Him Work.

With cold Kansas March winds howling like war cries of savages around the little rude pioneer home, a baby came to the Ricklefs family in Doniphan County, on March 9, 1867. The baby was John E. Ricklefs, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Mins E. Ricklefs, Kansas pioneers. Through the hardships of the early days Mr. Ricklefs has grown to be one of the most prosperous and progressive farmers of Doniphan County.

With the exception of health and sense of economy he had very little heritage besides the Kansas claim. His boyhood was spent on the farm. He knows what it is to get up when "the wind before the dawn." blows cold and keen against a little boy's shivering body, and to watch between chores the eternal mystery and solemnity of the coming of morning.

Likely enough it is the subtle influence of such early morning hours of working and thinking that has moulded the sturdy characters of such men as Mr. Ricklefs. Then in the long day that follows, hours of trudging behind the plow, or following the men in the field with a heavy, slippery water jug, come dreams and hopes unknown to the lad of the leisure city class. Association with the soil, the realization of the value of time and money—which are often the same to the farmer—develops a sense and practise of thrift, so characteristic of the farm-reared.

All these inherited ideas were fully developing in the boy. Early in life Benjamin Franklin's motto, "Economy is wealth," became Ricklefs'. Constant working of land stimulates the love for it and desire for possession of it. And this is characteristic of Kansas men who are both land lovers and home lovers.

Likewise is the longing for education. However, in the case of young Ricklef, as was with many sons of pioneers, education was limited to the most practical kind. It was enough that a boy could "cipher" so that he could tell how much 3,500 bushels of wheat would bring at seventy-five cents a bushel, or to be able to read the Bible and the family newspaper. A little geography, perhaps some history, was likely added. As to history, doubtless young Ricklefs had heard from the lips of participants, in the struggles of Kansas, the story of "bleeding Kansas," tales of Indian fights, the immortal story of John Brown and encounters with the famous "border ruffians." It is safe to say that he was often stirred with accounts of how Quantrell and his men swooped down on Lawrence in the early days.

These things made him think—and whatever makes you think is an education whether gained from books or people—and it made him appreciate the comparative safety in which he lived. For "man cannot live on bread alone," nor yet solely subsist on industry. Usually he must have a "help meet." Such was Ricklefs. Among the fine young women Mr. Ricklefs knew was Miss Anna Volker, the daughter of Carl and Christina Volker, of Atchison County. The friendship of the young people grew to something deeper. At the close of a glorious Indian summer, on October 29, 1890, he married Miss Volker.

The young couple settled down to make the most of life. The husband began to increase the improvements on the farm. Already in his vision was a comfortable home. Meanwhile the wife began to display those qualities which showed how well she was fitted to be the life partner of the industrious farmer. Her housekeeping was a model and her pickles and perserves and other cooking were the talk and envy of the country side.

A good wife is usually the best of mothers, and so it was with Mrs. Ricklefs. Amid April showers their first born came, on April 20, 1892. He was named Lawrence R. Ricklefs. He was reared on his father's farm and on October 15, 1914, married Miss Reeba Chalk, of Wathena, a former prominent Doniphan County school teacher. Another son, Ralph B. Ricklefs, was born Nov. 19, 1899. Then came a wee baby girl, Ruby A. Ricklefs, who was born December 23, 1900. A third son, Irvin R. Ricklefs, was born on September 8, 1902. The youngest child is another daughter, Rosa L. Ricklefs born September 3, 1906. The children seem to inherit the good qualities of their parents, and it is a safe prediction that they will reflect credit upon the home training of the father and mother.

The beautiful, spacious residence of John Ricklefs, situated just south of Troy.

In a practical way Mrs. Ricklefs furnishes an example of industry to her children. Perhaps next to her family her great interests in life are her chickens. She raises the famous Plymouth Barred Rock chickens and the prized Rouden ducks. The poultry yard is her favorite place. From the time the downy chicks emerge from the shell to the day they go where all good chickens go, individually and collectively, the chickens and ducks are under her direct care. If a chick gets sick it is Mrs. Ricklefs who knows just how to cure it. If rains threaten to drown the feathered brood, Mrs. Ricklefs will brave any shower to care for the flock.

For raising chickens, and especially the raising of thoroughbred chickens is by no means a small undertaking. It is easy enough to figure on paper how many eggs a hen will lay on an average, how many chickens will hatch, how much it will cost to feed each chicken until sold—or eaten at home—and how much the net profit will be. In theory, anyone can make money on chickens. In practice, any one will lose money on chickens, unless the strictest economy and care is taken.

There is the "pip," the chickens cholera. vermin and hundreds of other causes which kill chickens and cut down the profits. However, whether or not Mrs. Ricklefs brings up chickens for pleasure as much as profit, it is quite likely that she is ahead at the end of the chicken season.

John Ricklefs and family.

And her fried chickens are fit for a king. Likewise her bread and the cooking which she does in a manner creditable to any professor of domestic science, with all the science of cooking at her fingers' ends.

In addition to her caring for her chickens, Mrs. Ricklefs does all her own housework. For her home is her pride. She wishes it to be the ideal home for her children.

They enjoy a home which is a great contrast to the rude pioneer "shack" in which their father was born. The present Ricklefs residence may be considered one of the ideal farm houses in location, structure and arrangement. It is situated on slight raise. From its windows is a view of one of the best farms in Doniphan County or in Kansas for that matter. The interior is finished in the best of taste. Comforts and conveniences of all kinds abound.

Thus in "the kingdom of her home", Mrs. Ricklefs holds her gentle sway. She is the chief adviser in all family matters, as well as a counselor for the women of the vicinity. Her perfect housekeeping adds much to the attractiveness of the house. She has brought up her children "in the way they should go" and it is safe to venture that when they leave the home roof they will not "depart therefrom."

Kindly, sympathetic, intellectual and progressive, is Mrs. Ricklefs. Her training of her former school teacher days perists and she is ever wide awake for the latest ideas in domestic or educational lines. She has been the greatest of inspiration to her children and their school studies have been supplemented by the efforts of the mother teacher. She believes in her children.

For no matter what a person may attain, either in material or intellectual gains, no matter what fame or fortune be his, the greatest treasure in his heart of hearts, will be the cherished memories of the lessons learned from the mother; of the tender admonition and cheer when childish troubles seemed as big as the troubles of the grown ups. . Given this sympathy at home, from a woman who is a real woman and a mother who is a real mother, a girl or a boy, has wealth greater than all the wealth of the earth—riches which "thieves shall not steal away."

The mother-love enriches the commonplaceness of things, it sweetens the bitterness when ideals perish against the cold bluntness of realities. For earth "has no sorrows which mother-love can not heal." And such a woman, and such a mother is Mrs. Ricklefs.

Quite likely this home influence, as well as the hardships of his early life, accounts for the continued ambition of Mr. Ricklefs. He is independently rich, but he scorns to be idle. His activities are varied. He constantly is in close touch with all the phases of farm work.

His acres are as broad as his interests. In addition to the 280 acres on which stands the handsome residence where he now resides, he also owns 160 acres in Wayne Township. The care of this land with its crops and cattle absorbs him. The hum of the reaper and the lowing of cattle is music to him. For several years he has specialized in short horn cattle. The breeding and raising, with the feeding and marketing of cattle is an industry in itself outside of the regular farm work, but Mr. Ricklefs oversees all of this.

Aside from the general live stock raising, he also makes a specialty of thoroughbred Percheron horses, which bring him fancy prices. Heavy of hoof and arched of neck are these big, fine horses, and their satiny sides indicating the great care taken of them, make the animals worth going miles to see. In addition he owns a fine stallion and several jacks.

With all these things described, the Ricklefs, approaching the autumn of of life, may enjoy the fruits of economy, industry and hope. Now the family may ride in the handsome automobile, owned by them, trips over roads where the father trudged barefooted as a boy. And the family may well be proud of the material prosperity of the man, whose broad acres and fertile fields are monuments to industry and thrift, the persistency in overcoming obstacles and hardships; the reward of long hours of toil and intelligent effort, co-operating—and combatting—with Nature and Mother Earth.

Progressive Burr Oak Township Farmer, Now Retired and Living in Troy, Who Was First to Engage in Fruit-Growing Extensively in Burr Oak Township and Who Also Was First to Grow Alfalfa in That Locality—He Is a Representative of High Class German Farmers and Has Wielded a Great Influence in the Affairs of Doniphan County.

Joseph George Euler, who now resides in his neat home in Troy, has been a successful farmer and fruit-grower and has had much to do with the development of agriculture and horticulture to their present high standard in Doniphan County.

The subject of this review was born in Illinois, March 5, 1858. He came with his parents to Doniphan County, April 12, 1863, when they settled in Center Township. His father was Justice Euler, who was born in Germany, 1826, and died here May 4, 1888. His mother was Barbara Faeth, who was born in Germany, October 26, 1836, and died March 18, 1909, in Doniphan County.

On November 3, 1880, Joseph George Euler was married to Leona Caroline Guy, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Ott of the Smith Creek German M. E. Church.

Mrs. Euler was born in Iowa September 2, 1859. They went to Burr Oak township and there on a fine farm they resided from the time of their marriage until in April, 1912, the farm was sold by Mr. Euler and they moved to Troy to spend their declining years. To their union three sons and four daughters were born. Ida, the first child, died at the age of six months, and Edward, the second child, died at the age of three weeks. The sons and daughters living are:

John Edward Euler, born July 18, 1883. He married Miss Lorena Tophenia Arnold, October 6, 1907, and to them there have been born three sons: Joseph William, born July 5, 1910; Chester Raymond, born January 24, 1913; Francis Kennard, born May 12, 1915.

Calvin George Euler, born December 18, 1885. He married Miss Ida Cordonier November 6, 1913.

Fannie Isabel Euler, born August 11, 1888. Married to Calvin Pollard September 24, 1910. Their children are: Calvin Earl, born October 16, 1911; Thelma Leotha, born March 27, 1915.

Inez Irene Euler, born October 22, 1896.

Most all of the members of these families are connected with the Methodist and Baptist Churches and are influential members of their communities.

Joseph George Euler, the subject of this sketch, and the father of these sons and daughters, grew up in Center Township and was educated in the district school near the old home place. He was a hard working, frugal young man, with a love for farming that could not be supplanted by the allurements of the city and town. When he married he went on to a farm of his own in Burr Oak Township where for many long years he strove to make it the best farm in that part of the county. He was progressive in his ideas of farming and a student of the soil. His ideas brought him splendid results and by close application to the business of farming, good management and frugal living he not only succeeded in enriching his acres and making his farm attractive, but was able to lay up a goodly store of this world's goods and to become prosperous and independent.

To Joseph George Euler credit is due for many things that have worked to the common good of the farming community. Mr. Euler was among the first to realize the value of Doniphan County soil as best suited of any soil in the Middle West for commercial fruit-growing. On his 150-acre farm he planted several acres of good trees, and by employing the right methods of care and treatment he soon found himself the owner of an orchard of money-making trees that any man would be proud to own. Mr. Euler also was the first farmer in Burr Oak Township to introduce alfalfa on his farm. He made a study of alfalfa, and as a result of his study he found that it was adapted to the soil of Doniphan County, and with proper planting and care in cutting and handling it could be grown with more profit than any of the other grasses. In the end he has made good money on his alfalfa and his fields were always a delight to look upon as well as a source of profit to him, whether he sold his hay in the market or fed it to his stock.

In Burr Oak Township Joseph George Euler was at all times a leader in all movements for the public welfare. He took an interest in farm betterments, in the improvement of roads. He was rearing a family of children and that made him a booster for the schools of the township. His interest was such that for many years he lent encouragement to the schools by serving on the board of education in the Aberle District No. 23.

After his children were all grown, Mr. Euler decided to quit farming and spend his declining years in town. Accordingly he sold the farm in Burr Oak Township to his son Calvin George and on April 5, 1912, he moved to Troy. He has a beautiful home in Troy and has settled down to comfortable living. He takes an active interest in the affairs of the town and county, always boosting Doniphan County as the best county in any of the states, and standing up for Kansas as best of all the states of the Union. He feels that way about it, realizing as he does that in no other state have the people who are willing to work, and work intelligently had such splendid opportunities for such a man to rise in the world and to prosper.

ISAAC RIGBY

A Native of Doniphan County—A Leading Lawyer at Concordia—Born at Geary City.

The parents of one of the best lawyers practicing in the state supreme court and the United States supreme court, Isaac A. Rigby, who lives at Concordia, were among the noble and courageous people who came to Doniphan County in the 1850's when Kansas was a territory. It is from such pioneer stock that great minds like that of Mr. Rigby come.

After several years spent in conquering the wilderness, as northeast Kansas was then, the Rigbys gained a foothold. Their son, Isaac A., was born at Geary City in May, 1861. He attended the Geary public schools until the spring of 1875, when he went to Pittsburg, Pa. Here he also attended school with his mind on a legal career.

He moved to Concordia in May, 1878.

Charles E. Brown.

He read law with Dean J. W. Green and also attended Kansas University at Lawrence, graduating from that institution in 1885, and was then admitted to the bar in June of that year. His proficiency in law was the cause of his being admitted to practice in the United States supreme court at Washington, D. C., in December, 1891. Since then Judge Rigby has dealt with legal matters of such an extensive nature that he has had cases in seventy-one counties in Kansas and twenty-nine states of the Union.

Judge Rigby is one of the leading citizens of Concordia, where he lives with his mother. He has been a prominent factor in building up Concordia

Drove Oxen Seven Years

Thomas J. Dawe Had Some Tough Times Breaking Tougher Ground With Six Yoke of Oxen in the Early Days of Doniphan County—Received From $3 to $5 an Acre—Married to Miss Mary Brownlee by Squire Soper in 1874 —Lived on Rented Farms a Number of Years, But Now Owns One of the Most Valuable Stretches of Land in Doniphan County.

If there is a substantial resident of Doniphan County more worthy of his present valuable holdings than is Thomas J. Dawe, the writer of this article has failed to find him. He surely has earned what he has acquired.

When people get to reciting their experiences of the early days, they naturally have a hard story to tell. Conditions were not only fierce, but they were most discouraging to anybody not having the stoutest heart.

The entire county has developed to such a glorious extent in recent years that it is doubtful if the rising generation will ever have an adequate conception of the hardships that had to be endured by the pioneers who blazed the early trail for future generations.

Coming to Doniphan County with his relatives in 1858, Thomas J. Dawe —or, as he is more familiarly known, Tom Dawe—ran up against about every tough proposition that could be invented or manufactured. He was handicapped even previous to being born, through the misfortune of having lost his father before he ever saw the light of the world.

Tom Dawe was born February 6, 1853, in Chesterfield County, Virginia, a short time after the death of his father. He is the son of Thomas and Mrs. Susanna Dawe, both natives of England, who emigrated to America about the year 1850. There is one thing to be said about the Dawe family: They are stickers. When the subject of this sketch was an infant his uncle, John Dawe, came to the rescue of the grief-stricken mother and not only stood godfather for the boy, but took him in charge after the infantile period was passed. When the Kansas excitement was at the sizzling point, the entire Dawe family left their Virginia homes and journeyed to the Territory. Tom Dawe came with his mother and for a number of years lived in the old Tenant house where Chris Jenkinson now resides.

The Dawes arrived in Doniphan County on July 10, 1858. Tom was then five and a half years old. He lived with his uncle, John Dawe, on a farm adjoining William Chapple's old place on the south. On the death of his uncle, his aunt married Price Isles, in 1867, and young Tom lived with them until he was twenty years old.

The first money Tom Dawe ever earned was for piloting two yoke of oxen hauling lumber from old Lafayete for the munificent sum of 75 cents a day, and board. Mr. Dawe tells today how "Field Huss had the contract for hauling the lumber for Henry Jenkins, who lives four miles west of Troy at the present time. I will never forget how Field got $4 a day from Jenkins and gave me 75 cents of it for driving the oxen. He raked in $3.25 a day for the use of the oxen, and I got six-bits for my work."

The first real work which Tom Dawe ran up against was driving a breaking team of six yoke of oxen, and he continued at the same job for seven years. The prairie was virgin all right, but it was as stubborn as a Missouri mule. The work was about as tough as can be imagined now, and Tom was paid all the way from $3 to $5 an acre.

Seven years of fracturing maiden soil somewhat made Tom feel qualified to tackle most any kind of a game. The graft could not possibly be any tougher. He concluded that in the future, if there was to be that kind of work done by him, he would do it for himself. He had been keeping an eye open for opportunities during the grilling days teaching oxen manners, and he decided to take a chance in life for himself, and possibly somebody else. Incidentally he had fully made up his mind to get married.

Having passed his twenty-first birthday by a full moon, Tom Dawe was married on March 15, 1874, to Miss Mary A. Brownlee, daughter of David Brownlee. The ceremony was performed by Squire P. S. Soper at the home of the bride, and the occasion was a most happy one for all their friends and neighbors.

The first year of the married life of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Dawe was spent farming on the place now owned by William Danvick. Then they moved to the Cyrus Leland farm, known as the Charles place, three and one-half miles west of Troy, where they lived for eleven years.

At the expiration of that time, Mr. and Mrs. Dawe had accumulated sufficient savings to purchase the Williamson Privet farm of eighty acres, situated three and one-half miles southwest of Troy, where they resided fourteen years. Ten years ago they bought the Kerin Devereux farm, four miles southwest of Troy, where the Dawe home is at present, and is very likely to remain.

Mr. Dawe's farm now comprises 220 acres of as prime land as can be found in Doniphan County, or the entire North or Middle West. It will command at least $200 an acre any time and is probably worth a lot more. The main business on the Dawe farm is the raising of Shorthorn cattle and pedigreed Poland-China hogs.

The farm home and the outbuildings of the Dawe place take second rank with none in the county. There is an air of comfort and wholesomeness in everything that meets the eye. The remotest stranger may see at a glance that there is a business head with the right ideas to the place.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Dawe have had six children, four of whom are living. They are William Henry, born April 5, 1876; Estella Marian, born July 9, 1878; Thomas J., born February 12, 1881; James Chapple, born November 5, 1892. Frederick and John both died young.

ROBERT A. CANTER

Formerly of Marion Township But Now of Wolf River Township.

Robert A. Canter was born in Doniphan County on October 4, 1874, on a farm one mile south of Brenner. His early days were passed in the usual way of a farmer lad, in attending the country schools and assisting with the chores of evenings, and when he grew to manhood, he chose a farmer's life for his vocation. He was married to Miss Mabel Patterson of near Geary, Kan., on March 30, 1910. They have no children. Mr. Canter devotes his time to general farming and stock raising.

The S. L. K. Association bought the cottage west of the Chief office and had it remodeled during the month of September, 1907. In November they moved the library into it.

EDDIE BAKER

Ben Morgan

When the name of Ben Morgan is mentioned, it is instantly connected with the subject of fine horses, as that is his hobby. His love for thoroughbred horseflesh has made him known all over this section of Kansas, and he owns several specimens that are valued very highly. He is familiar with the names of horses that have won renown on the race track, and his judgment in such matters is very exact. Mr. Morgan's home is just outside the corporate limits of Wathena, northwest. He is public spirited and a good booster for the county.

Two Homesteaders Killed

On August 15, 1857, two young men who had settled on a claim about ten miles southwest of Troy, were killed by lightning. They were asleep in their house when the bolt of lightning struck. The Geary City Era, which was published at that time in the now defunct town, gave a full account.

Census of Doniphan Co. Towns

Population of Troy in 1880, 694; White Cloud, 825; Wathena, 710; Highland City, 441; Severance, 375; Doniphan, 518; Elwood, 323. Population of these towns in 1915 as follows: Troy, 1,503; White Cloud, 765; Wathena, 812; Highland, 816; Severance 394; Doniphan, 62; Elwood, 910.

The value of a bank as a booster for a town is illustrated in the case of the State Bank of Wathena, of which L. A. Libel is cashier. Did you ever hear of a movement for the good of Wathena but that this enterprising bank was one of its strongest supporters?

The first shipment of flour from Kansas was from Palermo, September, 1858.

Joseph Hayton

Born in Doniphan County—Has Improved Father's Claim Until the Fifty Acres Is Worth $20,000—Father Killed Doing Charitable Act—Son a Prosperous and Progressive Citizen.

If a stranger from the East, having some of the Eastern ignorance of Kansas land values, should get off of the Rock Island or Grand Island train and ask the price of the comparatively small tract of land just south of the track, he would be astonished.

"The idear," he would likely exclaim, if he were from Boston, or "the ideah," if he were from the South—"Really, aren't you joking?"

The correct answer as to the value of that piece of fine farm land is $20,000. It is owned by Joe Hayton, the son of a Doniphan County pioneer.

Joseph Hayton, Sr.

The father, as well as his son, had done much to bring the ground up from a raw prairie of comparatively little value to its present worth. Their story is typical of the struggles of Kansas people to make the soil of their state justify their faith in it.

Somewhere in England lived a man who likely enough rented a little patch of ground owned by a titled landlord. There was no hope of the tenant owning even so small a part of the great man's estate. And then this man heard of America, where the common people and the "gentry" stood on an equality, where work was the sign of nobility and the blisters from the hoe and plow handle were the symbols of true worth. There was the chance for the poor man.

So a certain Englishman thought, until, with true Anglo-Saxon courage which has made America so great, he left the tiny stone-thatched cottage of his native land and resolutely set out for the land of freedom. From such ancestors came the Haytons. Following these pioneer instincts, one Joseph Hayton and his wife, Electra, braved the perils of a new country, with its stories of Indians, border ruffians, depredations of Pro-Slavery men, and all the dangers of what was then little better than a howling wilderness. For to many, a trip to Kansas was regarded as an undertaking almost as great as a trip to Africa would be now. However, in spite of many misgivings and hardships, the Haytons pushed on into Kansas and at an early day located near the then small town of Troy. Here they pre-empted a claim.

On this farm in the typical house of the pioneers, Joseph Hayton, Jr., was born Nov. 27, 1869. He attended the public schools of Troy and has lived here nearly all of his life with the exception of a year he spent in the Northwest—about ten years ago. At that time he helped survey the Northwest railroad into Lander, Wyoming. On Jan. 16, 1905, he married Miss Ruth Wilson of Doniphan County.

Mr. Hayton has good business ability. He has sold all of the homestead farm that he intends to, and purposes keeping the remaining fifty acres so that it will yield him a comfortable income in his declining days. The land is valued at $20,000. On the tract is a brick house built by Joseph Hayton, Sr., in the early days. The house is so substantially constructed that it will probably outlast the son.

The father was a typical Englishman of the best type. He was straight and honest and one of the best liked men in the county. He was appointed sheriff in 1866 to fill out the term of Enoch Crabb. He filled this so efficiently that he could have had any office in the county, but did not seek office. He did not care to take the time from his business.

The untimely death of Mr. Hayton, which occurred on April 14, 1906, was regretted by all. The cause of his death is a fitting epitaph for his kind and generous nature. It came while he was doing a charitable act. A neighbor, who had undergone some hard luck, was in need. Mr. Hayton started to help him out. The man needed hay for his stock more badly than anything else. Mr. Hayton heard of this and loaded a wagon. He was on his way to relieve the distress. Something frightened the team. The horses started to run and Mr. Hayton stepped in front and grabbed them by the bits and was struck by the tongue. The fatal accident was a shock to the community. More than ever it brought to mind the many kindly acts performed by the dead man. His sudden taking away was regarded as one of the greatest losses of Doniphan County. Today his farm, with its improvements and its substantial brick house, stands as a monument to his untiring efforts and his faith in Kansas.

Resident of Joseph Hayton in South Troy.

FIRST BANK IN TROY

Organized in 1870 By Henry and Louis Boder and Was Destroyed By Fire Two Years Later.

Troy is especially proud of its banks today. There are two, and both are solid, substantial and conservative institutions with a business that is increasing rapidly. The history of the first Troy bank, however, is peculiarly interesting at this time, because of the facts in connection with its organization and growth.

The first institution was organized February 4, 1870, by Henry and Louis Boder, brothers. They were widely known throughout Doniphan County and in the late 60's realized that some institution of the kind was needed. The bank was opened in a frame building and at once it was seen that the judgment of the Boder brothers was not amiss, for it did a thriving business. In 1872, however, it caught fire and burned to the ground. Undaunted by this loss, the two men, who had fostered the plan, decided to build anew. In less than a week after their loss they had started on a handsome, substantial brick structure of two stories and a basement. This cost was $7,000, including what was then modern fixtures, and the price of the ground. Each successive year saw the Boders building up a fine business. They were noted for their conservatism and Henry Boder, especially, was ever careful in conducting the financial operations with due consideration of the rightful demands of his patrons. The institution under their direction was called the Bank of Troy. Henry Boder was the father of Mrs. Anna Strong, who resides in the old home at the present time.

On March 6, 1906, Henry Boder completed a transaction by which control of the institution passed into the hands of Charles V. and John S. Norman. They lost no time in having the bank transferred from a state bank into a national institution and it was named the First National Bank of Troy. When the Norman brothers took charge they immediately set out to increase the business; and the solid foundation for a successful banking institution, that was laid by Henry Boder, is still more formidable. Under the able management of the Normans, the First National Bank of Troy is now classed as one of the most reliable and secure banking houses in the state.

Its standing in the world of commerce and finance is recognized all over the country. With conservative management, an efficient system and cordial officials, there is no good reason why it should be other than a success. At the present time the capital and surplus totals $55,000, and the resources $350,000. John S. Norman is the president and Charles V. Norman the cashier.

Henry Boder, the founder of the institution, died Sunday, Jan. 24, 1909, after a brief illness. His death was sincerely regretted not only in financial circles in the county, where he was well and favorably known, but among others in every walk of life with whom he came in contact.

Troy's other bank is the Troy State Bank and was founded in 1906, opening its doors on August 18th of that year. It was chartered with a capital of $15,000 and now has a capital and surplus of $30,000. Frank W. Zimmerman, who came to Troy at the age of seventeen, is the president. He first saw the light of this world at Rushville, in the Sucker state. He is a man of ability and shrewd judgment.

Edward E. Doughty, the cashier, was born and reared in Troy, and received his first banking experience in The First National Bank. He is a reliable man and faithfully and promptly discharges the duties required of him.

Elwood Brothers, Grocers

Began With $17—Their Business Exemplifies the Fact that Close Application Counts—Do Good Business for Small Store.

Walter M. Elwood began a grocery business April 13, 1898, with $17.00 on the north side of the square in the old building in Troy where Chris Jenkin's brick store building now stands. He left that location May 2, 1899, and moved into the Strong Building. Walter M. Elwood was joined by his brother, Homer M. Elwood, November 25, 1900, who bought a half interest and it has since been known as Elwood Brothers. The firm has a small store, but is well stocked and they are doing a good grocery and produce business. Both are well known among the people of town and country and are recognized as being square in all of their dealings.

Walter M. Elwood was born in Winneshek County, Iowa, March 23, 1858. When two years old, the Civil War coming on, his parents moved to Milan, Ohio, where they remained until 1869. They then moved to Fort Dodge, Iowa, where Walter M. received his education. He was married October 3, 1883, near Centerville, Iowa, to Anna Smith, who died at her home in Troy September 11, 1913. They had five daughters: Mabel, Emma L. and Ruth, born in Appenoose County, Iowa; Esther and Elsie, born in Troy. Walter M. Elwood spent from 1874 to 1881 in Phillips County, Kansas, sharing the life of the homesteaders of that period by living in a dugout and sod house, as all people did in that part of Kansas.

Homer M. Elwood was born in Swanton, Ohio, October 27, 1867, and received his education in the Iowa home of the Elwoods. He was married November 15, 1903, to Allie Pitman. Both were educated in the common schools, and enjoy their neat home in North Troy, which was built in 1911. Previous to that Homer built the house where Mr. Neal now resides. That was the start of the building boom in Troy in 1906 that has continued ever since.

The Elwood brothers and their wives are active workers in the M. E. Church in Troy, and are numbered among our most respected and willing people.

MOREHEAD BROTHERS

Firm of Young Men, Natives of Doniphan County, Who Are Doing a Big Business as Dealers in and Repairers of Harness.

Two very energetic young men of Doniphan County, who are making good in business are the Morehead Brothers, Albert L. and William I. The business was established by Albert L. Morehead, September 3, 1903, and was continued by him until February 1, 1915, when he was joined by his brother, William I. Morehead. They have one of the busy shops in the West, having a small stock of harness of all kinds, all the necessary harness hardware, oils, etc. They do a large business in repairing harness and they also repair shoes. They keep a good stock of the best oak-tanned leather on hand at all seasons for repairing and making new harness. They have a finely equipped plant, with the latest machines, and are amply prepared for handling business rapidly and first class in workmanship. They also buy practically all of the cream sold by the farmers in the territory near Troy. Sell to them and you are sure of the highest market price.

These two brothers were both born in Doniphan County, and are sons of George O. Morehead and Delia Brown Morehead. They are grandsons of the venerable pioneer, John Morehead, who is now ninety-two years old.

Albert L. Morehead was born on the Mike Forest place, one mile south of Troy, September 10, 1880. He was married June 20, 1904, to Miss Eva Peden, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Harvey Peden of near St. Joseph, Missouri. One child has been born to them, Russell G., born September 8, 1908. Albert owns a neat residence in the north part of Troy, on Main street.

William I. Morehead, the junior member of the firm, was born July 30, 1888. He married Maud L. Prewett of Highland May 28, 1912, at her home in Highland. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Prewett and was born March 10, 1889. Her father died July 3, 1911. Her mother still resides in Highland.

Morehead Brothers are among the substantial business men of Troy. They have a large business and are highly respected by the people.

Francis Marion Steele.

Born in Troy, now city attorney in Azusa, California, and making good.

In the early days the city limits of Troy extended beyond the Junction, but the Junction was then called Maynard, after Judge Maynard. "Old Yankee Brown" or M. B. Brown, now living at Horton, owned and operated a bus line between the Junction and Troy. Mr. Brown is not known in Horton as "Yankee" Brown. He was given that name by an old Southerner called Uncle Billy Johnson, living in Troy, who was continually berating the Northerners. One day Mr. Brown took him to St. Joseph on his bus, crossing the river on a ferry boat. The next morning he found Uncle Billy with a pretty good jag on. He asked Mr. Brown where he was born and Mr. Brown replied in New York. "Then you are a d—— Yankee," Uncle Billy said. Since that time Mr. Brown went by the name of "Yankee" Brown.

The the destruction of the old brick house about all that held the recollection of the old days to the present is gone.

George Daniel Hedrick.

He was born July 21, 1907, and his father has taken his picture several thousand times. He is a fine boy.

Fire in Troy

On Friday, March 12, 1871, at 2 o'clock in the morning an alarm of fire was heard in Troy which awakened the inhabitants from their peaceful slumber and caused a general rush, after a momentary confusion in families, to the scene of the conflagration. One-half of the citizens of Troy were aroused and attended the scene in their night clothes. The occasion was the fire of the residence owned by B. O. Parker. The discovery was made too late to save the property, but by the heroic efforts of the citizens, the adjacent buildings were kept free from danger. The fire was supposed to have been of incendiary origin. The loss to Mr. Parker was $1,000, with an insurance on the building, in the company represented by L. A. Potter, for $800.

Mrs. Louisa Rice

Came to Kansas in the Early Sixties—Resides on a Good Farm in Washington Township, Southwest of Wathena—Experienced Grasshoppers, Floods and Other Misfortunes.

One of the enterprising pioneer women of Doniphan County is Mrs. Louisa Rice, who resides on the old Rice farm, in Washington Township. To her belongs the distinction of rearing one of the largest families in the township. They are all grown and are a thrifty family of whom any mother might well be proud, and it is a source of gratification to the subject of this sketch in her declining years to know that her sons and daughters are an honor to the community.

Mrs. Louisa Rice.

The story of Mrs. Louisa Rice and her family, early Doniphan County settlers, is typical of many Kansas pioneers. They experienced danger from border ruffians and pro-slavery men, fought prairie fires, were endangered by floods and suffered from the grasshopper plague. However, like many other courageous Kansas people, they persisted, stayed, saved and prospered and became among the most respected citizens.

She was born in Altendorf, Canton Schwys, Switzerland, March 12, 1835, between the perpetual snows on the top of the Alps Mountains and the eternal sunshine of the beautiful valleys below. When she was nineteen years of age, in 1854, with her brother she left for America. She came by way of Havre, France, where her girlish mind was stirred by the quaint latten-sailed barques, Portuguese sailors with gold earrings, and the strange sights and sounds of a cosmopolitan seaport. Stranger and more stirring things awaited her in the new country of America.

For this land the party sailed in a three-masted brig and after a voyage of two months, quite different from the trips in the luxurious modern liners, they landed at New Orleans, Louisiana. Here Miss Knoble and her brother took a steamboat up the broad Mississippi River, alive with the huge log rafts and flatboats, to St. Louis. From there her brother went to Illinois. His sister remained in St. Louis until she went to Dubuque, Iowa, where she met and married Frederick A. Rice, a native of Wurtzburg, Bavaria, June 29, 1855. They lived in Tama County, Iowa, for three years, but as the approaching Civil War brought on hard times, they decided to heed the "call of Kansas."

Mr. Rice died in 1891 and left eleven children. Ten of these have grown to manhood and womanhood. Six of them are married and live near their mother. All have worked and prospered, are energetic and progressive and have become to be the most leading and respected citizens of their community.

The names of her sons and daughters are as follows: Joseph, Frederick L., Frank W., John, Alonzo, Otto, Ellen, Mrs. Payne, Emma, Mrs. Sproul, Louisa, Mrs. John Bohr and Salina.

The Rice farm is well improved and its careful cultivation for years has made it yield abundantly and now is considered one of the most valuable in the neighborhood.

H. L. BEELER

A Young Man Endowed With Ability—Electricity His Hobby—A Native of Iowa Township.

H. L. Beeler, who is a native of Iowa Township, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Beeler, was born and reared in Iowa Township, near White Cloud. While a young boy, he seemed content to attend school and help around the place after school hours and during vacation, but as he grew older, it began to dawn upon his parents that the lad had ambitions to study electricity. However, they insisted upon him finishing school, and promised him that they would see that he had his chance in the world to follow any honest ambition he might have.

Accordingly he bought books and began experimenting in a small way at home. Gradually he realized that electricity was to be the line to which he desired to devote his energies. For awhile he worked in White Cloud for the Electric Light Company, and is now living at Abilene, where he is employed in the work that appeals to him. Mr. Beeler says he is not at the top of the ladder yet, but intends to keep studying and trying out his plans until he has accomplished something worth while in the world of electricity. We predict that he will eventually be an adept at his line, and we certainly wish him all the luck in the world. His father was one of the pioneers of this county, and was an honest, upright citizen and favored every propaganda for the betterment of the county and neighborhood, and while Doniphan County has lost a valuable citizen, Abilene has gained one.

Christian O. Turkelson

A Pioneer Who Has Seen Doniphan County Develop From Its Wild, Untamed State to One of the Best Farming Counties in the State—Reared a Large Family and Served His Country Well.

Christian Turkelson is the only surviving member of the original immigrants who landed in Doniphan County in 1857.

Christian O. Turkelson, of Norwegian descent and proud of it, was born November 18, 1832, near Christiansand, Norway. His own first name was undoubtedly derived from the village near which the family lived, as well as from the fact that pious names like it are very characteristic among the Scandinavian nations.

He came to America in 1850, while still a mere youth barely eighteen years of age, full of ambition and strength to wrest from the then new nation of America some of the riches of which he had heard travelers tell. He first located in Missouri, but his stay there was brief, and in 1857 he came to Doniphan County and settled in Wolf River Township, five miles southwest of Troy. He farmed in that locality until September 8, 1862.

Before that date the Civil War had broken out, and Mr. Turkelson was fired with zeal to help his adopted country win her battle with the belligerent Southern States, so when the call to arms was sounded, he immediately began to arrange his business so that he could prepare to join the colors. He enlisted on September 8, 1862, with Company C, Thirteenth Kansas, and served throughout the war, being finally mustered out at Little Rock, Arkansas, June 26, 1865.

His soldier days over, he returned to Doniphan County and resumed farming in the Norwegian settlement. In 1869 the subject of this sketch was married to Miss Rachel D. Speak. To this union were born the following: Leah, now Mrs. John F. Hobbs of Clearwater, Kansas; Mary Christina, who died January 21, 1916; Elizabeth M., one of the prominent school teachers of Doniphan County for several years, now Mrs. Albertus Brandt of Moorcroft, Wyoming; Oscar J. married to Elizabeth Dawson; Esther, who is treasurer of The News-Press Company, St. Joseph, Missouri, which position she has held for a number of years, discharging her duties faithfully and promptly; Clarence R., who was married to Johanna Ballagher; John, who is engaged in the marble business in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

As as exemplification of the fact that his neighbors had confidence in him, Christian O. Turkelson was several times elected township treasurer, and served as county commissioner from 1886 to 1889, and several times served the school district as a member of the board.

Mr. Turkelson owns 320 acres of good land in Doniphan County in Wolf River Township, upon which he resides, near Moray. This part of Doniphan County is a veritable Norwegian settlement, and many of Mr. Turkelson's native countrymen are his friends and neighbors.

GREEN BERRY TAYLOR

Native of Center Township and a Good Farmer and Reliable Citizen.

Of the few boys who were born and reared in Center township and who have lived within its borders for over a half century, Green B. Taylor takes first place, having been born on the old Taylor farm, five miles north of Troy, October 14, 1860. He has resided continuously near Troy all of his life, and is one of our most reliable citizens and industrious farmers.

On March 4, 1884, just one year before Grover Cleveland was inaugurated, he was married to Miss Susan Rice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fisher Rice. To this union one daughter, Carrie May, now Mrs. Ed Shelton, was born January 4, 1885, and one son, William Russell, was born January 11, 1891. Several years after the death of his wife, he was married to Miss Bessie E. Louthaine, July 30, 1906, and to their union has been born Morris Eugene, June 2, 1909; Andy Winston, April 11, 1911, and Ida Evelyn, March 24, 1912.

The subject of this sketch owns a nice farm almost adjoining Troy on the northwest, which is valued at more than $200 per acre.

THOMAS P. JESSE

Retired Farmer Now Residing in Highland.

Thomas P. Jesse was born in Doniphan County, one-half mile north of Highland in Iowa Township, in the year 1860. He is one of the early pioneers, and having seen life in its roughest while Doniphan County was a barren plain, teeming with prairie chickens and Indians, he now lives a retired life in Highland. Mr. Jesse was a successful farmer, and learned to save money as well as make it, and now is able to live on the fruits of his labor. The Jesse family is numbered among the good Christian Church workers of Highland.

JAMES GOSS

A Farmer Near Troy, Born and Reared in Center Township.

The subject of this sketch was born and reared in Center Township, and enjoys the distinction of having lived here for more than half a century. He is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Goss, and belongs to the best class of citizens in the county. He was married to Miss Ada Rice and to their union have been born one daughter, Jennie, and two sons, Harry and Robert. Mr. Goss owns a good farm north of Troy, and is comfortably situated.

COLUMBUS CRAIG DUNCAN

A Native of the Bluegrass State.

The State of Kentucky has furnished Doniphan County with some of her best citizens. Columbus C. Duncan was born in Barton County, Kentucky, November 7, 1833, and came to Kansas about thirty-eight years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Duncan were married November 7, 1856, and have reared a large family, all of whom are good citizens. Great Grandpa Duncan, as he is usually spoken of, has about thirty grandchildren and about ten great grandchildren. Columbus Craig Duncan's sons and daughters are as follows: William Henry, of Des Moines, Iowa; Frank C., David M., Mollie, now Mrs. George Newman; Lillie, now Mrs. James Jenkinson, all of near Troy. Victor, Clennie, now Mrs. Tindie of St. Joseph, and Asa of near Troy. All members of his family are doing well and rearing nice families.

Walter Triplett

Walter Edward, who is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Triplett, was born Nov. 30, 1908, on the farm near Troy. At present Walter attends school every day and is learning all about the wonderful men of our nation, and we are sure he will be inspired to follow in their footsteps. Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Triplett always have a kindly word for their son, and this, perhaps, is the greatest recommendation for a lad, when the older folks approve of him. There is no doubt but what this young boy will develop into a citizen of whom Doniphan County will have occasion to feel proud. He is a regular attendant at school and is exerting every effort possible to be advanced to the higher class with his older brothers, Russell and Thomas.

Louis Rullman

Soon after the passage of the Kansas and Nebraska bill, on May 30, 1854, a large number of people began to arrive in Kansas in pursuit of homes and among the land seekers was Louis Rullman, a young "fleisig" German, who is now one of Doniphan County's oldest and most highly respected citizens. He was born in Germany, January 7, 1825, and with Mrs. Rullman, who died several years ago, reared a large, ambitious family, who are a fine type of American citizenship. The subject of this sketch owns a good farm in the southeast part of Center Township, where he resided for many years. His sons and daughters are as follows: Louis and Adolph of St. Joseph, Frank B. of Hiawatha; Amelia, Mrs. George Dodson of Hiawatha; William E., Oscar T., David D. and Roy, all of St. Joseph, and Adda, now Mrs. C. H. Bowman of Wathena.

Daniel Reed Anthony

Our Present First District Representative in Congress Is a Native of Kansas and Has Served the People in That Body Since March, 1907 — His Record Clean and Honest — Once Mayor of Leavenworth, and Now Publisher.

(By P. W. Morgan, who has noted the records.)

The native sons of Kansas are forging to the front in whatever avocation they choose to enter. In none other is this more true than in our political and official life. To have been born in the great state of Kansas, whose pioneers went through blood and fire to establish their high ideals of government and society, of business and industrial life, is accounted a great honor. The product of such pioneers and such a commonwealth are endowed with qualities which could not come to them through any other association or environment. It is the true Kansan who stands for those high ideals, for human liberty, justice, sane living and the square deal.

Our present representative in the National Congress from the First District of Kansas, Daniel Reed Anthony, Jr., is a native Kansan and a man of this type. He was born in the city of Leavenworth August 22, 1870, the son of Daniel Reed Anthony and Annie (Osborn) Anthony. His father was a native of Massachusetts and, coming to territorial Kansas in 1854, at the head of a party of free state people, sent out by the Massachusetts Emigrant Aid Society, was for fifty years an aggressive leader for the establishment and the upbuilding of those ideals of which mention is made in the preceding paragraph of this sketch. Daniel Reed Anthony, Sr., as soldier, citizen and publisher of the Leavenworth Times, was foremost among the men of the state, leaving a rich heritage to his son, Daniel Reed Anthony, Jr. Mrs. Anthony, mother of Daniel, Jr., was a woman of lovely sensibility and who imparted much of her qualities to the son, not the least of which was a broad sympathy and understanding of humankind. Then, too, he gained much from his sainted aunt, Susan B. Anthony, the little Quaker woman from Massachusetts, whose long and busy life was devoted to the cause of American womanhood. She is the woman who more than all others sowed the seed that has resulted in the elevation of the women of Kansas to a higher plane than those of the older states in their sity of Michigan, where, in 1891, he socially, and as wives and mothers.

The schools of Leavenworth, the town of his birth, gave Daniel Reed Anthony, Jr., the best they could afford in education. After passing through the grades he entered Michigan Military Academy at Orchard Lake, Michigan, where he graduated in 1887. Later he attended the University of Michigan, where, in 1801, he graduated with the degree LL. D.

Thus equipped for his lifework, young Anthony returned to Leavenworth to practice law and to assist his father in the publication of the Daily Leavenworth Times. He not only was ambitious to make his own way, but he had the pluck and the necessary push to win.

In the year 1897, on June 21, the present member of Congress was married to Miss Elizabeth Havens, a Leavenworth girl of many accomplishments ,and one of the most popular of that city's social life. She has been a great help and an inspiration to her husband and to her calm counsel and womanly encouragement is due no small part of the success of Daniel Reed Asthony, Jr.

The entrance of young Anthony into the politics of the city and state of his nativity occurred even before he arrived at his majority. He had been reared in a political atmosphere, and it was for many years that the city on the Missouri river with its great fort and military school, was the center of publican. He jumped into the politics erence to national politics. The young man could be nothing less than a Republican. He jumped into the politics of the city and had a hand in the management. People trusted him and encouraged him; they knew he was square.

Daniel Reed Anthony, Jr., was taken up by the people of Leavenworth in 1903 and elected mayor of their city for a term of two years. The issues were purely local, having to do with the question of efficient government and good business management.

While in the office of mayor, the father of the subject of this sketch died, November 12, 1904. The editorial and general management of the Leavenworth Daily Times fell to Daniel Reed Anthony, Jr., and right well did he assume the added responsibility.

These were busy years for young Anthony. They called for remarkable activity, besides good judgment, but at no time did he ever falter. He quit the office of mayor at the end of his term in 1905, and devoted his time to the newspaper. It had been a power in politics and in the life of the city under his father who had founded it in the early days, but with the son in charge, it rather gained than lost prestige. Its editor in chief and manager put plenty of "pep" into it. It was a good town booster, and it was a powerful booster for the Republican party and of the principles of that party.

Early in 1907 Daniel Reed Anthony, Jr., received high honor at the hands of the Republican party and of the people of the First District by his election, March 29 of that year, as representative in the Sixtieth Congress for the unexpired term of Charles Curtis, who had been chosen as United States senator. He entered upon his duties at Washington with the same zeal that had characterized his entire course in life. His record in that unexpired term for which he was elected, was pleasing to his friends and the public at large. He was again made the candidate of the party and was elected to the Sixty-First Congress, then the Sixty-Second Congress, then the Sixty-Third Congress, and in 1914 was elected to the Sixty-Fourth Congress, so that when his present term expires he will have served the First District of Kansas in the National Congress from March 29, 1907, to March 4, 1917.

Representative Anthony, as before stated, is a Republican, and believes in the principles of the Republican party. He never has been a middle-of-the-road man—you always knew where to find him in politics, and he was respected by his political opponents for his courageousness. He can always be found in the front ranks, contending for those measures and things for the public good to which his party is pledged; yet, in a thousand ways, he has, in the years that he has served in Congress, shown his broad-mindedness and his splendid business capacity by supporting those measures which he believed were for the general good, regardless of whether they were proposed by a Republican or by a Democrat. He has at all times been loyal to the interests of Leavenworth and to the interests of Kansas. His loyalty to the veterans of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War is recognized, and he has been loyal to Kansas in his attitude toward the great United States military institutions within the borders of the state. It also may be said with truth and candor that he has favored legislation for the agricultural and industrial interests of Kansas and of his district in particular. He is one of the most valued members among the Republicans on committee work, and at each session since he entered Congress he has served on some of the most important committees.

Thus it will be seen that Daniel Reed Anthony, Jr., one of the native sons of Kansas, has forged to the front and is making a record in Congress that counts for the public good and justly entitles him to recognition as among the foremost men of the state.

Albert L. Bartlett.

ALBERT L. BARTLETT

Albert L. Bartlett, of St. Joseph, Mo., Served in the First Kansas State Legislature When Little Over Eight Years of Age.

A recent search of the records of legislatures of the various states, developed the fact that Albert L. Bartlett, of St. Joseph, Mo., has the distinction of having been the youngest page that ever served in any of the legislatures in this country.

Mr. Bartlett was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, March 11, 1852. His father was Josiah C. Bartlett, a well-known resident of that city, who in 1856, moved with his family to Big Springs, Kan., where for three years he was engaged extensively in the mercantile business. Moving to Topeka in 1859, Mr. Bartlett opened a general store in conjunction with his father, and it was here that the boy learned the rudiments of his education.

Kansas was a strife-ridden country during that period, and was used as a basis for anti-slavery agitation in national politics. The future Sunflower state was then known as the Indian country, and was a typical representation of the "wild and woolly West." Elections within the territory were conducted at the muzzles of shotguns, so fierce was the anti-slavery agitation and the pro-statehood propaganda. At times conditions of actual warfare existed between the rival political factions of the territory, which supported their respective pretensions by maintaining rival governments.

It was under those exciting conditions that young Bartlett received his political baptism, and when the first state legislature convened in Topeka, his father's influence was strong enough to secure his appointment as page in the lower house. Although he grew to robust manhood in later years, young Bartlett was not only the youngest, but the smallest page in that historical law-making body. One rather amusing, but none the less prophetic, incidents of the session is indelibly impressed on Mr. Bartlett's memory up to this day. During a lull in the legislative proceedings, Speaker Updegraff stood the diminutive Bartlett on the speaker's desk, and, placing the speaker's sealskin cap upon the boy's head, called the attention of the house to the prediction that "this boy is destined to be some day one of the richest men in the free state of Kansas."

Mr. Bartlett's father died on Feb. 22, 1862, and two years later his mother, Hannah Bartlett, moved with the family to Neosho Rapids, where they made their home until 1867, when the family again moved, this time to St. Joseph, Mo., where Mr. Bartlett has since resided. He is a member of the Bartlett

Bros. Land & Loan Co., and is immensely interested in property both in Kansas and Missouri. While Mr. Bartlett will not admit the correctness of Representative Updegraff's prophesy about his being a wealthy man, his intimate friends assert the prophesy has come true, but that he wears his riches with becoming modesty. His mother is in apparent good health and resides at 908 Powell street, where she expects to spend her declining years in peacefulness and with the hope of a reward beyond. She has nothing to regret, having lived a conscientious life, and when in a retrospective frame of mind, speaks of the pioneer days of her life spent in the Sunflower state.

Kansas Territorial Governors

A Brief Resume of the Administrations of the Six Men Who Were Appointed to the Position of Chief Executive of Kansas During the Stormy Seven Years of Territorial Government Before Statehood.

Kansas, historians will agree, has a unique place in the history of the states of the Union. The circumstances under which she was admitted into the Union as a territory, and the conditions through which she became established as a state, were peculiarly different from those controlling the admission of any others. From the birth of Kansas as a territory to her recognition as a state her story has been one of conflict with nature and strife with men. The pioneers had to contend with material means against obstacles of untried soil, uncertain climate, and with spiritual forces, as well as with arms, against sentiment and principles which tended to overthrow the ideas of freedom and liberty which they regarded as birthright from their New England ancestors of the Revolution.

In the early years "Should Kansas be slave or free?" was the burning question. This problem was thrust upon the territorial governors of Kansas. They had to deal with the Pro-Slavery men who were pouring in from the adjacent slave state of Missouri, and from Southern states, and the Free State people coming from the Northern states. Notwithstanding their own conviction they were forced to obey the Federal government and the carrying out of such principles often subjected them to peril from both Pro-Slavery and Free State powers. The work of these early executives of Kansas may have left much to be desired, but it must be judged by an understanding of the unusual conditions of the era.

The first territorial governor of Kansas was Andrew H. Reeder. He was born in Easton, Northampton County, Pennsylvania, July 12, 1807. He was appointed governor of the territory of Kansas, June 29, 1854, by President Franklin Pierce, and served until August 16, 1855. He died at his birthplace July 5, 1864, when he was fifty-seven years old.

When a young man, Governor Reeder had an inclination toward law, and after attending an academy in Lawrenceville, New Jersey, he studied law. As a lawyer he attained considrable distinction in his home town. He was married to Miss Amelia Hutter, also of Easton, in 1831. They were parents of eight children.

At the age of forty-seven years, and in the prime of life, he received the appointment as governor of the territory of Kansas. His commission was dated June 29, 1854, and on July 7, 1854, he took the oath of office at Washington, D. C. The following fall, on Oct. 7, he arrived in Kansas, at Fort Leavenworth. Here he made an address, giving general principles of policy but not stating his attitude toward slavery in the territory, although he is said to have been in sympathy with the South and with its efforts to carry slavery into the new territories. The new executive was given another opportunity to express his views on the matter, through an invitation to a public dinner at Weston, Missouri, but he declined the invitation. This angered the Missourians and the Pro-Slavery people, who then regarded Reeder as a Free State man.

Fuel was added to the wrath of the Missourians when the governor, instead of first calling for the election of a legislature, issued a proclamation on Nov. 10, 1854, calling an election of a Congressional delegate, the election to take place Nov. 29. The Missourians were in haste to elect the legislature so they could control it in the interest of slavery. Before the date of the election they held a meeting at Leavenworth (Nov. 15, 1854), and appointed a committee to urge the governor to hasten the election of the legislature. However, Governor Reeder told the committee that the meeting was composed mainly of Missouri residents, some of whom had done nothing to occupy Kansas except nailing a card to a tree, stating on the card that he owned the land although the ground has been long settled by others.

At the same meeting the Missourians selected as the Kansas delegate to Congress, one J. W. Whitfield, a lank, stammering Tennesseean, who lived in Jackson County, Missouri. Honorable Robert P. Flenniken, a friend of the governor, sought the nomination for delegate, but was defeated by Honorable John A. Wakefield. He was a Free State man, although a Virginian.

The "election" held Nov. 29, 1854, was a farce which threatened to be a small war. Whitfield was "elected" by a mob of Pro-Slavery men from Missouri. Guns, knives and whiskey were the main qualifications for voters, and 1,729 illegal votes were cast. However, the Tennessee-Missourian was given a seat as a delegate from Kansas.

By this time Governor Reeder realized that a much more serious effort would be made by the slavery men to gain control of the prospective territorial legislature. In February, 1854, he took a census and the enumeration was carried on as quietly as possible to prevent transient Missourians from claiming Kansas citizenship. However, the residents of the neighbor state did try to stuff the census roll.

The election of the members of the legislature on March 30, 1855, at which five thousand Missourians voted, after routing the legal election judges with a show of arms. The "election" resulted in a majority of the slavery men in the legislature, after some attempt had been made to withhold election certificates on account of the openly fraudulent manner in which the voting was conducted. The governor was threatened by the illegally elected members who were armed. However, he left vacant the seats of thirteen members of the House and of four members of the Council, and called an election to fill these vacancies for May 22, 1855, and also a proclamation convening the legislature at Pawnee on the following July 2, 1855.

In the meantime he had been acquiring property around Pawnee and this fact, in connection with his convening the legislature there, were given to President Pierce as evidences of his being influenced in locating the temporary capital by land speculation. However, after unseating all of the Free State members, the legislature moved to Shawnee, despite the executive's veto of the bill for such an act, and on July 27, 1855, adopted a bill asking the removal of Governor Reeder. He was dismissed July 28, and on August 16 he sent a parting message to his unruly legislature.

Following this the "legislature" adopted the constitution of Missouri bodily as the constitution of Kansas, and framed laws so that only Pro-Slavery men could hold office. This was opposed by a convention which met at Big Springs, and as a result Reeder was nominated as the Free State delegate to Congress against the incumbent, Whitfield. Both claimed the election, but in the contest made by Reeder, a Kansas election committee was formed in Congress and went to the territory to investigate the election. They were forced out by the Pro-Slavery men and Reeder was indicted by a Douglas County grand jury for treason. He went to Kansas City, and, disguised as a wood chopper, escaped down the Missouri river, and later in speeches stirred people as to conditions in Kansas. As a result, Whitfield was ousted, but Reeder could not secure his seat. Nevertheless, his efforts started a movement which brought order out of chaos, and law and peace out of disorder and strife, in the new territory of Kansas.

Wilson Shannon.

Wilson Shannon, who was the second territorial governor of Kansas, was born in what is now Belmont County, Ohio, Feb. 24, 1802, when that state was still a territory. He was governor of Kansas from Aug. 10, 1855, to Aug. 18, 1856, and was appointed by President Franklin Pierce. He died in Lawrence, Kansas, Aug. 30, 1877, when he was seventy-six years old. His father came from Pennsylvania to Ohio and was frozen to death in the winter of 1803, leaving Wilson the youngest of six brothers. Two of these brothers, John and Thomas, sent the future governor when he was nineteen years old in 1821, to Ohio University at Athens, Ohio. After about two years he was sent to the Transylvania University at Lexington, Kentucky, where he studied law in the office of two of his other brothers, George and James. He began to practice law in 1826 at St. Clairsville, Ohio.

A little later Wilson Shannon married a Miss Ellis, daughter of E. Ellis, then clerk of the circuit court. Among her relatives were very influential men, including the Honorable George W. Manypenny, commissioner of Indian affairs when Kansas was organized as a territory. Through their influence he became Democratic candidate for Congress in 1832, from his district, and was defeated only thirty-seven votes by General James M. Bell. He was elected county attorney for his county in 1833, was re-elected in 1835, and was also elected Democratic governor of Ohio in 1838. He ran for a second term in 1840, but was defeated by Thomas Corwin. In 1844 he was appointed minister to Mexico, but returned home when the Mexican war broke out. When gold was discovered in California in 1849, Shannon went there, but returned to Ohio in 1851.

The next year, 1852, he was elected to Congress and supported the Kansas-Nebraska bill and the repeal of the Missouri compromise. He was applicant for the position of the governor of Kansas after Reeder was removed, and was appointed by President Pierce, Aug. 10, 1855. He arrived at Westport, Missouri (now Kansas City) Sept. 1, 1855.

Governor Shannon made a speech in Westport, in which he is said to have expressed himself in favor of slavery in Kansas, but afterward in a letter to the newspapers he denied he had uttered such sentiments. Two days later, on Sept. 3, 1855, he went to Shawnee Mission, where O. H. Browne, a member of the "legislature," made a speech picturing the Pro-Slavery men and border ruffians as peaceful citizens. The executive replied in substance that he thought so too. However, the Free State men expressed opposite sentiments at a convention called at Big Springs, Sept. 5, 1855, and took steps to form a constitution under which Kansas could be admitted to the Union as a state.

An opposing convention of Pro-Slavery men met at Leavenworth, Nov. 14, 1855, and Governor Shannon, as a delegate from Douglas County, was made president of the convention. The next day he was made chairman of a committee to prepare an address to the people of the United States on the merits of the Pro-Slavery movement. The address was issued Nov. 30, 1855.

The next important part played by the governor was in the siege of Lawrence. Lawrence people became involved in a murder in which Franklin N. Coleman, a Slavery man, on Nov. 21, 1855, shot and killed Charles W. Dow, a Free State man, at Hickory Point, about ten miles south of Lawrence in Douglas County. The murderer fled to Westport and appealed for protection to J. J. Jones, who had been appointed sheriff of Douglas County by the Pro-Slavery legislature. Jones, through Harrison Buckley, a friend of Coleman, was given a warrant for the arrest of a Jacob Branson, of Lawrence, a friend of the murdered man, secured by Buckley on the ground that Branson would kill him. However, Branson was rescued by a party of Free State men and taken to Lawrence.

Jones then asked the governor for three thousand men "to carry out the laws," and Shannon ordered out the militia in compliance without ascertaining the true state of affairs.

Meanwhile 1500 Missourians encamped near Lawrence with a view to destroy the town, but by December 1 the Lawrence people had armed themselves and fortified the approaches to the city and were constantly drilling. When Governor Shannon learned the situation he arranged a peace pact, but won the hatred of the Pro-Slavery people. However, he again furnished Sheriff Jones with a military force to make an arrest in Lawrence of Samuel N. Wood and S. J. Tappan, the Pro-Slavery men, claiming that these men had violated the terms of the peace in the election held Jan. 15, 1856, by the Free State men. On April 23, in attempting these arrests, Jones was wounded by a man who tried to kill him.

The Missourians, despite the appeal of the Lawrence people to Shannon, sacked the town and destroyed about $150,000 worth of property. Following this was constant strife between Free State and Pro-Slavery men, and the governor finally invoked the assistance of the United States to break up all armed bands. Then he went to St. Louis early in June, leaving orders for Colonel Summer to disperse the Topeka convention, which was to meet July 4, which order was carried out.

That summer, on Aug. 7, "Jim" Lane's army of the North arrived in Kansas and captured seventeen Pro-Slavery men. Then Shannon negotiated a second peace treaty, whereby the men were liberated. This was his last official art. His leaving was attended with danger to his life.

When the troubles were over, Shannon returned to Kansas and located in Lawrence where he made his home until his death. He became one of the foremost lawyers of the state and lived an exemplary life.

John White Geary.

John White Geary was the third Kansas territorial governor, and was born in Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, Dec. 30, 1819. He was appointed governor of Kansas by President Franklin Pierce and served from July 31, 1856, to March 12, 1857. He died at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, Feb. 8, 1873. He was of Scotch-Irish extraction.

His schooling was cut short by the death of his father and he taught and worked in a store at Pittsburg, to support his widowed mother. Young Geary also studied law and engineering, practising the latter profession in Kentucky and Pennsylavania. He served in the Mexican war as lieutenant-colonel of the 2d Pennsylvania volunteer regiment and under General Scott was made a colonel for bravery. After the capture of Mexico City he was made commandant.

In 1848 he was appointed postmaster of San Francisco, and in 1850, was elected the first mayor of that city. In 1852 he returned to Pennsylvania and retired on his farm. However, on account of his recognized ability for the place, he was appointed governor of Kansas, and arrived at Leavenworth, Sept. 9, 1856. His first act after becoming cognizant of the anarchy in the territory, was to order the disarmament and disbandment of the horde of Pro-Slavery men that made up the "Kansas militia". This was on Sept. 12. His orders were disregarded and more than this Lawrence was again threatened by the border ruffians. He marched to Lawrence, arriving on Sept. 13th, and after finding no immediate danger of the town being destroyed, returned to the capital.

Again the governor visited Lawrence, on Sept. 15, 1856, and stationed United States troops for its protection as the city was once more threatened with the Missourians. Then he went to the camp of the Pro-Slavery men, and in the face of threats and anger, he ordered them to disband. They did so and returned to Missouri. This was the last effort of the Missourians to conquer Kansas by force of arms.

Governor Geary now took steps to make Kansas free from all armed forces, and sent troops to the Nebraska line to prevent entrance of such bands. This resulted in the arrest of several companies of people who were brought to Topeka, where the governor addressed them and ordered them to disarm. They complied, saying they were merely homeseekers. This was the last interference with immigrants coming into Kansas.

On Oct. 17, 1856, Governor Geary set out on a tour of the territory and passed through the southern and western parts. During the twenty days the trip consumed, he made many addresses to settlers and was assured of their co-operation to produce law and order.

When the territorial legislature met at Lecompton, Jan. 12, 1857, it resolved to oppose anything and everything proposed by the executive, and followed this course. One important measure in the interests of slavery was passed over his veto. The Pro-Slavery party was working for a constitution by which Kansas would be admitted as a slave state. A census was provided for and no one was to be allowed to vote unless he was a resident prior to March 15, 1857. The election for the constitutional convention delegates was held in June. The census books were to be taken to Missouri where the border ruffians could register and no census taker was to appear in the counties of Kansas where the Free State people were in the majority. However, the governor's veto of the bill providing for such an outrage did not count.

The incident which led Governor Geary to leave was as follows: He had withheld a commission as sheriff from a William T. Sherrard for various good reasons. The legislature demanded his appointment and Sherrard was urged to insult the executive. Sherrard did so by spitting in Geary's face, and the latter's enemies hoped this would provoke a quarrel which would end in his death. However, the man ignored the insult, and he left the territory secretly because of danger of assassination, arriving at Washington, March 21, 1857.

Robert J. Walker.

The fourth territorial governor of Kansas was Robert J. Walker. He was born in Northumberland, Pennsylvania, July 23, 1801. He was appointed governor of Kansas by President James Buchanan and served from May 27, 1857, to November 16, 1857. He died at Washington, D. C., Nov. 11, 1869, when he was sixty-nine years old.

Governor Walker's education included a course at the University of Pennsylvania and he also studied law under his father, who was one of the judges of the United States Supreme Court. He settled in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1822, and there practised law and in this place he married the daughter of Franklin Bache. She was the granddaughter of Benjamin Franklin.

The year 1826 found him moving to Mississippi, where he became prominent as a lawyer and active in politics. He made the speech nominating Andrew Jackson to the candidacy which resulted in Jackson becoming President. In 1835 he became candidate for United States Senator from Mississippi, and was elected, and also re-elected in 1840. Because of his support, President James K. Polk made Walker Secretary of the Treasury, and in this office he reduced the taxes one-half and still provided sufficient money to meet all demands.

Under President Buchanan's administration Walker was appointed governor of Kansas, which he accepted after first declining the office. He was to support the slavery interests. Governor Walker arrived at Lecompton, May 27, 1857. On June 9, 1857, he addressed the Free State men, urging them to participate in the election of state officers, assuring them of fair treatment. The legislative election on Oct. 5, 1857, resulted in a large majority for the Free State party, although as usual the Pro-Slavery people cast several thousand fraudulent votes. However, the governor rejected these returns by proclamations issued Oct. 19 and 22, 1857.

Following this came the submission of the constitution of Kansas to the people, but Surveyor-General Calhoun was to conduct the election and pass upon the returns. Disgusted with the situation, Walker sent in his resignation on Dec. 17, 1857, to Secretary Cass, after President Buchanan would not support him in his fairness toward the Free State party. Later, when the Civil War came on he addressed a mass meeting in Union Square, New York City, in April, 1861, in behalf of the Union cause. Two years later, in 1863, as financial agent of the government in Europe, the ex-governor negotiated the sale of more than three hundred million dollars in bonds for war expenses.

James William Denver.

James William Denver, who was the fifth territorial governor of Kansas, was born in Winchester, Frederick County, Virginia, Oct. 23, 1817. He was appointed governor of Kansas by President James Buchanan and served from May 12, 1858 to Oct. 10, 1858, and died Aug. 9, 1892, at Washington, D. C. in his seventy-sixth year.

Denver moved with his parents to Clinton County, Ohio, in the spring of 1832. He was educated in the common schools and also studied civil engineering, acting at one time as county surveyor. As a surveyor he went to Missouri in the spring of 1841, but on account of not finding that kind of work he taught school in the northwestern part of Clay County, Missouri. The year 1842 found him studying law in Wilmington, Ohio, and attending the Cincinnati Law School, from which he graduated in the spring of 1844. The next year, 1845, after opening an office at Xenia, Ohio, the young lawyer returned to Missouri, where he opened a law office at Platte City.

The Mexican war saw him a captain of the 12th infantry regiment, after which he returned to Platte City in 1848. In 1850, Denver went to Trinity County, California, and was elected a state senator in 1852. Later he was appointed secretary of state for California, in which capacity he served until November, 1855, when he took his seat as United States representative from California, to which office he had been elected in 1854.

The office of commissioner of Indian affairs was given him in April, 1856, at the close of his Congressional term, and in December, 1857, when he was in Kansas on business, he was appointed secretary of the territory, assuming the office Dec. 21, 1857, and there being no governor, became acting governor. On May 12, 1858, he was appointed governor of Kansas. On the day that Denver had become acting governor, the election of the slavery constitution, known as the "Lecompton constitution," was held, but was proved fraudulent. Another election, held Jan. 4, 1858, in a fair manner, showed a vast majority against the measure, and the then acting governor informed the President of the situation, urging him not to present this "constitution" to Congress. However, the President replied that the information was too late, and presented the "constitution" to Congress with a deunuciation of the Free State party in Kansas, on Feb. 2, 1858. Nevertheless, Congress rejected the "constitution," and provided that the measure be again submitted to a fair vote of the people, which was done Aug. 2, 1858, when the "constitution" was voted down.

In the summer of 1858, Governor Denver effected a peace between the Pro-Slavery men and the Free State men under Captain James Montgomery and John Brown, in southeastern Kansas, but the treaty was soon broken. Later he vetoed the bill to move the capital from Lecompton to Minneola, a town to be built in Franklin County.

Denver resigned his office voluntarily, Oct. 10, 1858, and returning to Washington was re-appointed commissioner of Indian affairs, but resigned in the spring of 1859. The Civil War saw him on duty in Kansas as brigadier-general of volunteers, to which office he had been appointed by Lincoln, Aug. 14, 1861, and served in various places. He resigned from the army in 1863.

At the close of the war he resumed his law practice. Denver was the first Kansas territorial governor to resign the governorship voluntarily.

Samuel Medary.

Samuel Medary, the sixth and last territorial governor of Kansas, was born in Montgomery Square, Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, Feb. 25, 1801, and was appointed governor of Kansas by Franklin Pierce, and held the office from Dec. 1, 1858, to Dec. 17, 1860. He died at Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 7, 1864, at the age of sixty-four.

Young Medary was brought up in the Quaker faith, as his mother's ancestors came to America with William Penn. In his youth he attended the academy at Norristown and taught in the country schools, incidentally doing a little prose and poetical writing for the newspapers. The year 1825 found him in Batavia, Clermont County, Ohio, as editor of the Ohio Sun, favoring the election of Andrew Jackson. In 1834 the editor was elected as a Jackson Democrat to the Ohio legislature, and two years later, in 1836, he became Ohio state senator. When his term expired in 1838, he bought the Western Hemisphere, a paper at Columbus, Ohio, and changed the name to the Ohio Statesman. Ability in politics made him chairman of the Ohio delegation to the Baltimore Democratic convention of 1844, where he presented the name of James K. Polk for nomination to presidency.

Governor Medary was also the last Minnesota territorial governor, from 1857 to 1858, and was appointed territorial governor of Kansas, Dec. 1, 1858, assuming his duties at Lecompton, Dec. 18, 1858.

After repeated attempts to frame a constitution that would be acceptable to the people of the territory who were aspiring to statehood, Governor Medary on April 19, 1859, issued a call for an election to choose delegates to another (the fourth) constitutional convention. This election was held on June 7, 1859, the Republicans electing thirty-five and the Democrats seventeen of the delegates. The convention began its work in Wyandotte, July 5, and ended July 29. The constitution framed in that convention was ratified by the people at an election held Oct. 4, 1859, and under it Kansas finally came into the Union, Jan. 29, 1861.

Medary was a candidate for governor of the new state, but was defeated by Charles Robinson. In 1860 he returned to Columbus, Ohio, and there established a newspaper called the Crisis, which he edited until his death.

Daniel Woodson.

Daniel Woodson, who was acting Kansas territorial governor at various times, was born in Albemarle County, Virginia, May 24, 1824. He served as acting governor under Andrew H. Reeder during the following periods: April 17, 1855, to June 23, 1855; Aug. 16, 1855, to Sept. 7, 1855. Under Wilson Shannon, Woodson was acting governor from June 24, 1856, to July 7, 1856. Following the Wilson Shannon administration he acted as governor from Aug. 18, 1856, to Sept. 9, 1856. He also acted as governor for John W. Geary from March 12, 1857, to April 16, 1857. Mr. Woodson lived for a while at Coffeyville, and died at Claremore, Indian Territory (now Oklahoma) Oct. 5, 1894.

Frederick P. Stanton.

Frederick P. Stanton, who was an acting governor of Kansas Territory, was born in the District of Columbia, Dec. 22, 1814, and acted as governor of Kansas Territory, previous to the assumption of the office by Robert J. Walker, from April 15, 1857, to May 27, 1857; and also after Walker's resignation, from Nov. 16, 1857, to Dec. 21, 1857. Mr. Stanton died in Ocala, Florida, June 4, 1894.

Hugh Sleight Walsh.

Hugh Sleight Walsh, at one time acting governor of Kansas Territory, was born at New Windsor, Orange County, New York, about 1810, and was acting governor for Kansas for James W. Denver from May 12, 1858, to July 30, 1858; and following Denver's resignation acted as governor from Oct. 10, 1858, to Dec. 18, 1858; for Samuel Medary he acted as executive from Aug. 1, 1859, to Sept. 15, 1859, and from April 15, 1860, to June 16, 1860. Mr. Walsh died in Jefferson County, April 23, 1877.

George M. Beebe.

George M. Beebe, who acted as governor of Kansas Territory after Samuel Medary resigned, once lived in Doniphan County, settling here in 1859, and was born in New Vernon, New York, Oct. 28, 1835.

Mr. Beebe acted as Kansas governor following the resignation of Medary, from Nov. 25, 1860, to Dec. 17, 1860.

He graduated from Albany University, Albany, New York, in 1857. Following his locating in Doniphan County in 1859, he was elected Democratic member of the territorial legislature by a majority of fourteen votes. This legislature passed a bill abolishing slavery in Kansas, although Mr. Beebe opposed it. He became secretary of Kansas upon the removal of Hugh S. Walsh in May, 1860, and after Governor Medary resigned became acting governor. In this capacity, Jan. 10, 1861, he urged that Kansas maintain a neutral position in the Civil War. Later he was elected to the Forty-fourth Congress and was re-elected to the succeeding Congress.

S. M. BREWSTER

The Attorney-General of Kansas Is a Citizen of Troy and Comes from a Family That Has Produced Several Good Lawyers.

The present Attorney-General of the state of Kansas, S. M. Brewster, is a citizen of Doniphan County and is one of the ablest attorneys that has gone forth from the northeastern part of Kansas to engage in that honorable profession.

The subject of this sketch is a son of the late A. S. Brewster, who was county attorney of Doniphan County six years and practiced law in the county many years before his death. There are four of the Brewster brothers, S. M. Brewster, the present Attorney-General; Reg. B. Brewster and Arthur W. Brewster of Kansas City, Missouri, eminent attorneys, and Harry Brewster of Kansas City, who is employed in the customs house. The four sons are making splendid careers and are the pride of their mother, Mrs. A. S. Brewster, who is still living.

S. M. Brewster began his career as a lawyer here in Doniphan County when elected county attorney in 1898, serving until 1902, and he is now recognized as one of the keenest and most forceful members of the bar in Kansas. His next service for the public was as a member of the Kansas State Senate, having been elected to that office in November, 1908. He also served as representative in the lower house of the state legislature as a member from the district composed of Doniphan county, having been chosen for that office in 1912.

The first service performed by Mr. Brewster in the legal department of the state of Kansas was his service as Assistant Attorney-General to John Dawson, who retired from that office in January, 1915. His work under Mr. Dawson won him the nomination by the Republicans in 1914 for Attorney-General, and he was elected. His great work in behalf of the state and in the protection of its interests, together with his enforcement of the laws of Kansas, has commended him to the people of Kansas. He no doubt will be renominated by the Republicans this year.

Mr. Brewster has two sisters, Mrs. I. B. Morgan and Mrs. Newlin.

The cornerstone of the Topeka State Capital building was laid on Wednesday, October 17, 1866. The ceremonies were conducted by the Masonic fraternity. In the cornerstone was deposited a tin box sixteen by twenty, containing the state constitution and as many newspapers as could be found at Topeka.

Kansas Governors Under Statehood

From Charles Robinson, the First Governor, to Arthur Capper, the Twentieth Governor, Kansas Has Fared Well in the Character and Ability of Her Chief Executives—A Brief Review of Their Lives and Administrations.

Jan. 29, 1861, President James Buchanan signed the bill admitting Kansas into the union of states. Eleven days later, on Feb. 6th, Charles Robinson of Lawrence, took the oath of office of governor and issued an order convening the legislature in Topeka, March 26, for its first session. Robinson had been chosen governor at an election held Dec. 6, 1859, under the Wyandotte constitution. The legislature also had been chosen under the constitution and at the same election. This was the beginning of Kansas as a state.

Charles Robinson, the first governor, was a native of Massachusetts, born in Hardwick, that state, July 21, 1818. He received a good education, on top of which he prepared himself for a medical career. His entire life, however, was one of remarkable activity, leaving little time for the practice of his profession. He was both adventurous and ambitious. In 1849 he caught the California gold fever and went to the coast. On his way out he caught a glimpse of the Kansas prairies, little dreaming that they would be his stamping ground in a few short years and the scene of his greatest activities.

Robinson was back in New England when the Kansas-Nebraska bill passed by congress plunged the nation in a seething turmoil. He was an abolitionist and, like his fellow New Englanders, desired to see the territory of Kansas people with the kind of men who would swing it into the Union as a free state. The New England Emigrant Aid Society was preparing to send colonies of such men to Kansas. Robinson was sent out with the second party of emigrants from Boston, the party arriving at the site of the present city of Lawrence, two weeks behind the first party, and within less than two months after the territorial act was passed.

From the day in July, 1854, when he landed in the state, Charles Robinson was a potential force in the political, official and military life of Kansas. The part he played in the struggle of the people for statehood without slavery, covering a period of six and two-thirds years, has been recorded in the hundreds of pages of history now to be found in the library of the State Historical Society. However, it is well for us to say that at all times he was in the thickest of the fight.

He resisted the bogus laws enacted by an illegally constituted legislature; hurled defiance at the Pro-Slavery crowd; was arrested along with other Free-State leaders for treason to North Carolina; was in prison at Lecompton from May to September, 1856; and while in prison his house near Lawrence was burned by Sheriff Jones and his armed followers, who also destroyed the Lawrence newspaper offices and the Eldridge house as treasonable property.

Governor Robinson's official administration started with the shadow of war and privation hanging over the new state, for it was the year of the outbreak of the Civil War and the year following the drought of 1860. The best his administration could do was to organize the machinery of state government. The legislature chose Jim Lane and Samuel C. Pomeroy as United States senators. It adopted the great seal of the state of Kansas, the design being suggested by the then youthful John J. Ingalls. A bond issue of $150,000 was provided to defray current expenses. An election was provided for Nov. 5, 1861, for the voters to chose the state capital. (Topeka being chosen on that date.)

President Lincoln called for 75,000 volunteer soldiers. Within less than two weeks after Fort Sumter was fired upon, Governor Robinson had seven military companies under formation in Douglas County alone, and they were organizing in nearly every county in the state. Under the plan of organization 180 companies were organized. Governor Robinson was active in furthering military operations to the close of the war.

Governor Robinson was twice married. His first wife was Sarah Adams, of West Brookfield, Mass. They were married in November, 1843, and she died January 17, 1846. His second wife was Miss Sarah Tappan Doolittle Lawrence, also a Massachusetts girl, whom he married Oct. 30, 1851. Governor Robinson died in Lawrence, Aug. 17, 1894. By the terms of his will his estate, at the death of Mrs. Robinson, went to the University of Kansas in which he had been largely interested as one of the founders. Mrs. Robinson died Nov. 15, 1911.

Thomas Carney

Thomas Carney was the second governor of Kansas. He was born in Delaware County, Ohio, Aug. 20, 1827, and came to Leavenworth in 1858. He was elected Nov. 4, 1862, and was inaugurated Jan. 12, 1863, succeeding Governor Robinson. Governor Carney filled the office from 1863 to 1865.

During practically the entire period of the administration of Governor Carney there was Civil War along the eastern and southern border of Kansas, as well as throughout the South. Consequently there could be little in the administration that did not in some way have to do with the war. It was a time which called for patriotism of the highest quality, and Governor Carney and his staff and legislature, stood as one man backing up the military of Kansas. It was Governor Carney who, on Oct. 27, 1864, after the Confederates had been defeated and driven from the state, ordered the Kansas militia to their homes, although General Grant three days later ordered the pursuit of the Confederate General Price and his straggling army into southwestern Missouri.

Governor Carney made a good record during his two years in office, and he ably met the difficulties that confronted a new state whose first steps were impeded by the war. The state was without financial standing or credit, but from his own private means Governor Carney advanced the money to pay the interest on the public debt, and did much to bring order out of chaos. He was a believer in education and it was his own suggestion which later was carried out that every sixteenth and thirty-second sections of Osage ceded lands should be reserved as school lands.

Governor Carney was engaged in the grocery business at Leavenworth during his administration and previous thereto, and he personally saw that the families of the Kansas soldiers in Leavenworth and Wyandotte counties were supplied with groceries. It was a kindness which was appreciated and, be it said to the honor of the boys who wore the blue, they paid him in full after the war was over. The governor also showed great heartedness by his manner of relieving the suffering and distress of the people of Lawrence after the town had been sacked and burned and many of its citizens murdered by the Quantril raid of August, 1863.

Governor Carney died July 28, 1889, in Leavenworth.

Samuel J. Crawford

Samuel J. Crawford, the third governor of Kansas and the father of Mrs. Capper, wife of the present governor, Arthur Capper, was born in Lawrence County, Indiana, April 10, 1835. He came to Kansas in 1859, locating in Garnett, where he was engaged in the practice of law. His first public service was as a member of the first state legislature, in 1861, being elected at the special election held Dec. 6, 1859, provided by the Wyandotte constitution. From that beginning until overtaken by old age, he was active in life and his services were at all times in demand by the public.

He was serving in the legislature at Topeka when President Lincoln called for 75,000 volunteers. He at once obtained leave of absence, went to his home in Garnett, organized a military company and was elected captain. It became Company E, 2d Kansas infantry. Crawford performed distinguished service with his gallant Kansas soldiers, and when they were mustered out they proceeded to reorangize as cavalry Company A. Later his soldierly skill was rewarded by his promotion to colonel of the 83d U. S. colored infantry.

Crawford was nominated for governor of Kansas while he was in the field with his regiment. He returned to the state and during what otherwise would have been a hot political campaign, he helped to drive Price and his army from the state. He was chosen governor, Nov. 8, 1864, just two weeks after the battle of Mine Creek. After serving as governor almost to the end of his second term, Crawford suddenly resigned the office and took the field as colonel of the 19th Kansas cavalry to subdue the hostile Indians who were annoying and murdering settlers on the plains.

Governor Crawford's nearly four years of administration were devoted largely to the reconstruction of the state after the ravages of the Civil War, and in this he showed himself to be a man of great parts. Settlers were pouring in from the Eastern and Middle states and taking homesteads on the rich lands. The railroads, encouraged by the remarkable development of the prairies, were building across the state. It was the business of the state administration to render all possible aid to further this development. The administration busied itself with the building of state institutions, and particularly educational institutions which, because of the war, had gotten only a small start under Governors Robinson and Carney. Altogether, Governor Crawford's was one of the busiest administrations the state ever had.

Governor Crawford lived to a ripe old age. In 1911 he contributed to the history of Kansas a book entitled, "Kansas in the Sixties." He died Oct. 21, 1914, at Topeka.

Nehemiah Green

The fourth governor of Kansas was Nehemiah Green (then serving as lieutenant governor), who took the office Nov. 4, 1868, on the resignation of Governor Crawford, and served until Jan. 11, 1869, a few days more than two months. He was born in Harden County, Ohio, March 8, 1838, and came to Kansas during the territorial period. He died at Manhattan, Jan. 12, 1890.

Governor Green's administration was devoted to carrying to completion the last term of Governor Crawford. It was of too short duration for the accomplishment of many great things, but he filled the office creditably and with honor to the state.

James Madison Harvey

James Madison Harvey was the fifth governor of Kansas. He was born in Monroe County, Virginia, Sept. 21, 1833, and served from 1869 to 1873. He died at his home in Riley County, April 15, 1895.

Harvey settled in Riley County on coming to Kansas in 1859, and served in the 4th and 10th Kansas volunteer infantry from 1861 to 1864. He served as a representative in the legislature from 1865 to 1866, and as state senator from 1867 to 1868. He was chosen governor at the election Nov. 3, 1868, and was inaugurated Jan. 11, 1869. Governor Harvey was re-elected governor, Nov. 5, 1870, and continued in office to the end of his term, in January, 1873. On the resignation of Alexander C. Caldwell in 1874, Governor Harvey was appointed to fill out the vacancy in the United States Senate, serving until March 4, 1877.

Kansas had emerged from her troubles incident to the long and bloody conflict and under Harvey's administration as governor the new state was on the high road to prosperity. It was during his first administration the east wing of the capitol—started in the spring of 1867 under Governor Crawford—was completed and occupied, the legislature meeting in it for the first time in 1870. During Governor Harvey's two terms the State Normal School was completed (1872), the Agricultural College removed to a point near Manhattan (1873).

It was Governor Harvey, who, on May 24, 1871, issued the first proclamation for the observance of May 30 as Decoration Day in the state. Harvey had made a brilliant record as a soldier in the Civil War and his record as governor was clean and honorable.

Mrs. Harvey, whom he married in Adams County, Illinois, Oct. 4, 1854, was Charlotte R. Cutter.

Thomas Andrew Osborn

Thomas Andrew Osborn, the sixth governor of Kansas, was born Oct. 26, 1836, at Meadville, Pennsylvania. He served as governor of Kansas from 1873 to 1877, two terms. He died at Meadville, Pennsylvania, Feb. 4, 1898, while visiting his boyhood home.

Osborn came to Kansas in 1857, when he was twenty-one years old, and found employment as a printer on the Herald of Freedom at Lawrence. Later he went to Doniphan County, where he practiced law. In 1859 he represented that county in the territorial legislature. In 1864 he was appointed United States marshal for Kansas by President Lincoln. He was elected governor of Kansas, Nov. 3, 1872, inaugurated Jan. 13, 1873, re-elected on Nov. 5, 1874, and served to the end of his second term.

Governor Osborn was the chief executive of the state during two very important years of Kansas history. One was the "grasshopper" year of 1874, and the other was the Centennial year of 1876. Through both years it is of record that he rose to the occasion and did the state of Kansas proud service. The grasshopper year called for the kind of courage and statescraft that is born of great faith in one's own homeland. To cheer and comfort the people of Kansas in their great privation and loss, due to the pests, was the lot of this governor. He did it well, so well indeed that two years later, in 1876, when the Centennial Exposition was on in Philadelphia, every man within the confines of the Sunflower state was letting it be known that Kansas was the garden spot of all creation. With Alfred Gray as secretary of agriculture, Kansas put up the biggest and best show at the exposition, turning the eyes of the world this way. The result was an influx of new population numbering many thousands, many of them coming from European countries.

Governor Osborn's administration was clean and progressive. The rapid increase of population called for enlarged activities on the part of the state administration and larger expenditures, but Governor Osborn was equal to every emergency.

After the close of his administration Governor Osborn was appointed minister plenipotentiary to Chile, also representing the United States at Brazil, from 1877 to 1881. During his administration in South America, Osborn settled a boundary line dispute between Chile and Argentine. He returned to Kansas and in 1888 was elected state senator from Shawnee County by almost unanimous vote. A few years afterward he went to visit his old home in Meadville, Pennsylvania, where he died Feb. 4, 1898, as before mentioned.

George T. Anthony

The seventh governor of Kansas, George T. Anthony, was born on a farm near Mayfield, Fulton County, New York, June 9, 1824, and served as governor from 1877 to 1879. He died Aug. 5, 1896, in Topeka.

Anthony served in the Civil War, afterward locating in Rochester, New York. He came to Kansas in November, 1865, locating at Leavenworth. There he became connected with the publication of the Daily Bulletin, which he changed to the Daily Conservative. Later he was editor of the Kansas Farmer for six years.

In December, 1867, he was appointed internal revenue assessor, and collector of internal revenue, July 11, 1868. He was president of the state board of agriculture three years and also served on the board of Centennial managers for the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876.

George T. Anthony was elected governor of Kansas, Nov. 7, 1876, and was inaugurated Jan. 6, 1877. He was a Republican. During his term of governor he imparted much of his business methods to the affairs of the state and lent encouragement in many ways to the efforts then making to induce the right kind of settlers to locate in Kansas.

After his administration as governor was closed he did efficient work on the extension of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad to the Southwest. In 1892 he was nominated for congressman at large, but was defeated by William A. Harris.

Anthony was a man who stood high in the councils of the Republican party in the state and nation. He was married Dec. 14, 1852. His son, George H. Anthony, was for several years a traveling freight agent in Wisconsin.

John Pierce St. John

The eighth governor of Kansas was John Pierce St. John, a native of Brookfield, Franklin County, Indiana. He was born Feb. 25, 1833, and served Kansas as governor from 1879 to 1883. His home is at Olathe, where he is in apparent good health.

St. John's early career was full of adventure and variety. It included some experiences in California and a visit to the South Sea Islands. After knocking about the world a few years he returned to his Hoosier home. His next move, however, was to come to Kansas and settle down for life. He was established in Olathe in 1869, and was soon taking a hand in the politics of the state. He was elected to the state senate in 1873, but after serving out his term he declined re-election.

On Nov. 5, 1878, John P. St. John was elected governor on the Republican ticket. He was inaugurated Jan. 13, 1879, and at once entered upon his official duties. Governor St. John's administration stands out more prominently perhaps, than that of any other governor of Kansas, for it was in 1879 that the legislature passed a joint resolution to submit to a vote of the people an amendment to the state constitution forever prohibiting in Kansas the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors except for medicinal and scientific purposes. Governor St. John approved the measure, stood before the people of Kansas as its champion.

The prohibition amendment went to the people at the election in November, 1880, and at that election St. John was a candidate for re-election as governor. A hot fight was made on him as well as upon the amendment, but St. John stood pat on the issue and was re-elected. The amendment also carried, but by only a majority of 8,002 votes.

The legislature of 1881 under St. John's second term passed an act providing for the enforcement of the provisions of the amendment, called Prohibitory Law. After thirty-five years the amendment has not been repealed, and the prohibitory law, with some additions, still stands, and the governor who signed both is as proud of them today as the day they were passed. Governor St. John was nominated for a third term, but was defeated by George W. Glick. In 1884 he was nominated by the Prohibition party for President.

Mrs. St. John was Susan J. Parker, a daughter of Nathaniel Parker of Charlestown, Illinois. They were married in 1860.

George Washington Glick

George Washington Glick was the ninth governor of Kansas. He also was the first Democrat ever elected to that office. He was born at Greencastle, Ohio, July 4, 1827, and served as governor of Kansas from January, 1883 to 1885. He died April 13, 1911, at his home in Atchison.

Glick was nominated by the Democrats in 1858 to make the race for congress in his home district in Ohio, but he declined to accept the nomination. The next year he joined the throng of Ohioans bound for Kansas, and was soon a citizen of the border town of Atchison, practicing law with Alfred G. Otis. He enlisted in the 2nd Kansas volunteer infantry and served with distinction. After the war he was a member of the state legislature.

In the campaign of 1882 Glick was nominated for governor by the Democrats by practically a unanimous vote, although he did not seek the nomination. At the November election of that year he defeated John P. St. John, the Prohibition governor, who was running for his third term as a Republican.

During his administration, which began Jan. 8, 1883, Governor Glick recommended many reforms in the conduct of the state institutions, favored a better plan of handling the public funds, and also recommended a state livestock sanitary commission. Also during his administration the prosperous people of Kansas, who had once been remembered by the people of the Middle states, had an opportunity to return the kindness by giving substantial relief to sufferers by the floods of 1884 in the Ohio valley. Many thousands of dollars worth of our products were sent to relieve the suffering.

Governor Glick was nominated by his party for a second term in 1884, but was defeated by John A. Martin, Republican. Glick was appointed pension agent by President Cleveland in 1885, served until President Harrison entered office; but in 1893 when Cleveland was again President, Glick was re-appointed.

Glick was a successful farmer and livestock man, owning the Shannon Hill farm near Atchison. Mrs. Glick was Miss Elizabeth Ryder before they were married in 1857 in Massalion, Ohio.

John Alexander Martin

John Alexander Martin, tenth governor of Kansas, was born in Brownsville, Pennsylvania, March 10, 1839, and was governor of Kansas from January, 1885, to January, 1889. He died in Atchison, Oct. 2, 1889.

Martin came to Kansas from his native state in 1857 with the Free-State emigrants and located in Atchison. He was editor of the early day Freedom's Champion, which, after freedom was won, became the Atchison Champion. He was a brilliant writer and was one of the powerful champions of the Free-State cause during the territorial times before Kansas was admitted to statehood. When the Civil War broke out Martin left his printing office and went to the front. After the war he returned to Atchison and was honored by being chosen mayor of the then promising city.

Martin was nominated by the Republicans of Kansas for governor in 1884, and at the election in November of that year, he defeated George W. Glick, who was the candidate of the Democrats for a second term. He was inaugurated Jan. 12, 1885. The legislature of that year became famous for the number of its acts and measures, though they were chiefly of a local nature. The Soldiers' Orphan Home was located at Atchison during his term and provision was made for the building of a reform school for girls at Beloit. The state reformatory at Hutchinson was located in 1886, although it was several years building. Martin was re-elected in 1886, and at the beginning of his second term in 1887 the legislature passed a municipal suffrage bill which conferred on the women of Kansas the right to vote at school, bond and municipal elections.

The wife of Governor Martin was Miss Ida Challiss of Atchison, and they were married June 1, 1871. Eight children were born to them.

Lyman Underwood Humphrey

Lyman Underwood Humphrey, the eleventh governor of Kansas, was born in Star County, Ohio, July 25, 1844. He was governor of Kansas two terms, from 1889 to 1893. He died at Independence, Kansas, Sept. 13, 1915.

After seeing service in the Civil War, Lyman U. Humphrey came to Kansas in 1868 and located at Independence, where he became connected with the Independence Tribune, as one of its founders, and also engaged in the practice of law. In 1878 he was elected to the Kansas legislature; the next year he was elected lieutenant governor, and two years later was re-elected for a second term. When the state railroad commission was created he was appointed on the first board. He became state senator in 1884, and in 1888 he was elected governor on the Republican ticket by 72,000 plurality, and at the election in 1890 he was chosen for a second term.

In the four years he was governor he did not travel a mile at the expense of the state, and each year he turned back into the treasury the bulk of his contingent fund. It is said he closed his fourteen years of service to the public poorer in purse than when he first began.

In his message to the legislature, Governor Humphrey called attention especially to the condition of the debtor class and the need of legislation in their behalf. Among the most noticeable acts of his administration was the creation of the office of commissioner of elections for cities of the first class, such officers being appointed by the governor. An act was passed authorizing townships to issue bonds and to subscribe stock for sugar manufactories, and to increase the bounty to be paid on sugar manufactured in Kansas from $15,000 to $40,000. The rate of contract interest was reduced from 12 per cent to 10 per cent and the legal rate to 6 per cent.

Lyman U. Humphrey was married Dec. 25, 1872, to Miss Amanda Leonard, a daughter of James Leonard, a banker of Independence. Four children were born to them, two of whom are living, Lyman L., engaged in the insurance business with his father at the time of the latter's death, and A. Lincoln Humphrey, a farmer and stockman.

Lorenzo D. Lewelling

Lorenzo D. Lewelling, the twelfth governor of Kansas and the first Peoples party or Populist governor the state ever had, was born in Salem, Henry County, Iowa, Dec. 1, 1864. He was Kansas governor from 1893 to Edward W. Hoch.

1895. He died at Arkansas City, Sept. 3, 1900.

Lewelling came to Kansas in 1887, when a young man of twenty-three years, and engaged in the commission business at Wichita. He had had little of political experience and no legislative experience of any kind, yet he had become so popular with the political leaders opposing the Republicans that they took him up and nominated him for governor.

It was a presidential year and the times were out of joint in Kansas, as in all the rest of the country. The Peoples party was made up of voters from both old parties—Democrats who were dissatisfied with the Cleveland administration of four years before, and Republicans who were dissatisfied with the Republican administration of Benjamin Harrison, then drawing to a close. So the Peoples party made almost a clean sweep of it in Kansas, electing Lewelling as governor and giving the state's ten electorial votes to General Weaver for the Presidency.

Governor Lewelling was inaugurated Jan. 9, 1893, and the first part of his administration was marked by the famous legislative war, (a more extended account of which is given elsewhere in this publication), the house being divided with two organizations, George L. Douglas being speaker for the Republicans and J. M. Dunsmore for the Peoples party members. Governor Lewelling recognized the Dunsmore house and the senate took the same action, the Republicans protesting. The arrest of a sergeant-at-arms of the Douglas house took the controversy into the supreme court, which resulted in the Douglas or Republican house being declared legally organized. Order was then restored and all fear of bloodshed—as was threatened for two weeks—was past. The administration of Governor Lewelling was not noted, however, for the enactment of the radical laws to which the party was pledged.

Edmund Needham Morrill

Edward Needham Morrill, the thirteenth governor of Kansas, was born at Westbrook, Cumberland County, Maine, Feb. 12, 1834, and was governor of Kansas from 1895 to 1897. He died at his home near Hiawatha, March 14, 1909.

Governor Morrill was one of the young men from New England who found their way out to the border in 1857. He located in Brown County and in the same year was chosen as a member of the Free State legislature. He participated in the struggles of the Free State people and when the Civil War came he went into service in Company C, 7th Kansas cavalry, in which he was promoted to major. After the war he returned to Brown County, and in the course of time held several county offices. He was elected to the state senate by the Republicans in 1882, without solicitation on his part, and re-elected in 1884. He was elected congressman at large in 1888, served one term, but declined renomination in 1890. In congress he was father of the Morrill pension bill, which passed in 1890.

Edmund N. Morrill was elected governor Nov. 6, 1894, and was inaugurated Jan. 14, 1895. At the same election the Woman Suffrage amendment, submitted by the Lewelling administration to a popular vote, was defeated by 35,000 votes.

The legislature of 1895, under Governor Morrill, did not indulge in an excess of measures. The Republicans had regained control of the state. The principal acts were the creation of an irrigation commission with appropriations necessary to make experiments in irrigation in the western part of the state, with plants located at Goodland and Dodge City.

John W. Leedy

John W. Leady, fourteenth governor of Kansas, was born in Highland county, Ohio, March 8, 1849, and was governor of Kansas from 1897 to 1899. His home is now in Coffeyville.

Leady was married to Sarah J. Boyd, of Frederickstown, Ohio, and in 1880, moved to Coffee county, Kansas. There he engaged in stock raising and farming.

Although he had been a Republican he joined the Democrats in 1892 and was elected to the State Senate in that year from the Fifteenth District. In the legislature which followed he was instrumental in securing the passage of the Australian Ballot Law.

In 1896 Kansas was a hotbed of political discussion, the lines being drawn between the "gold standard" and "free silver" as advocated by William Jennings Bryan, the Democratic Presidential candidate. The political combinations resulted in a fusion of the Democrats and the Peoples party. The ten electorial votes were cast for the Democratic candidates, Bryan and Sewell, while the Peoples party got the big end of the members of congress and state officers, with John W. Leedy as governor.

The legislature of 1897 lasted sixty-seven days, yet in the number of acts and measures up for consideration it did not compare with some other sessions that were shorter. It abolished the state board of irrigation, but consolidated the duties of the board with those of the commissioner of irrigation and forestry.

Governor Leedy, after retiring from office, spent several years in Alaska, but finally returned to the state.

William Eugene Stanley

William Eugene Stanley, fifteenth governor of Kansas, was born in Knox County, Ohio, Dec. 20, 1844, and served as governor of Kansas from 1899 to 1903. He died at Wichita, Oct. 13, 1910.

Mr. Stanley attended Ohio Wesleyan University and also studied law at Kenton, Ohio. He came to Kansas in 1870, and settled in Jefferson County. In 1872, the future governor moved to Wichita and served three terms as county attorney. He also was in the Kansas legislature for one term. Governor Morrill offered him the position of judge of the court of appeals, but he declined the appointment.

In June, 1898, the Republican state convention at Hutchison nominated him governor and he was elected November 8, 1898. His inauguration took place Jan. 9, 1899.

His administration was featured by Carrie Nation's hatchet crusade against the joints of Topeka. While at first public sentiment did not endorse the Wichita woman and many do not approve of her methods, time has changed people's attitude toward her. She started an active campaign against the liquor traffic.

Governor Stanley cut down state expenses by abolishing the state board of pardons, doing the work of the board himself. His wife was Miss Emma Hills. They were parents of three children, Henry W. Stanley, William Eugene Stanley and Harriet Stanley.

Willis J. Bailey

Willis J. Bailey, the sixteenth governor of the state of Kansas, and one of the most able business men who have ever graced the chief executive's chair in any state, is a native of Illinois, having been born at Mount Carmel in that state, Oct. 12, 1854. He was governor of Kansas from 1903 to 1905.

The future governor of Kansas completed his scholastic education in the University of Illinois and came to Kansas, July 14, 1879, settling in Nemeha County. He was ambitious to achieve success at farming, and being a young man of splendid physique, a fine education and a determination to do things and do them well, it is not strange that he soon began to attract attention among the people of the community. He was a good farmer, owning a good farm, and his neighbors, those sturdy Nemeha settlers, were good farmers.

Walter Rosco Stubbs.

Mr. Bailey's smile is always pleasing, as his bearing is always gentlemanly. He found a pleasure in mingling with those farmer folk. They found him a most likable young man, who mixed with them in business and in politics. They trusted him implicitly.

In the year 1888 they took him up and made him the nominee of the Republican party for state representative and at the November election of that year they elected him by a bumper majority. In the legislature of 1889 he proved to be a most valuable man. He stood up for the interests of the agriculturalists and stock growers of the state, and at the same time he stood up for the interests of the state and of his country. There was nothing bombastic in his style, he was not a dispenser of hot air. Members of the legislature and state officials at Topeka recognized in him a plain, practical business man—the same qualities that his neighbors had found in him and which led them to admire him. He became a valuable man in the legislature, as his judgment and advice were eagerly sought by men who wanted to get right on business propositions.

Willis J. Bailey's legislative experience at Topeka put him in touch with men from every county in the state. He soon became a popular man among the Republicans and when the campaign of 1902 came on he was nominated for governor. He made the race against William H. Craddock, Democratic mayor of Kansas City, Kansas, one of the most popular men in the state, and won by a large majority. He was inaugurated Jan. 12, 1903, and it was a great day for Kansas, marking as it did the beginning of a real, sound, common sense business administration.

The legislature of 1903, on the recommedation of Governor Bailey, voted an additional $100,000 for the Kansas display at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis in 1904. The governor's pride in his state was sublime. He desired to see the educational, mining, agricultural, horticultural, dairy and livestock interests, as well as the arts and industries, represented in the exposition as they should be, that the world might know something of Kansas—the true Kansas. Following the governor's suggestion the commission gave wide publicity to the intelligence, wealth and resources of the state by printing and distributing many thousands of booklets each of 120 pages, besides giving out many thousands of souvenir Kansas buttons.

Governor Bailey showed his wonderful business capacity, his broad sympathy and his ability to handle great things during the flood of 1903 in the valleys of the Kansas rivers, notably in the Kaw valley. The greatest calamity befell Kansas City, Kansas, Topeka and Lawrence, hundreds and thousands of families driven from their homes and much of their property destroyed. Generously the people of Kansas, under the leadership of such a governor, responded to the call of the homeless and hungry victims, and under his splendid executive management, measures were adopted that permitted the communities which were hardest hit to issue bonds and thus restore things as nearly as possible to their rightful condition.

Governor Bailey remained in office to the close of his term and the inauguration of his successor on Jan. 9, 1905. His administration was characterized by business management, and the taxpayers of Kansas have reason to be proud of the fact that every dollar of money raised for state purposes was judiciously spent, bringing dollar for dollar in return.

Following the expiration of his term, Governor Bailey went back to Nemeha County to look after his extensive farming interests and the town of Baileyville, which he founded and which he calls his home. He also has extensive banking interests at Atchison, as vice-president of the old Exchange National Bank, and is a director of the Federal Reserve Bank in Kansas City, having been named for that position July 22, 1914, at the time the national administration at Washington began the organization of federal reserve banks under the new law.

Arthur Capper.

Willis J. Bailey went into the office of governor as a bachelor, and was generally referred to as the "Bachelor Governor," but on June 10, 1903, he was married to Mrs. Ida Alberta Weeds, and those who were fortunate enough to attend the great reception that was given the governor and his bride in Topeka, will remember it all the days of their lives as one of the Kansas capital's most notable functions. Governor and Mrs. Bailey were the center of a great throng of admirers at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition on Kansas Day, Sept. 30, 1903, and the reception in their honor on the Plaza of St. Louis was one of the most beautiful functions of that exposition year.

The subject of this sketch, farmer, business man and banker, is the same straightforward and upright Kansan we have known him to be through all the years of his residence in Kansas. There are no better men.

Edward Wallis Hoch

Edward Wallis Hoch, seventeenth governor of Kansas, was born March 17, 1849, at Danville, Kentucky, and was governor of Kansas from 1905 to 1909.

Mr. Hoch came to Kansas from his native state of Kentucky in April, 1872, and first located at Fossil, now Russell. In 1874 he became editor of the Marion Record at Marion, which has since been his home, and where his son, Homer, now edits the Record. Mrs. Hoch, who was Miss Lou Dickerson, is a Marion girl.

In 1888 Mr. Hoch was elected to the lower house of the state legislature from his home county, was re-elected in 1892 and was speaker pro-tem. He became popular in the ranks of the Republicans of the state and was taken up and nominated for governor in the campaign of 1894, through the Boss Buster movement. At the election in November he polled 68,815 more votes than did his Democratic opponent. He was inaugurated Jan. 9, 1905.

During his administration Governor Hoch attempted to throttle the Standard Oil trust through legislation, such as declaring pipe lines common carriers, prohibiting discrimination, and providing maximum charges for transporting oil in pipe lines. While these acts gave something of an impetus to independent companies, the only result of the agitation so far as the Standard is concerned, seems to have been to cause that company to increase its operations below the Kansas line in Oklahoma.

Governor Hoch was re-elected in 1906, and upon his return to private life at the close of his term in January, 1909, he devoted much of his time to chautauqua lectures. He served on the state board of educational administration which has direction of the state educational institutions under appointment of Governor Hodges. He is still a member of that board.

Walter Roscoe Stubbs

Walter Roscoe Stubbs, the eighteenth governor of Kansas, was also known as the Quaker governor. He was born in the Quaker town of Richmond, Wayne County, Indiana, Nov. 7, 1858. He was governor of Kansas from 1909 to 1913. His home is in Lawrence.

With his parents, John T. and Esther (Bailey) Stubbs, he came to Kansas when he was three years old. The family located in the Quaker neighborhood at Hesper in Douglas County. There young Stubbs attended the country school, also night schools, and later the University of Kansas.

When a young man Stubbs graded a few miles of railroad bed with a team of mules. He found there was money in railroad grading and later took a contract for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad to grade the roadbed for that company's Kansas City-St. Louis line. This contract involved something like $3,000,000. By employing practical business methods of handling men and teams, the young contractor made a good pile of money on the job.

Walter R. Stubbs became interested in politics by serving several terms in the legislature from his home county. He was nominated by the Republicans for governor in 1908 and was elected in November of that year, taking the office Jan. 11, 1909. Avowedly a Progressive Republican, he instituted many reforms in the administration of the affairs of the state, advocating the substitution of practical business methods as opposed to politics in official business. He was re-elected governor in 1910, and served until 1913.

Mrs. Stubbs was Stella Hostettler, a typical Kansas woman. Their eldest daughter, Lenora, is now Mrs. Robert Stewart of Topeka. The other children are Paul and Margaret.

George Hartborn Hodges

George Hartborn Hodges, the nineteenth governor of Kansas, was born at Orion, Wisconsin, Feb. 6, 1866, and was governor from 1913 to 1915. His home is at Olathe, where he is engaged in the lumber business.

He came to Kansas with his parents in 1869 and located in Johnson County. There he grew to manhood and entered the lumber business, in which he has made a modest fortune.

In 1912 he was the nominee of the Democratic party for governor, and he made his campaign and won election on a pledge to give the people of Kansas a business administration. He promised a reduction of the runnning expenses of the state and a reduction of taxes, if it was in his power to bring about such reductions. When he took the office in January, 1913, he outlined these policies and pledges to the legislature. During his two years' administration, while he performed many good acts, he was powerless to make any appreciable reduction in the running expenses of government, for the reason that with constant demands for new things the functions of government were increasing, and every new feature of government called for more expenditure. One of the important features of his administration was the abolishing of separate state boards for each of the educational institutions, and placing these institutions of learning under one board. The system has been in operation since 1913, and while unpopular with some of the institutions, it is generally regarded as a successful and economical move.

Governor Hodges was a candidate for re-election in 1914, but was defeated by Arthur Capper, Republican, by a plurality of 47,000. In his first campaign, in 1913, Hodges defeated Capper by a plurality of only 29.

Arthur Capper

The twentieth governor of Kansas, and the present incumbent, is Arthur Capper, publisher of the Topeka Capital and several other papers and farm periodicals known as the Capper publications. He is the first native Kansan to fill the office of chief executive, having been born in Garnett, Anderson County, July, 1865. His home is in Topeka.

Mr. Capper began his career with a toy printing press given him as a Christmas present when he was a little boy. The gift led him to become interested in the "art preservative," and from that time on it ever was his ambition to become a successful publisher. He worked on the Garnett Journal for a time and in 1884 he went to Topeka, where he worked as a typesetter on the Capital when Major J. K. Hudson was at the head of that paper.

From the mechanical department to the reporter's route was a short cut for young Capper. Later he became city editor. In 1889 he had progressed to the point of going in business for himself and he purchased the North Topeka Mail of Frank A. Root. He also purchased the Breeze from Tom McNeal in 1887. He combined the two into the excellent publication now known as The Farmer's Mail and Breeze. In 1901 Mr. Capper's ambition led him to purchase the Topeka Daily Capital, although it is said he had but $2,000 in cash to pay down on it.

Thus, step by step, Arthur Capper's dream of becoming a great publisher materialized. He now has the greatest publishing house in the Middle West, in which are published no fewer than ten different publications with subscription lists running up into the hundreds of thousands; a great modern building and plant, worth $355,000, and has 600 to 700 employes on his payrolls.

Is it any cause for wonder, then, that Arthur Capper, successful publisher and business man, one whose pride in his state and its institutions is reflected daily and weekly in these publications, should be chosen by the Republicans of Kansas as their candidate for governor in two successive campaigns? In the first campaign, in 1912, Arthur Capper ran against George H. Hodges. It was the year of the big split in the Republican party, yet with Taft on the Republican ticket and Roosevelt on the Progressive ticket, Arthur Capper came within 29 votes of defeating Hodges. Some say he was elected, but he was reluctant to carry on a contest for the seat. However, the next campaign, in 1914, brought him political success, for he defeated Hodges by more than 47,000 votes.

Governor Capper's success in politics and official life, as well as in every business undertaing, is due to his straightforwardness and his unswerving honesty. He never does a thing half way. In his administration of the affairs of the state he has been guided by those same high and honorable principles that have won him success and the unqualified esteem of thousands who know him. He promised to give the people of Kansas a clean business administration, and he is doing it. Every expenditure recommended calls for a dollar of service for a dollar of pay. Politicians may criticise because he attempts to hold down expenditures, but he's doing it for the public good. His theory is that the public is entitled to efficiency in government, as well as economy, for the demands on the treasury are rapidly increasing and unless held down to necessary requirements, there is no telling where they will end. Governor Capper said in his campaign announcements that he was for fewer lawyers and politicians and for more business men and farmers. His administration is proving that he meant what he said. He is one of the most brilliant, practical, efficient men we have had in public office in Kansas. We predict his renomination in the campaign of 1916, for he is making the kind of an administration the people of Kansas want. He is the kind of a Kansan we all are proud of. He has made a success as a publisher and business man and the majority of people in Kansas believe he is conducting the state's business on the same basis as his personal affairs.

Charles Sissions, the celebrated newspaper man of Topeka, who wrote Kansas politics for the Kansas City Journal for twenty years, is the governor's private secretary, and we predict his nomination and election in 1918. Everybody boost for Sissions.

Mrs. Capper was Florence Crawford, daughter of the late Samuel J. Crawford, the third governor of Kansas. They were married in Topeka, Dec. 1, 1892. Their home at Eleventh street and Topeka avenue in Topeka is one of the most substantial modern residences in Kansas.

Walter L. Payne

A Native Kansan Who Started as a Plow Boy, Now a Prominent Banker and Candidate for the Republican Nomination for State Treasurer—Once President of the Kansas Day Club, and a Leader Among the Sons of Veterans.

Kansas has produced a great many home grown citizens of sterling worth who have achieved success in business, in official life as well as in politics; and of these we know of no one whose example is more worthy of emulation than our friend Walter L. Payne, vice-president of the Pioneer State Bank at Burlingame, Osage County, and an avowed candidate for State Treasurer on the Republican ticket in 1916.

Born on a farm in Douglas County a little more than forty-nine years ago, Walter L. Payne has by hard work, good judgment and a lot of pluck and perseverence, risen from plow boy step by step to a high position in the business and political life of the state. And all this has come to him largely through his own efforts, with the assistance of his loyal friends, who are to be found in Doniphan County and in every county of the state.

Mr. Payne's first official position was that of postmaster of his home town in Douglas County. He held the position five years. For another five years he was deputy county clerk of Douglas County, a position he resigned to enter the office of the state treasurer at Topeka as assistant state treasurer. He served the people of the state ten years, until the change of administrations early in 1912.

Mr. Payne's next move was to accept the position of active vice-president of the Pioneer State Bank of Burlingame, Osage County. His long service in the office of the state treasurer had well qualified him for the banking business, and as he is a firm believer in efficiency and economy, practicing it in his business, he became a valuable man in that bank.

Mr. Payne is a Republican in politics and his worth as a practical business man is recognized by them. He was honored with the presidency of the Kansas Day Club in January last for the year 1915. In May last he was announced as a candidate for state treasurer by his home paper, the Burlingame Chronicle, as the kind of a man the state needs in the office, as the following clipping will show:

"The state treasurer is responsible for about $20,000,000 in bonds, coupons and monies, and why not put a man in charge of this, the state bank, who has had actual experience in the work and who is now in the confidence of the financial institutions of the state, as evidenced by his election as one of the vice-presidents of the Fourth district of the State Bankers Association for the year 1915-1916."

Mr. Payne is the son of a Union soldier of the Civil War, and is a member of Old Abe Camp No. 16, Sons of Veterans, serving also on the staff of Colonel J. N. Harrison when that distinguished veteran was commander of the G. A. R., Department of Kansas. He is also a 32d degree Mason, belongs to several other fraternal orders and is president of the Commercial Club of Burlingame, also president of the Burlingame city council.

"Walt" Payne, as he is called by his close friends, is one of the strong men of the state and the people will make no mistake in electing him state treasurer in 1916.

William Amazon Gurwell, the subject of this sketch, was born at Fanning August 12, 1878, and was reared in the neighborhood which he has claimed as his home throughout his life. He received his education in the country schools and when a young man he married Miss Anna Mae Taylor, the ceremony being performed in St. Joseph, Missouri, November 25, 1903, by Elder C. E. Guinand of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, who was an old acquaintance of the Gurwell and Taylor families.

Mrs. Anna Mae Taylor Gurwell was born December 31, 1884, and was a daughter of Adam Taylor, who was born in Buchanan County, Missouri, and Adaline Graves Taylor, who was born near DeKalb, Missouri, July 24, 1853. The grandfather of Mrs. Gurwell on her mother's side was Daniel Graves, who was born at Sharp's Chapple, Tennessee, February 4, 1827, and died at his home, near Washington, Kansas, January 12, 1907. Her grandmother was Eliza Robertson, who was born in Terre Haute, Indiana, on May 21, 1833, and died in Washington County, Kansas, January 31, 1906. These grandparents of Mrs. Gurwell came to Doniphan County in 1854, and resided here until 1887, when they moved to Washington County. They reared four sons and five daughters. The sons are Albert R., John T., Hugh and Thomas L. The daughters are: Adeline, who married Adam Taylor, mother and father of Mrs. Gurwell; Sarah Ellen, now Mrs. Ansel L. Whetstine; Caroline, now Mrs. Thomas L. Meers of Davenport, Nebraska; Narvesta, now Mrs. Logan Collins of Newkirk, Okla.

Adam Taylor, father of Mrs. Gurwell was born January 29, 1846, in Missouri, the same date Kansas was admitted as a state. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, came to this country in 1854, residing until their deaths.

Mr. and Mrs. William Amazon Gurwell have one son and three daughters who were born as follows: Beulah Lavone, January 26, 1905, Barad Elmer, August 1, 1906, Ida Elsie, June 19, 1910, Sarah Adaline, January 11, 1913. They are educating their children in the schools of Troy and are proud to observe their progress, having great hopes for them as future citizens of the community.

Mr. and Mrs. Gurwell are strict members of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints at Fanning. His father and mother were consistent members and workers in this church, which is composed of many of our prosperous people in and around the town of Fanning.

William Amazon Gurwell has been a farmer since he was old enough to perform manual labor. He owned the old Adam Taylor farm and also owned the old Gurwell farm. He sold out some time ago and is now engaged in the manufacture of cement tile, posts, hog troughs, tanks and anything in the line of cement construction. He furnished the county with all of the culverts, large or small, made of concrete. # Grand Doniphan County Family

History of Famous Van Der Slice Pioneers, Who Were Among the First Settlers in What Is Now Doniphan County, Dates Back to Old Colonial Days.

HOWARD VAN DER SLICE SENIOR MEMBER OF THE WESTERN BRANCH OF THE FAMILY

Was Brought to Kansas Territory When He Was Four Months Old, August 1, 1853—Now Resides in Kansas City and One of the Foremost Business Men of That City—His Grandfather, Major Van Der Slice, Was appointed Indian Agent at the Great Nemaha Agency By President Franklin Pierce—Three Generations of the Van Der Slice Family Took an Active Part in the Political and Industrial History of Doniphan County.

The name of Van Der Slice will be known and revered in Doniphan County as long as records of great men and important events continue to be preserved. Men bearing that name have figured prominently in the political and military history of the state of Kansas.

For many years before Kansas became a state, and when what is now Doniphan County was a wild and unbroken prairie, the Van Der Slice family was represented in the development of the country and in the advancement of the cause of civilization in the West. Members of this well-known family helped to clear away the wild timber for settlements and to subdue the warlike red men who resented the coming of the white man to their haunts.

Descended from sterling ante-Revolutionary stock, the Van Der Slices could scarcely help maintaining the hereditary traditions of the family and perpetuating the sturdy instincts which predominated in the race since the old Colonial days. In spite of the vicissitudes of fortune and numerous hardships which were endured, the men of the Van Der Slices did not recognize defeat, and eventually won out in every struggle. For two hundred years this illustrious family led in every branch of human endeavor which was calculated to further the best interests of their country and their fellow men. Each and every one observed the old adage to "hitch his wagon to a star and not shoot down a well." Accordingly they aimed high and succeeded beyond their expectations.

The Van Der Slices are of that good old Dutch stock which originally settled in New Amsterdam and Pennsylvania during the years of William Penn. Some people have the idea, in these modern times of flippant speaking, that to call a man "Dutch" is to belittle him, while if the truth be known there is no nation in the world more industrious and intelligent than the pure strain of Dutch or Hollanders, as they are sometimes called, after the country from which they hail. So in the future kindly remember that if anyone calls you a "Dutchman," you are complimented, inasmuch as you are likened unto a member of the Van Der Slice family, which are Dutch and are proud of it.

As was natural in the old Colonial days, the different members of the family, imbued with a love of freedom and the perepetuation of it, scattered throughout the colonies, and the ancestors of Howard Van Der Slice settled in the heart of Pennsylvania, which especially before the Revolutionary War, was the favorite colony for the Dutch immigrants.

Although family records were scrupulously preserved in the old family Bible in those ancient days, the first authentic historical data relating to Howard Van Der Slice's ancestors commences in the year 1759, when his great grandfather, Daniel Van Der Slice, was born in Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love, on February 15th of that year. Howard's great grandmother was Miss Margaret Clemmons, who was born at Reading, Pennsylvania, March 4, 1780. When still a young girl, Miss Clemmons was married to Daniel Van Der Slice. She was not yet eighteen when her wedding was solemnized in her home town, and something over a year later, Howard's grandfather, Daniel (who is referred to in this sketch as Major Dan), was born in the parental home at Reading, February 10, 1799. The new baby thrived and was soon a sturdy little boy, prying around into everything and wanting to know the reason for everything.

The future Major Dan was a studious lad imbued with all the patriotic instincts of a true blue American. He was not yet thirteen years old when the War of 1812 broke out between England and the thirteen original states whose brave fathers and sons fought, bled and won the independence of the United States. Young Dan told his parents all about his desire to fight for his country, but on account of his immature years the boy was not taken seriously. He was a husky chap for his age, and when his parents laughed at his notions to be a warrior, he squared his shoulders and looked fierce enough to fight a wild cat.

The first thing his elders knew, Daniel was missing from home, and the next thing they learned was that he was an apprentice midshipman aboard the frigate Chesapeake. He had run away to fight for his country, and although his parents were proud of his spirit, they had him return home on account of his youth. However, after that, when their son affirmed that he could do a thing they were diplomatic about the words they used to contradict him. Next Daniel was bound out, as the saying was in those days when a lad was apprenticed to learn a trade, to learn the papermaking trade, which he did aptly and very thoroughly.

After being released from his apprenticeship as a full fledged mechanic and master of the papermaking business, Daniel the second, the grandfather of Howard Van Der Slice, went to Kentucky in 1820. During the summer of that year he taught school at Farran Creek, near Louisville, in that state. He had lost his mother and father before leaving Pennsylvania, his father dying in Philadelphia on December 30, 1812, and his mother, Margaret Clemmons Van Der Slice, on January 13, 1815.

School teaching was too quiet an existence for a restless and energetic man like the grandfather of Howard Van Der Slice, so on Janupary 14, 1821, he went to the lead mines at Fever River on the Upper Mississippi with Colonel James Johnson, and at the ensuing battle of the Thames was battalion commander with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel under Colonel R. M. Johnson. Major Daniel Van Der Slice made an ideal military leader, as he was quick mentally and physically without being heedless and careless in his decisions and actions.

While at the lead mine the Major became a close friend of Keokuk, the famous Sac and Fox chief. He also knew Black Hawk very well. With the latter, however, there was no pretense of friendship because of the close relations existing between Major Dan and Chief Keokuk. The two tribes were always at war with each other and the respective chiefs were especially bitter in their hatred of each other. Black Hawk resented the friendly meeting and conferences between the Major and Chief Keokuk, and in one of his drunken moods came into the room of Daniel, the grandfather of Howard Van Der Slice, at the dead hour of night and attempted to brain him with a bottle. Major Dan was in bed but not asleep. He was too quick for the enraged chief, and grabbing a hatchet he soon had Black Hawk running for cover.

Soon after the foregoing incident, which had reached the official ears of Governor Cass, the governor lost no time in appointing Major Van Der Slice magistrate for that section. He remained there until September 6, 1823, when he returned to Kentucky. Back in his adopted state once more he again took up the work of papermaking, and the following year, on August 5, 1824, the Major married Miss Nancy Utley. She was a native of Kentucky and her people were among the most patriotic in the Blue Grass state. She was born in Fair County, Kentucky, December 28, 1806, and the wedding was one of the big social events of the year on account of the prominence of both the contracting parties.

On May 4, 1835, Major Daniel Van Der Slice quit the paper-making business and became a full fledged editor, a position which demanded courage and stamina in those headstrong days of political warfere. In that year he became connected with the Georgetown Sentinel in an editorial capacity, and the next year (1836) he purchased the entire ownership of that publication. Partisan politics ran high those days and it required lots of nerve to advocate the election of any presidential candidate which the opposition did not favor. The selection of the man to fill the highest office of the nation was taken more seriously than in modern times, and a reflection on the likely candidate, or an expression of a critical nature, was an open invitation for trouble.

However, the grandfather of Howard Van Der Slice was made of stuff that did not quail at threats or tremble at frowns, and in the face of fierce opposition he conducted his paper in the advocacy of the election of Martin Van Buren for President and Richard M. Johnston for Vice-President of the United States. The presidential campaign was a sizzler from a newspaper standpoint, and Van Der Slice had a scrap on his hands from the beginning. His editorial comments were neither mild nor lukewarm; they were red-hot, and his castigations were straight from the shoulder. He printed the truth as he saw it and he did not hesitate to criticize any politician or his methods.

The Whig element was powerful in Kentucky in those days, and Mr. Finley, the leading Whig editor of Lexington, did not relish the darts of sarcasm that had been directed at the Whig candidates by Major Van Der Slice. The result of the editorial cross fire was that Major Dan and Mr. Finley engaged in a physical encounter on the streets of Georgetown one fine autumn afternoon and the Lexington fire-eater was taken home by friends, resembling very much a piece of raw steak.

To even up matters somewhat the elders of the church which the family of Van Der Slice attended decided to discipline the Major for chastising the Whig editor on a public thoroughfare, and summarily dismissed him from the church. The result of the well-meaning brethren's action was far from what they had intended or even anticipated. Instead of accepting the rebuke in a contrite and humble spirit, Editor Van Der Slice supported more vigorously than ever the Democratic candidates for President and Vice-President.

Van Der Slice's editorial views were as a thorn in the side of George D. Prentice, then a famous editor of Louisville, Kentucky. The literary harpoon which the Major was throwing into Prentice was sharp and full of fangs. It was too much for the Louisville man and he challenged his antagonist to a duel, to be fought on the historic field of Frankfort. The major was willing to convince his adversary, even at the point of a sword or the muzzle of a pistol, that the cause of Martin Van Buren was the best for the country. He journeyed to Frankfort all ready for the encounter, but friends of both editors interfered and there was no duel. Incidentally, it might not be amiss to state that Van Buren was elected President at the ensuing election.

The heroic services of Howard's grandfather were not forgotten by the new national administration and he was appointed Special Indian Agent to remove the Chickasaw Nation of red men across the Mississippi to their new reservation in the country that is now the state of Oklahoma. That was in 1837. The following year, 1838, by special appointment, the major accompanied a number of army officers on a trip to select a site for an army post, and on his suggestion Fort Scott, Kansas, was officially designated as the most desirable location.

The financial panic of 1837, which caused such nation-wide depression, left the Major high and dry like thousands of other good citizens. His resources were wiped away and when the Major returned to Kentucky he was confronted with the proposition either to go hungry or to begin all over again. He was a man of wonderful resources and started the battle to make a livelihood for his wife and family with renewed vigor. Nothing could dishearten him and he managed to weather the storm.

In 1840, Major Daniel Van Der Slice settled on a farm and a few years afterward was appointed superintendent of the Choctaw Academy, which position he capably filled until the government had schools established for that tribe of Indians at their new home. During the summer of 1853 President Franklin Pierce assigned to his loyal henchman the post of Indian Agent at the Great Nemeha Agency, which was then located near the present town of Highland. The Major served in that capacity through the administrations of Presidents Pierce and James Buchanan. During his entire tenure of office he was much beloved by the Indians, who placed the utmost confidence in his judgment and integrity. When the Kansas Territory became a state, Major Van Der Slice was getting along in years and had already made up his mind to spend the remaining years of his life in Doniphan County.

The beloved Major Dan, as he was affectionately known to all his friends, always took a heart interest in all affairs pertaining to humanity and human welfare. From early associations he was naturally a student of politics, and his interest in party campaigns never flagged. His fellow citizens invariably looked to him for council. Although he ever manifested keen interest in affairs political, he was always conservative and willing to concede a point when convinced that he was in the wrong.

There were eight children born to Major Daniel and Mrs. Van Der Slice, five boys and three girls, two of whom died in Kentucky in 1832 during the cholera epidemic, and one in Nodaway, Missouri. Mrs. VanDerslice died December 23, 1861, at the farm home of her son William, near the Old Mission, two miles east of Highland. Major Daniel Van Der Slice died at the same place on February 5, 1889, at the ripe old age of ninety years. He was buried beside his beloved wife in Highland cemetery, services being conducted by Smithton Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of which he was a charter member and the first Junior Warden.

The death of Major Van Der Slice was sincerely regretted by a wide circle of admiring friends in Doniphan County. He was a man who always had a good word to say for everybody, unless he was particularly antagonized, as in the case of the Southern editor. His characteristics through life were that he never failed a friend in the hour of need and he never said die, although he suffered hardships of the most trying description. He was gifted with the happy faculty of pleasing everybody. Major Van Der Slice retained his wonderful mental powers until his dying moments, and his decease was greatly felt by the entire community.

THOMAS JEFFERSON VAN DER SLICE

Thomas Jefferson Van Der Slice, father of Howard and eldest son of Major Daniel Van Der Slice, was a native son of the Blue Grass State. He was born at the Great Crossings, two miles from Georgetown, Scott County, Kentucky, on November 10, 1827. He resided in his native state, with the exception of three years spent in Louisiana, until coming to the then Kansas Territory, in August, 1853.

On June 5, 1851, Thomas J. Van Der Slice was married to Miss Sarah J. Burchfield, who was born near Frankfort in Franklin County, Kentucky, February 20, 1834. When Major Dan was appointed Indian Agent to the Iowa, Sac and Fox tribes, in 1853, his son Thomas J. and family accompanied him west and settled on a farm near the Old Mission, September 1, 1853, and Thomas J. was the farm instructor for the Indians.

After his arrival in Doniphan County, Thomas Jefferson evincede a strong interest in public affairs and also took a prominent part in the commercial activities of the new country. In 1858 he was engaged in merchandising at Iowa Point and was elected a member of the Territorial Legislature, serving in that body during the session of 1860. He was again elected a member of the State Legislature and served during the year 1868.

In the spring of 1873, the father of Howard Van Der Slice was elected a Justice of the Peace of Iowa Township, and in the fall of that year was elected Sheriff of Doniphan County. So satisfactory were the services rendered by this man that after serving one full term of two years he was re-elected, making in all four years in the one office. In January, 1878, he returned to his farm near Highland.

Mr. Van Der Slice was a member of the Christian Church and also a member of Smith Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Highland, of which body he was Worshipful Master for nine years. He was also a charter member of the Royal Arch Chapter of Masons and of Troy Chapter, No. 16, and a charter member of the Commandery of Knights Templar, Hiawatha Commandery, Brown County, Kansas.

There were fifteen children born of the union of Thomas J. Van Der Slice and Sarah J. Buchfield, several of whom died when young. One son, Daniel, was generally supposed to have been one of the first male children born in Doniphan County. He grew to be a fine young man but at the age of nineteen years he was stricken with typhoid malaria, and died in Troy. His mother was prostrated with grief over his loss, and until her death never mentioned his name without tears of sorrow. The other children were Howard, Samuel, John W., Maggie and Russel M. All were born in Kansas, with the exception of Howard, who was born in Kentucky.

Mrs. Van Der Slice lived happily with her husband and children for twenty-nine years. Her cheerful disposition endeared her to all who knew her and her charitable nature scintillated rays of sunshine wherever she went. Mrs. Van Der Slice died at her home near Highland November 12, 1878, tearfully mourned by her sorrowing family and a large number of friends.

Thomas J. Van Der Slice, father of Howard, died March 18, 1902, at Perry, Oklahoma, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He had been on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Maggie Moore, who was residing in the then territory of Oklahoma, when taken fatally ill. The body was brought back to Highland and buried beside his beloved wife, the funeral rites being conducted by Smithton Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Highland.

HOWARD VAN DER SLICE

Although not, strictly speaking, a native product of Doniphan County, Howard Van Der Slice has proven himself an eminent representative and a worthy descendant of the distinguished pioneers of the county. He is perhaps as well known and has as many friends as some people who have spent their entire life in the country.

Coming to Doniphan County at the early age of four months, he soon absorbed the traits and characteristics of a genuine native son. The sterling stuff of which his ancestors were possessed was quickly developed in Howard Van Der Slice, and ever since his youthful days he has demonstrated unparalelled application for work and wonderful business ability.

The success which Howard Van Der Slice has accomplished through life should be an incentive to every American boy to emulate his methods and practice his standards of integrity. He was happily endowed by birth with a high character and an industrious faculty, a possession which has been an estimable asset and a powerful advantage in winning the battle of life. Obstacles in the way of success and ambition have not meant defeat to him; on the other hand they were stimulants to greater effort and have resulted in a mental equilibrium that is not disturbed by flurries of business, changes of weather or vicissitudes of fortune.

Howard Van Der Slice was born at the Great Crossing, near Georgetown, Kentucky, on April 8, 1853, in the same house where his father, Thomas Jefferson Van Der Slice, was born twenty-five years before. His mother was Miss Sarah Burchfield, as mentioned in the sketch of his father.

When Major Daniel Van Der Slice, grandfather of Howard, was appointed Indian Agent to the Iowa, Sac and Fox tribes, then located at the Old Mission near the present town of Highland, he was accompanied to the Kansas Territory by his son, Thomas J., the latter's wife and their baby boy, Howard. The Van Der Slice family settled at the Mission, where the Major administered capably and intelligently to the wants of the Indians until their removal to their new reservation farther to the west and north. The Indians had learned to repose much faith in their white guardian, and it was with much sorrow that they took leave of him.

Howard Van Der Slice's father took up a farm adjacent to the Mission, and it was there that Howard spent the early years of his life. He was a lonely child as he and the other children were about the only whites in that pioneer settlement, and Howard can relate many ludicrous stories relative to his boyhood when he ate pork and beans out of the same kettle with the little redfaces at the Old Mission. He had fourteen brothers and sisters. Most of these died young, however.

The boy, Howard, had an admirable opportunity to observe the primitive conditions of the Western prairies before he was old enough to talk about the wonders of his new home. Everything, including the Indians, had a well-defined touch of natural wildness which was not materially curtailed until the pro-slavery agitation in the territory was extirpated and Kansas was admitted to the Union as a free state, at which time the lad was seven years old. Although a mere child in matter of years, he recalls easily the demonstrations that ensued as a result of Kansas becoming a state.

His boyhood days were not noticeably different from those of other lads similarly situated as to geographical location and general environment. He attended school in the old wooden building, and, after acquiring proficiency in the elementary branches at the district seat of learning he took a course in Highland University at Highland, Kansas. He acquitted himself well at college, and at the age of nineteen was able to quit school and become a factor in the world.

The active life led by Howard Van Der Slice ever since he attained man's estate was evidently inculcated into him by the example for leadership set by his distinguished father and grandfather. Thomas Jefferson Van Der Slice had no sooner settled in the county than he became a leading factor in business and public affairs. In addition to his farm near Highland, Howard's father engaged successfully in merchandising in Iowa Point in 1859 and was twice elected a member of the legislature. He was an ardent Democrat, as his two first names would indicate, and although Doniphan County was a Republican stronghold, he was frequently elected to office.

At the age of nineteen Howard decided he was old enough and big enough to take up active work, so he quit his studies and was successful in receiving the appointment of station agent at Iowa Point for the Atchison & Nebraska (now the Burlington) railroad. Howard was a little handicapped in his new position because it was imperative that the station agent be equipped with a knowledge of telegraphy, in which the new appointee was deficient. Such a small thing as this did not cause him to give up in despair, but he started out with inimitable energy to master the intricate and confusing soundings of the keyboard. The railroad sent an expert instructor in telegraphy to give him a few lessons when they saw that he was so determined to hold his job, and it may be said to his everlasting credit that his youthful ambition exceeded the expectations of his superiors, for he became a full fledged telegraph operator after five months. That being accomplished, he was given full charge of the railroad station, a position he filled with rare judgment and tact for nine years, which brings him up to about twenty-eight years of age.

The young man had early realized the possibilities of a mercantile career after becoming connected with the railroad company. The great future for trade and commerce in Doniphan County towns was indelibly impressed on his mind. The surrounding country was rich in agricultural advantages. Farms were being developed at a rapid rate in both Kansas and Nebraska, and the possibilities in handling the products for the mill and market were immense. In the fall of 1881 Howard left the service of the Atchison & Nebraska railroad and embarked in the grain business, forming a co-partnership with D. M. Emerson of White Cloud.

His first business venture was successful from the start, and it grew in extent and volume with each succeeding week. The two partners were so constituted that the combination was an ideal one and continued until the death of Mr. Emerson on Wednesday, December 20, 1882. The firm was styled Emerson & Van Der Slice, and they had a large clientele all through the surrounding territory. After the death of his partner, Mr. Van Der Slice took over the business and continued it in his own name until 1888, when he sold out to Kendall & Smith of Lincoln, Nebraska.

In the meantime the subject of this sketch had become a prominent political figure and was appointed by President Cleveland as postmaster of White Cloud, August 24, 1885, during the first administration of that chief executive, serving until the succession of Benjamin Harrison to the presidency of May 2, 1889.

After selling out his grain business to Kendall & Smith, Mr. Van Der Slice continued in the employ of that firm until 1890. In the interim he had taken up other lines of business, having in 1883 formed a partnership with John H. Lynds of White Cloud to operate a wood business in that town.

On September 14, 1889, a new partnership was formed with John H. Lynds and G. W. Westfall of White Cloud, to do a stock commission business at St. Joseph, Missouri. However, one year previous to that, the two Van Der Slices, father and son, had formed a partnership with F. M. Vernon of Highland, Kansas, to conduct a grain and coal business at Kansas City, Missouri. The firm name was Vernon & Van Der Slice, with business headquarters at Eighteenth and Olive streets. Shortly after locating in Kansas City Mr. Vernon became dissatisfied and his interest was purchased by his partners, who continued the business until 1891 under the firm name of H. Van Der Slice & Company.

The stock commission business at St. Joseph was continued until the spring of 1890, when the firm moved to Kansas City and sold out to Tamlin & Tamlin, Mr. Westfall remaining with the new owners, where he has continued ever since. That same year Howard Van Der Slice disposed of his interests in the White Cloud wood business to his partner, John H. Lynds, and took up his permanent residence and business connections in Kansas City.

In 1901 Mr. Lynds again became associated with Mr. Van Der Slice, this time with an interest in H. Van Der Slice & Company grain and coal business in Kansas City. When Mr. Lynds became a member of the firm it was incorporated under the name of Vanderslice-Lynds Mercantile Company. Howard Van Der Slice has been president of this company from its first incorporation.

After locating in Kansas City, Mr. Van Der Slice decided to extend the scope of his business activities. With the establishment of theVan Der Slice-Lynds Mercantile Company on a solid financial basis the field for other ventures was found to be a fertile one. This company has continued in business since its incorporation to the present time, the coal and feed feature, however, having been discontinued in 1907, the ice and grain branch having been found more profitable and a much wider field of trade.

In 1909 Mr. Van Der Slice and his associates incorporated The City Ice & Storage Company of Kansas City with a fully paid capital of $100,000. Howard Van Der Slice has been president of this organization ever since its beginning; John H. Lynds is vice-president and F. D. Whiting is vice-president and general manager. The original City Ice & Cold Storage Company was continued along the old lines until the spring of 1913, when the capital stock was increased from $100,000 to $1,000,000. With this enormous amount of additional capital the company bought out the Peoples Ice Company, the Sheffield Ice Company and the Central Ice Company. This powerful business organization has a daily capacity of 1,400 tons of manufactured ice and has an aggregate of 700 employes on its regular payroll. The main office of the company is located at Twenty-first and Campbell streets, Kansas City, Missouri, and there are a number of branch offices conveniently situated for their customers at various points in the city.

Howard Van Der Slice has always taken a keen interest in the commercial life and business prosperity of the community. The foregoing sketch of his phenomenal activities should convey a lasting impression regarding his sound business judgment and surpassing ability. He has been a staunch supporter of the aims and aspirations of the trade organizations in his adopted city. Mr. Van Der Slice has been an honored member of the Kansas City Board of Trade since 1891 and has served as vice-president of that substantial business body. He is also a member of the Kansas City Commercial Club and the Hill Crest Golf Club, also of Kansas City.

Early in the development of the Southern Kansas oil fields the greatest possibilities for lucrative investment became apparent to Mr. Van Der Slice. He is at present a director of the Chanute Oil and Refining Company of Chanute, Kansas, which owns refineries in Chanute and Cushing, Oklahoma.

The gold fields of Old Mexico have also proven a sound business investment for Howard Van Der Slice. He is a director and treasurer of the Lucky Tiger Mining Company, which has extensive workings and mills in the Montezuma district of Sonora, Mexico. This is an Arizona corporation and is reputed to be one of the best producers in the entire southern republic. It has been paying dividends for the last eight years, and during the year 1914 paid out $715,000 dividends on the original investment.

Mr. Van Der Slice has taken an active part in Masonic fraternity since he was a young man. He is a member of Smithton Lodge, No. 1, of Highland, Kansas, the first Masonic body to be organized in the state. Its history dates back to 1854 when it was organized under an oak tree in the Burr Oak bottoms, near where the town of Smithton was once located. When the communication was held for the institution of the lodge, Major Daniel Van Der Slice, grandfather of Howard, was one of the nine original charter members and was also the first Junior Warden at that memorial convocation. Howard's father, Thomas Jefferson Van Der Slice, was one of the early members of Smithton Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Highland, and he had the distinction of serving nine years as Worshipful Master of that body. Howard Van Der Slice is also a member of Oriental Commandery, Knights Templar; a member of Orient Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and of Ararat Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Mystic Shrine of Kansas City.

Since his business interests became so diversified and extensive, Mr. Van Der Slice has eschewed politics. The fact that his ancestors for generations were Jeffersonian Democrats probably influenced his affiliation with the Democratic party during the years of young manhood, while a resident of White Cloud, when President Cleveland appointed him postmaster of that town. In recent years, however, he has evinced little interest in political affairs beyond exercising his great American prerogative of citizenship and voting his convictions on election day.

On January 27, 1875, Howard Van Der Slice took as a life partner the sweetheart of his youth, namely, Miss Mildred (Minnie) Elizabeth Flinn, at Iowa Point, Kansas. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Thomas H. Moore, one of the leading clergymen of the Christian faith in the younger days of Doniphan County. Mrs. Van Der Slice was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel W. Finn, who came to Doniphan County from their old home in Luray, Virginia, on May 8, 1854. The Flinns were a prominent family in the pioneer days of Doniphan County, and inasmuch as they became closely connected with the family of Van Der Slice by marriage, it is only consistent to herein sketch briefly the various members of the family.

Daniel William Flinn, the father, was born July 9, 1828, at Luray, Virginia, and was a young man twenty-six years of age when the family came to Kansas. He died at Iowa Point February 15, 1876. Martha A. Fox Flinn, wife of D. W. and mother of Mrs. Howard Van Der Slice, was born December 27, 1830, at Warrenton, Virginia, and she was just a girl of twenty-four when she arrived in Doniphan County, carrying a two-year-old baby in her arms. She died at White Cloud February 7, 1894, just in the prime of life at the age of sixty-four years.

Mary Ella Flinn, the first child of Daniel W. and Martha Flinn, was born in their native state on November 6, 1852, at Luray, and she was called away by the Grim Reaper at the age of eighteen while living at Iowa Point.

Mildred Elizabeth, or Minnie, as she is called, was born January 17, 1858, at Iowa Point, and became the wife of Howard Van Der Slice, as above described.

Samuel Flinn was born July 7, 1858 at Iowa Point and was married October 15, 1891, at Fort Scott, Kansas, to Miss Frances Burkholter. To this union was born one child, Mildred Eleanor, on February 11, 1896, at Kansas City, Missouri.

William M. Flinn was born June 30, 1861, at Iowa Point, Kansas. He married Miss Alice Thompson of Weatherford, Texas, at which place the wedding took place on May 19, 1885. There were five children born of the union, as follows: Paul William, born July 14, 1886; Nellie, born February 17, 1888; Frederick M., born December 5, 1890; Van Quill, born November 10, 1892; Enid, born July 28, 1897. William M. Flinn died June 15, 1904.

Mattie Irene Flinn was born May 9, 1865, at Iowa Point, and is now the wife of George William Westfall. They were married October 22, 1886, at White Cloud, Kansas, and now reside at 3310 Flora Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri. They have one child, Gladys, whose marriage to David William May was on December 31, 1910, at Kansas City. Their home is at 1492½ West Twenty-seventh Street, Los Angeles, California. The Mays have one child, Howard Allen, who was born March 8, 1914, at Los Angeles.

Lavinia Flinn was born February 12, 1869, at Iowa Point. She makes her home with her brother-in-law, Howard Van Der Slice.

Nellie Rose Flinn was born July 27, 1873, at Iowa Point, and was married January 22, 1891, at Kansas City, Missouri, the lucky man being Oliver Garlock. They have had two children, Martha Ellen, who was born November 26, 1898, at White Cloud, and Mary Elizabeth, who was born September 25, 1905, at Kansas City, and died August 15, 1907, at Newton, Kansas. When the marriage of Nellie Rose Flinn and Oliver Moyer Garlock was solemnized, the following account appeared in the Brown County (Kansas) Globe:

"The happy couple was well and favorably known here, the groom being the second son of Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Garlock, known among Brown County's most prosperous farmers. Oliver is a very amiable and industrious young man, having no bad habits, and we should anticipate that he would make a model husband. Mrs. Garlock is a native Doniphan County girl, having been born at Iowa Point. In the spring of 1895 she moved to Kansas City. She has a host of friends who will welcome her return, and the Globe unites with them in extending to the happy couple a prosperous and successful future."

This sketch concludes the history of the family of Mrs. Howard Van Der Slice.

Mr. Howard Van Der Slice met his future wife while he was station agent at Iowa Point in 1872. She was then sixteen years old and Howard nineteen, but they made the most of their courtship and were married when Howard was not yet twenty-three and the bride had not turned nineteen.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Van Der Slice have a delightful home at 3818 The Paseo, Kansas City, Mo., where they live in unostentatious simplicity. Both are of a genial, social nature and are ever ready and happy to extend the most cordial welcome to their hosts of friends, not only from old Doniphan County, but from every section of the country.

RELATIVES OF HOWARD VAN DER SLICE

John William is a younger brother of Howard Van Der Slice by five years and one month. He is a genuine Doniphan County Kansas, native son, having been born at Iowa Point on May 8, 1859. At that time his father, Thomas Jefferson Van Der Slice, was engaged in the mercantile business there, although still retaining his farm home near the old Mission.

John William's youth was not much different from that of his brother, Howard, or any of the neighbor boys. His education was obtained in the old-fashioned district school, and he made himself useful in "choring" around the farm. In the elementary and more advanced branches of learning he was considered remarkably bright to absorb education and the thorough study of all lessons was regarded more in the nature of a pleasure than a task. His early training around the farm was that useful and comprehensive kind which equipped him with experience and industry that has proven invaluable in the years that followed.

John W. Van Der Slice developed into an intelligent and robust young man before he reached his twentieth year and was endowed with that supreme confidence in himself that is characteristic of more mature years, but is especially true of the race of Van Der Slice.

After reaching his majority he decided to follow in the footsteps of his successful brother, Howard, and to make for himself a career in the world. Like many other young men he concluded that the most impressive manner of convincing others of his importance was to take a wife. Consequently, six months after his twenty-first birthday he was married to Miss Jennie L. Moore of Iowa Point, on December 7, 1880, the ceremony being performed by the Reverend Mr. Van Deventer. Miss Moore was a native of Ohio, her birthplace being Johnsburg, that state, March 11, 1861. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Moore, who came to Doniphan County in 1865, settling in Iowa Point.

Mr. Van Der Slice and his bride settled down to happy wedded life in a neat little home in Iowa Point. They had a wide acquaintance among the people in that part of the country, and their friends were staunch and loyal. Nine children were born to the union of John William Van Der Slice and his wife, seven of whom are living and doing well. The other two died when a few years old. The Van Der Slice children, in order of birth, are: Roy, born in Iowa Point, February 20, 1882, and died March 31, 1885; Howard J., born at the old Mission farm May 28, 1865, and now connected with the Walsenburg Mercantile Co., Walsenburg, Colorado; Mida A., born March 26, 1887, at Sparks, Kansas, then known as Highland Station, and now married and living in Denver, Colorado; Willia J., born December 8, 1890, at Sparks, and at present residing with her grandmother, Mrs. J. C. Moore, at Pueblo, Colorado; Ruth A., born September 4, 1892, at Sparks, and died June 28, 1894; Ruth E., born December 1, 1894, at Sparks, and now residing at the home of her parents, 2004 Vine street, Denver, Colorado; John Thomas, born August 2, 1897, at Sparks, and living at home in Denver; Emmet C., born October 24, 1900, at Pueblo, Colorado, and now at home with his parents.

Fifteen years ago, John William Van Der Slice was attracted to Colorado through investments and with his family moved to Pueblo. During his forty-one years' residence in Doniphan County there was not a more congenial soul within its borders, and hundreds of friends of both Mrs. Van Der Slice and himself greatly regretted their departure. During their many years of residence in Iowa Point and Sparks (Highland Station) the Van Der Slices were held in the highest esteem by all who knew them. The genial disposition of Mr. and Mrs. Van Der Slice endeared them to everybody with whom they came in contact, and friendships they formed were of the lasting kind.

During the fifteen years he has been a resident of Colorado, Mr. Van Der Slice has been successful. The older children have grown up and married well, and the others are almost certain to follow in their footsteps. All the children have had the advantage of a good education, and down to the very youngest may be said to be a credit to their parents who are naturally very proud of them all.

Mr. Van Der Slice remained in Pueblo nine years, but six years ago perceived greater possibilities in Denver and transferred the family residence to that place. The family has lots of friends in their new home, but this is not surprising to Doniphan County people who remember John William Van Der Slice, his wife and children.

MRS. MAGGIE BURCHFIELD MOORE

Mrs. Maggie Burchfield Moore is the only living sister of Howard Van Der Slice, all the other girls in her father's family having died when children. Mrs. Moore was born at the old Van Der Slice homestead near Highland upon which her father, Thomas Jefferson Van Der Slice had settled soon after his arrival in what is now Doniphan County during the month of August, 1853. On October 10, 1882, Maggie Burchfield Van Der Slice was married to T. H. Moore, Jr., son of Thomas H. Moore of Iowa Point, at the home of her uncle, William Van Der Slice, on a farm near Highland. Later the couple moved with their family to the then territory of Oklahoma and settled near Perry. It was while visiting her there that her father, Thomas Jefferson Van Der Slice, was stricken with a fatal illness and died on March 18, 1902.

The two daughters of Maggie Burchfield Moore, Bessie and Altha H., now reside in Kansas City, Missouri. Bessie was born November 7, 1883, and is now the wife of John Elbert Monett, a traveling representative of the Ridenour Grocery Company of Kansas City. They were married December 25, 1902. It is with Mrs. Monett that her mother makes her home at 3314 Highland avenue, Kansas City, Mo.

They have three sons to bless their union: John Robert, born February 23, 1905, in Perry, Oklahoma; Howard Norman, April 12, 1907, in Kansas City, Missouri, and Allen Elbert, born April 30, 1909, in Kansas City, Missouri.

ALTHA H. MOORE

Altha H. was born November 16, 1887, and was married to Charles Blane Briggs, December 2, 1911. They live at 3320 Highland avenue, Kansas City, Missouri.

To their union has been born one son, Charles D. Briggs, September 16, 1914.

KATHERINE VAN DER SLICE CRITCHFIELD

Katherine Van Der Slice Critchfield, Howard's youngest aunt, was the youngest daughter of Maj. Daniel Van Der Slice, and she accompanied him West when he came to the Mission as Indian agent in 1853. She was some years younger than her sister, Mrs. Margaret Van Der Slice Riney. She was educated in Doniphan County, and the Sacred Heart Convent of St. Joseph.

Shortly after her marriage to Harding Critchfield, about the time of the breaking out of the Civil War, Katherine Van Der Slice moved with her husband to their new home on a farm in Nodaway County, Missouri.

Mrs. Critchfield had four children, William, Donna, Charles and Edward. William, the eldest, is now proprietor of an extensive store at Maryville, Missouri. Donna became the wife of William Morris, a railroad man, and for several years they resided in Goodland, Kansas, but are at present living in Denver, Colorado. Charles and Eddie reside in Nodaway County, Missouri.

Mrs. Critchfield died about thirty-five years ago, and her husband about four years ago.

WILLIAM VAN DER SLICE

The oldest living child of the great Doniphan County pioneer, Major Daniel Van Der Slice, is now a resident of St. Joseph, Missouri, where he is still hale and hearty in his eighty-seventh year. This venerable representative of the great Van Der Slice family is William Van Der Slice, brother of Thomas Jefferson, and uncle of Howard, the present active representative of the Western branch of the Van Der Slice family.

William Van Der Slice is still in possession of all of his strong mental faculties and is not bothered with physical infirmities beyond the fact that his hearing has become somewhat defective. Otherwise, he might pass for a man ten years younger, and from all appearances he will reach the four score and ten milestone which his eminent father, Major Daniel, lacked five days of doing.

It seems to be a hereditary trait of the older members of the Van Der Slice pioneers to outlive all their compeers. For generations the Van Der Slices have been noted for their longevity, and it looks like a safe proposition to state that William T. B. will do as good, if not better in the old age line than have many of his ancestors.

When William Van Der Slice came to Doniphan County, or more strictly speaking to what is now Doniphan county, he first lived at the Nemaha Agency, where his father was the government Indian Agent to the Iowa, Kickapoo and Sac and Fox tribes. Later, however, William Van Der Slice took up a claim near the old Lewis bridge on Wolf River, where he lived with his family a number of years. After selling out his holdings on the Wolf River, William moved back to the Mission on land that had been taken up by his father and of which he was given a son's portion in fee simple.

Although he is now in his eighty-sixth year, Howard's aged uncle has a vivid and distinct recollection of the unsettled condition and the primitive wilderness of the country preceding the early stages of its future development. There has not been an important event which took place in Doniphan county since the autumn of 1853, that he does not remember and can tell about as accurately as if it had been recorded in history.

William Van Der Slice was twice married. His first wife was Susan F. Hancock, to whom he was united in wedlock on October 11, 1855. Mrs. Van Der Slice bore her husband four children, although living less than five years and two months after her marriage. She died on December 3, 1861. The children by this marriage were Thomas Jefferson, Milton, Eddie and Kate. T. J. went West and finally settled in the state of Washington many years ago. He was married and has a son, T. J., Jr. Milton and Eddie died young; Kate was married to James Wyatt on October 26, 1876. They have two children, Mattie and Fred.

Sixteen years to a day after his first marriage, on October 11, 1871, William Van Der Slice took for his second wife, Amanda Jane Parker and three children were born of this union. Jordon was born September 5, 1872, and died August 25, 1900; Margaret was born December 23, 1873, and became the wife of Elmer Baker, and they are now living three miles northwest of Sparks; Daniel was born January 27, 1880, was married to Flora Hahn, and lives on a farm near Troy.

Major Daniel Van Der Slice.

For almost forty years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. William Van Der Slice lived happily at their farm home in Doniphan County. Mrs. Van Der Slice died January 10, 1911, and her loss was keenly felt by her lifetime companion. She was buried in the family lot in Highland Cemetery.

Soon after the death of his wife, William Van Der Slice, being then past the eightieth milestone on life's journey, transferred his interest in the home place and went to St. Joseph to reside with his sister, Mrs. Margaret Van Der Slice-Riney, Howard's only living aunt, at 411 North Thirteenth street. There, in a cozy home, he enjoys life like an ancient philosopher. For generations he has seen the world go by, but he is as much interested now as ever in the passing show. He reads the newspapers with avidity every day and manifests as deep an interest in current events as a man fifty years his junior.

MRS. MARGARET VAN DER SLICE RINEY

For generations it has been the chief characteristic of the male members of the Van Der Slice family to attain ripe old age and outlive the men of their day and time, but in this brief sketch it will be shown that one of the feminine representatives will demonstrate to the boys of the name what one of their sisters can do. The purpose of this biography is not by any means intended to take sides in the cause of woman suffrage. The idea is to show primarily that a good woman who suffers to bring forth men can outlive most of them. The fact that Margaret Van Der Slice-Riney, aunt of Howard, was born a girl, does not indicate that she cannot reach the four score and ten age which was attained by her distinguished father and a number of other ancestors.

Like the other children of the great pioneer of Doniphan county, Major Van Der Slice, Mrs. Margaret Van Der Slice-Riney keeps pace with every passing year. Although well beyond her seventy-eighth birthday, Mrs. Riney is just as interested in life as when she was a girl. Surrounded by the members of her immediate family and in the companionship of her brother, William Van Der Slice, she is cheery and contented. She takes life easy and never takes a thought as to the final roll call.

Margaret Van Der Slice was born at the Great Crossing, two miles from Georgetown, Kentucky, on January 9, 1837. She came to what was then the Territory of Kansas with her father and family in 1853. She was a girl of sixteen at the time, and remembers to this day all the difficulties that were encountered on the trip to the West.

Soon after Major Daniel Van Der Slice had assumed his duties as Indian agent at the Nemeha reservation, Margaret was sent to finish her education at the Sacred Heart convent in St. Joseph. While attending school she boarded at the home of Major Barney O'Driscoll, who later became a prominent figure both in the town of Doniphan and the affairs of Doniphan County.

It was while living at the residence of Major O'Driscoll that Margaret became acquainted with James Riney, her future husband. He was a bright young mechanic and master carpenter, and also hailed from the Blue Grass state. The romance that sprang up between them was quick, harmonious and decisive. There was no impetuosity about the courtship. Both were ideally suited to each other in temperament and a congenial understanding of human nature. So they decided to get married as soon as Major Van Der Slice's consent could be obtained.

There was no opposition to the marriage of Margaret Van Der Slice to James Riney, as he was known to be a worthy young man with the highest sense of personal and business integrity. Marriage was solemnized at the Mission by Reverend S. M. Irvin on July 19, 1856. The young couple lived on a farm in Doniphan county for four or five years, and then Mr. Riney decided that more money could be made at his chosen calling. Consequently they moved to St. Joseph, where he branched out as a carpenter contractor with much success. There were twelve children born to Mr. and Mrs. James Riney. Four of them died in infancy.

Horace Sherman, the eldest, was born on June 1, 1858, and died when he was twenty-nine years of age.

George Daniel Riney died March 4, 1909. His wife was Sarah Bird of St. Joseph, Missouri, February 1, 1890, and she died July 6, 1901. Their son, D. S. Riney, is now twenty-five years old, and is living in St. Joseph.

Bernice Riney, the next child in order of birth, is now Mrs. Joe Martin, and with her husband resides in St. Joseph.

Margaret Riney married Robert Innis. They live in St. Joseph and have no family.

Mary E. Riney has always been her mother's stand-by and lives at home.

Jeanette M. Riney married E. O. Hicks and resides at 908 North Twenty-Fourth street, St. Joseph, Missouri. Mr. Hicks is a city salesman for the Standard Oil Company. Mr. and Mrs. Hicks have two boys, Roger Lee and Bernard V., who are soon to graduate from the Central High School in St. Joseph.

Franklin Riney, another son of the Rineys, married Miss Ida Johnson and they are now living in Henderson, Colorado.

Benjamin S. Riney married Esther Long, and they have two children, James W. and Dorothy. They reside in St. Joseph, where Mr. Riney holds an executive position with Townsend, Wyatt & Wall Dry Goods Company.

James Riney, uncle of Howard by marriage, was an industrious and hard working man all his life. He educated his children in the best schools and was well and favorably known to the business element of the City of St. Joseph. His activity in building operations brought him into contact with all manner of people and they were all his friends. His death on June 8, 1889, was widely regretted. His funeral was a very large one, and the procession to Mt. Mora cemetery was followed by a large concourse of mourning relatives and friends.

(Since this article was set in type, Mrs. Margaret Riney died January 20, 1916.)

SAMUEL IRVIN VAN DER SLICE

Howard Van Der Slice has one brother who is honored by the very name he bears. This brother is Samuel Irvin Van Der Slice, named for Samuel M. Irvin, the Presbyterian minister who founded the famous old Mission, two miles east of Highland in 1837. Samuel Irvin Van Der Slice was born at Iowa Point, Kansas, on October 6, 1857, and twenty-six years of his life was spent right in Doniphan County. He has also lived for ten years in Los Angeles, California, and the rest of his life was spent in Missouri and a number of the Southern States.

Samuel Irvin Van Der Slice was married September 20, 1887, to Miss Hortense Riney, the ceremony being performed in St. Joseph, Missouri, by the Reverend M. M. Goode. Mrs. Van Der Slice was also a native of Doniphan County, having been born near Highland November 29th, 1858. She lived in Kansas but one year, going with her parents to Missouri, where she lived until her marriage. There were three children of this union, as follows: Thomas Irvin Van Der Slice, born September 22, 1889; Marjorie, born November 29, 1891, and Vernon, born September 9, 1897. The children were all born in St. Joseph, Missouri.

This family now resides at 935 Denver avenue, Los Angeles, California, where they enjoy the comforts of life and can spend their declining years in peace and happiness. Quite often Mr. Van Der Slice takes a retrospective of his boyhood days in Doniphan county, and relates ludicrous incidents which transpired while playing on the prairie with the little Indians.

DANIEL VAN DER SLICE

Daniel Van Der Slice, an uncle of the successful Howard Van Der Slice, was one of the five sons of the famous old "Major Dan" Van Der Slice, and like him was a pioneer. He was born in Scott county, Kentucky, at the Great Crossing, September 10, 1844, came to Doniphan county in 1853, was educated at the Presbyterian Mission, and attended the first school built in Highland. Also when Highland college was built in 1858, he was one of the first students. He was married to Miss Martha Ann Jeffers, December 13, 1866, soon after the war, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Jeffers of Iowa Township, the Rev. S. M. Irvin performing the ceremony.

The first son born to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel, Jr., and who was a cousin of Howard's, was Louis Daniel Van Der Slice, born November 4, 1867, in Doniphan County. He died June 24, 1872, at the age of four years, seven months and twenty days. The next was George Marion Van Der Slice, born April 4, 1870, on the old Agency farm in Doniphan County. Thomas Henry Van Der Slice followed on November 27, 1871, in Doniphan County. James Edward Van Der Slice was born February 26, 1874, in Doniphan County, and was married to Miss Mabel Page of Everest, Kansas, November 8, 1898. Minnie Alice Van Der Slice was born at Highland Station, Doniphan County, August 10, 1876. Nellie Florence Van Der Slice, was born on January 6, 1879, in Doniphan County. Robert Clinton Van Der Slice was born on January 4, 1881, at the old Agency; John William, on July 22, 1884, in Wellingston, Sumner County, Kansas; Della May, on October 11, 1886, in Wellington, and Charles Howard, on August 17, 1889, at Horton, Kansas.

All of these children who are living, are cousins of Howard Van Der Slice, and it is needless to say that all of them have succeeded in the professions they selected. In every instance they inherited the traits of their noble father and grandfather, Major Dan, and have always been a force to be reckoned with in the community. Each movement which went to make up a better community has had their support and taken altogether they have done honor to the famous old Van Der Slice name. Right here, if a quip will be pardoned, we might say Howard Van Der Slice has plenty of relatives to visit.

Miss Minnie Alice Van Der Slice, cousin of Howard, was married in Horton, Brown County, Kansas, on March 22, 1894, to Howard Peter Spiker, son of an old and well-to-do family. The Rev. Mr. J. H. Brundige of Horton performed the ceremony. Mr. Spiker was born near Ava, Noble County, Ohio, September 27, 1870. After their wedding the young couple went to a farm near Granada, Kansas, and to them the following children were born: Melvin Howard, near Granada, July 6, 1895; Elsie Mae Florence, in Jackson County, near Whiting, Kansas, March 14, 1897; Mildred Angeline, in Nemaha County, near Granada, Kansas, April 9, 1901; Norman Algie, near Granada, October 8, 1903; Delia Olive, near Granada, November 27, 1907; Lela Belle, near Granada, August 4, 1908; William Henry, near Granada, April 28, 1911; Harmon Robert, near Granada, August 4, 1913.

It will easily be seen just from the foregoing how the blood of the entire Van Der Slice family flows through the veins of many of the most important families of this state. Thomas Hugh Van Der Slice, another of Howard's cousins and son of Daniel, Jr., was married at Trenton, Missouri, August 15, 1897, to Miss Mary Selel, and to them two children were born. They are Edna May, at Princeton, Missouri, August 10, 1898, and Joseph D., at Princeton, March 19, 1901.

John William Van Der Slice, another of the cousins of Howard, was married in Seneca, Nemaha County, Kansas, on August 10, 1907, to Miss Amelia Cecelia Molineaux, daughter of a pioneer family who was born in Nemaha County, one and one-half miles northeast of Goffs, Kansas, on March 17, 1885. To their union have been born two children: Percy Harold Van Der Slice, at Horton, June 17, 1908, and Unice Irene, seven and one-half miles northwest of Wetmore, June 2, 1912.

Margaret (Maggie) Van Der Slice was married to Elmer Baker in the court house at Troy, and to their union have been born Alta Ethel Baker, July 4, 1903; Delsie May, February 8, 1906; Mary Jane, August 10, 1902, and Robert Elmer, December 15, 1911.

Miss Nellie Florence Van Der Slice, another one of Howard's cousins, and a daughter of Daniel Van Der Slice, married Maxwell S. McClellan at Horton, Kansas, July 22, 1900. To them the following children have been born at Horton where they are now residing: Claude Jeffers McClellan, July 24, 1901; Carl Edward, June 12, 1903; Paul Daniel, March 28, 1905; Edith Florence, March 22, 1907; Ivan Lamar, March 7, 1909, and Edgar Maxwell, July 19, 1911.

It is an astonishing but a certificationable fact that most all of the relatives of Howard Van Der Slice have "made good," if a slang expression may be used. No matter into what fields they have entered the best of their services have always been given and no movement in any community in which they lived was ever started but what they were behind that movement and assisting in whatever way possible to make a more respectable and prosperous district.

Throughout the entire state of Kansas, the imprints of their efforts may be found. The great grandsons and daughters of the lovable old "Major Dan" are at the head of their classes in the different schools and are showing themselves to be true disciples of their illustrous sire and ancestor. No matter in what section of the state it might be, the Van Der Slice family is showing itself to the credit of all concerned. In educational matters especially, have they been concerned, taking the greatest of interest in the state university and following out the last requests of their noted grandfather, are sending all of their offsprings to that institution, for their preparation of life's struggles.

When Howard Van Der Slice visits his relatives in Kansas he always has reasons to be proud for they are the most important families in the cities where they live. No taint has ever come to their name and they have kept clean the honorable escutcheon of the family. When all matters are taken into consideration, it is not astonishing that Howard's cousins and descendants have upheld the name, now famous throughout the entire United States, of Van Der Slice.

RUSSELL M. VAN DER SLICE

Russel M. was the youngest brother of Howard Vanderslice, and was born February 6, 1862, in Doniphan County. His childhood was spent there, where he lived until he was grown. He was married June 8, 1887, at St. Joseph, Missouri, to Leora R. Meers. Their union was blessed with two children, one boy and one girl. The boy bears the characteristic Van Der Slice name of Thomas Jefferson. He was born February 4, 1893, at Bethany, Missouri, and is still heart-whole and fancy free. The daughter, Ethel L., was born April 29, 1889, and was married June 19, 1907, at Chicago, to William J. Hollenbeck. They have one child, Leora June, who was born October 3, 1909. Russell M. Van Der Slice lived long enough to see his grandchild, but not long after her birth, on March 8, 1910, he was called to his eternal reward. Russell M. died at Memphis, Tennessee.

MAGGIE VAN DER SLICE

Maggie Van Der Slice is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Van Der Slice. Her younger days were spent in Doniphan County, where she was married to Elmer Baker of Harrison County, Missouri, by Judge Curtis, in Troy. They reside on a farm in Iowa Township, east of Sparks. To this union have been born Robert Elmer, on December 22, 1909. Mary Jane was born on the 27th day of June, 1911, and Leta Gladys on January 16, 1916. On October 5, 1871 he was married to Miss Mary E. Blunt. Mr. and Mrs. Davies have sons and daughters as follows:

They reside on the Dick Gilmore farm in Iowa Township, ten miles northwest of Troy. He owns 340 acres of good fertile Doniphan County land.

George Foster Kent

George Foster Kent, whose farm adjoins Troy on the north, was born four miles southeast of Troy on February 21, 1879. His parents were Absalom and Georganna Kent, industrious pioneers, who came to Doniphan County in the spring of 1856 and made their home. He was educated in the public schools in the country and attended three years at Saint Benedict's College at Atchison, after which he engaged in the mercantile business at Sparks.

On February 17, 1912, George was married to Cecelia Kanaly at Rulo, Nebraska, who was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Kanaly of Rulo. To this union have been born George Philip, on November 10, 1913; John Absalom, February 2, 1914, and Mary Cecelia, December 20, 1914. Mr. Kent owns a good fruit farm adjoining Troy, and is rated as one of the most progressive farmers and fruit growers in Center Township.

Ab Kent

Ab Kent was born in Ross County, Ohio, December 3, 1834. He married Miss Georgia A. Boggett, who was born in Pennsylvania, February 22, 1852. Both lived to a ripe old age on the farm near Troy. Mrs. Kent died there July 11, 1901. Her husband, the late Ab Kent, was kicked by a mule while doing chores around his barn July 7, 1911, and died from his injuries six weeks later, Aug. 18, 1911. The two people were among the splendid type of early-day citizens and had an important part in the making of Doniphan County, and particularly the fine community five miles southeast of Troy. They reared a fine family of sons and daughters, G. Foster, Edward A. Perrin and Agnes, now Mrs. Henry Dittemore, of Cuba; Mary, Mrs. Zach Bailey; Emily, Mrs. Joseph Bohr. He was an extensive cattle feeder and had the honor, a few years ago, of shipping the best hundred head of fat cattle ever put on the market at Chicago.

MRS. ELIZABETH ANN MARCUM

A Pioneer of Iowa Township.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Marcum was born in Monroe County, Mo., August 29, 1834. She was married to David M. Tobin in Buchanan County, Mo., on December 29, 1853. In the spring of 1856, she came to Doniphan County with her husband, and bought the farm on which she now resides. She purchased the land at the government land sales, held in June, 1857, and has lived on the same farm since. Mr. Tobin died April 25, 1863. They had four children: Elizabeth J., born November 27, 1854; Henry W., born October 11, 1856; Wilson G., born May 31, 1859, and Clementine, born May 2, 1862.

On January 21, 1864, Mrs. Tobin was married to Stephen B. Marcum, who was born in Lee County, Virginia, June 14, 1837. Mr. Marcum died July 28, 1891. To this union were born six children, three of whom are living. They are Merritt D., born September 24, 1868, Jessie J., now wife of David Noble of Doniphan County, born January 11, 1873, and Minerva E., the youngest.

Samuel Hegarty

Samuel Hegarty, who has for a number of years been postmaster at Elwood and also conducts the largest general merchandise store there, is adjudged to be the most public-spirited citizen in that place, as he has had to be in the lime light possibly more than any other person there, and has been deeply interested in the betterment of the interests in the surrounding country and also a great deal of his time has been devoted to rearing a nice family.

Samuel Husted Hegarty was born in Kingman County, Kansas, in a sod house, February 1, 1878, and came to Doniphan County with his parents the first time, when only a boy. His father was J. L. Hegarty, a native of Pennsylvania, who died April 15, 1914, and his mother died March 2, 1897. When Sam returned to Elwood in 1891, at the age of thirteen years, he was a husky boy and assisted his father whenever commanded.

The subject of this sketch was married to Miss Nellie May Wilkerson, who is a native of Elwood, having been born June 17, 1880. To this union has been born two sons: Wilbur Linn, June 7, 1902, and William Emmett, July 8, 1909.

There is no institution in these modern times so absolutely indispensible for the accommodation of the public, as a safe and sound bank like the First National of Troy.

The Daily Papers Our People Read

Doniphan County People Are Liberal Patrons of the Newspapers of Kansas City, St. Joseph, Atchison and Topeka and Keep Themselves Well Informed on the Events of the Day and the Great Problems That Arise—A Brief Sketch of Some of These Papers.

The good people of Doniphan County believe that the modern daily newspaper which comes to them every day of the year is one of the potent factors in the life of today. Through these newspapers, coming from the cities of Kansas and from those on the western border of Missouri, our people are as well informed on the news happenings of the day and the great problems that concern the human family as are the people of the cities in which these papers are published. With our splendid lines of railway and our unexcelled mail facilities, the enterprising publishers are able to place their papers in the homes of their subscribers on the day of publication; so the happening of today is the subject of talk around the table at the evening meal. It is to give the readers of this Historical Edition of Doniphan County an idea of the history and the struggles of these newspapers for supremacy that we make special mention of them.

The Topeka Daily Capital

The Topeka Daily Capital, which is the leading morning daily newspaper in Kansas, is owned by Arthur Capper, governor of the state. The Capital was established as an evening paper by the late Major J. K. Hudson and E. E. Ewing, who had been publishing the Farmer and American Young Folks. The first number of the paper appeared April 21, 1879. It was modest and unpretentious and at the beginning was only a five-column folio. Its popularity increased and it was enlarged from time to time until January 1, 1881, it became a seven-column eight-page paper as it now is. November 1, 1881, it became a morning paper and since then has so continued, having a morning Associated Press franchise. Major Hudson sold the Capital to a company composed of E. E. Purcell of Manhattan as president, W. A. Johnston, secretary; John R. Mulvane, treasurer; Major Hudson taking stock and taking the position as business manager. Henry King, late head of the Globe-Democrat, who died March 15, 1915, was its editor. That was a great combination of great men. They published the Capital from August, 1881, until it finally was purchased by Arthur Capper, who had worked on the paper first as typesetter and later as reporter in the 1880's. In the hands of Mr. Capper the Capital has been an aggressive advocate of the Kansas brand of clean, efficient government and high ideals of society. The Capital is Republican in politics.

The Kansas City Star

The Kansas City Star is a living monument to the late Colonel William Rockhill Nelson, who was one of the foremost newspaper men of this day and age. The first issue of the Star, Vol. 1, No. 1, appeared in Kansas City, Missouri, on the afternoon of September 18, 1880, a little six-column sheet of four pages. It attracted little attention in the town which boasted of such Times, then owned by Dr. Morrison Munford, and the Journal, of which Colonel Robert T. Van Horn was at the head. As time wore on, however, the people of the wide-awake town began to "sit up and take notice." The independent, fearless and aggressive quality which has been characteristic of the Star from the date of its first issue, in the championship of any measure for the good of Kansas City and for the welfare of the people, appealed to the public and its subscription list began to grow rapidly. In 1882 Colonel Nelson purchased the Evening Mail and thus secured for the Star an afternoon Associated Press franchise. Then came the memorable boom of the years 1885 to 1888. Nearly everybody went real estate crazy, but Colonel Nelson never for an hour withdrew his attention from the Star; he was building a safe and sure foundation for one of the world's greatest newspapers. Each issue put out was a better paper than the previous issue. In 1894 the Star entered a new home on Wyandotte street, near Eighth. Soon—it was on April 29, 1894—a Sunday issue was put out. It was a great paper, but the subscription price was not increased; it was 10 cents a week for seven papers, the same as was charged for six papers. The subscription list increased by thousands. The new building on Wyandotte street soon became too small and cramped for such a growing concern. Colonel Nelson built a new home for the Star at Eleventh street and Grand avenue, which was occupied in 1898. The Sunday Star had been handicapped by a lack of dependable Sunday morning telegraph news service. Colonel Nelson solved the problem by purchasing the Times, and with it a morning franchise of the Associated Press. Then, on November 18, 1901, appeared the first issue of the Star-Times as a daily morning edition of the Star. Still the subscription price was not increased. It was 10 cents a week for thirteen papers, where before the subscribers only received seven papers for 10 cents. The subscription lists then grew to hundreds of thousands. Colonel Nelson built the great office building at Grand avenue, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets which is the present home of the Star, in 1911. The Star employs more than 700 persons in the making of its morning and evening editions and the Weekly Star. August F. Seested is the business manager or publisher, and Ralph E. Stout is the managing editor.

William Rockhill Nelson, died April 1 3, 1915.

The Atchison Champion

The Atchison Champion is one of the oldest newspapers in Kansas. It was started February 3, 1855, by R. S. Kelley and John H. Stringfellow, as The Squatter Sovereign, advocating the doctrine of squatters' rights and pro-slavery in its sympathies. The Town Company which owned the paper, sold it along with shares in the Town Company to Samuel C. Pomeroy (afterward a United States senator), Franklin G. Adams and Ross McBratney, all of the New England Emigrant Aid Society. They converted it into a Free State organ, called Freedom's Champion. In 1858 John A. Martin (afterward governor) succeeded to the ownership of the Champion. Martin went into the army, leaving the paper in charge of George H. Stebbins. A little later it was leased by Albert H. Horton (later a supreme court justice) and John James Ingalls (later United States senator) did editorial work on the paper. After the Civil War, when Martin returned home from his regiment, he made a daily of it, and the issue of freedom having been won, the paper became the Atchison Daily Champion. Its present editor and publisher is A. S. Andreck and W. C. Hawk.

St. Joseph News-Press

The St. Joseph News-Press, which is now in its thirty-seventh volume, is a fine example of wide-awake afternoon daily newspaper, which first saw the light of day May 3, 1879. It occupies an independent position in political affairs and is an aggressive fighter for the upbuilding of the interests of St. Joseph, also championing those measures which are intended for the betterment of society and for the public welfare. The News-Press has a full Associated Press franchise and presents the news of the world attractively. It also serves the news of the towns of western Missouri, northeastern Kansas, southeastern Nebraska, and southwestern Iowa, through its corps of correspondents. It is owned by a corporation of which C. H. Palmer is president and Louis T. Golding is publisher. Mr. Golding and Chris L. Rutt, managing editor, are two of St. Joseph's best citizens. The News-Press occupies a beautiful new building, with one of the finest plants in the country, at Ninth and Edmond streets.

The Topeka State Journal

The Topeka State Journal, of which Frank McLennan is editor and owner, is the successor to the old Kansas State Journal, which in September, 1879, succeeded the Blade. George W. Reed, Colonel Sam Wood and other noted men of Kansas were connected with the Journal in the '60's and '70's. Under the editorial and business management the State Journal has forged to the front as the leading afternoon newspaper published in the state of Kansas. It occupies a position of independence in politics and carries a larger quantity of state and telegraph news than any other paper in the state, having an afternoon Associated Press franchise and a large corps of correspondents in the cities and towns in the state.

Kansas City Journal

The Kansas City Journal is the oldest newspaper in Kansas City, Missouri. It was founded by Colonel Robert Thompson Van Horn, who had come out from Indiana County, Pennsylvania, in 1855. Colonel Van Horn first purchased the Enterprise, which had been running a few months, and in June, 1858, changed the name to the Kansas City Journal and began its publication as a daily. The paper was conservative from the start, Colonel Van Horn supporting Douglas for the Presidency in 1860 and opposing the radicalism of both North and South. In 1864, however, the Journal supported Lincoln for the Presidency, and it has been Republican since that time. Under Colonel Van Horn the Journal became a power for the improvement of Kansas City and making it the cen-

Colonel Van Horn served with distinction in the Union army during the Civil War. In 1897 he retired from active work and spent his declining years at his beautiful home in the eastern part of Kansas City, where he died in December, 1915. The present organization of the Kansas City Journal was formed in 1896 with Charles S. Gleed as president, Hal Gaylord as secretary and treasurer, Harvey Fleming as managing editor and W. F. Craig as editorial writer. Mr. Fleming severed his connection several years ago. The publication has continued thus to this date. The Journal has a large circulation, due largely to the efficient management of Mr. Gaylord, business manager, and James F. Kelley, manager of circulation, and it is pronounced by eminent critics to be the best and most consistently edited newspaper in the United States.

The St. Joseph Gazette

The St. Joseph Gazette, however, is the oldest newspaper circulating in western Missouri and Kansas. It was established away back in the year 1845, first appearing January 24 of that year, and is now in its seventy-first year, the daily in its 127th volume. The Gazette has at all times since the first issue appeared, been an aggressive champion of the interests of the community in which it circulated. It has since the first publication passed under several different ownerships and its history would make interesting reading, particularly as it relates to the facts concerning the part that excellent paper has played in its lifetime in the development of the city of St. Joseph and the rich and highly prosperous farming region within a radius of many miles and in which the paper has an excessive circulation. The Gazette has at different times had great writers and moulders of public opinion on its staff, and we remember that it was on the Gazette that the late Eugene Field did his early work. The Gazette is now owned and published by the Gazette Publishing Company, with Mr. C. D. Morris the heaviest stockholder, occupying the position of publisher and editor. It is a Republican morning newspaper.

The Atchison Globe

When one speaks of the Atchison Daily Globe, he most generally mentions that it is Ed Howe's paper, for during its entire existence it has been the creature of that brilliant writer and paragrapher whose homely philosophy is read in the homes of many thousands of people in this country. He has a national reputaeion as a writer. The Globe was founded Dec. 8, 1877, and has been continuously published as a daily paper, presenting the news of Atchison and surrounding country intelligently and concisely and, as before stated, publishing the philosophical writings and reflections of its editor. The Globe is now owned by a stock company, and Eugene Howe is the editor.

Charles D. Morris.

Ewing Herbert

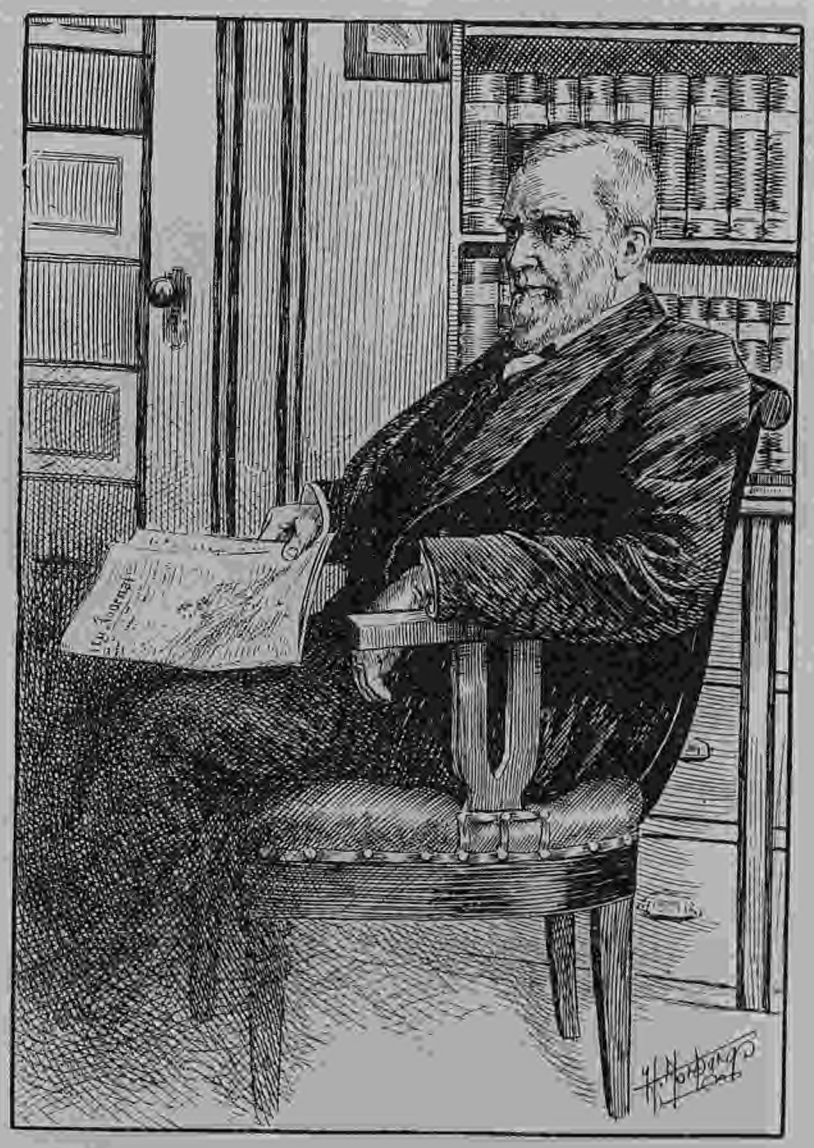
Among the clever men whom Doniphan County and her sister, Brown County, have produced, is to be listed one Ewing Herbert, now of St. Joseph, Missouri. It is not clear to his home town folks just why they ever allowed Mr. Herbert to become weaned away from them, but nevertheless he doubtless heard the call of opportunity and obeyed the summons.

Ewing Herbert was born in Brown County, Kansas—oh, we don't know how many years ago, but suffice it to say that he has attained the age of wisdom and foresight. He grew up in the place of his birth and always having had a sense of loyalty to his friends and acquaintances that finally was the indirect means of securing for him the position of postmaster of Hiawatha. He did not fall short of the expectations of his constituents, and held the position for eighteen years, at which time he resigned, and, the Democrats having been successful in the election, a man of their choice took his place in the postoffice.

This was the beginning of the political aspirations of Mr. Herbert. His lifework proper began when, as a lad of twelve, he set type in the Weekly Dispatch, now the World office, at Hiawatha. This was the line which held his attention, even throughout his incumbency as posmaster. All day long, as the boy, then the youth, set endless lines of type, he nursed the ambition to own a newspaper of his own some day. Tha ambition was realized at last, and he has been the owner of the Hiawatha World for twenty-five years. The World has been a daily sheet for about fifteen years, and publishes one of the best weeklies in Kansas. The daily became a necessity when Hiawatha attained a population of 4,000 persons.

In September, 1914, opportunity came rapping at his door and Mr. Herbert bought the Stockyards Daily Journal of St. Joseph, with offices near the Exchange Building. Almost at once a perceptible difference was noted in the Journal for the better, and this was commented upon by different subscribers and readers, as well as newspaper men in this region. When he went to St. Joseph to live, Mr. Herbert leased a one-half interest in the Hiawatha World to Dr. McLaughlin.

Ewing Herbert is one of the most public spirited and loyal men whom Kansas ever produced. He is an orator of no mean ability, and by some is considered the best on the local hustings. He has never failed to be a liberal contributor to worthy causes, and especially to church benevolences.



Col. Robert Thompson Van Horn, died January 3, 1916.

Paul S. Hedrick

It is very seldom that the ambition nursed in boyhood, turns out to be the vocation of the man, but when Paul Hedrick, as a mere schoolboy, perused the columns of various weekly and daily papers, and vowed that some day those columns would contain his words and reports, it proved to be no idle boast. Now, at about the age of thirty, he is ranked as second to none in his ability to ably portray in newspaper language the events of a day. Not only is his ability to write so well developed, but it is noteworthy that he is almost incredibly swift in the writing and exactness thereof.

Mr. Hedrick began his newspaper work as a messenger boy in the Kansas City Journal office, under Harry Fleming, then managing editor. He was twelve years old at the time, and he watched with envious and longing eyes the reporters as they rushed in and reeled off their stories. Finally, at the age of eighteen, his opportunity came, and he was assigned to police reporting on the Journal. This is a position which no regular reporter ever really envies, but it looked mighty good to the boy. His next position was with the St. Joseph Gazette, then the Omaha World-Herald, and eventually he worked himself into a position with the Daily Tribune in Minneapolis.

Each position was a distinct promotion, and today he is employed as a reporter by the Daily Register of Mobile, Alabama. His success is due, no doubt, to the fact that he never gave up his boyhood dream, although the future was not always bright, and especially to the fact that he is endowed with an almost superhuman ability to write. He is a good mixer and a man who enjoys visiting with his co-workers.

Ed Howe.

Perl W. Morgan

The published of this work has been fortunate in having as one of his assistants Mr. Perl W. Morgan, an experienced newspaper man of Kansas, City, Kansas, and one of the best informed men on Kansas history in the state. Many of the articles herein were written by Mr. Morgan. He is a native of the Hoosier State, born in Monrovia, Morgan County, December 4, 1860, and reared and educated in the Quaker town of Plainfield. Mr. Morgan began newspaper writing when he was fourteen years old and serving an apprenticeship at printing on the Plainfield Citizen. He worked as a union printer on the Indianapolis Sentinel for several years, being all the while a contributor to the Indianapolis and Cincinnati papers. In 1887, when he came west to Kansas City he abandoned the printing trade and for the last twenty-nine years he has devoted himself exclusively to newspaper writing. He took charge of the Times bureau in Kansas City, Kansas, when Dr. Morrison Munford owned that paper. In 1890 he left the Times and went to the Daily Gazette as news editor while the late George W. Martin, afterwards secretary of the Kansas Historical Society, was owner. In 1893, Mr. Morgan went to the Star and from that time until 1911 he was at the head of the news service in Kansas City, Kansas, for Colonel Nelson's publications. He gave up newspaper work in 1911 to serve as secretary of the Mercantile Club; but, like other newspaper men, he had to get back into the harness. He was in charge of the publicity work for the Republican State Central Committee in the latter part of the 1914 campaign at Topeka, and is now editor of the Daily Gazette-Globe in Kansas City, Kansas. Mr. Morgan is the author of a 250,000 word history telling of the development of Kansas and of Wyandotte County, published by the Lewis Publishing Company, of Chicago. Mrs. Morgan was formerly Miss Mary E. McNight of Plainfield, Indiana. They have one son, Howard C. Morgan, who is professor of English and history in the Haviland High School.

Thursday, July 29, 1875, William Hurst of White Cloud murdered his wife by cutting her throat.

Robert H. Montgomery

Late Doniphan County Pioneer Was Descendant of Famous Old Scottish Family—Served in the 13th Kansas Volunteer Infantry, Company B—Member of State Legislature.

In no case of record has the blood of the first American pioneers flowed more freely than in the veins of the late Robert Hugh Montgomery, who, following in his father's footsteps, left his settled home in Indiana to push onward intrepidly into what was then the wild west and what is now the beautiful state of Kansas. The story of Robert Hugh Montgomery's father's life reads like the pages of the history of Boone, Lewis and Clark, or Davy Crockett.

Robert Hugh Montgomery was a direct descendant of a famous old Scottish family. His father was Richard Montgomery, born at Paseley near Glasgow, Scotland, July 14, 1778. The paternal grandfather of Robert Hugh was a thread maker in Scotland. His mother was Miss Anna Belle Clarkson who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, May 16, 1789. She and the elder Montgomery were married at Paseley, December 2, 1808. For several years Richard Montgomery worked as a thread manufacturer, but the old country did not offer the opportunities of the new, consequently on May 20, 1811, the family decided to emigrate and set sail for Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

With him into the new continent, Richard Montgomery brought a thread machine and during the second war with England in 1812 he plied his trade and amassed what in those days was considerable money. He had the pioneer spirit however, and, after the close of hostilities decided to cross the almost impassable Alleghany Mountains and penetrate to the west. This journey in those days was a tedious one, by stage all of the route. The Montgomery family started in the latter part of December 1817, and traveled all through January, February and March of 1818, finally reaching Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. They had covered all of the perilous distance between that city and Philadelphia over what was a wilderness.

At Pittsburg, the elder Montgomery purchased a flatboat and sailed down the Ohio River. This journey took weeks and was attended by many perils. Arriving at Cincinnati which then was a town not as large as Troy, the family rested for a few weeks and then went to Louisville, where Mr. Montgomery engaged in the mercantile business and remained for several months. Finding that field not to his liking he went to New Albany, Indiana, where he looked over the situation for a brief period and then pushed on to Jeffersonville, Indiana, where he again branched forth as a merchant.

In the year 1820 the United States government offered for sale lands north of the old Indiana boundary line, and on September 27 of that year the elder Mr. Montgomery purchased the west one-half, northeast quarter section thirty-one, township seven, north range six, east in Jackson County, Indiana, and soon after moved on this farm where he established a country store dealing in general merchandise. He cleared the land as fast as possible, a few acres each year, and it has been in the Montgomery family ever since.

The elder scion of the family was a man of many talents and had an excellent education, having been educated at Glasgow University, one of the finest today in the world. While at Louisville his erudition showed itself in several poems which he wrote. The muse did not return to him after that but his poetic nature exerted itself when he named his farm "Spring Glen." As such it has always been known, the Indiana state legislature only a few years ago adopting a measure which provided that the name should be perpetual.

To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Montgomery, ten children, two girls and eight boys, were born. They were Anabella, born at Glasgow, Scotland, June 20, 1810, died at Jeffersonville, Indiana, January 2, 1819; Richard, Jr., born February 26, 1813, at Philadelphia; John Clarkson, born November 27, 1814, at Philadelphia; William, born March 17, 1817, at Philadelphia; Theophilus Wylie, born May 15, 1819, at Jeffersonville, Indiana; Thomas Kell, born April 17, 1822, at Spring Glen; Henry, born January 7, 1825, at Spring Glen; Mary Jane, born April 14, 1827, at Spring Glen; James Renwick, born November 15, 1829, at Spring Glen, and Robert Hugh, the subject of this sketch, born June 20, 1834, at Spring Glen. The mother, Mrs. Anna Belle Montgomery, died October 5, 1846, and Richard Montgomery, the father, died February 12, 1849. Both are interred in the cemetery near Spring Glen in Jackson County, Indiana.

Robert Hugh was the "baby" of the family, and his mother's death, when he was but twelve years old, was a shock that he never forgot. It seemed that the pinnacle of his grief was reached when three years later his father passed away and he was left to the care of his other brothers at the age of fifteen. There was very little chance for education in those days. Schools were rare and where they were found they had sessions only during the short winter months. While working on the farm, the subject of this sketch found time for a few books and with his schooling obtained what knowledge he could.

In the year 1854 when he was twenty years old, however, R. H. felt that it was time for him to decide upon a career and he determined upon emigration west after long and careful deliberation. In the summer of that year, June 2, he went to Albion, Monroe County, Iowa, and worked on the farm there for Richard H. Johnson, attending school during the winter months. For his services he received the paltry salary of $4 a month and his board.

Like his father before him he sought new fields to conquer and new opportunities to seize. In the early fall of 1855 he went to Clarinda, Adams County, Iowa, where he obtained a country school and took up his first position as a teacher. For imparting useful information to the young and assisting in the formation of their character he received the extravagant sum of $20 a month on which he was forced to feed, shelter and clothe himself. During this incumbency he boarded with Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Harlow, the parents of Mrs. John A. Brandt and Mrs. C. B. Chalk of Wathena.

In the spring of 1856 he decided to come to Kansas, then a territory, and so he set out from Clarinda and walked to within four miles of Topeka where he settled on a claim. That claim near Topeka was the starting point in Mr. Montgomery's career for he sold it in the fall of 1856, with all improvements, and came to Doniphan County later.

His first acquaintance was with James Patrick Tindale, who still is living in St. Joseph. It was the night of January 2, 1857, when he arrived at the home of the former and asked for lodging, which was given him. The Tindale home was in the Burr Oak Bottoms, then a wooded section of country. During the spring and summer of 1857 he worked for Mr. Tindale as a hired hand and in the fall taught school in Burr Oak Bottom. As was the custom then, he received his board and lodging as part payment, going home each night with a different pupil. For the next few years, Mr. Montgomery worked for a number of different parties including the Rev. James Skinner and taught several terms at Columbus, Burr Oak and other districts.

At the outbreak of the Civil War, the young schoolmaster decided his country needed him more than his pupils and September 10, 1862, he was mustered into service at Troy in Company B, 13th Kansas Volunteer Infantry. He was under fire for the first time however at Fayettsville, Arkansas, and was in the battles of Pea Ridge, Can Hill and Prairie Grove.

Upon being mustered out at Little Rock, June 26, 1865, and later discharged at Fort Leavenworth, Mr. Montgomery made the acquaintance of Will Morrison and through him purchased a quarter section on Big Stranger, Leavenworth County, northeast of Tonganoxie. The same year he traded it for the farm which the Montgomery heirs still own, two miles northeast of Troy. Returning to Doniphan County, the young soldier was soon nominated for state representative and elected in the November election of 1865, serving his county during the winter session of 1868.

Among his pupils was Miss Mary Brock, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin H. Brock, who lived near Old Columbus. She and the young schoolmaster were married on October 7, 1866, and went to work on the latter's farm. To their union were born six children, Anabella, now Mrs. Hugh Graves; Walter Brock, William Henry and Florence Mabel, now Mrs. George R. Armstrong, are living.

Although the Montgomery farm today is one of the richest in Center Township, all was not a bed of roses for the young couple who began wedded life on the farm. There were all of the hardships of those earlier days and through them Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery went hand in hand, leading useful lives and making their brave struggle together. There is something that touches the heartstrings and lets loose the flood of emotions in the name of mother and Mrs. Robert Montgomery was a true mother. She brought to her young husband not only her diligence but a ray of sunshine and a faith and confidence in him that must have had a great bearing in the shaping of his honorable career. Over her home, Mrs. Montgomery, who is still living on the old farm, presided with a quiet elegance and refinement that is characteristic of her and in the rearing of her children she exerted a gentle, God-fearing hand. In all of their sorrows and joys she participated to the fullest extent, giving sympathy where sympathy was needed and a smile when some matter caused the exuberant spirits of her children or husband to soar. She taught them ever the old principles of honesty and uprightness. She knew no wrong because she could conceive of no wrong and no matter what tribulations she might have endured, not one word of complaint ever was on May 6, 1913, when Mr. Montgomery has been indeed the ideal mother.

The saddest moment in her life was on May 6, 1913, when Mr. Montgomery, after a brief illness which no one considered serious, passed to the great unknown. Through this period of affliction, she showed a God-given fortitude and took solace in her unbounded faith of a Heavenly reward and the love of the neighborhood. The funeral was held on May 8, conducted by the G. A. R., Kennedy Post, No. 292, and expressions of sympathy from everywas largely attended. He was buried in Mount Olive Cemetery under the rich soil of Kansas, the state he loved so well.

Florence Mabel, youngest daughter, is now Mrs. G. R. Armstrong of 1124 Clayton Street, Denver, Colorado. Florence has one son, George Robert Armstrong, Jr., who was born January 8, 1914, and one daughter, Florence Margaret, born Friday, January 21, 1916, at 1124 Clayton Street, in Denver, Colorado. These are the only grand children in the family. They are the pride and joy of their parents upon whom we may depend to bestow on them every care, while for the grandmother they have come to bless her life and to scatter sunshine about her and to fill her soul with bliss.

HUGH McNUTT

St. Joseph's Famous Bandman —A Former Resident of Doniphan County—A Native of Iowa.

Time was when the City of St. Joseph was wont to boast of the peerless Pryor as the most wonderful musician ever produced there, but in the last few years a young man of tireless energy and praiseworthy ideals has forged to the front in musical circles and has made his townsfolks believe there is another celebrity in their midst. Hugh McNutt was first heard of in a musical way as cornetist for the Fourth Regiment band, and he eventually came to the notice of Arthur Pryor, world-famous bandmaster and cornetist. During the summers of 1912, 1913 and 1914, McNutt with the Pryor organization played at all the popular pleasure resorts of the United States, including parks of Chicago and Asbury Park of New York, where the Four Hundred go to hear band music.

In the winters, the band played for Victrola records at Willow Grove, and Hugh was featured as a soloist of ability.

This young genius of harmony was born in Davis City, Iowa, March 8, 1884, and came to Troy with his parents in 1894 at the age of ten years. His home was in Troy until 1904, and his education was received here, having graduated from the Troy High School under Professor J. B. McClure in 1901. It was when he left Troy in 1904 that he went to St. Joseph and became affiliated with the Fourth Regiment Band under the direction of W. F. Maupin. His rise was rapid, and he left the Pryor band only to direct his own band. He directs and plays the cornet, and he usually has engagements ahead. He has played for affairs in Troy numerous times, and in the summer of 1915 he took his band en tour through the country, taking with them a vocalist.

Prof. Hugh McNutt, the celebrated musician and band instructor.

Hugh lives with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand J. McNutt, at 1424 North Eleventh street, St. Joseph, Missouri. There is another son in the family, Guy E., who is a prominent mail clerk, and two daughters, Lena, now Mrs. Fisher, and Greta, who is Mrs. Herzing.

The McNutt family is proud of their son and brother, and the "City Worth While" has one more reason to feel elated in having a local organization of the character of the McNutt band.

JOHN J. BAKER

One of the Best Known Lawyers in First Congressional District —Began Life in Kansas as a Poor Boy With Few Opportunities — A Self Educated Man.

In a man, all nations, sects, parties and organizations admire honesty, integrity, ability and strength of character. They cannot help but admire these qualities, no matter if the man differs radically from them in some particular belief. And that such a man is J. J. Baker, the well-known barrister of this county, and candidate on the Republican ticket for the nomination of county attorney, at the August primary, no one doubts. No more conspicuous example of a self-made man can be found in the annals of Kansas history.

Mr. Baker came to Doniphan County with his parents from the Blue Grass State, where he was born August 2, 1848, in Flemingsburg, Ky., sixty years ago the 17th day of March, 1916. His parents settled on a farm in Iowa Township, ten miles northwest of Troy, where they resided for years. He has seen the county develop from its wild, untamed state, to that of a good farming and fruit-growing county and expects to spend his declining years in the state and county he loves so much.

The parents, upon their arrival in Doniphan County, did the best they could, but in those days many people found it difficult to educate their children to their hearts' desire, and so it was with John Baker. He had little opportunity to attend school, but with a little learning he acquired an insatiable appetite for reading. He read every piece of literature available, and in the years that preceded his maturity he taught himself until at length he was no mean scholar. So successful were his efforts at self education that in 1877 he began teaching school in Doniphan County and continued until 1888.

While teaching school, the subject of this sketch became interested in Blackstone and Coke, and decided he would study law. He read law with R. M. Williams at White Cloud in 1877, and his final preparation was done with Smith and Solomon at Atchison. Since 1888 he has given his entire time to the practice of his profession, and has handled some of the most prominent lawsuits of the county and state in a successful and creditable manner.

Today John J. Baker is no doubt one of the best known lawyers in the First Congressional District of Kansas, and his success is due entirely to his own efforts. That close application counts is strikingly exemplified in his case. It is admitted the county over that he is a good lawyer, so why not honor his with the office of county attorney? Mr. Baker is considered by everyone as the best orator in the county.

THE L. I. W. CLUB

Composed of Troy's Select Young Ladies of Vivacious Features—A Wife for Mike, Norman, Edward, Roy, Boyd, Warren, Orley, Tom, George, Ralph, Clark, Fred, Harvey and Many Others.

There is a club in Troy
Which admits no boy
  Or male of any age.
Which way its merits lean
Or what the letters mean
  Is merely to presage.

The fair ladies of the town
Those of most renown
  Are in it to a member.
But what we want to know—
And make our pain to grow—
  Are those letters—do remember.

Just once in thirty days
They meet to have their plays
  And jolly times they have, 'tis said.
They're as smart as they can be
Their equal you could not see
  Here's a wife for every Tom and Fred.

They're beauties, every one,
And they're full of life and fun—
  But why so secretive, may we query?
Give us bachelors an equal chance
Invite a pair of pants
  And make his life a little cheery.

Oh, young ladies of the L. I. W. Club,
We've had to give you a rub
  Because this ludicrous thing had to rhyme.
But if we had our extreme pleasure
We would praise you without measure
  And we'll do our duty at another time.
